You are perhaps aware that they pretend to be some 13,000 strong in the Salt Land.—Well, in this bragging epistle, evidently written for Breucombe, they only pretend that they shall cultivate some 10,000 acres of land.—Well, then, by this calculation they are cultivating about three-fourths of an acre to a person, or four acres to a family. I think western farmers usually cultivate about forty acres. If they cultivate in the same proportion, they can be but about 1,300 in number; 2,000 is doubtless the extreme limit. But in making out their State they include part of California, down to the Pacific, and probably bring in 30,000 or 40,000 inhabitants, who had no part in forming their government, and probably do not know that they are so fortunate as to be one of the sovereign States of the Union.

You will observe also that they make no mention of Oliver Cowdery in filling up their organization. The truth is, he is not the sort of man for them. It was a singular mania by which he was led off after them, and seems to have lasted him for but a few weeks. I understand he is now in Crab Orchard, Mo., and do not consider it by any means certain that he has anything whatever to do with them. In their organization of a State government he would have been better than they all, but they would not trust power in his hands a single moment. Finally the indications all tend to this conclusion, that they are scattering their settlements too much to keep the control of any part of the country, and by assimilating their institutions to those of the Gentiles are rapidly preparing themselves for the universal prevalence of Gentile authority.

By the way, it is rather a new feature in an Apostolic letter, the record therein of a wager on a wolf hunt. So it seems that the Mormons in the Salt Land have bet a public dinner on the result of a general hunt by two companies, and the Apostle P. P. Pratt deems it worth his while to send a testimony of the result to his brother Orson in England, who is weak enough to publish it. I shall send you the papers containing an account of the formation of the new State of Deseret, &c., which of course you will publish. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

☞ The following article is from the New York Sun:—

"Nearer and more hopeful grows the prospect of another war in Europe. Hopeful, we say, because there is a foul canker preying upon the nations there, which can only be cut out by the sword. Cauterizing has been tried and has failed, and the sooner the sharp steel is applied the sooner will the oppressed and groaning people be released from their bondage.—Hopeful, we say, because the war which now threatens lies between nations which have provoked and earned a bloody scourge, for their base aggressions upon, and desertions of weak, trampled and imploring nations. The coming war lies between Russia and Turkey, or Russia and France and England rather, and the grisly northern bear will find that his foes, this time, have as sharp claws, and as many as he. Turkey will be but the battle ground on which the Czar will dispute with Britons and Gauls for the mastery of Europe.

"O, it will be a choice and rare fight, and the world will look on and cry to either side, 'hit him again!' for who will care if both are bruised to helplessness, and their heart's content, so long as neither is absolute victor?—

They even have established the odious offices and forms of proceeding under which all the Gentile oppressions are accomplished. But the papers have turned over another leaf in this strange history. They have called together a kind of mass meeting, and appointed a committee as a substitute for a convention, adopted a constitution as one of the States of the Union, and are intending to apply to Congress for admission. Would not two thousand inhabitants, with Brigham Young for Governor, make a pretty State? It would be a pretty joke if they could gull Congress into receiving them, and, desperate as the undertaking would seem, I know men cunning enough to carry it through.

You are perhaps aware that they pretend to be some 13,000 strong in the Salt Land.—Well, in this bragging epistle, evidently written for Breucombe, they only pretend that they shall cultivate some 10,000 acres of land.—Well, then, by this calculation they are cultivating about three-fourths of an acre to a person, or four acres to a family. I think western farmers usually cultivate about forty acres. If they cultivate in the same proportion, they can be but about 1,300 in number; 2,000 is doubtless the extreme limit. But in making out their State they include part of California, down to the Pacific, and probably bring in 30,000 or 40,000 inhabitants, who had no part in forming their government, and probably do not know that they are so fortunate as to be one of the sovereign States of the Union.

You will observe also that they make no mention of Oliver Cowdery in filling up their organization. The truth is, he is not the sort of man for them. It was a singular mania by which he was led off after them, and seems to have lasted him for but a few weeks. I understand he is now in Crab Orchard, Mo., and do not consider it by any means certain that he has anything whatever to do with them. In their organization of a State government he would have been better than they all, but they would not trust power in his hands a single moment. Finally the indications all tend to this conclusion, that they are scattering their settlements too much to keep the control of any part of the country, and by assimilating their institutions to those of the Gentiles are rapidly preparing themselves for the universal prevalence of Gentile authority.

By the way, it is rather a new feature in an Apostolic letter, the record therein of a wager on a wolf hunt. So it seems that the Mormons in the Salt Land have bet a public dinner on the result of a general hunt by two companies, and the Apostle P. P. Pratt deems it worth his while to send a testimony of the result to his brother Orson in England, who is weak enough to publish it. I shall send you the papers containing an account of the formation of the new State of Deseret, &c., which of course you will publish. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

☞ The following article is from the New York Sun:—

"Nearer and more hopeful grows the prospect of another war in Europe. Hopeful, we say, because there is a foul canker preying upon the nations there, which can only be cut out by the sword. Cauterizing has been tried and has failed, and the sooner the sharp steel is applied the sooner will the oppressed and groaning people be released from their bondage.—Hopeful, we say, because the war which now threatens lies between nations which have provoked and earned a bloody scourge, for their base aggressions upon, and desertions of weak, trampled and imploring nations. The coming war lies between Russia and Turkey, or Russia and France and England rather, and the grisly northern bear will find that his foes, this time, have as sharp claws, and as many as he. Turkey will be but the battle ground on which the Czar will dispute with Britons and Gauls for the mastery of Europe.

"O, it will be a choice and rare fight, and the world will look on and cry to either side, 'hit him again!' for who will care if both are bruised to helplessness, and their heart's content, so long as neither is absolute victor?—

And what will the hosts of the Caucassus, and of Poland, and of Hungary do, while this battle between the old 'bottle holders' is going on? Will they forget their feud with the imperial robber, whose foot makes their necks the pathway to empire? Will they be idle gazers at the fight? It is not likely; Austria will be in the field aiding her Russian ally, and will not the Magyar seize the moment for a sweeping and terrible revenge? and will not Schamyl and his Circassians make wider and bolder their foray? and Poland, arising from her sleep of bondage, blot out her fetter-marks in blood?

"Yes, it will be a precious sight. The wild beasts of ambitious war will tear each other in pieces, and the people will be the winners of the great state—liberty! Thirty-four years ago saw Russia and England united on the field of Waterloo to crush that terror of feudalism and 'divine right' mongers, Napoleon, the idol and the glory and the scourge of France. A few months, or weeks, may see England and France on the shores of the Bosphorus, returning upon Russia a blow and vengeance which have animated, and will ever animate the heart of France against the destroyer of her warrior idol. That will be a tableaux for the historian to mark on his pages, worthy the study of the future."

The Sun is entirely in error as to the effect of a continental war on the liberties of the people of Europe. Tyrants have little share in the cost or perils of wars. They can afford to have it continue till the people, tired of blood and taxes, will consent to any form of government, so it gives them peace. Then the tyrants will parcel out Europe, again leaving the people to sing peans of praise to the clank of their chains. Money is the only sovereign that reigns in the middle and west of Europe. It has proved itself more of a tyrant than families and dynasties ever were. It has neither soul nor affection, and is all-pervading in its despotism. A general war will cast all the governments engaged upon the power of the money lenders, and will bring their tyranny to the door of every hovel in the land.

THE PHONETIC ADVOCATE.

The sixth number of the second volume of this work is now on our table. And in justice to ourselves and patrons we acknowledge it to be the best and most ably conducted periodical in the cause of the writing and spelling reform that we have any knowledge of, and we bid it a hearty welcome, and shall do all we can to aid in the enterprise. We published the prospectus of the advocate some time last winter, and have now the pleasure of perusing its columns for the first time.

The object of this reform is obvious to every observing mind, from a variety of circumstances, and also the bungling manner by which many of the words of our language are spelled. This reform does away with all superfluous letters, and has a distinct character for every sound. The alphabet consists of forty characters, with which all words in the English language are spelled. And, to any candid and unprejudiced mind, fifteen minutes investigation will be satisfactory of the utility of the enterprise. We heartily recommend this work to all those who are in any manner connected with public instruction as the best system now in use.

☞ Sir Moses Montefiore has founded at Damascus a large hospital, and two primary schools, for indigent Jews, among whom he has also distributed 160,000 Turkish paistres, (about 40,000 francs.) The Jews of Damascus, in order to testify their gratitude to Sir Moses Montefiore for these acts of benevolence, have bestowed on him the title of Nassi (Prince) of the Israelites of Damascus.

FIVE MILES OF LOADED WAGONS.

On Thursday of last week (Oct. 25th) the receipts of wheat in this city, as near as can be estimated, were say 21,000 bushels, allowing 40 bushels to be brought by each wagon and 525 wagons were required to bring this quantity. The receipts of flour and other kinds of produce were also heavy; allow 175 teams loaded with other produce besides wheat, and we have a total of 700, which is doubtless within the true number; allow a space of 45 feet for each team, and we have a procession of five miles of wagons, laden with the produce of the soil, coming into our city on one day.—Milwaukee Gazette.

And what will the hosts of the Caucassus, and of Poland, and of Hungary do, while this battle between the old 'bottle holders' is going on? Will they forget their feud with the imperial robber, whose foot makes their necks the pathway to empire? Will they be idle gazers at the fight? It is not likely; Austria will be in the field aiding her Russian ally, and will not the Magyar seizé the moment for a sweeping and terrible revenge? and will not Schamyl and his Circassians make wider and bolder their foray? and Poland, arising from her sleep of bondage, blot out her fetter-marks in blood?

"Yes, it will be a precious sight. The wild beasts of ambitious war will tear each other in pieces, and the people will be the winners of the great state—liberty! Thirty-four years ago saw Russia and England united on the field of Waterloo to crush that terror of feudalism and 'divine right' mongers, Napoleon, the idol and the glory and the scourge of France. A few months, or weeks, may see England and France on the shores of the Bosphorus, returning upon Russia a blow and vengeance which have animated, and will ever animate the heart of France against the destroyer of her warrior idol. That will be a tableaux for the historian to mark on his pages, worthy the study of the future."

The Sun is entirely in error as to the effect of a continental war on the liberties of the people of Europe. Tyrants have little share in the cost or perils of wars. They can afford to have it continue till the people, tired of blood and taxes, will consent to any form of government, so it gives them peace. Then the tyrants will parcel out Europe, again leaving the people to sing peans of praise to the clank of their chains. Money is the only sovereign that reigns in the middle and west of Europe. It has proved itself more of a tyrant than families and dynasties ever were. It has neither soul nor affection, and is all-pervading in its despotism. A general war will cast all the governments engaged upon the power of the money lenders, and will bring their tyranny to the door of every hovel in the land.

THE PHONETIC ADVOCATE.

The sixth number of the second volume of this work is now on our table. And in justice to ourselves and patrons we acknowledge it to be the best and most ably conducted periodical in the cause of the writing and spelling reform that we have any knowledge of, and we bid it a hearty welcome, and shall do all we can to aid in the enterprise. We published the prospectus of the advocate some time last winter, and have now the pleasure of perusing its columns for the first time.

The object of this reform is obvious to every observing mind, from a variety of circumstances, and also the bungling manner by which many of the words of our language are spelled. This reform does away with all superfluous letters, and has a distinct character for every sound. The alphabet consists of forty characters, with which all words in the English language are spelled. And, to any candid and unprejudiced mind, fifteen minutes investigation will be satisfactory of the utility of the enterprise. We heartily recommend this work to all those who are in any manner connected with public instruction as the best system now in use.

☞ Sir Moses Montefiore has founded at Damascus a large hospital, and two primary schools, for indigent Jews, among whom he has also distributed 160,000 Turkish paistres, (about 40,000 francs.) The Jews of Damascus, in order to testify their gratitude to Sir Moses Montefiore for these acts of benevolence, have bestowed on him the title of Nassi (Prince) of the Israelites of Damascus.

FIVE MILES OF LOADED WAGONS.

On Thursday of last week (Oct. 25th) the receipts of wheat in this city, as near as can be estimated, were say 21,000 bushels, allowing 40 bushels to be brought by each wagon and 525 wagons were required to bring this quantity. The receipts of flour and other kinds of produce were also heavy; allow 175 teams loaded with other produce besides wheat, and we have a total of 700, which is doubtless within the true number; allow a space of 45 feet for each team, and we have a procession of five miles of wagons, laden with the produce of the soil, coming into our city on one day.—Milwaukee Gazette.

STATE OF THE BALTIMORE AND PHILADELPHIA CHURCHES.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 29th, 1849.

PRES. STRANG,—BELOVED BRO.:—I haste to inform you that matters and things here are all right. None here have denied the faith. No, not one. None have stumbled. No, not one. But all have kept the faith, thank God. Some of the saints are out of town on a visit, and some of the Elders are out preaching.—Bro. Hosmer has baptized three at Ellicott's Mills. He sends his kindest love to you and yours.

I preach here to-morrow three times. We expect to have a great day. We shall do a much greater work here this winter than last. The whole surrounding country is waking up to the subject. I staid in Philadelphia two nights, and found them some shaken. But you may believe that I stirred them up some, and left them all right but two or three. I hold a meeting there on Wednesday night, and you may expect to see me in New York on Thursday.

Myself and family wish to be remembered to you and yours. We all want to see you and yours here very much. I say again, everything here is first rate, and this side up with care.—Glory to God. My love to Samuel and all the saints. Don't forget my dear brother and sister Bennett. They were very kind to me, and refreshed my spirits very much. God bless them. Yours as ever, and more too,

GEORGE J. ADAMS.

NOTE.—The work continues to prosper in and about Baltimore, Oct. 19th.

J. J. STRANG.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 17th, 1849.

FRANCIS COOPER, ESQ.,—MY EVER DEAR BRO. IN THE KINGDOM AND PATIENCE OF JESUS CHRIST:—It is with much pleasure that I inform you and the saints of the onward march of truth. I have just returned from the New York Conference, where we had a most glorious time. The brethren in New York are up and doing. Many of them will come to Beaver Island in the spring. Bro. Appleton came before the Conference and made a full confession, and is again restored with full confidence to his former standing and priesthood. God bless and keep him in the hour of trial.

Pres. Strang is in New York, and will remain there until after next Sunday. He will preach in Philadelphia on the 28th inst., and in Baltimore on the following Sunday. The work in Baltimore is going ahead finely. I preached here three times last Sunday to overflowing houses, and I have baptized four this week, and many more are believing, and no doubt they will come forward soon. We have every prospect of a glorious campaign in the south and east this fall and winter. You may expect great times next year. Yours truly and sincerely,

G. J. ADAMS.

SUSPENSION.

Lorenzo Dow Hickey, one of the Twelve, is suspended of all jurisdiction and authority, for most gross lying and slander upon Bros. G. J. Adams and Samuel Graham, and neglecting his mission to follow after the diabolical revelations of Increase McGee Van Dusen. Done at New York City, Oct. 18th, 1849.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres. of the Church.

MARTYRS OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

The following are the names of a few of the Martyrs, who for the testimony of Jesus have been inhumanly murdered in the States of Missouri and Illinois:—Mr. Barber, Martyred November 4, 1833, in Jackson county, Mo. The following Saints were martyred in Caldwell county, Mo., Oct. 30, 1838:—Thos. McBride, Levi Merrick, Wm. Merrick, Elias Benner, Josiah Fuller, Benjamin Lewis, Alex. Campbell, Warren Smith, Sardius Smith, George Richards, Mr. Napier, Mr. Harmar, Mr. Cox, Mr. Abbott, and Mr. York. About the same time and in the same county, the following persons were martyred, namely: David W. Patten, one of the Twelve Apostles, Gideon Carter, Mr. Obanion, and Mr. Carey. Martyred in Carthage Jail, in the county of Hancock, State of Illinois, on the 27th day of June, 1844, Joseph Smith, the Seer, Hyrum Smith, the Patriarch, two of the noblest Martyrs whose blood has stained the earth for ages. The murderers of the foregoing persons, though the most of them are well known, are yet running at large, boasting of their deeds. Samuel H. Smith, brother of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who died from the affect of poison administred to him within one month after the martyrdom of his brothers. These all have sealed their testimony with their blood, besides many more whose days have been shortened by the persecutions that they have endured.

☞ The New York Conference minutes will appear in our next number.

STATE OF THE BALTIMORE AND PHILADELPHIA CHURCHES.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 29th, 1849.

PRES. STRANG.—BELOVED BRO.:—I haste to inform you that matters and things here are all right. None here have denied the faith. No, not one. None have stumbled. No, not one. But all have kept the faith, thank God. Some of the saints are out of town on a visit, and some of the Elders are out preaching.—Bro. Hosmer has baptized three at Ellicott's Mills. He sends his kindest love to you and yours.

I preach here to-morrow three times. We expect to have a great day. We shall do a much greater work here this winter than last. The whole surrounding country is waking up to the subject. I staid in Philadelphia two nights, and found them some shaken. But you may believe that I stirred them up some, and left them all right but two or three. I hold a meeting there on Wednesday night, and you may expect to see me in New York on Thursday.

Myself and family wish to be remembered to you and yours. We all want to see you and yours here very much. I say again, everything here is first rate, and this side up with care.—Glory to God. My love to Samuel and all the saints. Don't forget my dear brother and sister Bennett. They were very kind to me, and refreshed my spirits very much. God bless them. Yours as ever, and more too,

GEORGE J. ADAMS.

NOTE.—The work continues to prosper in and about Baltimore, Oct. 19th.

J. J. STRANG.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 17th, 1849.

FRANCIS COOPER, ESQ.,—MY EVER DEAR BRO. IN THE KINGDOM AND PATIENCE OF JESUS CHRIST:—It is with much pleasure that I inform you and the saints of the onward march of truth. I have just returned from the New York Conference, where we had a most glorious time. The brethren in New York are up and doing. Many of them will come to Beaver Island in the spring. Bro. Appleton came before the Conference and made a full confession, and is again restored with full confidence to his former standing and priesthood. God bless and keep him in the hour of trial.

Pres. Strang is in New York, and will remain there until after next Sunday. He will preach in Philadelphia on the 28th inst., and in Baltimore on the following Sunday. The work in Baltimore is going ahead finely. I preached here three times last Sunday to overflowing houses, and I have baptized four this week, and many more are believing, and no doubt they will come forward soon. We have every prospect of a glorious campaign in the south and east this fall and winter. You may expect great times next year. Yours truly and sincerely,

G. J. ADAMS.

SUSPENSION.

Lorenzo Dow Hickey, one of the Twelve, is suspended of all jurisdiction and authority, for most gross lying and slander upon Bros. G. J. Adams and Samuel Graham, and neglecting his mission to follow after the diabolical revelations of Increase McGee Van Dusen. Done at New York City, Oct. 18th, 1849.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres. of the Church.

MARTYRS OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

The following are the names of a few of the Martyrs, who for the testimony of Jesus have been inhumanly murdered in the States of Missouri and Illinois:—Mr. Barber, Martyred November 4, 1833, in Jackson county, Mo. The following Saints were martyred in Caldwell county, Mo., Oct. 30, 1838:—Thos. McBride, Levi Merrick, Wm. Merrick, Elias Benner, Josiah Fuller, Benjamin Lewis, Alex Campbell, Warren Smith, Sardius Smith, George Richards, Mr. Napier, Mr. Harmar, Mr. Cox, Mr. Abbott, and Mr. York. About the same time and in the same county, the following persons were martyred, namely: David W. Patten, one of the Twelve Apostles, Gideon Carter, Mr. Obanion, and Mr. Carey. Martyred in Carthage Jail, in the county of Hancock, State of Illinois, on the 27th day of June, 1844, Joseph Smith, the Seer, Hyrum Smith, the Patriarch, two of the noblest Martyrs whose blood has stained the earth for ages. The murderers of the foregoing persons, though the most of them are well known, are yet running at large, boasting of their deeds. Samuel H. Smith, brother of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who died from the affect of poison administred to him within one month after the martyrdom of his brothers. These all have sealed their testimony with their blood, besides many more whose days have been shortened by the persecutions that they have endured.

☞ The New York Conference minutes will appear in our next number.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 34.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, NOV. 8, 1849. [WHOLE No. 150.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

HISTORICAL COLLECTIONS OF OHIO,

BY HENRY HOW.

Cincinnati: Derby, Brady & Co.

KIRTLAND.

This village is widely known from having been formerly the head quarters of the Mormons. While here, in the height of their prosperity, they numbered 3,000 persons. On their abandoning it, most of the dwellings went to decay, and it has now somewhat the appearanee of a broken down and depopulated place. · · · The Temple, the main point of attraction, is 60 by 80 feet, and measures from the base to the top of the spire 142 feet. It is of rough stone, plastered over, colored blue, and marked to imitate regular courses of masonry. It cost about $40,000. In front, over the large window, is a tablet bearing the inscription: "HOUSE OF THE LORD, BUILT BY THE LATTER DAY SAINTS, A. D. 1834." · · ·

The Mormons derive their name from their belief in the Book of Mormon, which is said to have been translated from GOLD PLATES, found in a hill in Palmyra, N. Y. They came to this pace in 1832, and commenced building their Temple, which they finished in 1835.—When they commenced building their Temple they were few in number, but when they had finished it they had increased to 2,000. There are in the church two priesthoods, the Melchisedec and the Aaronic, including the Levitical, from which they derive their officers.

This place, which they hold to be a STAKE OF ZION, was laid off in half acres for a mile square. When it was mostly sold, they bought a number of farms in the vicinity, at a very high price, and were deeply in debt for goods in New York; which were the causes of their eventually leaving for Missouri. They established a bank in Kirtland, from which they issued a number of thousand dollars more than they had specie, which gave their enemies power over them, and those bills became useless.

They adhered to their prophet Smith in all things, and left here in 1837—700 in one day. They still hold this place to be a stake of Zion, to be eventually a place of gathering. There is a President with his two counselors to preside over this stake. They have a Bishop with two counselors, to conduct the affairs of the church in temporal things, and sit in judgment npon difficulties which may arise between members, but there is a higher court, to which they can appeal, called the High Council, which consists of twelve High Priests. The PRESIDENT and his council sit as judges over either of these councils. They have twelve Apostles, whose duty it is to travel and preach the gospel. There are, however, THREE PRESIDENTS, who preside over the whole church in all the world.

The method of conducting worship among the Mormons is similar to other denominations. The first ordinance is "baptism for the remission of sins." They lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and to heal the sick; anoint with oil, administer the sacrament, take little children and bless them. They hold to all the gifts of the Apostolic church, believing that there is no true church without them; and have the gifts of speaking in different tongues.—They sometimes interpret themselves, but gen-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 31.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, NOV. 8, 1849. [WHOLE No. 150.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

HISTORICAL COLLECTIONS OF OHIO,

BY HENRY HOW.

Cincinnati: Derby, Brady & Co.

KIRTLAND.

This village is widely known from having been formerly the head quarters of the Mormons. While here, in the height of their prosperity, they numbered 3,000 persons. On their abandoning it, most of the dwellings went to decay, and it has now somewhat the appearance of a broken down and depopulated place. · · · The Temple, the main point of attraction, is 60 by 80 feet, and measures from the base to the top of the spire 142 feet. It is of rough stone, plastered over, colored blue, and marked to imitate regular courses of masonry. It cost about $10,000. In front, over the large window, is a tablet bearing the inscription: "HOUSE OF THE LORD, BUILT BY THE LATTER DAY SAINTS, A. D. 1834." · · ·

The Mormons derive their name from their belief in the Book of Mormon, which is said to have been translated from GOLD PLATES, found in a hill in Palmyra, N. Y. They came to this pace in 1832, and commenced building their Temple, which they finished in 1835.—When they commenced building their Temple they were few in number, but when they had finished it they had increased to 2,000. There are in the church two priesthoods, the Melchisedec and the Aaronic, including the Levitical, from which they derive their officers.

This place, which they hold to be a STAKE OF ZION, was laid off in half acres for a mile square. When it was mostly sold, they bought a number of farms in the vicinity, at a very high price, and were deeply in debt for goods in New York, which were the causes of their eventually leaving for Missouri. They established a bank in Kirtland, from which they issued a number of thousand dollars more than they had specie, which gave their enemies power over them, and those bills became useless.

They adhered to their prophet Smith in all things, and left here in 1837—700 in one day. They still hold this place to be a stake of Zion, to be eventually a place of gathering. There is a President with his two counselors to preside over this stake. They have a Bishop with two counselors, to conduct the affairs of the church in temporal things, and sit in judgment upon difficulties which may arise between members, but there is a higher court, to which they can appeal, called the High Council, which consists of twelve High Priests. The PRESIDENT and his council sit as judges over either of these councils. They have twelve Apostles, whose duty it is to travel and preach the gospel. There are, however, THREE PRESIDENTS, who preside over the whole church in all the world.

The method of conducting worship among the Mormons is similar to other denominations. The first ordinance is "baptism for the remission of sins." They lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and to heal the sick; anoint with oil, administer the sacrament, take little children and bless them. They hold to all the gifts of the Apostolic church, believing that there is no true church without them; and have the gifts of speaking in different tongues.—They sometimes interpret themselves, but generally there is some one to interpret for them.

A prophet has lately risen among the Mormons, viz.: James J. Strang, of Wisconsin, who claims to be the suceessor of Joseph Smith. He has been with them only about two years, and was a young lawyer of western New York. He claims to have received communications from heaven, at the very hour of Smith's death, commissioning him to lead the people. He has established a stake in Walworth County, Wis., called the city of Voree, by interpretation signifying the "Garden of Peace," to which they are gathering from Nauvoo and other places. He has lately visited Kirtland, and re-established it a "Stake of Zion," and organized the church with all its officers. There are now here about one hundred members, who are daily increasing, and it is thought the place will be built up.

Strang is said to have found plates of brass or some other metal. He was directed by an Angel who gave him a stone to look through, by which he made the discovery. They were found three feet under ground, beneath an oak tree, a foot in diameter. These he has translated; they give an account of a race who once inhabited that land and became a fallen people. Strang preaches pure Bible doctrine, and receives only those who walk upright before their God.

The Mormons still use the Temple at Kirtland. This sect is now divided into three factions, viz.: the Rigdonites, the Twelveites and the Strangites. The Rigdonites are the followers of Sidney Rigdon, and are but few in number. The Twelveites—so named after their Twelve Apostles—are very fanatical, and hold to the spiritual wife system, and the plurality of Gods. The Strangites maintain the original doctrine of Mormonism, and are located at this place and Voree.

☞ We copy the foregoing from How's History of Ohio, a work found in every neighborhood, and read in every school and family in that State. The date of its writing seems to be in 1846, though the work has been before the public but one year. The reader will see that it does far better justice to the saints than common farm hoes. True it is that the higher the rank and intellect of those who speak of us, the better they treat us; and the more ignorant any one is of us, the worse he will speak of us. [Ed.

Counsel.—As there are some emigrants that are disposed to take poor persons with them to the Valley, in order to assist them on the road in driving teams, cooking, and in general assistance; and so soon as they get there they want to turn these poor persons off on to the hands of some others. This is wrong, and cannot be suffered. The people in the Valley have all they can do to sustain themselves, without being burdened by an influx of poor thrown upon their hands, after the more wealthy have aviled themselves of their services on the road. We therefore say to all concerned, that whoever takes the poor to the Valley shall support them there till their way is honorably opened to get a support other ways. This counsel will henceforth be enforced upon all that emigrate to this country. We say to the rich abroad, bring all the poor that you please, but you must situate them yourselves to live after you bring them here, and not throw them upon the hands of others for a support, and pay no further attention to them. Do not think to cast your burdens upon other men when you are more able yourselves to bear them than they.—Frontier Guardian, June 13th.

☞ The foregoing is the consolation which the Brighamites offer to the poor among them. Well, we say to our brethren, if there are any poor among you, help them up to the place of gathering appointed of God, for in our Father's house is enough and to spare.

☞ There is a man up the country who always pays for his paper in advance. He has never had a sick day in his life—never had any corns, or toothache---his potatoes never rot—the weevil never eats his wheat—the frost never kills his corn in the night, and his wife never scolds. Reader, have you paid the printer in advance?—Ex. Paper.

erally there is some one to interpret for them.

A prophet has lately risen among the Mormons, viz.: James J. Strang, of Wisconsin, who claims to be the successor of Joseph Smith. He has been with them only about two years, and was a young lawyer of western New York. He claims to have received communications from heaven, at the very hour of Smith's death, commissioning him to lead the people. He has established a stake in Walworth County, Wis., called the city of Voree, by interpretation signifying the "Garden of Peace," to which they are gathering from Nauvoo and other places. He has lately visited Kirtland, and re-established it a "Stake of Zion," and organized the church with all its officers. There are now here about one hundred members, who are daily increasing, and it is thought the place will be built up.

Strang is said to have found plates of brass or some other metal. He was directed by an Angel who gave him a stone to look through, by which he made the discovery. They were found three feet under ground, beneath an oak tree, a foot in diameter. These he has translated; they give an account of a race who once inhabited that land and became a fallen people. Strang preaches pure Bible doctrine, and receives only those who walk upright before their God.

The Mormons still use the Temple at Kirtland. This sect is now divided into three factions, viz.: the Rigdonites, the Twelveites and the Strangites. The Rigdonites are the followers of Sidney Rigdon, and are but few in number. The Twelveites—so named after their Twelve Apostles—are very fanatical, and hold to the spiritual wife system, and the plurality of Gods. The Strangites maintain the original doctrine of Mormonism, and are located at this place and Voree.

☞ We copy the foregoing from How's History of Ohio, a work found in every neighborhood, and read in every school and family in that State. The date of its writing seems to be in 1846, though the work has been before the public but one year. The reader will see that it does far better justice to the saints than common farm hoes. True it is that the higher the rank and intellect of those who speak of us, the better they treat us; and the more ignorant any one is of us, the worse he will speak of us. [Ed.

Counsel.—As there are some emigrants that are disposed to take poor persons with them to the Valley, in order to assist them on the road in driving teams, cooking, and in general assistance; and so soon as they get there they want to turn these poor persons off on to the hands of some others. This is wrong, and cannot be suffered. The people in the Valley have all they can do to sustain themselves, without being burdened by an influx of poor thrown upon their hands, after the more wealthy have aviled themselves of their services on the road. We therefore say to all concerned, that whoever takes the poor to the Valley shall support them there till their way is honorably opened to get a support other ways. This counsel will henceforth be enforced upon all that emigrate to this country. We say to the rich abroad, bring all the poor that you please, but you must situate them yourselves to live after you bring them here, and not throw them upon the hands of others for a support, and pay no further attention to them. Do not think to cast your burdens upon other men when you are more able yourselves to bear them than they.—Frontier Guardian, June 13th.

☞ The foregoing is the consolation which the Brighamites offer to the poor among them. Well, we say to our brethren, if there are any poor among you, help them up to the place of gathering appointed of God, for in our Father's house is enough and to spare.

☞ There is a man up the country who always pays for his paper in advance. He has never had a sick day in his life—never had any corns, or toothache---his potatoes never rot—the weevil never eats his wheat—the frost never kills his corn in the night, and his wife never scolds. Reader, have you paid the printer in advance?—Ex. Paper.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 13th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I suppose you would like to hear from me by this time. I have now been in good, old, pious Boston two weeks. It is all that it was represented to be. It has long since had the name of the city of notions, and I am sure it is well named. But I hope to God the gathering places of the saints of the last days may be free from many of the notions of this very religious place. It is not uncommon for two or three murders and highway robberies to occur nightly. It is not very strange for the incendiary to set a half score of fires in one night. It is not very strange for forty or fifty to be lodged in the watch house each and every night, for disturbing the public peace. It is here that the priests bear rule, and the people like to have it so. There are some few noble spirits here, that are anxious to see the work of God prosper here. But nearly all of them have been grossly imposed upon by men that should have carried out the principles that they have preached.

The Lord says it is a vain thing for man to witness for him while he does not regard his words, to live by them. It is folly for a man to proclaim the principles of total abstinence while reeling in the streets a victim to the accursed poison. It is vain for a man to preach Christ and the gospel, and yet live in open rebellion against God; for he that covereth his sins shall not prosper. He may appear for a time fair, but like the return of the tide, in his own time he will foam out his own shame. I have met with many a cold shoulder in this world that I should not if men bearing the priesthood had have lived to the principles that they have preached. But all these things must needs be, but the end is not yet.

I have taken a good hall, and I think, by the help of God, I shall be able to revive the remaining spark in this place. I have found men here that are anxious to gather with the saints, and some that say to me God speed, who have not yet been born of the water and spirit. All it wants at this time is for the Elders to preach Christ and the gospel, and then live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God, and the Kingdom will surely be ours. May God bless the pure in heart, and purge out all the rebellious, is the prayer of yours in the new covenant, SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Clayton, Jefferson Co., N Y., Oct. 25th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK, (allowing me to use the expression :) —I take this opportunity to address you a few lines, to let you know how the work is getting along in this place, &c., in accordance to Bro. Wright's advice. I left Canada for this place, at which I arrived the 7th ult., I believe, when I inquired for some of the brethren, & found Bro. Linnell's family, and am happy to say that they through the blessing of God are all well and enjoying good faith, and I feel much obligated to them for their kindness towards me and all others that have visited them. I stayed there a few days, and then went to or near Cape Vincent, and by request preached one sermon in the afternoon, and as it pleased God I baptized three, namely: Rebecca Ann, Nancy and John Guthrie, that evening, and the next morning two young men by the names of Simon Guthrie and Charles Edington, (the latter having lately joined the Baptist church,) came forward and requested baptism, which of course was attended to, and I am happy to say that the three young men will start for Beaver next week. In looking over the Herald I noticed that in the minutes of the Beaver Island Conference it states that there were two Elders erdained to the office of Seventies, by the names of E. Preston and A. B. Corkins. I beg the Clerk's pardon, as the latter name is A. B. Calkins. No more at present. I remain your Bro. in the new and everlasting covenant, and in the dispensation of the gospel in the fulness of times, A. B. C.

LAUGHTER.

Without it our faces would have been rigid, hyena-like, the iniquities of our heart, with no sweet antipode to work upon them, would have made the face of the best among us a horrid, husky thing, with two sullen, hungry lights at the top—foreheads would have then gone out of fashion—and a cavernous hole below the nose. Think of a babe without laughter---as it is its first intelligence! The creature shows the divinity of its origin and end by smiling upon us. Yes; smiles are its first talk with the world, smiles the first answer that it understands. And then, as worldly wisdom comes upon the little thing, it crows, chuckles, it grins, and shakes in its nurse's arms, or, in waggish humor, playing bo-peep with the parent, it reveals its high destiny, declares to him with ears to hear the hiredom of its immortality. Let materialists blaspheme as gingerly and acutely as they will; they must find confusion in laughter. Man may take a triumph, and stand upon the broad grins; for he looks around the world, and his innermost soul, sweetly tickled with the knowledge, tells him that he, of all creatures, laughs. Imagine, if you can, a laughing fish. Let man, then, send a loud ah! through the universe, and be reverently grateful for the privilege.---Douglass Jerrold.

NOTHING IS LOST.---The drop that mingles with the flood---the sand dropped off the sea shore---the word you have spoken will not be lost. Each will have its influence and be felt, till time shall be no more. Have you ever thought of the effect that might be produced by a single word? Drop it pleasantly among a group, and it will make a dozen happy; and it may perhaps have the same effect on a hundred. A bad word may arouse the indignation of a whole neighborhood; it may spread like wild fire, to produce disastrous effects. As no word is lost---be careful how you speak ---speak right---speak kindly. The influence you may exert by a life of kindness---by words dropped among the young and the old---is incalculable. It will not cease when your bodies lie in the grave, but will be felt wider as year after year passes away. Who, then, will not exert himself for the welfare of millions.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 13th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I suppose you would like to hear from me by this time. I have now been in good, old, pious Boston two weeks. It is all that it was represented to be. It has long since had the name of the city of notions, and I am sure it is well named. But I hope to God the gathering places of the saints of the last days may be free from many of the notions of this very religious place. It is not uncommon for two or three murders and highway robberies to occur nightly. It is not very strange for the incendiary to set a half score of fires in one night. It is not very strange for forty or fifty to be lodged in the watch house each and every night, for disturbing the public peace. It is here that the priests bear rule, and the people like to have it so. There are some few noble spirits here, that are anxious to see the work of God prosper here. But nearly all of them have been grossly imposed upon by men that should have carried out the principles that they have preached.

The Lord says it is a vain thing for man to witness for him while he does not regard his words, to live by them. It is folly for a man to proclaim the principles of total abstinence while reeling in the streets a victim to the accursed poison. It is vain for a man to preach Christ and the gospel, and yet live in open rebellion against God; for he that covereth his sins shall not prosper. He may appear for a time fair, but like the return of the tide, in his own time he will foam out his own shame. I have met with many a cold shoulder in this work that I should not if men bearing the priesthood had have lived to the principles that they have preached. But all these things must needs be, but the end is not yet.

I have taken a good hall, and I think, by the help of God, I shall be able to revive the remaining spark in this place. I have found men here that are anxious to gather with the saints, and some that say to me God speed, who have not yet been born of the water and spirit. All it wants at this time is for the Elders to preach Christ and the gospel, and then live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God, and the Kingdom will surely be ours. May God bless the pure in heart, and purge out all the rebellious, is the prayer of yours in the new covenant, SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Clayton, Jefferson Co., N Y., Oct. 25th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK, (allowing me to use the expression :) —I take this opportunity to address you a few lines, to let you know how the work is getting along in this place, &c., in accordance to Bro. Wright's advice. I left Canada for this place, at which I arrived the 7th ult., I believe, when I inquired for some of the brethren, & found Bro. Linnell's family, and am happy to say that they through the blessing of God are all well and enjoying good faith, and I feel much obligated to them for their kindness towards me and all others that have visited them. I stayed there a few days, and then went to or near Cape Vincent, and by request preached one sermon in the afternoon, and as it pleased God I baptized three, namely: Rebecca Ann, Nancy and John Guthrie, that evening, and the next morning two young men by the names of Simon Guthrie and Charles Edington, (the latter having lately joined the Baptist church,) came forward and requested baptism, which of course was attended to, and I am happy to say that the three young men will start for Beaver next week. In looking over the Herald I noticed that in the minutes of the Beaver Island Conference it states that there were two Elders erdained to the office of Seventies, by the names of E. Preston and A. B. Corkins. I beg the Clerk's pardon, as the latter name is A. B. Calkins. No more at present. I remain your Bro. in the new and everlasting covenant, and in the dispensation of the gospel in the fulness of times, A. B. C.

LAUGHTER.

Without it our faces would have been rigid, hyena-like, the iniquities of our heart; with no sweet antipode to work upon them, would have made the face of the best among us a horrid, husky thing, with two sullen, hungry lights at the top—foreheads would have then gone out of fashion—and a cavernous hole below the nose. Think of a babe without laughter---as it is its first intelligence! The creature shows the divinity of its origin and end by smiling upon us. Yes; smiles are its first talk with the world, smiles the first answer that it understands. And then, as worldly wisdom comes upon the little thing, it crows, chuckles, it grins, and shakes in its nurse's arms, or, in waggish humor, playing bo-peep with the parent, it reveals its high destiny, declares to him with ears to hear the hiredom of its immortality. Let materialists blaspheme as gingerly and acutely as they will; they must find confusion in laughter. Man may take a triumph, and stand upon the broad grins; for he looks around the world, and his innermost soul, sweetly tickled with the knowledge, tells him that he, of all creatures, laughs. Imagine, if you can, a laughing fish. Let man, then, send a loud ah! through the universe, and be reverently grateful for the privilege.---Douglass Jerrold.

NOTHING IS LOST.---The drop that mingles with the flood---the sand dropped off the sea shore---the word you have spoken will not be lost. Each will have its influence and be felt, till time shall be no more. Have you ever thought of the effect that might be produced by a single word? Drop it pleasantly among a group, and it will make a dozen happy; and it may perhaps have the same effect on a hundred. A bad word may arouse the indignation of a whole neighborhood; it may spread like wild fire, to produce disastrous effects. As no word is lost---be careful how you speak ---speak right---speak kindly. The influence you may exert by a life of kindness---by words dropped among the young and the old---is incalculable. It will not cease when your bodies lie in the grave, but will be felt wider as year after year passes away. Who, then, will not exert himself for the welfare of millions.

MINUTES OF A GENERAL CONFERENCE, HELD IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK, ON THE 5TH, 6TH, 7TH AND 8TH DAYS OF OCTOBER, 1849, BY APPOINTMENT OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

MORNING SESSION—OCT. 5TH.—The Conference was organized by the appointment, on motion by the unanimous vote of the Conference, of G. J. Adams to preside, (Pres. James J. Strang not being present,) and Samuel Bennett as Clerk.

After singing, Pres. Adams earnestly implored the blessing and presence of the God of saints. The Pres. then addressed the Conference, explaining the object of appointing a general Conference in the east, and in the City of New York. He remarked that there were other places in the west where the saints were more numerous, and the people anxious to hear, but it was shown to Pres. James J. Strang that the interests of the church of God required a Conference in the east. There were many of the saints standing aloof from the work from various causes, who only required a correct understanding of things as they are to come to take their places in the great work of the latter day dispensation, and the time has fully come for that purpose. Conference, on motion, adjourned to two o'clock. Benediction by Elder Blakeslee.

AFTERNOON SESSION.—Singing—"How firm a foundation." Prayer by S. Bennett. Singing—"Blest be the tie that binds." Pres. Adams remarked that the situation of the church of Christ was peculiar. There was no difference of faith as to first principles, but various causes had produced a diversity of sentiment in many of the saints. One thing, however, was certain, it was that contained in the good old hymn, "a church without a prophet is not the church for me," although a different sentiment was declared by a certain man named Brigham Young, who declared that the church of God was now without a prophet in the flesh to guide it He descanted on the history of the church of the living God, as presided over by the prophet, and the professed adhesion of many insincere friends, and the blighting influence they had exerted, which was, thank God, passing away forever.

Bro. A. drew a glowing description of the awakening influence of the spirit of God stirring up the saints, now manifested in every quarter, and firing the souls of his servants to do his will and work. He spoke in the highest terms of respect and just commendation of the President and prophet, and his mild yet firm administration of the principles, commandments and covenants, and the evidences furnished by the history of the church of the truth of James J. Strang's appointment. He contrasted the true shepherd in the person of prophet James, and the condition of his flock, with the hireling Brigham Young, and those led astray by him and his fellows.

He asked, what is the present prospect?---The First Presidency united as one man. The quorum of the Twelve are coming together as the church ardently desires. The Lord has given the saints an inheritance worthy of a God, and every way desirable for the saints.—The Lord has paved the way for the establishing of the everlasting kingdom of our God. He shows unto his servant James his purposes in the commandment to gather to Beaver Island, where the Lord has promised to deliver his saints who will go there to possess the promised inheritance, which has been preserved by the hand of God specially for the saints. The Lord has given this land to the saints of his own free will.

He entered into details as it regards the condition of the lands there, and arrangements to keep them in the possession of God's people, and its exemption from taxation. The law of the kingdom of God shall be kept there. The condition of the Gentile world is without a ray of hope. Zion is the only refuge of the oppressed. Gentile revolution results in deeper seated oppression. The kingdom of heaven alone brings temporal and eternal salvation.---The brother spoke ardently and truthfully of the good land of Beaver, and of the confidence which he felt in Pres. Strang. Singing—"Let thy kingdom, blessed Savior."

MINUTES OF A GENERAL CONFERENCE, HELD IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK, ON THE 5TH, 6TH, 7TH AND 8TH DAYS OF OCTOBER, 1849, BY APPOINTMENT OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

MORNING SESSION—OCT. 5TH.—The Conference was organized by the appointment, on motion by the unanimous vote of the Conference, of G. J. Adams to preside, (Pres. James J. Strang not being present,) and Samuel Bennett as Clerk.

After singing, Pres. Adams earnestly implored the blessing and presence of the God of saints. The Pres. then addressed the Conference, explaining the object of appointing a general Conference in the east, and in the City of New York. He remarked that there were other places in the west where the saints were more numerous, and the people anxious to hear, but it was shown to Pres. James J. Strang that the interests of the church of God required a Conference in the east. There were many of the saints standing aloof from the work from various causes, who only required a correct understanding of things as they are to come to take their places in the great work of the latter day dispensation, and the time has fully come for that purpose. Conference, on motion, adjourned to two o'clock. Benediction by Elder Blakeslee.

AFTERNOON SESSION.—Singing—"How firm a foundation." Prayer by S. Bennett. Singing—"Blest be the tie that binds." Pres. Adams remarked that the situation of the church of Christ was peculiar. There was no difference of faith as to first principles, but various causes had produced a diversity of sentiment in many of the saints. One thing, however, was certain, it was that contained in the good old hymn, "a church without a prophet is not the church for me," although a different sentiment was declared by a certain man named Brigham Young, who declared that the church of God was now without a prophet in the flesh to guide it. He descanted on the history of the church of the living God, as presided over by the prophet, and the professed adhesion of many insincere friends, and the blighting influence they had exerted, which was, thank God, passing away forever.

Bro. A. drew a glowing description of the awakening influence of the spirit of God stirring up the saints, now manifested in every quarter, and fiting the souls of his servants to do his will and work. He spoke in the highest terms of respect and just commendation of the President and prophet, and his mild yet firm administration of the principles, commandments and covenants, and the evidences furnished by the history of the church of the truth of James J. Strang's appointment. He contrasted the true shepherd in the person of prophet James, and the condition of his flock, with the hireling Brigham Young, and those led astray by him and his fellows.

He asked, what is the present prospect?—The First Presidency united as one man. The quorum of the Twelve are coming together as the church ardently desires. The Lord has given the saints an inheritance worthy of a God, and every way desirable for the saints.—The Lord has paved the way for the establishing of the everlasting kingdom of our God. He shows unto his servant James his purposes in the commandment to gather to Beaver Island, where the Lord has promised to deliver his saints who will go there to possess the promised inheritance, which has been preserved by the hand of God specially for the saints. The Lord has given this land to the saints of his own free will.

He entered into details as it regards the condition of the lands there, and arrangements to keep them in the possession of God's people, and its exemption from taxation. The law of the kingdom of God shall be kept there. The condition of the Gentile world is without a ray of hope. Zion is the only refuge of the oppressed. Gentile revolution results in deeper seated oppression. The kingdom of heaven alone brings temporal and eternal salvation.—The brother spoke ardently and truthfully of the good land of Beaver, and of the confidence which he felt in Pres. Strang. Singing—"Let thy kingdom, blessed Savior."

Bro. Hickey bore testimony to the teaching and testimony of Bro. Adams as eternal truth. He had traveled much, and observed much of the spirit of the world since he left Beaver, and if his tastes were to be gratified he would never leave the society of the saints for all the Gentiles can offer.

Bro. Blakeslee corroborated the truth of the things attested with regard to Beaver, and the work God had promised to perform there in behalf of red and white men, and also adverted to the principle of God's law by which a storm is always succeeded by a calm, verified in the history of the church. He next spoke of the Order of Enoch established at Voree. Said he was one of the first associated with the establishing of the Order at Voree. Of the smallness of the beginning and the abundant blessings which God had given in large crops of grain, better quality than others, and crops of buckwheat and turnips, &c., and favor of God and man.

Bro. Blakeslee spoke of the Sunday schools at Voree, and school of the prophets, and the wholesome instructions given there. Spoke of the saints as not under the law of the Gentiles, but in obedience to the law of God. Practically carrying out in their lives the principles of righteousness and equality, feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. Now go where God has commanded, but not in haste. He rejoiced greatly in realizing the fulfillment of his cherished hopes in the establishing of the law of eternal brotherhood.

Bro. Hosmer corroborated the reports of Beaver, and Pres. James J. Strang's disinterested and generous benevolence, and of the pleasure which he had in his society and the society of the saints, and his desire to remove to the place of gathering. He earnestly exhorted the saints to fidelity and perseverance in the cause of God.

Bro. Whipple expressed himself glad of the opportunity presented. He referred to the strange work of the latter day, and of the set time to favor Zion. Said he had sought intelligence of Babylon, but she evaded his interrogations, and only found the truth in the teaching of Elder Adams, who first taught him the gospel, which, though reluctantly in consequence of prejudice, he was compelled to obey as truth, and eternal truth; and being strengthened by the Lord, he obtained the victory over every opposing influence. He spoke of a dream which he had in answer to prayer, relative to going to Washington city. Bro. W. spoke of the prospect as very good where he had been laboring some, and desired the prayers of the saints.

Bro. Preston spoke of the experience which he had endured, and of his faith in Beaver, and in the work of God.

Bro. Adams followed in some earnest remarks, and adjourned by vote till to-morrow morning. Benediction by Bro. Hickey.

Present, G. J. Adams, of the First Presidency, James Blakeslee, L. D. Hickey, A. N. Hosmer and Samuel Bennett, of the quorum of the Twelve, Peter Hess and James Canney, High Priests, Whipple, James Johnson, Jabez Lyon, Preston and Thomas Braidwood, Elders.

Oct. 6th.—Singing—"Awake ye saints." The Pres. read the 10th Psalm. Prayer by L. D. Hickey, of the Twelve.

Pres. Adams addressed the Conference.—He remarked that God could try his people by very small things. This Conference have been anxious to see Pres. Strang, but for some cause he has been prevented meeting with us.—But there are enough here to edify and instruct each other and the Conference. "Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness." Zion must be lost, wrecked &c., to be redeemed. The Lord knew in the course of the latter day work that the net would would gather in of all kinds.—What is the great proof of the truth of the latter day work? The driving of the saints, the fulfilling upon their heads of all the curses which are written in the law of Joseph.—What is the business of those who have been put into the various offices of the holy priesthood? Their business is to be here to-day.—Those who are here in the east and city of

Bro. Hickey bore testimony to the teaching and testimony of Bro. Adams as eternal truth. He had traveled much, and observed much of the spirit of the world since he left Beaver, and if his tastes were to be gratified he would never leave the society of the saints for all the Gentiles can offer.

Bro. Blakeslee corroborated the truth of the things attested with regard to Beaver, and the work God had promised to perform there in behalf of red and white men, and also adverted to the principle of God's law by which a storm is always succeeded by a calm, verified in the history of the church. He next spoke of the Order of Enoch established at Voree. Said he was one of the first associated with the establishing of the Order at Voree. Of the smallness of the beginning and the abundant blessings which God had given in large crops of grain, better quality than others, and crops of buckwheat and turnips, &c., and favor of God and man.

Bro. Blakeslee spoke of the Sunday schools at Voree, and school of the prophets, and the wholesome instructions given there. Spoke of the saints as not under the law of the Gentiles, but in obedience to the law of God. Practically carrying out in their lives the principles of righteousness and equality, feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. Now go where God has commanded, but not in haste. He rejoiced greatly in realizing the fulfillment of his cherished hopes in the establishing of the law of eternal brotherhood.

Bro. Hosmer corroborated the reports of Beaver, and Pres. James J. Strang's disinterested and generous benevolence, and of the pleasure which he had in his society and the society of the saints, and his desire to remove to the place of gathering. He earnestly exhorted the saints to fidelity and perseverance in the cause of God.

Bro. Whipple expressed himself glad of the opportunity presented. He referred to the strange work of the latter day, and of the set time to favor Zion. Said he had sought intelligence of Babylon, but she evaded his interrogations, and only found the truth in the teaching of Elder Adams, who first taught him the gospel, which, though reluctantly in consequence of prejudice, he was compelled to obey as truth, and eternal truth; and being strengthened by the Lord, he obtained the victory over every opposing influence. He spoke of a dream which he had in answer to prayer, relative to going to Washington city. Bro. W. spoke of the prospect as very good where he had been laboring some, and desired the prayers of the saints.

Bro. Preston spoke of the experience which he had endured, and of his faith in Beaver, and in the work of God.

Bro. Adams followed in some earnest remarks, and adjourned by vote till to-morrow morning. Benediction by Bro. Hickey.

Present, G. J. Adams, of the First Presidency, James Blakeslee, L. D. Hickey, A. N. Hosmer and Samuel Bennett, of the quorum of the Twelve, Peter Hess and James Canney, High Priests, Whipple, James Johnson, Jabez Lyon, Preston and Thomas Braidwood, Elders.

Oct. 6th.—Singing—"Awake ye saints." The Pres. read the 10th Psalm. Prayer by L. D. Hickey, of the Twelve.

Pres. Adams addressed the Conference.—He remarked that God could try his people by very small things. This Conference have been anxious to see Pres. Strang, but for some cause he has been prevented meeting with us.—But there are enough here to edify and instruct each other and the Conference. "Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness." Zion must be lost, wrecked &c., to be redeemed. The Lord knew in the course of the latter day work that the net would would gather in of all kinds.—What is the great proof of the truth of latter day work? The driving of the the fulfilling upon their heads of curses which are written in the law h.—What is the business of those been put into the various offices of priesthood? Their business is to ty.—Those who are here in the y of

New York, after the First Presidency, and Twelve, and Seventies who are here, and will be here, shall deliver their testimonies.

Those who still stand aloof will not be found long in the land of the living. Mark what I say. I tell you I have read these things in the Urim and Thummim. Whatsoever temple is defiled, God shall destroy that temple. The day of judgment and righteousness is come.—What does the Lord say respecting the Elders that have received the authority of the holy priesthood? Send forth my Elders firstly unto the Gentiles, and then unto the Jews; yea, let them go forth among all people. Let them command them to prepare for the coming of the Son of Man. Let those among the Gentiles flee to Zion, and the Jews to Judea, and they who are in the north country shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants.

There are none here who have not proved the end of sectarianism, who do believe in setting up of the kingdom of Daniel in the last days, the kingdom of our God, with all the circumstances spoken of by the prophets. God wants in his church for the accomplishment of his purposes men of various talents and temperaments. One ardent and vehement, one calm and rigid in the application of the law of righteousness, another fatherly and affectionate in the presentation of truth.

Elder Hickey said that there were many things that ought to be said and obeyed. Mormonism is eternally true, whatever men say or do regarding it. It always was, and always will be. The time has come when men can no longer stand still. The Lord requires at the hand of all his saints fidelity to the covenant of the gospel of peace. Bro. Hickey urged the Conference or saints assembled to think charitably of their brethren when absent, and turn away from the tongue of slander.

Bro. Johnson remarked that he was inexperienced in the work, and was anxious and ready to do whatever the Lord required at his hand. He was edified by the things presented to this Conference, and was convinced and saw plainly that the baptism was into one spirit.

Bro. Braidwood said that his position and history was peculiar. Some months since he thought he should never more engage in the work of God. But some time since he was called by Bro. Adams to preach, which, at the time, he thought lightly of, but which was forced upon his mind and conscience as a solemn and eternal matter, and he now felt it such in his inmost soul. He was now heartily solicitous to build up the kingdom of truth and righteousness, and desired the prayers of the saints.

Bro. Walker (colored) rejoiced at the spirit manifested in the Conference, and was a witness of the manifestation of the power of God as exhibited in the latter day dispensation.

Pres. Adams remarked that he (Bro. Walker) should hold the priesthood, and carry the gospel to the nations of the earth. Bro. A. went into detail to some extent to show that the principles adopted by Pres. Strang in his policy and administration were in strict accordance with the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of God.

Several sisters, opportunity being given, expressed their feelings under the influence of the spirit of God, and avowed their confidence in the work of God.

Bro. Hess addressed the Conference, and gave a history of his conversion and experience in the church, and the good hand of the Lord who had brought him through many trials. He related a vision, in which the Lord directed him to the path of obedience.

Bro. Leech expressed his confidence in the latter day work; of the many good things he had experienced in the course of his religious experience, and the dark clouds that had passed between. He related the history of his coming into the church, his connection with Sidney Rigdon, and his present position on the platform of eternal truth. He was prepared to go all lengths in adherence to the church of

New York, after the First Presidency, and Twelve, and Seventies who are here, and will be here, shall deliver their testimonies.

Those who still stand aloof will not be found long in the land of the living. Mark what I say. I tell you I have read these things in the Urim and Thummim. Whatsoever temple is defiled, God shall destroy that temple. The day of judgment and righteousness is come.—What does the Lord say respecting the Elders that have received the authority of the holy priesthood? Send forth my Elders firstly unto the Gentiles, and then unto the Jews; yea, let them go forth among all people. Let them command them to prepare for the coming of the Son of Man. Let those among the Gentiles flee to Zion, and the Jews to Judea, and they who are in the north country shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants.

There are none here who have not proved the end of sectarianism, who do believe in setting up of the kingdom of Daniel in the last days, the kingdom of our God, with all the circumstances spoken of by the prophets. God wants in his church for the accomplishment of his purposes men of various talents and temperaments. One ardent and vehement, one calm and rigid in the application of the law of righteousness, another fatherly and affectionate in the presentation of truth.

Elder Hickey said that there were many things that ought to be said and obeyed. Mormonism is eternally true, whatever men say or do regarding it. It always was, and always will be. The time has come when men can no longer stand still. The Lord requires at the hand of all his saints fidelity to the covenant of the gospel of peace. Bro. Hickey urged the Conference or saints assembled to think charitably of their brethren when absent, and turn away from the tongue of slander.

Bro. Johnson remarked that he was inexperienced in the work, and was anxious and ready to do whatever the Lord required at his hand. He was edified by the things presented to this Conference, and was convinced and saw plainly that the baptism was into one spirit.

Bro. Braidwood said that his position and history was peculiar. Some months since he thought he should never more engage in the work of God. But some time since he was called by Bro. Adams to preach, which, at the time, he thought lightly of, but which was forced upon his mind and conscience as a solemn and eternal matter, and he now felt it such in his inmost soul. He was now heartily solicitous to build up the kingdom of truth and righteousness, and desired the prayers of the saints.

Bro. Walker (colored) rejoiced at the spirit manifested in the Conference, and was a witness of the manifestation of the power of God as exhibited in the latter day dispensation.

Pres. Adams remarked that he (Bro. Walker) should hold the priesthood, and carry the gospel to the nations of the earth. Bro. A. went into detail to some extent to show that the principles adopted by Pres. Strang in his policy and administration were in strict accordance with the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of God.

Several sisters, opportunity being given, expressed their feelings under the influence of the spirit of God, and avowed their confidence in the work of God.

Bro. Hess addressed the Conference, and gave a history of his conversion and experience in the church, and the good hand of the Lord who had brought him through many trials. He related a vision, in which the Lord directed him to the path of obedience.

Bro. Leech expressed his confidence in the latter day work; of the many good things he had experienced in the course of his religious experience, and the dark clouds that had passed between. He related the history of his coming into the church, his connection with Sidney Rigdon, and his present position on the platform of eternal truth. He was prepared to go all lengths in adherence to the church of God, under the direction of the spirit of wisdom and revelation, through James J. Strang. Bro. L. earnestly exhorted the saints to fidelity and perseverance to the end.

Pres. Adams said the talk about want of confidence was not able to destroy his confidence in the men of God, now or ever. Benediction by S. Graham.

Afternoon Session.—Singing. Prayer by Bro. Blakeslee. Singing—"Ye slumbering nations." Bro. Graham read the 15th Psalm, and said the Conference had been eloquently addressed, and he wished them to lower their feelings to come down to the level of his ability, that he might talk with them. He said that there was a period when he did not believe in a God of infinite perfections. He had the advantage of a pious mother, who taught him the truth of the Bible. And he now felt by the teaching of the spirit of God the value of those glorious and sublime truths which it contains, and he would ask the Lord, "who shall stand on thy holy hill? Who shall dwell in thy tabernacle?" The Bible! is it the truth? Who is the character described as the one who attains the glorious privilege of standing on the hill of Zion, and dwell in the tabernacle of God? He that speaketh the truth in his heart, that taketh not up a reproach against his neighbor. He that sweareth to his hurt, and changeth not. Am I looking upon any saint that has entered the waters of baptism that has not entered the solemn compact to serve the living and true God to the end? Come life or come death, keep that covenant.

What kind of ideas have we of God's holy hill? We have heard many things taught of the salvation of the Bible—vaguely taught.—The Bible presents to us the Son of God as the perfect exemplar of saved beings. He has led the way into the presence of God by his obedience to the law of life as it is in him. Have you, saints, forgotten the declaration of Jesus, "fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom?" It is to a little flock the promise applies. The holy hill is the earth redeemed and sanctified.—There is a difference between being saved and becoming a savior on Mount Zion. Bro. Graham referred to the infidel objection that the earth is not able to give place to the inhabitants who have lived thereon, and asserted that he had, and that any who could use figures might demonstrate the falsity of the infidel objection to the resurrection. We wish the Clerk could exercise the art of the stenographer aptly, that we might put upon this sheet the eloquent, earnest and truthful address of our brother in full. Suffice it to say, that it was in power and demonstration of the spirit, and the solemnities of eternity rested upon the congregation. Singing.

Pres. Adams asked the Conference to look at the truth presented by the Savior, "remember Lot's wife." "As it was in the days of Lot, so shall it be at the coming of the Son of Man." Who is outside? Who is looking back? Take heed. The prize is only obtained by a sustained and consistent effort to the end. Bro. Adams said he would say something of the Order of Enoch. By the Order of Enoch we understand that order of things by which they obtained power with God. I mean Enoch and Elijah, who are the two witnesses who stand before the God of all the earth, and prophecy in the streets of Jerusalem, who shall be killed in the streets of the place where our Lord was crucified. The Order of Enoch is the best order of things that can be instituted to introduce the brotherhood of man, that the poor may be redeemed from robbery and violence. The appetites of the saints must be governed by the law and precepts of the celestial kingdom, by having respect to the wisdom of God as given by revelation. In the Order of Enoch we find a provision made for the poor equally with the rich. We are now living in the hour of God's judgment, and in the last part of that hour. An hour is the 24th part of a thousand years.

(To be continued.)

God, under the direction of the spirit of wisdom and revelation, through James J. Strang. Bro. L. earnestly exhorted the saints to fidelity and perseverance to the end.

Pres. Adams said the talk about want of confidence was not able to destroy his confidence in the men of God, now or ever. Benediction by S. Graham.

Afternoon Session.—Singing. Prayer by Bro. Blakeslee. Singing—"Ye slumbering nations." Bro. Graham read the 15th Psalm, and said the Conference had been eloquently addressed, and he wished them to lower their feelings to come down to the level of his ability, that he might talk with them. He said that there was a period when he did not believe in a God of infinite perfections. He had the advantage of a pious mother, who taught him the truth of the Bible. And he now felt by the teaching of the spirit of God the value of those glorious and sublime truths which it contains, and he would ask the Lord, "who shall stand on thy holy hill? Who shall dwell in thy tabernacle?" The Bible! is it the truth? Who is the character described as the one who attains the glorious privilege of standing on the hill of Zion, and dwell in the tabernacle of God? He that speaketh the truth in his heart, that taketh not up a reproach against his neighbor. He that sweareth to his hurt, and changeth not. Am I looking upon any saint that has entered the waters of baptism that has not entered the solemn compact to serve the living and true God to the end? Come life or come death, keep that covenant.

What kind of ideas have we of God's holy hill? We have heard many things taught of the salvation of the Bible—vaguely taught.—The Bible presents to us the Son of God as the perfect exemplar of saved beings. He has led the way into the presence of God by his obedience to the law of life as it is in him. Have you, saints, forgotten the declaration of Jesus, "fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom?" It is to a little flock the promise applies. The holy hill is the earth redeemed and sanctified.—There is a difference between being saved and becoming a savior on Mount Zion. Bro. Graham referred to the infidel objection that the earth is not able to give place to the inhabitants who have lived thereon, and asserted that he had, and that any who could use figures might demonstrate the falsity of the infidel objection to the resurrection. We wish the Clerk could exercise the art of the stenographer aptly, that we might put upon this sheet the eloquent, earnest and truthful address of our brother in full. Suffice it to say, that it was in power and demonstration of the spirit, and the solemnities of eternity rested upon the congregation. Singing.

Pres. Adams asked the Conference to look at the truth presented by the Savior, "remember Lot's wife." "As it was in the days of Lot, so shall it be at the coming of the Son of Man." Who is outside? Who is looking back? Take heed. The prize is only obtained by a sustained and consistent effort to the end. Bro. Adams said he would say something of the Order of Enoch. By the Order of Enoch we understand that order of things by which they obtained power with God. I mean Enoch and Elijah, who are the two witnesses who stand before the God of all the earth, and prophecy in the streets of Jerusalem, who shall be killed in the streets of the place where our Lord was crucified. The Order of Enoch is the best order of things that can be instituted to introduce the brotherhood of man, that the poor may be redeemed from robbery and violence. The appetites of the saints must be governed by the law and precepts of the celestial kingdom, by having respect to the wisdom of God as given by revelation. In the Order of Enoch we find a provision made for the poor equally with the rich. We are now living in the hour of God's judgment, and in the last part of that hour. An hour is the 24th part of a thousand years.

(To be continued.)

"The Eureka, a vessel from the upper lakes, passed through this city yesterday, bound with passengers and goods for California". Civis.

NOTE.—Of this vessel the Montreal Pilot says :—

"This is the first American merchant vessel that has ever sailed below Montreal; she has been allowed to do so by special authority from England. The Eureka is 375 tons burthen, 137 feet keel, 26 feet beam, and can carry 4,000 barrels flour. She drew 7 feet 9 inches water, and had no difficulty in coming from the upper lakes, except in the Welland Canal. The locks in this canal are of two sizes, 45 feet and 26½ wide. One of the smallest size, No. 24, was found to be only 26 feet 4½ inches wide, and the sides of the Eureka had to be cut away to enable her to pass through."

☞ Some of the saints living in the seaboard towns are projecting emigrating to Beaver in companies, in vessels belonging to them; and for this purpose two different persons have inquired by what route they could come, and with what size vessels. We publish the foregoing for their information, adding that the route from any part on the seaboard to Beaver is by sea to the gulf of St. Lawrence; up the gulf and river St. Lawrence, passing around the rapids by the Lachine and Long Sault Canals, up lake Ontario, through the Welland canal, and up Lake Erie, &c., by the Chicago route.

If we are not mistaken one or two American vessels have taken this route for the upper Lakes to California previous to the Eureka. A project has also been set on foot to send out the Helfenstein and the Propeller Genèsee Chief by the same route. During the Irish famine it was a common event to see Liverpool ships taking in wheat at Chicago, arriving and going by this route, and we believe it is spoken of as an excellent sailing route. The only difficulty in the way is that permission must be obtained from the British government to navigate the St. Lawrence in American vessels. A class of small lake or bay boats could go up through the Erie canal by unshipping the masts. Small sailing vessels will be excellent property at Beaver in carrying on the fishing trade.

THE WEEKIY REPUBLIC.

The undersigned will commence the publication of a new Democratic Weekly Newspaper, bearing this title, on the 14th November, 1849.

It will be of large size; printed on good, stout paper, from handsome new type. It will be mailed to subscribers at the low price of ONE DOLLAR A YEAR—in advance. In addition to strong, sound Democratic original articles, it will contain selections from all the best Democrtic journals in the country, showing the state of public feeling on every topic of interest that attracts the attention of the public.

All the Local News of the City of New York will be fully given in the columns of the Weekly Republic, as well as the General News—both Domestic and Foreign. A writer who wields a powerful pen, will furnish us, by every steamer, a letter from London, which will keep the readers of the Republic fully apprised of the state of Europe, and give a truthful account of the progress of liberal opinions in all parts of the Old World; unwarped and unbiased by passing through the tory journals of England or the papers of the Continent; emasculated by the rigors of the censorship.

A full and truthful account of the state of the produce Market will also be given, and the state of the Money Market and Sales of Stocks, will likewise be accurately chronicled in The Weekly Republic.

Letters containing subscrption, or any other buisness—in all cases post paid—to be addressed to

E. P. WILLIAMS, Republic Office,
82 Nassau street, New York.

New York City, Oct. 30th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK :—I am just starting for Philadelphia, having been delayed one day by means of a severe storm, which swept over New York Bay, and probably the entire Atlantic coast, last evening. The Telegraphs all failed during the storm, and when they are in working condition will doubtless bring in news of some disasters. I have preached in New York in all four Sundays, and eight or ten other days. There are regularly established two week day meetings, as well as the Sunday meeting, and on the whole the church is prospering. Bro. Hess has just sent a most cheering account of the church in Philadephia to Bro. Royce of this city. Bro. Graham is progressing at Boston. But it is at and around Baltimore that the cause is prospering most. I have not heard one word from the brethren preaching in the British Provinces, and hope that on reading this they will every one of them write to me at New York City, and inform me how the work prospers. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

YEARS.—Neither rouge, artificial ringlets, nor all the resources of the toilet, can retard the relentless progress of that terrible foe to beauty, time. But every one must have noticed how lightly his hand rests upon some, how heavily upon others. Whenever you see in an old person a smooth, unwrinkled forehead, a clear eye, and a pleasing, cheerful expression, be sure her life has been passed in that comparative tranquility of mind, which depends less upon outward vicissitudes than internal peace of mind. A good conscience is the greatest preservative of beauty. Whenever you see pinched up featnres, full of lines, and thin, curling lips, you may judge of petty passions, envy and ambition, which have worn out their owner. High and noble thoughts leave behind them noble and beautiful traces; meanness of thought and selfishness of feeling league with Time to unite age and ugliness together. Fresh air, pure, simple food, and exercise, mental and bodily with an elevated ambition, will confer on the greatest age a dignified beauty, in which youth is deficient. There are many men and women, at sixty, younger in appearance and feeling than others at forty.—Ex.

HOW MANY MILES A PRINTER'S HAND TRAVELS.

Although a printer may be sitting all day, yet in his own way he is a great traveler, or at least his hand is, as we shall prove. A good printer will set 8,000 ems a day, or abont 24,000 letters. The distance traveled over by his hand will average about one foot per letter going to the boxes in which they are contained, and of course returning, making two feet for every letter he sets. This would make a distance each day of 48,000 feet, or a little more than nine miles, and in the course of a year, leaving out the Sundays, that member travels about 3,000 miles!

ferior to him, was the Medo-Persian, ruled by Cyrus. He fought and subdued the king of Babylon, and ruled over his kingdom.

He was not so rich and voluptuous as Nebuchadnezzar, who was represented by the head of gold, and therefore he is compared to the breast and arms of silver. The third kingdom is the Grecian or Macedonian. This kingdom was commenced by Phillip, and finally established by Alexander the great. Alexander, after the death of Philip, his father, was intent upon honor and glory, regarding the laurels of the conqueror more than justice or the fruits of conquerors. He, therefore, went on from one kingdom to another, conquering all that he found, till at last he ruled nearly the whole of the then known globe. He is represented by the belly and thighs of brass.

The fourth kingdom is the Roman. We learn it consisted of two distinct divisions, called the eastern and western empires. It was in this time and age of the world that our Savior came into the world: was born a child of earthly parents: lived a man; became the Son of God by obeying the law of God; preached to a gainsaying and guilt stricken world; was buffeted and ill treated in every possible manner; suffered, died, and arose again the third day, for the redemption of poor guilty man. He did not set up his kingdom upon the earth when he was here, therefore it was yet in the future.

This Roman kingdom was the strongest one ever known; it both ruled and broke down all other kingdoms. It is, therefore, compared to the legs of iron, as iron is the strongest thing known. Instead of this kingdom remaining as it was then, it has divided and split up into different parts and kingdoms, ruled by different men and by different laws. It has not been subdued by any one king, as the former kingdoms, but bodies have risen up in rebellion against the former Roman kingdom, and established governments of their own. It is now divided into some ten different kingdoms, where there was only one before. Where a kingdom is divided into so many different parts, and under so many different laws, it cannot be strong as when united under one general government. It became weak and confused, generally quarreling one against the other. Therefore, instead of its being strong like iron, it is mixed with miry clay; and it is partly strong and partly weak.

When we look into the different kingdoms of Europe if we cannot see these represented by the feet and toes of the image, which was part of iron and part of miry clay, I say it never was seen nor ever will be seen hereafter. In the days when these kings shall reign the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed. All scripture must be fulfilled to the letter, therefore this kingdom of God must shortly be established to fulfill the scripture. You know what constitutes a kingdom. In a kingdom there must be a king, laws, officers to execute those laws, dominion, or a certain extent of country to rule, and subjects, people under the law, ruled by the king, punished by the officers, if they commit crimes. This constitutes a kingdom.

Now the Lord of heaven has commenced to make preparations to set up that kingdom on the earth. He has given his law unto the people of the earth, that will serve to unite them in one body. He has sent his angels again upon the earth to establish the pure principles of the gospel among men. He has ordained and authorized them to establish the church of God, and bring subjects unto the law of God.

When people get so that they will not spurn at the idea of keeping the commands of God as he has laid them down, and not run after the commands of men, then God will establish his kingdom literally on the earth, set every thing in order in it, and then when the law is given out it will be heard and obeyed. If the subjects of that kingdom get stubborn and will not obey at any one time, they then have officers to execute the law upon them, and make them obey. This kingdom, when established, will keep increasing until it becomes a great nation, and fills the whole earth. It will break down

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 35.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, NOV. 15, 1849. [WHOLE No. 151.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

DEAR FRANK:—The following article was written merely to a relative of the author, (who is a gentleman but 16 years of age,) but thinking it may be useful, I send it to you for publication:— J. J. S.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Daniel ii. 31 to 45.—"Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass. His legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and break them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

"This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king. Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the heavens hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh to pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all things, shall it break in pieces and bruise.

"And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken, [weak.] And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of [other] men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with [or joined to] clay. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure."

We see by the last verse that this must all take place, these kings must all reign in their order, after this dream was interpreted. Now let us look into the details of history and see if we can find any kingdoms that bear resemblance to these. Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, was the head of gold. He ruled over the whole earth, and made all bow at his word. The kingdom that should rise after him, and subdue all other kingdoms upon the earth, and it will stand forever.

"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgement was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their forheads, or in their hands: and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Rev. xx. 4.

Ah! is Christ then to reign on the earth? Yes, indeed. When this kingdom gets dominion on the earth, then Christ will come and reign with his saints literally for one thousand years. Christ's church is established upon the earth, and his kingdom soon will be; and blessed is that man or woman that listeneth to the teachings of God's servants sent out, but wo be unto him that disregardeth them, for the judgments of God will surely overtake him.

C. J. D.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM PRES. STRANG TO ONE OF THE ELDERS IN PHILADELPHIA.

New York, Oct. 19th, 1849.

Dear Brother:—Yours of the 17th was duly received. As I was attending meeting in Williamsburg I could not answer by return mail, and just as I was ready to send out an answer yesterday Bro. Hickey arrived here and presented a new set of facts, not much unexpected, but which still required a different answer. First, then, I am greatly obliged for the very kind manner in which you wrote me, and the frankness of the information you gave. Last Sunday Van Dusen came to our meeting with a revelation, which he claimed the right to proclaim to the people attending; and insisted in so positive a manner that I was obliged to threaten handing him over to the police to stop the disturbance, and the disturbance was renewed after the meeting was dismissed. His revelation was that Bro. Hickey was dead, and that I would shortly be smitten of the Lord and die. He assured me that Bro. Hickey died without ever reaching Philadelphia; that we should soon hear the facts by mail, and that this was to be a sign to the saints that I would soon be rejected of God, and to the Gentiles that Mormonism was true.

The next day he went to Norwich, Conn., where he had another revelation, which he sent in writing to me, that whoever followed the pernicious ways of G. J. Adams and J. J. Strang should be damned. He wrote also that he had sent the revelation to Bro. Hess.—But it would seem from what you write that my name was left out there. No matter. Bro. Hickey tells me that some sister there has filled up the revelation. These men and women have set up their idols in their hearts, and put the stumbling block of their iniquity before their faces, and the Lord has "answered them according to the multitude of their idols." And according to the promise that God made to the prophet, (Ezek. xiv. 7,) he has answered them by himself, and not by the mouth of his prophet. If these persons had the slightest understanding of the ways of God would they understand that when God answered them according to their wicked imaginations, by himself and not by his prophet, that he "will set his face against them, and make them a sign and a proverb." (Ezek. xiv. 8.) Moses the prophet trangressed, and was not suffered to enter into the land of pomise, but God declares that fact by Moses and not by a rebel. Eli was removed from being prophet, and Samuel planted in his stead, but God revealed the matter to Eli, as well as to his successor. (1 Sam. iii. 13.) Joseph Smith, for transgression, was removed from the earth, and left to fall by the hand of his enemies. But God revealed that judgment to him, that he and not a rebel, should be the witness to the church that another was planted in his stead. But these persons are getting revelations like Korah, and the thousands other vile rebels against God's church, The end of all which is their own destruction.

There has never yet been an apostacy from the people of God but the apostates pretended to be guided by revelation; and they all gave as a reason for their rebellion that Moses, Joseph or some other God-appointed shepherd was doing wrong. Hickey is going back to Beaver. He pretends to me that the wants of his wife and family is the cause, but that is not the fact. And last of all he says that Horton was in the right in the matter of difference between them, (Horton and Hickey,) and he was in the wrong. Horton had lost some $8 in money, and accused Hickey of stealing it. If he was in the right, comment is unnecessary. I suppose you will ask what effect will this have on the church here? I don't know that it has any at all. I infer from all I hear that the church at Philadelphia is somewhat moved. Indeed there seems to be some anxiety for me to make haste on that account. I have no anxiety on the subject.

If any one will apostatize on any tales whatever, they will hear the tale. The Devil will find somebody to do his dirty work, when it requires nothing more difficult than tale telling. I shall not come to Philadephia to go around and convince men and women that such foolish stories are false. I have other business to do, and of more consequence. I expect to be there a week from next Sunday.—Though if I had nothing to do there but to falsify the lies of apostates, I should not think of coming at all. Well, this is rather a cheerless letter, yet I cannot but think our work is prospering, and destined to be successful. I cannot get low spirited. By some means my courage, faith and patience are braced up. None of these things move me. I have more to write but no time to write it. It seems that a pretty general scheme has been set on foot to get up a muss. Much calculation was made of getting Appleton to join it, and they are evidently chagrined in the failure. I write this for all the church, including the women that had the dreams. And will simply add for their consolation the words of Solomon, "He that trusteth in a dream is not wise." Truly and sincerly, J. J. STRANG.

Bohemian Israelites in Wisconsin.—A number of highly respectable families have arrived at New York from Bohemia, to form a colony in Wisconsin. There have been for several years past many families from the same country in the neighborhood of Milwaukee; but the present party mean to establish a congregation at once, and they came provided with teachers and other necessary officers to carry their intention into effect.—Occident.

ferior to him, was the Medo-Persian, ruled by Cyrus. He fought and subdued the king of Babylon, and ruled over his kingdom.

He was not so rich and voluptuous as Nebuchadnezzar, who was represented by the head of gold, and therefore he is compared to the breast and arms of silver. The third kingdom is the Grecian or Macedonian. This kingdom was commenced by Phillip, and finally established by Alexander the great. Alexander, after the death of Philip, his father, was intent upon honor and glory, regarding the laurels of the conqueror more than justice or the fruits of conquerors. He, therefore, went on from one kingdom to another, conquering all that he found, till at last he ruled nearly the whole of the then known globe. He is represented by the belly and thighs of brass.

The fourth kingdom is the Roman. We learn it consisted of two distinct divisions, called the eastern and western empires. It was in this time and age of the world that our Savior came into the world; was born a child of earthly parents; lived a man; became the Son of God by obeying the law of God; preached to a gainsaying and guilt stricken world; was buffeted and ill treated in every possible manner; suffered, died, and arose again the third day, for the redemption of poor guilty man. He did not set up his kingdom upon the earth when he was here, therefore it was yet in the future.

This Roman kingdom was the strongest one ever known; it both ruled and broke down all other kingdoms. It is, therefore, compared to the legs of iron, as iron is the strongest thing known. Instead of this kingdom remaining as it was then, it has divided and split up into different parts and kingdoms. ruled by different men and by different laws. It has not been subdued by any one king, as the former kingdoms, but bodies have risen up in rebellion against the former Roman kingdom, and established governments of their own. It is now divided into some ten different kingdoms, where there was only one before. Where a kingdom is divided into so many different parts, and under so many different laws, it cannot be strong as when united under one general government. It became weak and confused, generally quarreling one against the other. Therefore, instead of its being strong like iron, it is mixed with miry clay; and it is partly strong and partly weak.

When we look into the different kingdoms of Europe if we cannot see these represented by the feet and toes of the image, which was part of iron and part of miry clay, I say it never was seen nor ever will be seen hereafter. In the days when these kings shall reign the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed. All scripture must be fulfilled to the letter, therefore this kingdom of God must shortly be established to fulfill the scripture. You know what constitutes a kingdom. In a kingdom there must be a king, laws, officers to execute those laws, dominion, or a certain extent of country to rule, and subjects, people under the law, ruled by the king, punished by the officers, if they commit crimes. This constitutes a kingdom.

Now the Lord of heaven has commenced to make preparations to set up that kingdom on the earth. He has given his law unto the people of the earth, that will serve to unite them in one body. He has sent his angels again upon the earth to establish the pure principles of the gospel among men. He has ordained and authorized them to establish the church of God, and bring subjects unto the law of God.

When people get so that they will not spurn at the idea of keeping the commands of God as he has laid them down, and not run after the commands of men, then God will establish his kingdom literally on the earth, set every thing in order in it, and then when the law is given out it will be heard and obeyed. If the subjects of that kingdom get stubborn and will not obey at any one time, they then have officers to execute the law upon them, and make them obey. This kingdom, when established, will keep increasing until it becomes a great nation, and fills the whole earth. It will break down

"The Eureka, a vessel from the upper lakes, passed through this city yesterday, bound with passengers and goods for California". Civis.

NOTE.—Of this vessel the Montreal Pilot says :—

"This is the first American merchant vessel that has ever sailed below Montreal; she has been allowed to do so by special authority from England. The Eureka is 375 tons burthen, 137 feet keel, 26 feet beam, and can carry 1,000 barrels flour. She drew 7 feet 9 inches water, and had no difficulty in coming from the upper lakes, except in the Welland Canal. The locks in this canal are of two sizes, 45 feet and 26½ wide. One of the smallest size, No. 24, was found to be only 26 feet 4½ inches wide, and the sides of the Eureka had to be cut away to enable her to pass through."

☞ Some of the saints living in the seaboard towns are projecting emigrating to Beaver in companies, in vessels belonging to them; and for this purpose two different persons have inquired by what route they could come, and with what size vessels. We publish the foregoing for their information, adding that the route from any part on the seaboard to Beaver is by sea to the gulf of St. Lawrence; up the gulf and river St. Lawrence, passing around the rapids by the Lachine and Long Sault Canals, up lake Ontario, through the Welland canal, and up Lake Erie, &c., by the Chicago route.

If we are not mistaken one or two American vessels have taken this route for the upper Lakes to California previous to the Eureka. A project has also been set on foot to send out the Helfenstein and the Propeller Genesee Chief by the same route. During the Irish famine it was a common event to see Liverpool ships taking in wheat at Chicago, arriving and going by this route, and we believe it is spoken of as an excellent sailing route. The only difficulty in the way is that permission must be obtained from the British government to navigate the St. Lawrence in American vessels. A class of small lake or bay boats could go up through the Erie canal by unshipping the masts. Small sailing vessels will be excellent property at Beaver in carrying on the fishing trade.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLIC.

The undersigned will commence the publication of a new Democratic Weekly Newspaper, bearing this title, on the 14th November, 1849.

It will be of large size; printed on good, stout paper, from handsome new type. It will be mailed to subscribers at the low price of ONE DOLLAR A YEAR—in advance. In addition to strong, sound Democratic original articles, it will contain selections from all the best Democrtic journals in the country, showing the state of public feeling on every topic of interest that attracts the attention of the public.

All the Local News of the City of New York will be fully given in the columns of the Weekly Republic, as well as the General News—both Domestic and Foreign. A writer who wields a powerful pen, will furnish us, by every steamer, a letter from London, which will keep the readers of the Republic fully apprised of the state of Europe, and give a truthful account of the progress of liberal opinions in all parts of the Old World; unwarped and unbiased by passing through the tory journals of England or the papers of the Continent; emasculated by the rigors of the censorship.

A full and truthful account of the state of the produce Market will also be given, and the state of the Money Market and Sales of Stocks, will likewise be accurately chronicled in The Weekly Republic.

Letters containing subscrption, or any other buisness—in all cases post paid—to be addressed to

E. P. WILLIAMS, Republic Office,
82 Nassau street, New York.

New York City, Oct. 30th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK :—I am just starting for Philadelphia, having been delayed one day by means of a severe storm, which swept over New York Bay, and probably the entire Atlantic coast, last evening. The Telegraphs all failed during the storm, and when they are in working condition will doubtless bring in news of some disasters. I have preached in New York in all four Sundays, and eight or ten other days. There are regularly established two week day meetings, as well as the Sunday meeting, and on the whole the church is prospering. Bro. Hess has just sent a most cheering account of the church in Philadelphia to Bro. Royce of this city. Bro. Graham is progressing at Boston. But it is at and around Baltimore that the cause is prospering most. I have not heard one word from the brethren preaching in the British Provinces, and hope that on reading this they will every one of them write to me at New York City, and inform me how the work prospers. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

YEARS.—Neither rouge, artificial ringlets, nor all the resources of the toilet, can retard the relentless progress of that terrible foe to beauty, time. But every one must have noticed how lightly his hand rests upon some, how heavily upon others. Whenever you see in an old person a smooth, unwrinkled forehead, a clear eye, and a pleasing, cheerful expression, be sure her life has been passed in that comparative tranquility of mind, which depends less upon outward vicissitudes than internal peace of mind. A good conscience is the greatest preservative of beauty.—Whenever you see pinched up features, full of lines, and thin, curling lips, you may judge of petty passions, envy and ambition, which have worn out their owner. High and noble thoughts leave behind them noble and beautiful traces; meanness of thought and selfishness of feeling league with Time to unite age and ugliness together. Fresh air, pure, simple food, and exercise, mental and bodily with an elevated ambition, will confer on the greatest age a dignified beauty, in which youth is deficient. There are many men and women, at sixty, younger in appearance and feeling than others at forty.—Ex.

HOW MANY MILES A PRINTER'S HAND TRAVELS.

Although a printer may be sitting all day, yet in his own way he is a great traveler, or at least his hand is, as we shall prove. A good printer will set 8,000 ems a day, or abont 24,000 letters. The distance traveled over by his hand will average about one foot per letter going to the boxes in which they are contained, and of course returning, making two feet for every letter he sets. This would make a distance each day of 48,000 feet, or a little more than nine miles, and in the course of a year, leaving out the Sundays, that member travels about 3,000 miles!

and subdue all other kingdoms upon the earth, and it will stand forever.

"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgement was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their forheads, or in their hands: and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Rev. xx. 4.

Ah! is Christ then to reign on the earth? Yes, indeed. When this kingdom gets dominion on the earth, then Christ will come and reign with his saints literally for one thousand years. Christ's church is established upon the earth, and his kingdom soon will be; and blessed is that man or woman that listeneth to the teachings of God's servants sent out, but wo be unto him that disregardeth them, for the judgments of God will surely overtake him.

C. J. D.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM PRES. STRANG TO ONE OF THE ELDERS IN PHILADELPHIA.

New York, Oct. 19th, 1849.

DEAR BROTHER:—Yours of the 17th was duly received. As I was attending meeting in Williamsburg I could not answer by return mail, and just as I was ready to send out an answer yesterday Bro. Hickey arrived here and presented a new set of facts, not much unexpected, but which still required a different answer. First, then, I am greatly obliged for the very kind manner in which you wrote me, and the frankness of the information you gave. Last Sunday Van Dusen came to our meeting with a revelation, which he claimed the right to proclaim to the people attending; and insisted in so positive a manner that I was obliged to threaten handing him over to the police to stop the disturbance, and the disturbance was renewed after the meeting was dismissed. His revelation was that Bro. Hickey was dead, and that I would shortly be smitten of the Lord and die. He assured me that Bro. Hickey died without ever reaching Philadelphia; that we should soon hear the facts by mail, and that this was to be a sign to the saints that I would soon be rejected of God, and to the Gentiles that Mormonism was true.

The next day he went to Norwich, Conn., where he had another revelation, which he sent in writing to me, that whoever followed the pernicious ways of G. J. Adams and J. J. Strang should be damned. He wrote also that he had sent the revelation to Bro. Hess.—But it would seem from what you write that my name was left out there. No matter. Bro. Hickey tells me that some sister there has filled up the revelation. These men and women have set up their idols in their hearts, and put the stumbling block of their iniquity before their faces, and the Lord has "answered them according to the multitude of their idols." And according to the promise that God made to the prophet, (Ezek. xiv. 7,) he has answered them by himself, and not by the mouth of his prophet. If these persons had the slightest understanding of the ways of God would they understand that when God answered them according to their wicked imaginations, by himself and not by his prophet, that he "will set his face against them, and make them a sign and a proverb." (Ezek. xiv. 8.) Moses the prophet trangressed, and was not suffered to enter into the land of pomise, but God declares that fact by Moses and not by a rebel. Eli was removed from being prophet, and Samuel planted in his stead, but God revealed the matter to Eli, as well as to his successor. (1 Sam. iii. 13.) Joseph Smith, for transgression, was removed from the earth, and left to fall by the hand of his enemies. But God revealed that judgment to him, that he and not a rebel, should be the witness to the church that another was planted in his stead. But these persons are getting revelations like Korah, and the thousands other vile rebels against God's church, The end of all which is their own destruction.

There has never yet been an apostacy from the people of God but the apostates pretended to be guided by revelation; and they all gave as a reason for their rebellion that Moses, Joseph or some other God-appointed shepherd was doing wrong. Hickey is going back to Beaver. He pretends to me that the wants of his wife and family is the cause, but that is not the fact. And last of all he says that Horton was in the right in the matter of difference between them, (Horton and Hickey,) and he was in the wrong. Horton had lost some $8 in money, and accused Hickey of stealing it. If he was in the right, comment is unnecessary. I suppose you will ask what effect will this have on the church here? I don't know that it has any at all. I infer from all I hear that the church at Philadelphia is somewhat moved. Indeed there seems to be some anxiety for me to make haste on that account. I have no anxiety on the subject.

If any one will apostatize on any tales whatever, they will hear the tale. The Devil will find somebody to do his dirty work, when it requires nothing more difficult than tale telling. I shall not come to Philadephia to go around and convince men and women that such foolish stories are false. I have other business to do, and of more consequence. I expect to be there a week from next Sunday.—Though if I had nothing to do there but to falsify the lies of apostates, I should not think of coming at all. Well, this is rather a cheerless letter, yet I cannot but think our work is prospering, and destined to be successful. I cannot get low spirited. By some means my courage, faith and patience are braced up. None of these things move me. I have more to write but no time to write it. It seems that a pretty general scheme has been set on foot to get up a muss. Much calculation was made of getting Appleton to join it, and they are evidently chagrined in the failure. I write this for all the church, including the women that had the dreams. And will simply add for their consolation the words of Solomon, "He that trusteth in a dream is not wise." Truly and sincerly,

J. J. STRANG.

Bohemian Israelites in Wisconsin.—A number of highly respectable families have arrived at New York from Bohemia, to form a colony in Wisconsin. There have been for several years past many families from the same country in the neighborhood of Milwaukee; but the present party mean to establish a congregation at once, and they came provided with teachers and other necessary officers to carry their intention into effect.—Occident.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 35.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, NOV. 15, 1849. [WHOLE No. 151.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

DEAR FRANK:—The following article was written merely to a relative of the author, (who is a gentleman but 16 years of age,) but thinking it may be useful, I send it to you for publication:— J. J. S.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Daniel ii. 31 to 45.—"Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass. His legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and break them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

"This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king. Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the heavens hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh to pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all things, shall it break in pieces and bruise.

"And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken, [weak.] And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of [other] men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with [or joined to] clay. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure."

We see by the last verse that this must all take place, these kings must all reign in their order, after this dream was interpreted. Now let us look into the details of history and see if we can find any kingdoms that bear resemblance to these. Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, was the head of gold. He ruled over the whole earth, and made all bow at his word. The kingdom that should rise after him,

Minutes of a General Conference, held in the City of New York, on the 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th days of October, 1849, by appointment of the First Presidency.

(Concluded.)

Bro. Blakeslee spoke from these words:—"Hear ye that are far off, and ye that are near acknowledge my might. The sinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrite. Who can dwell in devouring fire?" It is said of the Savior, that a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about. It is said of the Ancient of Days, that a fire was round about him. There is a baptism of fire spoken of, as well as water and the spirit. The prophet declares that certain characters shall abide the devouring fire, so that it shall only purify and try as gold is tried and purified. They shall see the king in his beauty, and behold the land that is very far off. Bro. B. continued his remarks at some length, ably sustaining the idea that all things are cleansed, sanctified and glorified by the word and law of God.

Bro. L. D. Hickey then arose, and spoke in a glowing manner of the divinity of the word of God, showing that the word of God given to the saints now is as important as it was in ancient times. The revelations of Joseph or James are as good as the revelations of Peter or Paul, and more binding on the saints. Bro. Hickey said that he would take the revelations of Joseph and prove the revelations of James. He knew that James was a prophet, as he knew that Joseph was a prophet.—It pleased God to show him the fact that Jesus had come in the flesh, and he could testify as an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. God by his spirit has shown me that James was a prophet, and on examining the revelations I found the law and testimony to agree with the testimony of the spirit. You have heard edifying teachings during this Conference, and you will hear good things which will warm your hearts and induce you to form resolves for good. Do not let those resolutions cool. Do not grow luke warm.

Bro. Adams said that the saints were to be gathered and organized according to principles of universal brotherhood, and there the power of God would be manifested, and all who had departed from the truth would be suddenly and miserably destroyed. The development of the power of God will be a gradual development, which will be continually augmenting, until it shall swallow up all opposing influences. What is G. J. Adams to do in the dispensation of love and mercy in the last times? He is going with the Twelve to the eastern continent, to Russia, to Palestine, and to England. The church in England has not been rejected.

Bro. Samuel Bennett, of the quorum of the Twelve, arose and spoke in a plain, sympathetic and soul-stirring manner of the past, the present and the future. He spoke of his faith in Bro. Strang, his determination to do his duty, and to magnify his high and holy calling.—He spoke of the growing desire in the city of New York to hear and obey the truth. He knew that God would bear off Bro. Strang in triumph over all his enemies. He declared he never had a doubt of the great work of the last days. He said his highest ambition was to help bear off the kingdom of God in this last time. He said no men can teach the principles that have been taught this day in this hall except they have both the "Father and the Son."

Bro. Bennett declared his utmost confidence in the church in its present authority and administration, and declared with all the feeling of his soul his determination that no power that sways the will of man shall stay his hand from carrying out this work, till the dominion of all the earth is given to the saints.

Bro. Bassett desired to thank God for all the patience he had given to him to listen to the teachings of the Elders, and the zeal which he had given to establish the truth. Faith is only predicated aright on the word of God, which he could only express when God touches his lips with coals from off the altar.

Bro. Adams exhorted the saints to spend a

Minutes of a General Conference, held in the City of New York, on the 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th days of October, 1849, by appointment of the First Presidency.

(Concluded.)

Bro. Blakeslee spoke from these words:—"Hear ye that are far off, and ye that are near acknowledge my might. The sinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrite. Who can dwell in devouring fire?" It is said of the Savior, that a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about. It is said of the Ancient of Days, that a fire was round about him. There is a baptism of fire spoken of, as well as water and the spirit. The prophet declares that certain characters shall abide the devouring fire, so that it shall only purify and try as gold is tried and purified. They shall see the king in his beauty, and behold the land that is very far off. Bro. B. continued his remarks at some length, ably sustaining the idea that all things are cleansed, sanctified and glorified by the word and law of God.

Bro. L. D. Hickey then arose, and spoke in a glowing manner of the divinity of the word of God, showing that the word of God given to the saints now is as important as it was in ancient times. The revelations of Joseph or James are as good as the revelations of Peter or Paul, and more binding on the saints. Bro. Hickey said that he would take the revelations of Joseph and prove the revelations of James. He knew that James was a prophet, as he knew that Joseph was a prophet.—It pleased God to show him the fact that Jesus had come in the flesh, and he could testify as an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. God by his spirit has shown me that James was a prophet, and on examining the revelations I found the law and testimony to agree with the testimony of the spirit. You have heard edifying teachings during this Conference, and you will hear good things which will warm your hearts and induce you to form resolves for good. Do not let those resolutions cool. Do not grow luke warm.

Bro. Adams said that the saints were to be gathered and organized according to principles of universal brotherhood, and there the power of God would be manifested, and all who had departed from the truth would be suddenly and miserably destroyed. The development of the power of God will be a gradual development, which will be continually augmenting, until it shall swallow up all opposing influences. What is G. J. Adams to do in the dispensation of love and mercy in the last times? He is going with the Twelve to the eastern continent, to Russia, to Palestine, and to England. The church in England has not been rejected.

Bro. Samuel Bennett, of the quorum of the Twelve, arose and spoke in a plain, sympathetic and soul-stirring manner of the past, the present and the future. He spoke of his faith in Bro. Strang, his determination to do his duty, and to magnify his high and holy calling.—He spoke of the growing desire in the city of New York to hear and obey the truth. He knew that God would bear off Bro. Strang in triumph over all his enemies. He declared he never had a doubt of the great work of the last days. He said his highest ambition was to help bear off the kingdom of God in this last time. He said no men can teach the principles that have been taught this day in this hall except they have both the "Father and the Son."

Bro. Bennett declared his utmost confidence in the church in its present authority and administration, and declared with all the feeling of his soul his determination that no power that sways the will of man shall stay his hand from carrying out this work, till the dominion of all the earth is given to the saints.

Bro. Bassett desired to thank God for all the patience he had given to him to listen to the teachings of the Elders, and the zeal which he had given to establish the truth. Faith is only predicated aright on the word of God, which he could only express when God touches his lips with coals from off the altar.

Bro. Adams exhorted the saints to spend a portion of the time in secret prayer. Secret prayer is the key that unlocks heaven. Experimental religion is the religion we want.—Adjourned till to-morrow, ten o'clock. Benediction by James Blakeslee.

OCT. 7TH.—Conference assembled at the usual hour. Prayer by Pres. Adams. Singing —"Who are those arrayed in white?" Pres. Strang addressed the Conference on the great subject of the kingdom of God. He said the Jews and Gentiles were both right in the things they believed, and wrong in the things they disbelieved. The Jews expected the Redeemer of Israel to come as a prince and political ruler, but did not see or credit the mission of the crucified Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world. The Gentiles now believe the mission of redemption performed by Jesus the Nazarene, but do not credit the testimony of every prophet that he will come as the prince of the kings of the earth; the lion of the tribe of Judah.

Indeed the ignorance of the christian world is so profound as to extend to almost every point of faith. The things which they should understand best they seem to know nothing of. In the prayers repeated every day of their lives by pratling infancy, manhoods vigor and decrepit old age, as in the creeds and catechisms of Bishops, D. D.'s and ECCLESIASTIC COUNCILS, their want of godly knowledge equally appears. Three times a day they lift up their hands to God, and pray, "Our Father who art in heaven, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." And yet maintain that the kingdom of God was established in the days of Christ and Peter.

The next thing in importance in all their teachings is the ten commandments, one of which was lost wholly by Jews, Catholics and Protestants. What is the reason that the christian world, with its hundreds of thousands of clergymen, do not know that they have but nine of the ten commandments? Simply because no man can teach the things of God save by the spirit of God, which they have not got. After showing the fact that the second commandment was wanting, and that the 20th of Exodus and the 5th of Deuteronomy contain but nine commandments, and that the whole christian world were ignorant as to what was the other commandment, and even that they lacked one, he proceeded to show that the first commandment was, "thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind and strength, and him only shalt thou serve." And the second is, "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and upon the first of these hangs or depends the commandment to "not take the name of God in vain," and the commandment to "keep the Sabbath day;" and upon the second hang or depend the other six commands in the decalogue.

Pres. S. exemplified the ignorance of the sectarian world in all their various tenets of faith. He referred to the fruits of the sectarian's kingdom, which has reigned in the earth for centuries, and now reigns, and pointed to the condition of the nations under its influence as in Poland, Ireland, Russia and Hungary, where the iron heel of oppression is trampling the poor in the dust. He then proceeded to show the testimonies contained in the prophets of the purposes of God, covenanted to the fathers, to establish the throne of righteousness in the house of David forever.

The kingdom of heaven was not established in the days of Peter, James or John, as is clearly shown in the teachings of the Savior after his resurrection, viz.: that it was not for them to know when the kingdom was to be established. The objection urged that the kingdom of God was in the midst of or among the Israelites in the days of Jesus was shown to refer to the king, territory and the law, and officers being among them, and only required their obedience to set up the kingdom, to establish it forever.

He also showed that the sectarians involve themselves in the grossest absurdity in endeavoring to escape these conclusions. They claim that the kingdom of God was within them; that is, in their hearts; and as this language was addressed to unbelieving Pharisees, by portion of the time in secret prayer. Secret prayer is the key that unlocks heaven. Experimental religion is the religion we want.—Adjourned till to-morrow, ten o'clock. Benediction by James Blakeslee.

Oct. 7th.—Conference assembled at the usual hour. Prayer by Pres. Adams. Singing —"Who are those arrayed in white?" Pres. Strang addressed the Conference on the great subject of the kingdom of God. He said the Jews and Gentiles were both right in the things they believed, and wrong in the things they disbelieved. The Jews expected the Redeemer of Israel to come as a prince and political ruler, but did not see or credit the mission of the crucified Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world. The Gentiles now believe the mission of redemption performed by Jesus the Nazarene, but do not credit the testimony of every prophet that he will come as the prince of the kings of the earth: the lion of the tribe of Judah.

Indeed the ignorance of the christian world is so profound as to extend to almost every point of faith. The things which they should understand best they seem to know nothing of. In the prayers repeated every day of their lives by pratling infancy, manhoods vigor and decrepit old age, as in the creeds and catechisms of Bishops, D. D.'s and ecclesiastic councils, their want of godly knowledge equally appears. Three times a day they lift up their hands to God, and pray, "Our Father who art in heaven, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." And yet maintain that the kingdom of God was established in the days of Christ and Peter.

The next thing in importance in all their teachings is the ten commandments, one of which was lost wholly by Jews, Catholics and Protestants. What is the reason that the christian world, with its hundreds of thousands of clergymen, do not know that they have but nine of the ten commandments? Simply because no man can teach the things of God save by the spirit of God, which they have not got. After showing the fact that the second commandment was wanting, and that the 20th of Exodus and the 5th of Deuteronomy contain but nine commandments, and that the whole christian world were ignorant as to what was the other commandment, and even that they lacked one, he proceeded to show that the first commandment was, "thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind and strength, and him only shalt thou serve." And the second is, "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and upon the first of these hangs or depends the commandment to "not take the name of God in vain," and the commandment to "keep the Sabbath day;" and upon the second hang or depend the other six commands in the decalogue.

Pres. S. exemplified the ignorance of the sectarian world in all their various tenets of faith. He referred to the fruits of the sectarian's kingdom, which has reigned in the earth for centuries, and now reigns, and pointed to the condition of the nations under its influence as in Poland, Ireland, Russia and Hungary, where the iron heel of oppression is trampling the poor in the dust. He then proceeded to show the testimonies contained in the prophets of the purposes of God, covenanted to the fathers, to establish the throne of righteousness in the house of David forever.

The kingdom of heaven was not established in the days of Peter, James or John, as is clearly shown in the teachings of the Savior after his resurrection, viz.: that it was not for them to know when the kingdom was to be established. The objection urged that the kingdom of God was in the midst of or among the Israelites in the days of Jesus was shown to refer to the king, territory and the law, and officers being among them, and only required their obedience to set up the kingdom, to establish it forever.

He also showed that the sectarians involve themselves in the grossest absurdity in endeavoring to escape these conclusions. They claim that the kingdom of God was within them; that is, in their hearts; and as this language was addressed to unbelieving Pharisees, by this construction the spiritual kingdom of God was in the hearts of the persecutors of Christ. A strange place for it, truly!

He then proceeded to an exposition of the image of Daniel, and to show the setting up of the kingdom of God in the days of the ten kings, to come into existence after the division of the Roman empire; also an exposition of Daniel's vision of the beasts. He showed the fact that the kingdom of God was to be established after the existence of the ten kings and the little horn, and alluded to the testimony of the prophet that the stone was to smite the image and break it in pieces. The kingdom of God was to exist on the earth in its power prior to the coming of the Son of Man. He concluded an argumentative and eloquent discourse.—Singing. Benediction by Elder Leech.

Afternoon Session.—Singing. Prayer by Elder Hickey. Pres. Adams read portions of the prophets. He remarked that there had been one object in view since the commencement of the Conference, which was to show that the set time to favor Zion has come. He remarked that it was a difficult task to teach saints, because they knew so much. The establishing of a people and a place called Zion is an absolute prerequisite to the bringing in of the kingdom of God, and the attainment of salvation. "I will place salvation in Zion, for Israel my glory. The deliverer shall come out of Zion, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

The Zion at Jerusalem is not the Zion from which the deliverer is to come. That was to be ploughed as a field. But the Zion out of which the law shall go forth is established upon the hills, and exalted upon the mountains.—This Zion is established upon a land clearly designated in the Bible (read the last of the 17th and first of the 18th chapt. of Isaiah) as a land in the shape of wings, beyond the rivers of Ethiopa, as a land made of sprigs and branches from all other lands, that sent messengers in haste in rushing vessels, (steam vessels,) to a nation meeted out, trodden under foot, and terrible from their beginning, (the house of Israel.) This Zion is distinguished from the ancient Zion in that the kings of the earth shall assemble and go round about her, and fear shall take hold of them there. Bro. Adams spoke of the testimony which the prophets give of the apostacy of the last days. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered by Elders Leech and Foster. Benediction by Pres. Adams. Adjourned till 6 o'clock.

Evening Session.—Conference called to order by Pres. Adams. Remarks by Pres. Strang. He said that in consequence of his late arrival he had not familiarized himself with the particular circumstances attending this Conference, and would rely more than commonly upon the counsel of his brethren. He remarked that the impression had gone forth that a colored man could not hold the priesthood, which was not true. The fact that color was a curse was no bar. Who is there that does not labor under a curse? Death is the fate of all men, and is a curse incurred by sin. Pres. Strang proposed by revelation that Bro. Walker (colored) be ordained an Elder, which was concurred in unanimously. Pres. Strang disclaimed any intention of courting the favor of emancipationists; holding that the revelations of God, and not the devices of men, are the foundation of all national freedom.

Bro. Johnson was presented by Pres. Adams, and unanimously received by the Conference as an appropriate man to hold the priesthood and office of an Elder. Pres. Adams proposed Bro. D. R. Whipple as a member of the first Seventy, which was accepted unanimously.

Pres. Adams proposed Bro. G. T. Leech to be sent south. Unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed Bro. Braidwood to go south, which was unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed Samuel Bennett to go to the south, Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, which was unanimously approved.

Pres. Adams proposed James Blakeslee to go to New Bedford, which was unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed A. N. Hosmer to labor in Baltimore and vicinity. Unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed S.

this construction the spiritual kingdom of God was in the hearts of the persecutors of Christ. A strange place for it, truly!

He then proceeded to an exposition of the image of Daniel, and to show the setting up of the kingdom of God in the days of the ten kings, to come into existence after the division of the Roman empire; also an exposition of Daniel's vision of the beasts. He showed the fact that the kingdom of God was to be established after the existence of the ten kings and the little horn, and alluded to the testimony of the prophet that the stone was to smite the image and break it in pieces. The kingdom of God was to exist on the earth in its power prior to the coming of the Son of Man. He concluded an argumentative and eloquent discourse.—Singing. Benediction by Elder Leech.

Afternoon Session.—Singing. Prayer by Elder Hickey. Pres. Adams read portions of the prophets. He remarked that there had been one object in view since the commencement of the Conference, which was to show that the set time to favor Zion has come. He remarked that it was a difficult task to teach saints, because they knew so much. The establishing of a people and a place called Zion is an absolute prerequisite to the bringing in of the kingdom of God, and the attainment of salvation. "I will place salvation in Zion, for Israel my glory. The deliverer shall come out of Zion, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

The Zion at Jerusalem is not the Zion from which the deliverer is to come. That was to be ploughed as a field. But the Zion out of which the law shall go forth is established upon the hills, and exalted upon the mountains.—This Zion is established upon a land clearly designated in the Bible (read the last of the 17th and first of the 18th chapt. of Isaiah) as a land in the shape of wings, beyond the rivers of Ethiopa, as a land made of sprigs and branches from all other lands, that sent messengers in haste in rushing vessels, (steam vessels,) to a nation meeted out, trodden under foot, and terrible from their beginning, (the house of Israel.) This Zion is distinguished from the ancient Zion in that the kings of the earth shall assemble and go round about her, and fear shall take hold of them there. Bro. Adams spoke of the testimony which the prophets give of the apostacy of the last days. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered by Elders Leech and Foster. Benediction by Pres. Adams. Adjourned till 6 o'clock.

Evening Session.—Conference called to order by Pres. Adams. Remarks by Pres. Strang. He said that in consequence of his late arrival he had not familiarized himself with the particular circumstances attending this Conference, and would rely more than commonly upon the counsel of his brethren. He remarked that the impression had gone forth that a colored man could not hold the priesthood, which was not true. The fact that color was a curse was no bar. Who is there that does not labor under a curse? Death is the fate of all men, and is a curse incurred by sin. Pres. Strang proposed by revelation that Bro. Walker (colored) be ordained an Elder, which was concurred in unanimously. Pres. Strang disclaimed any intention of courting the favor of emancipationists; holding that the revelations of God, and not the devices of men, are the foundation of all national freedom.

Bro. Johnson was presented by Pres. Adams. and unanimously received by the Conference as an appropriate man to hold the priesthood and office of an Elder. Pres. Adams proposed Bro. D. R. Whipple as a member of the first Seventy, which was accepted unanimously.

Pres. Adams proposed Bro. G. T. Leech to be sent south. Unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed Bro. Braidwood to go south. which was unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed Samuel Bennett to go to the south, Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, which was unanimously approved.

Pres. Adams proposed James Blakeslee to go to New Bedford, which was unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed A. N. Hosmer to labor in Baltimore and vicinity. Unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed S.

Graham to go to Boston. Unanimously approved. Pres. Strang proposed L. D. Hickey to go to Philadelphia and New Jersey. Unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed Increase Van Dusen to go with Bro. Hickey.—Laid over till to-morrow, at the suggestion of Pres. Strang. Bro. Appleton's case was laid over till to-morrow. Bro. Hess expressed his wish that he might remain in Philadelphia this winter coming, to prepare to go west in the spring.

Bro. Walker was ordained an Elder under the hands of Presidents Strang and Adams.—Also Bro. Johnson under the hands of Pres. Strang and Adams. Bro. Whipple was ordained a member of the first Seventy under the hands of Elders Blakeslee, Graham and Hosmer.

Pres. Adams said Pres. Strang would attend to the bestowment of patriarchal blessings during the time he proposed to stay in the east.—Singing. Pres. Strang preached from, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given," &c. In speaking therefrom he took occasion to show that the Redeemer and lawful king of the house of Israel was first a child, born of the tribe of Judah and lineage of David, the son of Joseph as genealogically traced by both Matthew and Luke, therefore the son of man, then the son of God by adoption through obedience to the law of regeneration, acknowledged and sealed as such by the descent of the Holy Spirit, not in the shape of a dove, but descending like as a dove descends from the heavens to the earth, the likeness consisting in the manner of its descent, not in the bodily conformation.

The events named by the prophet taking place in the order of cumulative progression, first a child born to us, (the house of Israel,) becoming the son of God, is given as a Redeemer, a Wonderful Counselor, a Mighty God, an Everlasting Father, a Prince of Peace. Paul declares to the Hebrews that God himself addresses him in the words, "Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom: Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity, therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with oil of gladness above thy fellows;" showing that he was made God because he loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and therefore after he had done it, and consequently was first a child, then a son of God by the law of adoption, then a God by the anointing of his Father.

The discourse of Pres. Strang produced a profound sensation upon those who heard it.—Things new and old were handled by a master workman, and the effect produced was of corresponding magnitude and permanence. Singing. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Oct. 8th.—A Council of the Presidency, the members of the quorum of the Twelve, and those Elders at present in the vicinity, was called at the house of Bro. Foster to transact the unfinished business. Prayer by Pres. Strang. Singing. The case of Increase Van Dusen was first in order, and after considerable discussion and confession by Bro. Van D., was disposed of by the Council sending him with Bro. Hickey to Philadelphia and New Jesey. This case drew forth some remarks from Pres. Strang of a very interesting kind on the inviolability of oaths, and the manner of release from certain kinds of obligations.

The case of Bro. Appleton next came up, and after the most ample confession from Bro. A., it was the mind of the Council that he be sustained in his calling as an Apostle of the Lord Jesus, and that he go with Bro. Graham to Boston and New England.

Bro. Heman Bassett was proposed as a candidate for the Eldership by S. Bennett, which was duly ratified by the Council, and he was ordained under the hands of Bros. Graham, Bennett and Hosmer into the first Seventy.—He was duly sent to Hartford, Newark, &c., to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom of God.

Lucien R. Foster was proposed by Pres. Adams to go to Amboy and various places in the vicinity of New York. Duly approved by the Council. Benediction by Pres Strang. Bro. Whipple was appointed to preach in Washington. Bro. Johnson in the vicinity of Baltimore, and Bro. Canney and others in the villages and towns in the vicinity of New York.

JAMES J. STRANG, } Presidents.
GEO. J. ADAMS, }
SAMUEL BENNETT, Clerk.

Graham to go to Boston. Unanimously approved. Pres. Strang proposed L. D. Hickey to go to Philadelphia and New Jersey. Unanimously approved. Pres. Adams proposed Increase Van Dusen to go with Bro. Hickey.—Laid over till to-morrow, at the suggestion of Pres. Strang. Bro. Appleton's case was laid over till to-morrow. Bro. Hess expressed his wish that he might remain in Philadelphia this winter coming, to prepare to go west in the spring.

Bro. Walker was ordained an Elder under the hands of Presidents Strang and Adams.—Also Bro. Johnson under the hands of Pres. Strang and Adams. Bro. Whipple was ordained a member of the first Seventy under the hands of Elders Blakeslee, Graham and Hosmer.

Pres. Adams said Pres. Strang would attend to the bestowment of patriarchal blessings during the time he proposed to stay in the east.—Singing. Pres. Strang preached from, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given," &c. In speaking therefrom he took occasion to show that the Redeemer and lawful king of the house of Israel was first a child, born of the tribe of Judah and lineage of David, the son of Joseph as genealogically traced by both Matthew and Luke, therefore the son of man, then the son of God by adoption through obedience to the law of regeneration, acknowledged and sealed as such by the descent of the Holy Spirit, not in the shape of a dove, but descending like as a dove descends from the heavens to the earth, the likeness consisting in the manner of its descent, not in the bodily conformation.

The events named by the prophet taking place in the order of cumulative progression, first a child born to us, (the house of Israel,) becoming the son of God, is given as a Redeemer, a Wonderful Counselor, a Mighty God, an Everlasting Father, a Prince of Peace. Paul declares to the Hebrews that God himself addresses him in the words, "Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom: Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity, therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with oil of gladness above thy fellows;" showing that he was made God because he loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and therefore after he had done it, and consequently was first a child, then a son of God by the law of adoption, then a God by the anointing of his Father.

The discourse of Pres. Strang produced a profound sensation upon those who heard it.—Things new and old were handled by a master workman, and the effect produced was of corresponding magnitude and permanence. Singing. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Oct. 8th.—A Council of the Presidency, the members of the quorum of the Twelve, and those Elders at present in the vicinity, was called at the house of Bro. Foster to transact the unfinished business. Prayer by Pres. Strang. Singing. The case of Increase Van Dusen was first in order, and after considerable discussion and confession by Bro. Van D., was disposed of by the Council sending him with Bro. Hickey to Philadelphia and New Jesey. This case drew forth some remarks from Pres. Strang of a very interesting kind on the inviolability of oaths, and the manner of release from certain kinds of obligations.

The case of Bro. Appleton next came up, and after the most ample confession from Bro. A., it was the mind of the Council that he be sustained in his calling as an Apostle of the Lord Jesus, and that he go with Bro. Graham to Boston and New England.

Bro. Heman Bassett was proposed as a candidate for the Eldership by S. Bennett, which was duly ratified by the Council, and he was ordained under the hands of Bros. Graham, Bennett and Hosmer into the first Seventy.—He was duly sent to Hartford, Newark, &c., to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom of God.

Lucien R. Foster was proposed by Pres. Adams to go to Amboy and various places in the vicinity of New York. Duly approved by the Council. Benediction by Pres Strang. Bro. Whipple was appointed to preach in Washington. Bro. Johnson in the vicinity of Baltimore, and Bro. Canney and others in the villages and towns in the vicinity of New York.

JAMES J. STRANG, } Presidents.
GEO. J. ADAMS, }
SAMUEL BENNETT, Clerk.

THE GLOBE:

A CONGRESSIONAL, AGRICULTURAL, AND LITERARY NEWSPAPER.

The approach of Congress calls out the Annual Prospectus of the GLOBE Establishment.

The time is full of interest. The coming in of a new Administration—the consequent broaching of a new policy touching the internal concerns of the country—the new and most important issues arising from the late vast accession to the public domain, and the great national objects associated with it—the impending difficulty in our relations with France, and the possible complication of our affairs with the troubles of Europe,—conspire to create great expectation as to the proceeding of the next Congress. The approaching Session will probably continue till late in the summer of 1850. The debates, from the agitation of so many questions of vital interest to the Republic, will draw forth all the talent of the National Legislature.

To become a useful instrument, however humble, to assist the working of the admirable machinery of our popular institutions, is the ambition of the conductor of the GLOBE. Extraordinary preparations have therefore been made to meet the increasing demands of our rapidly improving and growing country for Congressional intelligence.

The GLOBE Press has already enlisted the ablest Reporters yet known to Congress; its materials and machinery are of the best sort; and the exclusive devotion of the individual who for so many years has made it his study to embody and publish the labors of Congress, give reason to hope that an advance will be made in the accomplishment of this undertaking commensurate with its increased importance. But the accumulation of expense consequent on the additional number of Reporters required—the extra charges incurred in printing at night the debates of the preceding day—the vast addition made to the mass published, by the protracted sessions and the fuller reports given,—will render our enterprise a failure, unless Congress shall so far patronize it as to become a purchaser of such portion of the daily sheets issued as shall contribute to make the reports that fill them. The undersigned has ventured on the preparation he has made for as many daily sheets for each Member, at the subscription price, as will, in part, defray the expense of reporting, and give them circulation as Congressional documents in their several districts. This will enable the Publisher to bear the charge of reporting, and it will give an impulse to the circulation of the Congressional Print, which, although the cheapest in the Union, (the expense of preparation considered,) will yet yield sufficient profit to make the system permanent.

JOHN C. RIVES having purchased the interest of F. P. BLAIR in Jackson Hall—the printing office machinery and material—becomes the sole proprietor thereof, and will give his exclusive attention to the Congressional Department. J. C. PICKETT will conduct the Miscellaneous Department of the Newspaper. F. P. BLAIR retires from both concerns, with prayers for their permanent usefulness and prosperity.

The GLOBE will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the remainder of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a WEEKLY GLOBE, a CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE, and an APPENDIX.

The WEEKLY GLOBE will contain Agricultural and miscellaneous articles; and will occasionally give debates of such importance as command universal interest.

The price of the WEEKLY GLOBE is reduced to one dollar, with a view to obtain a more general circulation. Subscribers who have hitherto paid $2 per annum, will be charged only $1 after the expiration of the first year.

The CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and Appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session. Each volume will probably comprise two thousand royal quarto pages, of small type.

Complete indexes to the Congressional Globe and Appendix will be sent to subscribers soon after Congress adjourns.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year,	$5 00
For the Daily Globe for less than a year, at the rate of 84 cents a month.
For one copy of the Weekly Globe for one year	1 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the session	3 00
For one copy of the Appendix during the session	3 00
For four copies of either, or part of both during the session	10 00
For ten copies of either, or part of both during the session	20 00

The prices for these papers are so low, that advance payments are indispensable to carry them on.

Postmasters who may obtain subscribers will be allowed twenty per cent. on the subscription prices for single papers, which they may retain when they send on the names of subscribers and the subscription money. The price for the Congressional Globe and Appendix to clubs who take ten copies, is so low, that no deduction can be afforded. Subscriptions may be remitted by mail, at our risk, in money at par in the section of the country where subscribers reside.

JOHN C. RIVES.

WASHINGTON CITY, October 9, 1849.

MARRIAGE WITHOUT LOVE.

The worst of all mockeries is a marriage without love; yoking together, but not a union; bondage without a bond; a multiplication of all the burdens of life for both parties, without a mutual life interest, and like the offering of a whole family to false gods, whose demands are never satisfied, because, whatever the sacrifice, there is still no atonement. Too many matches are made in confusion, they have no faith in their composition, and, therefore an abundance of sin. There may be sincerity enough in them, but too often it is sincere selfishness.—Ex. paper.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCK.

An earthquake shock was experienced in Stowe, Concord, Acton, and some other towns in that part of Middlesex, on the afternoon of the 8th ult. It was thought by people in Stowe and Concord that the powder mills in Acton had exploded, so decided was the shock.—Boston Times.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Sylvenus Pease,	$2,00 to Vol. V No. 8
William Brown,	2,00 to Vol. IV No. 42
Israel Duty,	2,00 to Vol. V No. 13

THE GLOBE:

A CONGRESSIONAL, AGRICULTURAL, AND LITERARY NEWSPAPER.

The approach of Congress calls out the Annual Prospectus of the GLOBE Establishment.

The time is full of interest. The coming in of a new Administration—the consequent broaching of a new policy touching the internal concerns of the country—the new and most important issues arising from the late vast accession to the public domain, and the great national objects associated with it—the impending difficulty in our relations with France, and the possible complication of our affairs with the troubles of Europe,—conspire to create great expectation as to the proceeding of the next Congress. The approaching Session will probably continue till late in the summer of 1850. The debates, from the agitation of so many questions of vital interest to the Republic, will draw forth all the talent of the National Legislature.

To become a useful instrument, however humble, to assist the working of the admirable machinery of our popular institutions, is the ambition of the conductor of the GLOBE. Extraordinary preparations have therefore been made to meet the increasing demands of our rapidly improving and growing country for Congressional intelligence.

The GLOBE Press has already enlisted the ablest Reporters yet known to Congress; its materials and machinery are of the best sort; and the exclusive devotion of the individual who for so many years has made it his study to embody and publish the labors of Congress, give reason to hope that an advance will be made in the accomplishment of this undertaking commensurate with its increased importance. But the accumulation of expense consequent on the additional number of Reporters required—the extra charges incurred in printing at night the debates of the preceding day—the vast addition made to the mass published, by the protracted sessions and the fuller reports given,—will render our enterprise a failure, unless Congress shall so far patronize it as to become a purchaser of such portion of the daily sheets issued as shall contribute to make the reports that fill them. The undersigned has ventured on the preparation he has made for as many daily sheets for each Member, at the subscription price, as will, in part, defray the expense of reporting, and give them circulation as Congressional documents in their several districts. This will enable the Publisher to bear the charge of reporting, and it will give an impulse to the circulation of the Congressional Print, which, although the cheapest in the Union, (the expense of preparation considered,) will yet yield sufficient profit to make the system permanent.

JOHN C. RIVES having purchased the interest of F. P. BLAIR in Jackson Hall—the printing office machinery and material—becomes the sole proprietor thereof, and will give his exclusive attention to the Congressional Department. J. C. PICKETT will conduct the Miscellaneous Department of the Newspaper. F. P. BLAIR retires from both concerns, with prayers for their permanent usefulness and prosperity.

The GLOBE will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the remainder of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a WEEKLY GLOBE, a CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE, and an APPENDIX.

The WEEKLY GLOBE will contain Agricultural and miscellaneous articles; and will occasionally give debates of such importance as command universal interest.

The price of the WEEKLY GLOBE is reduced to one dollar, with a view to obtain a more general circulation. Subscribers who have hitherto paid $2 per annum, will be charged only $1 after the expiration of the first year.

The CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and Appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session. Each volume will probably comprise two thousand royal quarto pages, of small type.

Complete indexes to the Congressional Globe and Appendix will be sent to subscribers soon after Congress adjourns.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year,	$5 00
For the Daily Globe for less than a year, at the rate of 81 cents a month.
For one copy of the Weekly Globe for one year	1 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the session	3 00
For one copy of the Appendix during the session	3 00
For four copies of either, or part of both during the session	10 00
For ten copies of either, or part of both during the session	20 00

The prices for these papers are so low, that advance payments are indispensable to carry them on.

Postmasters who may obtain subscribers will be allowed twenty per cent. on the subscription prices for single papers, which they may retain when they send on the names of subscribers and the subscription money. The price for the Congressional Globe and Appendix to clubs who take ten copies, is so low, that no deduction can be afforded. Subscriptions may be remitted by mail, at our risk, in money at par in the section of the country where subscribers reside.

JOHN C. RIVES.

WASHINGTON CITY, October 9, 1849.

MARRIAGE WITHOUT LOVE.

The worst of all mockeries is a marriage without love; yoking together, but not a union; bondage without a bond; a multiplication of all the burdens of life for both parties, without a mutual life interest, and like the offering of a whole family to false gods, whose demands are never satisfied, because, whatever the sacrifice, there is still no atonement. Too many matches are made in confusion, they have no faith in their composition, and, therefore an abundance of sin. There may be sincerity enough in them, but too often it is sincere selfishness.—Ex. paper.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCK.

An earthquake shock was experienced in Stowe, Concord, Acton, and some other towns in that part of Middlesex, on the afternoon of the 8th ult. It was thought by people in Stowe and Concord that the powder mills in Acton had exploded, so decided was the shock.—Boston Times.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Sylvenus Pease,	$2,00 to Vol. V No. 8
William Brown,	2,00 to Vol. IV No. 42
Israel Duty,	2,00 to Vol. V No. 13

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 36.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. NOV. 22, 1849. [WHOLE No. 152.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post-office.

PHRENOLOGICAL DESCRIPTION OF JAMES J. STRANG,

AS GIVEN BY S. R. WELLS, 131 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK, SEPT. 11TH, 1846.

Your brain is quite large, full as much as you have physical power to sustain. Your mental temperament predominates, giving you a desire to exercise your brain more than your body, and hence will be liable to exhaust your strength, unless you take especial care of your health. You have more energy and activity of character than power of endurance. You have strong attachments to friends and home, yet you are fond of traveling for the sake of seeing the world and gaining knowledge. You are fond of variety and change. It is difficult for you to keep your mind on one thing long at once, but it flies from one thing to another without waiting to finish up a subject. Thus giving you versatility of talent, which enables you to attend to a variety of things without confusion.

It would be well if you had more of this quality of mind in order to connect and complete your thoughts more perfectly. All your feelings are positive. You are never half way, but either the one thing or the other. You should be known among your acquiantances for your energy and perseverance, so long as you are engaged in a cause. You are never lazy, but on the contrary are apt to work too hard. You have been thrown upon your own resources, I should judge, and hence have cultivated force of character. You have a great deal of the feeling of resistance; are very fond of debate; like to take up on the opposite side for the sake of argument, if it does not come in your way otherwise, but you could not take pleasure in being unkind or injuring the feelings of another. It would be far more natural for you to relieve pain than to create it. You have less stern executiveness than spirit and courage.

Your appetite is not extravagant, yet quite strong enough for your digestive apparatus. You should not use stimulous of any kind, as you are already too excitable, and they would only increase it. You are very sensitive to the opinions of others—cannot bear blame, particularly from your friends—have a high sense of honor, a good deal of independence, love of liberty, and self-respect. You are very tenacious and unyielding in your views and opinions, after you have once decided in your own mind. You are anxious to do right and to know the truth, and then hold fast. It is easy to persuade you, but you will not be driven by any one. You have not a miserly disposition, but want property for what it will accomplish; not to hoard up. You are frank and open hearted in the expression of your feelings—say just what you think—are sometimes too plain and blunt in your remarks, though this tendency of mind is modified by your ability to judge of the character and motives of others and adapt yourself to their peculiarities.

Should you undertake to play the hypocrite, "lay low and keep dark," you would very soon expose yourself in some way, for you have not tact and cunning enough to enable you to carry it out into any great speculation or enterprise. Yet at the same time you are impulsive, and inclined to act upon the spur of the moment. It is well that you have cautiousness

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 36.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. NOV. 22, 1849. [WHOLE No. 152.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

PHRENOLOGICAL DESCRIPTION OF JAMES J. STRANG,

AS GIVEN BY S. R. WELLS, 131 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK, SEPT. 11TH, 1846.

Your brain is quite large, full as much as you have physical power to sustain. Your mental temperament predominates, giving you a desire to exercise your brain more than your body, and hence will be liable to exhaust your strength, unless you take especial care of your health. You have more energy and activity of character than power of endurance. You have strong attachments to friends and home, yet you are fond of traveling for the sake of seeing the world and gaining knowledge. You are fond of variety and change. It is difficult for you to keep your mind on one thing long at once, but it flies from one thing to another without waiting to finish up a subject. Thus giving you versatility of talent, which enables you to attend to a variety of things without confusion.

It would be well if you had more of this quality of mind in order to connect and complete your thoughts more perfectly. All your feelings are positive. You are never half way, but either the one thing or the other. You should be known among your acquiantances for your energy and perseverance, so long as you are engaged in a cause. You are never lazy, but on the contrary are apt to work too hard. You have been thrown upon your own resources, I should judge, and hence have cultivated force of character. You have a great deal of the feeling of resistance; are very fond of debate; like to take up on the opposite side for the sake of argument, if it does not come in your way otherwise, but you could not take pleasure in being unkind or injuring the feelings of another. It would be far more natural for you to relieve pain than to create it. You have less stern executiveness than spirit and courage.

Your appetite is not extravagant, yet quite strong enough for your digestive apparatus. You should not use stimulous of any kind, as you are already too excitable, and they would only increase it. You are very sensitive to the opinions of others—cannot bear blame, particularly from your friends—have a high sense of honor, a good deal of independence, love of liberty, and self-respect. You are very tenacious and unyielding in your views and opinions, after you have once decided in your own mind. You are anxious to do right and to know the truth, and then hold fast. It is easy to persuade you, but you will not be driven by any one. You have not a miserly disposition, but want property for what it will accomplish; not to hoard up. You are frank and open hearted in the expression of your feelings—say just what you think—are sometimes too plain and blunt in your remarks, though this tendency of mind is modified by your ability to judge of the character and motives of others and adapt yourself to their peculiarities.

Should you undertake to play the hypocrite, "lay low and keep dark," you would very soon expose yourself in some way, for you have not tact and cunning enough to enable you to carry it out into any great speculation or enterprise. Yet at the same time you are impulsive, and inclined to act upon the spur of the moment. It is well that you have conscientiousness so strongly developed in order to guard your impulsiveness. You are very much inclined to think and investigate for yourself, and form your own opinions—are quite radical in your notions, slow to believe, unless you think you have good witness. You respect persons in proportion as their conduct and talent merit it, rather than on account of wealth, station or title.

You have some reverence for sacred things, but are not particularly devotional. You are not extravagant in your anticipations, but generally realize more than you expected. You have very strong sympathies and desire to do good, and spread happiness not only around you, but on a more extensive scale, so that it may reach all human beings. You may feel a good deal of indignation for a time, but it would be contrary to your nature to be cruel or revengeful. Your principles are averse to war. You would do all your fighting with your tongue and pen. It is hard for you to say "no," even when your judgment would dictate it, especially if a friend should ask a favor. You are fond of children or pets; are warm-hearted and ardent in your social feelings, fond of home and the social circle. You are not wanting in refinement of feelings, yet have not a very brilliant imagination. You appreciate the grand and sublime more than the merely beautiful. You can adapt yourself very well to the manners and customs of others, yet you have a character peculiar to yourself rather than copied from others. You have a very quick perception of the absurd and ridiculous—can enjoy jokes much, but yours are apt to be sarcastic. You could ridicule to pretty good advantage, if you should allow yourself to do so. You have better mechanical judgment than ability to execute—are not so skillful in the use of tools as many. You have a good memory of places, faces, forms and outlines, ideas and general events, but poor of details and particulars, and also of colors. You are very neat and systematical. You have a comprehensive mind—are capable of thinking and reasoning closely and clearly, and are very good at drawing inferences. You are more theoretical than practical. You need to cultivate the perceptive faculties in order to balance the reflections. You identify things better than you remember them. You have more ideas than capacity to communicate what you know. Your temperament is such as to make you talk rapidly, especially when excited, but you have not that full, free, copious command of language that would do justice to your thoughts.

In summing up your character I should say that the strong points were activity, energy, excitability, love of home and friends, fondness for debate, watchfulness and regard for consequences, sesitiveness and love of approbation, independence and will, love of liberty, perseverance, sense of moral obligation, great kindness and sympathy of feelings, powers of sarcasm, ability to understand and reason, memory of faces and places, love of order, judgment of the character and motives of others, and a faculty to win confidence and adapt yourself to circumstances. The greatest deficiency in your organization are want of strength and power of endurance, too much change and variety of thoughts, too little economy and tact, a want of spirituality of mind and devotional feeling, and rather a poor memory of particulars. You are apt to be more injudicious in your expressions than actions. You have greater love for music than ability to execute. You should take particular care of your health, exercise enough, but guard against excesses of all kind.

☞ We publish the foregoing to gratify many friends. It is not improper to add that Mr. Wells did not know whom he was examining until he had completed his work, and was not a little surprised on learning the name of his subject. The brothers Fowler separately reviewed the examination, and to the credit of the three Professors their results were precisely alike. As Pres. Strang is now in the eastern States he will doubtless procure a re-examination to learn what change three years has made in his organization.

so strongly developed in order to guard your impulsiveness. You are very much inclined to think and investigate for yourself, and form your own opinions—are quite radical in your notions, slow to believe, unless you think you have good witness. You respect persons in proportion as their conduct and talent merit it, rather than on account of wealth, station or title.

You have some reverence for sacred things, but are not particularly devotional. You are not extravagant in your anticipations, but generally realize more than you expected. You have very strong sympathies and desire to do good, and spread happiness not only around you, but on a more extensive scale, so that it may reach all human beings. You may feel a good deal of indignation for a time, but it would be contrary to your nature to be cruel or revengeful. Your principles are averse to war. You would do all your fighting with your tongue and pen. It is hard for you to say "no," even when your judgment would dictate it, especially if a friend should ask a favor. You are fond of children or pets; are warm-hearted and ardent in your social feelings, fond of home and the social circle. You are not wanting in refinement of feelings, yet have not a very brilliant imagination. You appreciate the grand and sublime more than the merely beautiful. You can adapt yourself very well to the manners and customs of others, yet you have a character peculiar to yourself rather than copied from others. You have a very quick perception of the absurd and ridiculous—can enjoy jokes much, but yours are apt to be sarcastic. You could ridicule to pretty good advantage, if you should allow yourself to do so. You have better mechanical judgment than ability to execute—are not so skillful in the use of tools as many. You have a good memory of places, faces, forms and outlines, ideas and general events, but poor of details and particulars, and also of colors. You are very neat and systematical. You have a comprehensive mind—are capable of thinking and reasoning closely and clearly, and are very good at drawing inferences. You are more theoretical than practical. You need to cultivate the perceptive faculties in order to balance the reflections. You identify things better than you remember them. You have more ideas than capacity to communicate what you know. Your temperament is such as to make you talk rapidly, especially when excited, but you have not that full, free, copious command of language that would do justice to your thoughts.

In summing up your character I should say that the strong points were activity, energy, excitability, love of home and friends, fondness for debate, watchfulness and regard for consequences, sesitiveness and love of approbation, independence and will, love of liberty, perseverance, sense of moral obligation, great kindness and sympathy of feelings, powers of sarcasm, ability to understand and reason, memory of faces and places, love of order, judgment of the character and motives of others, and a faculty to win confidence and adapt yourself to circumstances. The greatest deficiency in your organization are want of strength and power of endurance, too much change and variety of thoughts, too little economy and tact, a want of spirituality of mind and devotional feeling, and rather a poor memory of particulars. You are apt to be more injudicious in your expressions than actions. You have greater love for music than ability to execute. You should take particular care of your health, exercise enough, but guard against excesses of all kind.

☞ We publish the foregoing to gratify many friends. It is not improper to add that Mr. Wells did not know whom he was examining until he had completed his work, and was not a little surprised on learning the name of his subject. The brothers Fowler separately reviewed the examination, and to the credit of the three Professors their results were precisely alike. As Pres. Strang is now in the eastern States he will doubtless procure a re-examination to learn what change three years has made in his organization.

Gananoque, C. W., Nov. 6th, 1849.

DEAR BROTHER COOPER :—As you will perceive, by the date of this, I am at Gananoque, within fifteen miles of my former residence. When I left Voree it was not determined where I would go, and the morning we reached Buffalo this place appeared before me. And I immediately arranged to part with my dear Bro. Briggs. We gave each other the parting hand with feelings known to none save those who experience them. And each took our course. I arrived at Kingston Saturday evening pennyless, among strangers, with the thoughts of home bearing heavy upon me, and greatly enfeebled by the journey and corroding cares. I obtained lodging for the night, and in the morning started on my journey towards this place. After walking some ten miles I found my strength failing, and being faint for want of food, and in the name of my Master asked them for some thing to eat. My request was readily granted. Several present seemed to take a deep interest in my welfare, and every means in their posession was used to make me comfortable. After enjoying their temporal things I felt a strong desire to administer to them in spiritual things, consequently I left an appointment for to-morrow evening. I then proceded on my journey to Mr. Firman's, an old acquaintance, where I was made welcome.

Yesterday I came to this place, and am now with Bro. White, a liberal, whole minded man. Oh! that there were many such. From him I learn that Bro. Phineas Wright is on Kingston road or in Bastard, laboring hard. Bro. Savage has not yet joined him. I shall probably go in quest of him this week. As to our journey to Buffalo, we stayed two days at a branch some twenty-two miles from Voree. We held two meetings. Bro. Briggs preached one of the best sermons I ever heard. The brethren are very zealous, and forwarded us on our way to Milwaukee, which greatly relieved our poor blistered feet. On our arrival we immediately went in search of a boat, and found several that were going down the Lake, but none seemed disposed to favor us until we reached the Alleganey, Propeller. When we got on that boat we both felt at home. They abated our fare three dollars, and would more, but they are in debt for the boat. They used us very kindly. We held meetings aboard which I hope will do good. In short we were used more like brethren than strangers.

We had a very quick run. The wind changed three times in our favor, and I heard one of the officers say in a joke to some of the passengers that he supposed our quick run was owing to their having two Mormon preachers aboard. He says, I suppose they have been praying for a fair wind. I answered, we most assassuredly had, whether our prayers were answered or not. I would recommend that boat to all the saints crossing the Lakes. When they make application let it be known that they are Mormons.

Times are very hard in Canada. Money is very scarce. A laboring man cannot realize but a trifle for his work. Provisions are very scarce, and I pray God to make it a help to us. May it be a means of causing many to awake to a sense of their best interest. That our call may not be to them in vain, I ask the brethren and sisters in a particular manner to pray for the laborers in the vineyard. May God bless and prosper the saints.

And now, O Lord, to close my prayer,
I offer up my heart's desire,
For Zion and her chosen few,
Who have so much, so much to do.
Be thou our strength, be thou our power,
Help, Oh help us, Lord, in this our hour,
To build the Temple, preach thy word,
Until Enoch's Order is restored;
When none need borrow, none need lend,
But meet every where a brother, friend

Farewell.

Z. H. GURLEY.

Voree, Wis., October 15th, 1849.

BRO. STRANG,—DEAR SIR :—I received a letter from sister Bennett, who is eighty years old and very infirm, and she requests me to be baptized for eight of her relations, as she could not be on account of her feeble state of health, even if she was at Voree. This is to ask you what can be done in the premises, or if there be any word of the Lord on the subject. I feel anxious on the subject, as she is very solicitous. It also contained $10,00 to me, which I consecrated to the building of the Temple. Bro. Hartley also requests me to say to you that he dreamed of a Medthodist Bro., an acquaintance of old who asked him to baptize him. He wishes you to say whether he can be baptized for him.

A. HALE.

ANSWER.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 8th, 1849.

DEAR BROTHER :—You say "Bro. Hartley dreamed of an old Methodist acquaintance, who (in the dream) asked him to be baptized for him," and wants to know whether he can be baptized for him. If this man is not a relation of his within the enumerated degrees he cannot. It is only by the priesthood that he can claim the redemption of those who are not thus related to him, and the priesthood does not claim the redemption of the dead by dream. (See the revelation.)

The question concerning your being baptized in the place of sister Bennett for her deceased relatives is a very grave one. I do not know whether she has paid a tenth according to the law, but presuming that she has, I see nothing in the word of God authorizing the transfer of this right to redeem the dead to another. The right belongs to her for herself, not another. If she passes it by, then it belongs to the next kindred. If none of the kindred look to their redemption, God has provided for them by authorizing the priesthood in its several quorums to stand up for them. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 7th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK :—I am just starting for Baltimore, having been in Philadelphia seven days, preached eight times to respectable and attentive congregations, and baptized one, besides sowing the good seed in many hearts, where it must spring up and produce abundantly.—Truly and sincerely, house of sister Heely, at whose house the meeting was held. Sister Heely testified to his coming to her house shortly after leaving Bro. Canney's. Bro. Royce testified that he had heard the letters read by Hickey, and they did not mention Bro. Strang's name, or speak of him in any way.

JAMES. J. STRANG.

(Continued from page 191.)

It was motioned by Elder L. R. Foster, and carried unanimously, that this church, so far as she has power, withdraw all confidence and fellowship from L. D. Hickey, and that a statement of the case be sent to the proper authorities for further action.

SAMUEL BENNETT, Pres.

JACOB W. JENES, Clerk.

Gananoque, C. W., Nov. 6th, 1849.

Dear Brother Cooper :—As you will perceive, by the date of this, I am at Gananoque, within fifteen miles of my former residence. When I left Voree it was not determined where I would go, and the morning we reached Buffalo this place appeared before me. And I immediately arranged to part with my dear Bro. Briggs. We gave each other the parting hand with feelings known to none save those who experience them. And each took our course. I arrived at Kingston Saturday evening penniless, among strangers, with the thoughts of home bearing heavy upon me, and greatly enfeebled by the journey and corroding cares. I obtained lodging for the night, and in the morning started on my journey towards this place. After walking some ten miles I found my strength failing, and being faint for want of food, and in the name of my Master asked them for some thing to eat. My request was readily granted. Several present seemed to take a deep interest in my welfare, and every means in their posession was used to make me comfortable. After enjoying their temporal things I felt a strong desire to administer to them in spiritual things, consequently I left an appointment for to-morrow evening. I then proceded on my journey to Mr. Firman's, an old acquaintance, where I was made welcome.

Yesterday I came to this place, and am now with Bro. White, a liberal, whole minded man. Oh! that there were many such. From him I learn that Bro. Phineas Wright is on Kingston road or in Bastard, laboring hard. Bro. Savage has not yet joined him. I shall probably go in quest of him this week. As to our journey to Buffalo, we stayed two days at a branch some twenty-two miles from Voree. We held two meetings. Bro. Briggs preached one of the best sermons I ever heard. The brethren are very zealous, and forwarded us on our way to Milwaukee, which greatly relieved our poor blistered feet. On our arrival we immediately went in search of a boat, and found several that were going down the Lake, but none seemed disposed to favor us until we reached the Alleganey, Propeller. When we got on that boat we both felt at home. They abated our fare three dollars, and would more, but they are in debt for the boat. They used us very kindly. We held meetings aboard which I hope will do good. In short we were used more like brethren than strangers.

We had a very quick run. The wind changed three times in our favor, and I heard one of the officers say in a joke to some of the passengers that he supposed our quick run was owing to their having two Mormon preachers aboard. He says, I suppose they have been praying for a fair wind. I answered, we most assuredly had, whether our prayers were answered or not. I would recommend that boat to all the saints crossing the Lakes. When they make application let it be known that they are Mormons.

Times are very hard in Canada. Money is very scarce. A laboring man cannot realize but a trifle for his work. Provisions are very scarce, and I pray God to make it a help to us. May it be a means of causing many to awake to a sense of their best interest. That our call may not be to them in vain, I ask the brethren and sisters in a particulat manner to pray for the laborers in the vineyard. May God bless and prosper the saints.

And now, O Lord, to close my prayer,
I offer up my heart's desire,
For Zion and her chosen few,
Who have so much, so much to do.
Be thou our strength, be thou our power,
Help, Oh help us, Lord, in this our hour,
To build the Temple, preach thy word,
Until Enoch's Order is restored;
When none need borrow, none need lend,
But meet every where a brother, friend
Farewell.

Z. H. GURLEY.

Voree, Wis., October 15th, 1849.

Bro. Strang,—Dear Sir :—I received a letter from sister Bennett, who is eighty years old and very infirm, and she requests me to be baptized for eight of her relations, as she could not be on account of her feeble state of health, even if she was at Voree. This is to ask you what can be done in the premises, or if there be any word of the Lord on the subject. I feel anxious on the subject, as she is very solicitous. It also contained $10,00 to me, which I consecrated to the building of the Temple. Bro. Hartley also requests me to say to you that he dreamed of a Medthodist Bro., an acquaintance of old who asked him to baptize him. He wishes you to say whether he can be baptized for him.

A. HALE.

ANSWER.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 8th, 1849.

Dear Brother :—You say "Bro. Hartley dreamed of an old Methodist acquaintance, who (in the dream) asked him to be baptized for him," and wants to know whether he can be baptized for him. If this man is not a relation of his within the enumerated degrees he cannot. It is only by the priesthood that he can claim the redemption of those who are not thus related to him, and the priesthood does not claim the redemption of the dead by dream. (See the revelation.)

The question concerning your being baptized in the place of sister Bennett for her deceased relatives is a very grave one. I do not know whether she has paid a tenth according to the law, but presuming that she has, I see nothing in the word of God authorizing the transfer of this right to redeem the dead to another. The right belongs to her for herself, not another. If she passes it by, then it belongs to the next kindred. If none of the kindred look to their redemption, God has provided for them by authorizing the priesthood in its several quorums to stand up for them. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 7th, 1849.

Dear Frank :—I am just starting for Baltimore, having been in Philadelphia seven days, preached eight times to respectable and attentive congregations, and baptized one, besides sowing the good seed in many hearts, where it must spring up and produce abundantly.—Truly and sincerely, house of sister Heely, at whose house the meeting was held. Sister Heely testified to his coming to her house shortly after leaving Bro. Canney's. Bro. Royce testified that he had heard the letters read by Hickey, and they did not mention Bro. Strang's name, or speak of him in any way.

JAMES. J. STRANG.

(Continued from page 191.)

It was motioned by Elder L. R. Foster, and carried unanimously, that this church, so far as she has power, withdraw all confidence and fellowship from L. D. Hickey, and that a statement of the case be sent to the proper authorities for further action.

SAMUEL BENNETT, Pres.

Jacob W. Jenes, Clerk.

New York City, Oct. 22d, 1849.

DEAR BRO. COOPER:—I heretofore sent you for publication a copy of part of one of Bro. Strang's letters, giving a history of some strange proceedings of Van Dusen and Hickey. Beginning as near as I can recollect where that account left off, I write for the benefit of your readers another chapter in the same rather serious farce. But, first, let me remind your readers that Van Dusen is the man who, being sent out to preach several years since, was bribed, as he says, by a Methodist minister to get up and publish an account of the Brighamite endowment at Nauvoo, which he has been engaged in publishing and hawking about the streets for three years.

Since our arrival here he came and asked to be forgiven, and restored to the church.—After having the matter twice under consideration, and hearing a string of confessions from him, in which he told us that he could find no language sufficiently strong to express his views of the meanness and criminality of his past course, and gave repeated promises of future amendment, he was restored to standing, not by a very unanimous vote, but by the vote of some and the silence of those who knew him best.

Hickey is an Apostle, who came down from Beaver to preach through the winter; attended the Conference here during its sitting, and gave more and stronger testimonies of the integrity, sound morals and correct principles and deportment of Bro. Strang in particular, and the saints in general, than any other person attending the Conference. He has just settled his family at Beaver, and bore witness that he was associated with a people whose virtues he knew, and that for once he could leave his family with the fullest confidence that no one would seek to wrong him in his absence.

Well, after the preparation he and V. D. had made for mischief, on Saturday they narrowed down their avowed hostility to Pres. Adams alone. Hickey said he had a testimony from God that Bro. Strang was not rejected, but would stand and come out right. Still they both had many things to say against Bros. Strang, Graham and Blakeslee, as well as several others. Sunday as we went to meeting, they, especially Hickey, greeted Bro. Strang and myself very cordially. The cloud which had rested on Hickey's brow for several days was gone, but a kind of nervous twitching, which sometimes marks incipient insanity, and not unfrequently follows great mental excitement, remained. Pres Strang preached with great spirit and power from the text, "I will not know a wicked person." Psalm ci. 4. In the beginning of his discourse they seemed to be in ecstacies, evidently thinking that his scathing rebuke and deep toned admonition of the wicked was designed for each man they in their wickedness had privily slandered, and falsely taken up reproaches against. But when with burning and matchless eloquence, in words that seemed to fall from angels' lips, and drop with inspiration from heaven, he portrayed the character and declared the end of those who backbite and take up a reproach against their neighbor; who make a man an offender for a word; of liars and deceivers; of the haughty, the proud, the obdurate, they of a high look, who regard not covenants, and depart from the word of God and contemn his servants, the smiling demon in them was roused to fury: sitting on their seats in the congregation, they writhed, changed color, and gesticulated like the infuriated in the fierce encounter, when life is the stake and death the doom.

Pres. S. concluded his remarks with a manly statement of his toils, sufferings and perils in his ministry, and of the assurance he had that God would give him the victory over all the enemies of righteousness. Trembling with rage, while Bro. Samuel Bennett was giving out a hymn, Hickey commenced to speak.—Pres. S. forbade him, saying that he would have no disorder in the meeting. He said he had something to tell to the church. Pres. S. said they would have a meeting of the church in the evening, when he could present whatever he had to say. He sat down, saying he was satisfied. But as soon as meeting was dismiss-

New York City, Oct. 22d, 1849.

DEAR BRO. COOPER :—I heretofore sent you for publication a copy of part of one of Bro. Strang's letters, giving a history of some strange proceedings of Van Dusen and Hickey. Beginning as near as I can recollect where that account left off, I write for the benefit of your readers another chapter in the same rather serious farce. But, first, let me remind your readers that Van Dusen is the man who, being sent out to preach several years since, was bribed, as he says, by a Methodist minister to get up and publish an account of the Brighamite endowment at Nauvoo, which he has been engaged in publishing and hawking about the streets for three years.

Since our arrival here he came and asked to be forgiven, and restored to the church.—After having the matter twice under consideration, and hearing a string of confessions from him, in which he told us that he could find no language sufficiently strong to express his views of the meanness and criminality of his past course, and gave repeated promises of future amendment, he was restored to standing, not by a very unanimous vote, but by the vote of some and the silence of those who knew him best.

Hickey is an Apostle, who came down from Beaver to preach through the winter; attended the Conference here during its sitting, and gave more and stronger testimonies of the integrity, sound morals and correct principles and deportment of Bro. Strang in particular, and the saints in general, than any other person attending the Conference. He has just settled his family at Beaver, and bore witness that he was associated with a people whose virtues he knew, and that for once he could leave his family with the fullest confidence that no one would seek to wrong him in his absence.

Well, after the preparation he and V. D. had made for mischief, on Saturday they narrowed down their avowed hostility to Pres. Adams alone. Hickey said he had a testimony from God that Bro. Strang was not rejected, but would stand and come out right. Still they both had many things to say against Bros. Strang, Graham and Blakeslee, as well as several others. Sunday as we went to meeting, they, especially Hickey, greeted Bro. Strang and myself very cordially. The cloud which had rested on Hickey's brow for several days was gone, but a kind of nervous twitching, which sometimes marks incipient insanity, and not unfrequently follows great mental excitement, remained. Pres Strang preached with great spirit and power from the text, "I will not know a wicked person." Psalm ci. 4. In the beginning of his discourse they seemed to be in ecstacies, evidently thinking that his scathing rebuke and deep toned admonition of the wicked was designed for each man they in their wickedness had privily slandered, and falsely taken up reproaches against. But when with burning and matchless eloquence, in words that seemed to fall from angels' lips, and drop with inspiration from heaven, he portrayed the character and declared the end of those who backbite and take up a reproach against their neighbor; who make a man an offender for a word; of liars and deceivers; of the haughty, the proud, the obdurate, they of a high look, who regard not covenants, and depart from the word of God and contemn his servants, the smiling demon in them was roused to fury: sitting on their seats in the congregation, they writhed, changed color, and gesticulated like the infuriated in the fierce encounter, when life is the stake and death the doom.

Pres. S. concluded his remarks with a manly statement of his toils, sufferings and perils in his ministry, and of the assurance he had that God would give him the victory over all the enemies of righteousness. Trembling with rage, while Bro. Samuel Bennett was giving out a hymn, Hickey commenced to speak.—Pres. S. forbade him, saying that he would have no disorder in the meeting. He said he had something to tell to the church. Pres. S. said they would have a meeting of the church in the evening, when he could present whatever he had to say. He sat down, saying he was satisfied. But as soon as meeting was dismissed he called the attention of the congregation, and told them he had something interesting and important to communicate.

He went on to say that he " was an Apostle, and that he denounced Mr. Strang as a liar, an impostor, a false prophet and dangerously wicked man. He charged him with being guilty of all the abominations which ever existed in Nauvoo, and he would prove it by letters he had in his pocket, which he had just received from his wife on Beaver Island." As soon as he was done, Pres. S. tried to speak, but the confusion was so great that he could not get a hearing. Van D. thrust his hands in his face, repeatedly seized hold of him, and, with Hickey, kept up such a screaming that his voice was drowned out, and he, with a large share of the congregation, withdrew.

After he left some of the brethren succeeded in establishing order in some degree, when Bro. Samuel Bennett stated that he was in possession of the contents of the letters Hickey referred to; that they did not contain any evidence of the charges Hickey had preferred against Pres. S. or of either one of them; that they did not speak of or mention Pres. S. in any manner whatever, directly or by inference, and that they did not show or assert that any such state of things existed at Beaver, or elsewhere, as Hickey had represented. And he challenged the production and reading of the letters before the congregation. Hickey refused to produce them, or allow them to be read.

At the opening of the afternoon meeting Pres. Strang alluded to the disturbance apologetically, saying that it was a kind of disorder which rowdies and wicked men could get up any where, and which nothing but the strong arm of law could put down or prevent; and not having anticipated it, no provision was made against its occurrence. He then recapitulated the charges made against him by Hickey; referred to the fact that Hickey had based his accusations solely and entirely on three certain letters, recently received from his wife: said that Hickey had read these letters to him, and that they did not speak of nor allude to him in any manner whatever; that they did not contain one word concerning him, either his person, his conduct, his character, his sentiments, his administration or anything else whatever pertaining to him.

He said that every one of the assertions of Mr. Hickey were lies, utterly without the shadow or pretence of foundation in truth, and that to make good his assertions he wanted no evidence whatever but the very letters Mr. Hickey referred to, and then had in his pocket.—. Then turning to Mr. Hickey he called on him to produce the letters to be read entire before the congregation. Hickey acknowledged having the letters with him, but refused to produce them, saying that he had a right to do as he pleased with them.

Pres. S. proceeded to say that he had no fear of all the lies that evil men and apostates could invent against him, so he could have the opportunity of meeting them in any well ordered assembly; that there was a consistency in plain spoken truth that would abundantly justify itself, and an inconsistency in any lie, no matter how cunningly devised, that the wise man could forever detect it; that he could not only prove every assertion of Mr. Hickey false by the very letters which he had refused to have read, allowing the letters to be entirely true, but he could do more. He could prove the letters false by their own words, without any other evidence; and said that the letters were not even on the subject that Hickey had pretended. They were merely the letters of a homesick woman, complaining of the hardships she suffered and feared during the absence of her husband.

And she complains in one place of the toil she will incur in taking care of two girls her husband had agreed to board through the winter, but that she could not refuse to take them in, because they were needy little children, with no other protector. And almost in the next line says that the sailors tried to get them to go off with them. Now every one knows that if the girls were large enough for the sailors to want ed he called the attention of the congregation, and told them he had something interesting and important to communicate.

He went on to say that he "was an Apostle, and that he denounced Mr. Strang as a liar, an impostor, a false prophet and dangerously wicked man. He charged him with being guilty of all the abominations which ever existed in Nauvoo, and he would prove it by letters he had in his pocket, which he had just received from his wife on Beaver Island." As soon as he was done, Pres. S. tried to speak, but the confusion was so great that he could not get a hearing. Van D. thrust his hands in his face, repeatedly seized hold of him, and, with Hickey, kept up such a screaming that his voice was drowned out, and he, with a large share of the congregation, withdrew.

After he left some of the brethren succeeded in establishing order in some degree, when Bro. Samuel Bennett stated that he was in possession of the contents of the letters Hickey referred to; that they did not contain any evidence of the charges Hickey had preferred against Pres. S. or of either one of them; that they did not speak of or mention Pres. S. in any manner whatever, directly or by inference, and that they did not show or assert that any such state of things existed at Beaver, or elsewhere, as Hickey had represented. And he challenged the production and reading of the letters before the congregation. Hickey refused to produce them, or allow them to be read.

At the opening of the afternoon meeting Pres. Strang alluded to the disturbance apologetically, saying that it was a kind of disorder which rowdies and wicked men could get up any where, and which nothing but the strong arm of law could put down or prevent; and not having anticipated it, no provision was made against its occurrence. He then recapitulated the charges made against him by Hickey; referred to the fact that Hickey had based his accusations solely and entirely on three certain letters, recently received from his wife: said that Hickey had read these letters to him, and that they did not speak of nor allude to him in any manner whatever; that they did not contain one word concerning him, either his person, his conduct, his character, his sentiments, his administration or anything else whatever pertaining to him.

He said that every one of the assertions of Mr. Hickey were lies, utterly without the shadow or pretence of foundation in truth, and that to make good his assertions he wanted no evidence whatever but the very letters Mr. Hickey referred to, and then had in his pocket.—. Then turning to Mr. Hickey he called on him to produce the letters to be read entire before the congregation. Hickey acknowledged having the letters with him, but refused to produce them, saying that he had a right to do as he pleased with them.

Pres. S. proceeded to say that he had no fear of all the lies that evil men and apostates could invent against him, so he could have the opportunity of meeting them in any well ordered assembly; that there was a consistency in plain spoken truth that would abundantly justify itself, and an inconsistency in any lie, no matter how cunningly devised, that the wise man could forever detect it; that he could not only prove every assertion of Mr. Hickey false by the very letters which he had refused to have read, allowing the letters to be entirely true, but he could do more. He could prove the letters false by their own words, without any other evidence; and said that the letters were not even on the subject that Hickey had pretended. They were merely the letters of a homesick woman, complaining of the hardships she suffered and feared during the absence of her husband.

And she complains in one place of the toil she will incur in taking care of two girls her husband had agreed to board through the winter, but that she could not refuse to take them in, because they were needy little children, with no other protector. And almost in the next line says that the sailors tried to get them to go off with them. Now every one knows that if the girls were large enough for the sailors to want them, they were plenty large enough to work for their living, and to get a good home and wages in any new country, where womens' work is always in demand.

After convincing, I doubt not, every person present that Hickey's accusations were all utterly false; the mere ebullitions of violent passions; and that he refused to produce the letters merely because they would prove him a liar and and a base slanderer, Pres. S. proceeded to read letters from Beaver just received by him, showing that the settlement there was in a prosperous condition, and the church strong in the faith, having peace and universal confidence, and a good report both within and without. But, like a true gentleman, as he is, (and a little over fastidious at times,) he omitted to read a single paragraph saying that one Horton had left the settlement in anger, accusing this same Hickey of stealing money from him.

This difficulty and the row that it got up has caused the saints some grief and sorrow; indeed I think much heaviness of heart. But I am not aware that it has shaken the faith of a single individual. Certain it is that it did not stop nor sensibly check the very strong spirit of inquiry which has grown up, and that the expression was strong and general among all classes that Pres. Strang had successfully vindicated himself and his people. He speaks of the matter as of no moment, and seems to feel no concern about it. Yet I could not but think it had roused in him an unusual degree of vigor.

Certainly I had not before heard him preach with such power and eloquence. Seeming utterly unconscious (except for the few moments that he spoke directly on that subject) that he had an enemy or an accuser on earth, he continued in two discourses upon the "putting down of the wicked" and the "salvation of the dead," to pass under burning review every position and foothold of his enemies, literally driving them from the house in the fire of his eloquence, without seeming to know that they had ever obstructed his path. To him they were as musketoes, unconsciously crushed by a wave of the hand before the sting is felt.

C. J. DOUGLASS.

PROCEEDINGS OF A MEETING IN NEW YORK CITY ON THE CASE OF HICKEY AND VAN DUSEN.

At a meeting of officers and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, held at the house of sister Heely in the City of New York, pursuant to previous call and public notice, Pres. Strang stating that part of the business of the meeting being to investigate charges made against him, requested that some other person be appointed to preside. Whereupon Bro. Samuel Bennett, one of the Twelve, was appointed President, and J. W. Jenks, High Priest, Clerk.

On motion of Bro. Walker it was voted that we proceed to investigate the conduct of Increase Van Dusen at the place of meeting on Sunday and previously. Bro. Strang testified that immediately after dismissing the forenoon meeting yesterday a disorder and general confusion having been got up by Hickey, that Van Dusen assaulted him by thrusting his hands into his face and breast, and screaming to the highest pitch of his voice, "you are guilty, you are guilty, you are guilty," insulting and grossly abusing him, (Bro. Strang,) and drowning his voice so that he had to leave the house to avoid further insult.

Bro. L. R. Foster testified that the conduct of Van Dusen was the most abusive he ever saw; that Van Dusen committed an assault upon himself and Bro. Strang. Bro. Canney testified to the same fact in relation to Bro. Strang, and also that he flagrantly assaulted Bro. Bennett by putting his hands into his face and upon his person, continuing to use the most violent and abusive language, and that he feared Bro. Bennett might be provoked to resent it. His conduct was evidently intended to provoke retaliation, and thereby get up a general row.

Bro. Walker testified to the same facts in relation to his assault upon Bro. Bennett, and remarked that from the relations that persons of them, they were plenty large enough to work for their living, and to get a good home and wages in any new country, where womens' work is always in demand.

After convincing, I doubt not, every person present that Hickey's accusations were all utterly false; the mere ebullitions of violent passions; and that he refused to produce the letters merely because they would prove him a liar and and a base slanderer, Pres. S. proceeded to read letters from Beaver just received by him, showing that the settlement there was in a prosperous condition, and the church strong in the faith, having peace and universal confidence, and a good report both within and without. But, like a true gentleman, as he is, (and a little over fastidious at times,) he omitted to read a single paragraph saying that one Horton had left the settlement in anger, accusing this same Hickey of stealing money from him.

This difficulty and the row that it got up has caused the saints some grief and sorrow; indeed I think much heaviness of heart. But I am not aware that it has shaken the faith of a single individual. Certain it is that it did not stop nor sensibly check the very strong spirit of inquiry which has grown up, and that the expression was strong and general among all classes that Pres. Strang had successfully vindicated himself and his people. He speaks of the matter as of no moment, and seems to feel no concern about it. Yet I could not but think it had roused in him an unusual degree of vigor.

Certainly I had not before heard him preach with such power and eloquence. Seeming utterly unconscious (except for the few moments that he spoke directly on that subject) that he had an enemy or an accuser on earth, he continued in two discourses upon the "putting down of the wicked" and the "salvation of the dead," to pass under burning review every position and foothold of his enemies, literally driving them from the house in the fire of his eloquence, without seeming to know that they had ever obstructed his path. To him they were as musketoes, unconsciously crushed by a wave of the hand before the sting is felt.

C. J. DOUGLASS.

PROCEEDINGS OF A MEETING IN NEW YORK CITY ON THE CASE OF HICKEY AND VAN DUSEN.

At a meeting of officers and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, held at the house of sister Heely in the City of New York, pursuant to previous call and public notice, Pres. Strang stating that part of the business of the meeting being to investigate charges made against him, requested that some other person be appointed to preside. Whereupon Bro. Samuel Bennett, one of the Twelve, was appointed President, and J. W. Jenks, High Priest, Clerk.

On motion of Bro. Walker it was voted that we proceed to investigate the conduct of Increase Van Dusen at the place of meeting on Sunday and previously. Bro. Strang testified that immediately after dismissing the forenoon meeting yesterday a disorder and general confusion having been got up by Hickey, that Van Dusen assaulted him by thrusting his hands into his face and breast, and screaming to the highest pitch of his voice, "you are guilty, you are guilty, you are guilty," insulting and grossly abusing him, (Bro. Strang,) and drowning his voice so that he had to leave the house to avoid further insult.

Bro. L. R. Foster testified that the conduct of Van Dusen was the most abusive he ever saw; that Van Dusen committed an assault upon himself and Bro. Strang. Bro. Canney testified to the same fact in relation to Bro. Strang, and also that he flagrantly assaulted Bro. Bennett by putting his hands into his face and upon his person, continuing to use the most violent and abusive language, and that he feared Bro. Bennett might be provoked to resent it. His conduct was evidently intended to provoke retaliation, and thereby get up a general row.

Bro. Walker testified to the same facts in relation to his assault upon Bro. Bennett, and remarked that from the relations that persons of color sustained to society it was not expected of them to behave with equal decorum with white men, but he must say he never knew a colored person to behave in such a shameful manner, and so abusive and insulting.

Van Dusen then arose and said that he was not aware he was going to be tried, but must acknowledge that he had not acted with the right spirit. The brethren knew that he was very violent when excited, and when under the influence of passion could not control himself. The reason of his then excitement was that Bro. Hickey had been informing him of some very wicked things in respect to Pres. Strang, and went on to say that he had engaged his wife and Bro. Hickey in case he should undertake to speak in the meetings to stop him, and requested Bro. Hickey not to speak lest that should get him into such an excitement. The brethren ought not to have provoked him. He was ashamed of his conduct, and if they would not provoke him again he would go along quietly, and would not again disturb their meetings.

Bro. Jenks raised the question whether Bro. Van Dusen could be forgiven, referring to Heb. vi., &c. Bro. Jenks then testified to the things by him seen and heard. I have, on two or three different occasions, been present and heard Van Dusen state that Joe Smith and J. J. Strang and the Twelve were all of a piece; that Mormonism and the Book of Mormon was a humbug; that it was all a humbug from beginning to end. Bro. Canney testified to his having heard him say the same thing on another occasion. Bro. Walker testified to his having heard him say the same thing on still another occasion.

Van Dusen who, at first, disputed Jenks' testimony, now acknowledged that he might have said so for the purpose of selling his books, but he never designed it in heart. Bro. Bassett raised a question whether we could go back beyond the proceedings had at the Conference when Van Dusen made a confession.—Pres. Strang spoke in answer to that objection by showing that when a man returned to his former sins the sins which had once been forgiven should come in remembrance again; that we might investigate his former conduct to test the sincerity of his confession, and to determine whether he was a subject of forgiveness.

Several items of testimony were given, among which one may be named: that Van Dusen had pretended to receive divers revelations, some of which had already proved false. Increase Van Dusen spoke in his own defence, and Elder Hickey in his behalf, whereupon it was resolved that Increase McGee Van Dusen be excommunicated from the church of Christ and delivered over to the buffeting of Satan until the day of redemption.

It was then presented that L. D. Hickey had the previous day in a public meeting after the benediction was pronounced charged Pres. Strang with adultery, fornication, spiritual wifery, and all the abominations that were ever practiced at Nauvoo, and denounced him as a deceiver, an impostor and a false prophet, and stated that he could prove all these charges by three letters, which he had lately received from his wife at Beaver Island. Pres. Strang replied that he was not guilty of any of the charges of Hickey, in whole or in part; that he had heard Hickey read the letters, and that they did not contain any evidence whatever on either of these charges, and did not speak of or allude to him or to his conduct in any way whatever, directly or indirectly, and challenged the production of the letters to test that fact.

Whereupon it was resolved that we proceed to investigate these charges, and the conduct of Hickey in the premises. Hickey being called upon to produce the letters and any other evidence, refused, saying that he had not the letters with him, and abruptly left, alledging that he wanted to go to bed; that it was getting late, and if they (the church) wanted to try him they must come together to-morrow night, he should not stop now. Bro. and sister Canney stated he had the letters with him on his way to the meeting about dusk. It was a short distance from Bro. Canney's to the color sustained to society it was not expected of them to behave with equal decorum with white men, but he must say he never knew a colored person to behave in such a shameful manner, and so abusive and insulting.

(Concluded on page 187.)

Van Dusen then arose and said that he was not aware he was going to be tried, but must acknowledge that he had not acted with the right spirit. The brethren knew that he was very violent when excited, and when under the influence of passion could not control himself. The reason of his then excitement was that Bro. Hickey had been informing him of some very wicked things in respect to Pres. Strang, and went on to say that he had engaged his wife and Bro. Hickey in case he should undertake to speak in the meetings to stop him, and requested Bro. Hickey not to speak lest that should get him into such an excitement. The brethren ought not to have provoked him. He was ashamed of his conduct, and if they would not provoke him again he would go along quietly, and would not again disturb their meetings.

Bro. Jenks raised the question whether Bro. Van Dusen could be forgiven, referring to Heb. vi., &c. Bro. Jenks then testified to the things by him seen and heard. I have, on two or three different occasions, been present and heard Van Dusen state that Joe Smith and J. J. Strang and the Twelve were all of a piece; that Mormonism and the Book of Mormon was a humbug; that it was all a humbug from beginning to end. Bro. Canney testified to his having heard him say the same thing on another occasion. Bro. Walker testified to his having heard him say the same thing on still another occasion.

Van Dusen who, at first, disputed Jenks' testimony, now acknowledged that he might have said so for the purpose of selling his books, but he never designed it in heart. Bro. Bassett raised a question whether we could go back beyond the proceedings had at the Conference when Van Dusen made a confession.—Pres. Strang spoke in answer to that objection by showing that when a man returned to his former sins the sins which had once been forgiven should come in remembrance again; that we might investigate his former conduct to test the sincerity of his confession, and to determine whether he was a subject of forgiveness.

Several items of testimony were given, among which one may be named: that Van Dusen had pretended to receive divers revelations, some of which had already proved false. Increase Van Dusen spoke in his own defence, and Elder Hickey in his behalf, whereupon it was resolved that Increase McGee Van Dusen be excommunicated from the church of Christ and delivered over to the buffeting of Satan until the day of redemption.

It was then presented that L. D. Hickey had the previous day in a public meeting after the benediction was pronounced charged Pres. Strang with adultery, fornication, spiritual wifery, and all the abominations that were ever practiced at Nauvoo, and denounced him as a deceiver, an impostor and a false prophet, and stated that he could prove all these charges by three letters, which he had lately received from his wife at Beaver Island. Pres. Strang replied that he was not guilty of any of the charges of Hickey, in whole or in part; that he had heard Hickey read the letters, and that they did not contain any evidence whatever on either of these charges, and did not speak of or allude to him or to his conduct in any way whatever, directly or indirectly, and challenged the production of the letters to test that fact.

Whereupon it was resolved that we proceed to investigate these charges, and the conduct of Hickey in the premises. Hickey being called upon to produce the letters and any other evidence, refused, saying that he had not the letters with him, and abruptly left, alledging that he wanted to go to bed; that it was getting late, and if they (the church) wanted to try him they must come together to-morrow night, he should not stop now. Bro. and sister Canney stated he had the letters with him on his way to the meeting about dusk. It was a short distance from Bro. Canney's to the

(Concluded on page 187.)

THE GLOBE:

A CONGRESSIONAL, AGRICULTURAL, AND LITERARY NEWSPAPER.

The approach of Congress calls out the Annual Prospectus of the GLOBE Establishment.

The time is full of interest. The coming in of a new Administration—the consequent broaching of a new policy touching the internal concerns of the country—the new and most important issues arising from the late vast accession to the public domain, and the great national objects associated with it—the impending difficulty in our relations with France, and the possible complication of our affairs with the troubles of Europe,—conspire to create great expectation as to the proceeding of the next Congress. The approaching Session will probably continue till late in the summer of 1850. The debates, from the agitation of so many questions of vital interest to the Republic, will draw forth all the talent of the National Legislature.

To become a useful instrument, however humble, to assist the working of the admirable machinery of our popular institutions, is the ambition of the conductor of the GLOBE. Extraordinary preparations have therefore been made to meet the increasing demands of our rapidly improving and growing country for Congressional intelligence.

The GLOBE Press has already enlisted the ablest Reporters yet known to Congress; its materials and machinery are of the best sort; and the exclusive devotion of the individual who for so many years has made it his study to embody and publish the labors of Congress, give reason to hope that an advance will be made in the accomplishment of this undertaking commensurate with its increased importance. But the accumulation of expense consequent on the additional number of Reporters required—the extra charges incurred in printing at night the debates of the preceding day—the vast addition made to the mass published, by the protracted sessions and the fuller reports given,—will render our enterprise a failure, unless Congress shall so far patronize it as to become a purchaser of such portion of the daily sheets issued as shall contribute to make the reports that fill them. The undersigned has ventured on the preparation he has made for as many daily sheets for each Member, at the subscription price, as will, in part, defray the expense of reporting, and give them circulation as Congressional documents in their several districts. This will enable the Publisher to bear the charge of reporting, and it will give an impulse to the circulation of the Congressional Print, which, although the cheapest in the Union, (the expense of preparation considered,) will yet yield sufficient profit to make the system permanent.

JOHN C. RIVES having purchased the interest of F. P. BLAIR in Jackson Hall—the printing office machinery and material—becomes the sole proprietor thereof, and will give his exclusive attention to the Congressional Department. J. C. PICKETT will conduct the Miscellaneous Department of the Newspaper. F. P. BLAIR retires from both concerns, with prayers for their permanent usefulness and prosperity.

The GLOBE will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the remainder of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a WEEKLY GLOBE, a CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE, and an APPENDIX.

The WEEKLY GLOBE will contain Agricultural and miscellaneous articles; and will occasionally give debates of such importance as command universal interest.

The price of the WEEKLY GLOBE is reduced to one dollar, with a view to obtain a more general circulation. Subscribers who have hitherto paid $2 per annum, will be charged only $1 after the expiration of the first year.

The CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and Appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session. Each volume will probably comprise two thousand royal quarto pages, of small type.

Complete indexes to the Congressional Globe and Appendix will be sent to subscribers soon after Congress adjourns.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year,	$5 00
For the Daily Globe for less than a year, at the rate of 84 cents a month.
For one copy of the Weekly Globe for one year	1 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the session	3 00
For one copy of the Appendix during the session	3 00
For four copies of either, or part of both during the session	10 00
For ten copies of either, or part of both during the session	20 00

The prices for these papers are so low, that advance payments are indispensable to carry them on.

Postmasters who may obtain subscribers will be allowed twenty per cent. on the subscription prices for single papers, which they may retain when they send on the names of subscribers and the subscription money. The price for the Congressional Globe and Appendix to clubs who take ten copies, is so low, that no deduction can be afforded. Subscriptions may be remitted by mail, at our risk, in money at par in the section of the country where subscribers reside.

JOHN C. RIVES.

WASHINGTON CITY, October 9, 1849.

SCOTT'S WEEKLY PAPER.

A new feature has just been commenced in this elegant and excellent family Paper, in the republication of the whole of Macauly's History of England, which will be continued regulary until this great work of the age shall be completed. The space occupied by the History is about equal to that used by the other weeklies for advertisements—so that subscribers to "Scott's Weekly Paper" will receive the work free of cost.

The Contents of Scott's Weekly Paper consists of every matter that can interest, amuse or instruct—such as Stories, Poetry, Legends, Biographies, Statistics, History, and the very latest News from all parts of the Globe. The prices of the staple products of the country in all the principal markets as well as the prices of Cattle in all the Atlantic cities, are condensed into a brief space in each number, thus rendering the "Weekly Paper" a desirable and useful article in every family, containing, as it does, a variety that encompass all tastes centering in the social circle.

TERMS FOR CLUBS.

Seven copies, one year,	$6,00
Twelve copies,	10,00
Twenty copies,	16,00
Twenty-six copies,	20,00
Thirty-three copies,	25,00
Forty copies,	30,00
Fifty copies,	35,00

Address, A. SCOTT, Publisher,
No. 115 Chestnut Street, Phila., Penn.

THE GLOBE:

A CONGRESSIONAL, AGRICULTURAL, AND LITERARY NEWSPAPER.

The approach of Congress calls out the Annual Prospectus of the GLOBE Establishment.

The time is full of interest. The coming in of a new Administration—the consequent broaching of a new policy touching the internal concerns of the country—the new and most important issues arising from the late vast accession to the public domain, and the great national objects associated with it—the impending difficulty in our relations with France, and the possible complication of our affairs with the troubles of Europe,—conspire to create great expectation as to the proceeding of the next Congress. The approaching Session will probably continue till late in the summer of 1850. The debates, from the agitation of so many questions of vital interest to the Republic, will draw forth all the talent of the National Legislature.

To become a useful instrument, however humble, to assist the working of the admirable machinery of our popular institutions, is the ambition of the conductor of the GLOBE. Extraordinary preparations have therefore been made to meet the increasing demands of our rapidly improving and growing country for Congressional intelligence.

The GLOBE Press has already enlisted the ablest Reporters yet known to Congress; its materials and machinery are of the best sort; and the exclusive devotion of the individual who for so many years has made it his study to embody and publish the labors of Congress, give reason to hope that an advance will be made in the accomplishment of this undertaking commensurate with its increased importance. But the accumulation of expense consequent on the additional number of Reporters required—the extra charges incurred in printing at night the debates of the preceding day—the vast addition made to the mass published, by the protracted sessions and the fuller reports given,—will render our enterprise a failure, unless Congress shall so far patronize it as to become a purchaser of such portion of the daily sheets issued as shall contribute to make the reports that fill them. The undersigned has ventured on the preparation he has made for as many daily sheets for each Member, at the subscription price, as will, in part, defray the expense of reporting, and give them circulation as Congressional documents in their several districts. This will enable the Publisher to bear the charge of reporting, and it will give an impulse to the circulation of the Congressional Print, which, although the cheapest in the Union, (the expense of preparation considered,) will yet yield sufficient profit to make the system permanent.

JOHN C. RIVES having purchased the interest of F. P. BLAIR in Jackson Hall—the printing office machinery and material—becomes the sole proprietor thereof, and will give his exclusive attention to the Congressional Department. J. C. PICKETT will conduct the Miscellaneous Department of the Newspaper. F. P. BLAIR retires from both concerns, with prayers for their permanent usefulness and prosperity.

The GLOBE will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the remainder of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a WEEKLY GLOBE, a CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE, and an APPENDIX.

The WEEKLY GLOBE will contain Agricultural and miscellaneous articles; and will occasionally give debates of such importance as command universal interest.

The price of the WEEKLY GLOBE is reduced to one dollar, with a view to obtain a more general circulation. Subscribers who have hitherto paid $2 per annum, will be charged only $1 after the expiration of the first year.

The CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and Appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session. Each volume will probably comprise two thousand royal quarto pages, of small type.

Complete indexes to the Congressional Globe and Appendix will be sent to subscribers soon after Congress adjourns.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year,	$5 00
For the Daily Globe for less than a year, at the rate of 84 cents a month.
For one copy of the Weekly Globe for one year	1 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the session	3 00
For one copy of the Appendix during the session	3 00
For four copies of either, or part of both during the session	10 00
For ten copies of either, or part of both during the session	20 00

The prices for these papers are so low, that advance payments are indispensable to carry them on.

Postmasters who may obtain subscribers will be allowed twenty per cent. on the subscription prices for single papers, which they may retain when they send on the names of subscribers and the subscription money. The price for the Congressional Globe and Appendix to clubs who take ten copies, is so low, that no deduction can be afforded. Subscriptions may be remitted by mail, at our risk, in money at par in the section of the country where subscribers reside.

JOHN C. RIVES.

WASHINGTON CITY, October 9, 1849.

SCOTT'S WEEKLY PAPER.

A new feature has just been commenced in this elegant and excellent family Paper, in the republication of the whole of Macauly's History of England, which will be continued regulary until this great work of the age shall be completed. The space occupied by the History is about equal to that used by the other weeklies for advertisements—so that subscribers to "Scott's Weekly Paper" will receive the work free of cost.

The Contents of Scott's Weekly Paper consists of every matter that can interest, amuse or instruct—such as Stories, Poetry, Legends, Biographies, Statistics, History, and the very latest News from all parts of the Globe. The prices of the staple products of the country in all the principal markets as well as the prices of Cattle in all the Atlantic cities, are condensed into a brief space in each number, thus rendering the "Weekly Paper" a desirable and useful article in every family, containing, as it does, a variety that encompass all tastes centering in the social circle.

TERMS FOR CLUBS.

Seven copies, one year,	$6,00
Twelve copies,	10,00
Twenty copies,	16,00
Twenty-six copies,	20,00
Thirty-three copies,	25,00
Forty copies,	30,00
Fifty copies,	35,00

Address, A. SCOTT, Publisher,
No. 115 Chestnut Street, Phila., Penn.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 37.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. NOV. 29, 1849. [WHOLE No. 153.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Jefferson County, Va., Oct. 10th, 1849.

PRSIDENT G. J. ADAMS,—

DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—It would be useless for me to attempt to tell you, by any selection of words, the satisfaction which I feel, in consequence of the perusal of the tracts and pamphlets you sent me. Joseph's letter of appointment is enough. I had not read many lines, before I felt in spirit that it is truth. Who, that understands anything about the order of the church, would in conscience ask for anything more? Yes, while I write, my mind is filled with peace, and my soul rejoices in Christ, my spirit seems to burn within me, and long to be in the joyous work of proclaiming the Gospel according to the commandment. Dear brother, I cannot express my feelings. You may conceive them, but I cannot write them. But let me say, that I am filled with the desire of being again at my business in the priesthood. My mouth has long been shut, and my feelings unsettled, for I was well aware of the revelations in regard to Joseph's having to appoint one in his stead, should he be removed.

I indeed knew that the Twelve had undertaken to rule the church, but this never seemed proper. I knew of no appointment made by proper authority, and yet I could not leave my faith, hoping that in some way, in God's time, I would know the truth, and be guided in the proper path. I accordingly have waited until now; and, thank God, I now feel again satisfied. Oft in my lonely condition have I thought on the blessing I enjoyed while in Philadelphia. I have indeed felt the want of the society of the saints. And indeed I have been preserved, only by the hand of the Almighty, from returning to my former notions of sectarianism. I acknowledge the great goodness of our heavenly Father, in preserving me from the powers of darkness, and leading me in the way of truth.

When I view my time of service, and the little use I have made of my talent given me in the priesthood, I appear to have done nothing, when compared with my duties as an Elder, and the words spoken at my ordination under the hands of Bros. E. Snow and L. D. Barnes. It is true, I have some witnesses of my labors, who long since have gone to the west; but the crowd might have been hundreds to one there. I hope they are in Voree. I now feel the force of difficulties much greater than in years gone by. I am poor, and my family is large, but my master must be obeyed. What at first may appear a difficulty may turn out to be a very great blessing, as often has happened to me. I am so situated, that, in all probability, the first time I should bear testimony to the truth, I would raise up a host of enemies in my immediate vicinity, if I should not be turned out of my employment as teacher.

Will you pray for me, that my faith may be strong? I long to meet once again with the church and enjoy the company of the saints. None are able fully to appreciate the society of the brethren, but those who have for a long time been deprived of this privilege. If I were sure of getting employment in the city, I would almost be induced to remove thither, but I suppose this could hardly be, as all places of any worth are immediately filled by some one watching for vacancies. But I must, if possible, pay

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 37.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, NOV. 29, 1849. [WHOLE No. 153.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PUBLISHED AND EDITED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Jefferson County, Va., Oct. 10th, 1849.

PRESIDENT G. J. ADAMS.—

DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—It would be useless for me to attempt to tell you, by any selection of words, the satisfaction which I feel, in consequence of the perusal of the tracts and pamphlets you sent me. Joseph's letter of appointment is enough. I had not read many lines, before I felt in spirit that it is truth. Who, that understands anything about the order of the church, would in conscience ask for anything more? Yes, while I write, my mind is filled with peace, and my soul rejoices in Christ, my spirit seems to burn within me, and long to be in the joyous work of proclaiming the Gospel according to the commandment. Dear brother, I cannot express my feelings. You may conceive them, but I cannot write them. But let me say, that I am filled with the desire of being again at my business in the priesthood. My mouth has long been shut, and my feelings unsettled, for I was well aware of the revelations in regard to Joseph's having to appoint one in his stead, should he be removed.

I indeed knew that the Twelve had undertaken to rule the church, but this never seemed proper. I knew of no appointment made by proper authority, and yet I could not leave my faith, hoping that in some way, in God's time, I would know the truth, and be guided in the proper path. I accordingly have waited until now; and, thank God, I now feel again satisfied. Oft in my lonely condition have I thought on the blessing I enjoyed while in Philadelphia. I have indeed felt the want of the society of the saints. And indeed I have been preserved, only by the hand of the Almighty, from returning to my former notions of sectarianism. I acknowledge the great goodness of our heavenly Father, in preserving me from the powers of darkness, and leading me in the way of truth.

When I view my time of service, and the little use I have made of my talent given me in the priesthood, I appear to have done nothing, when compared with my duties as an Elder, and the words spoken at my ordination under the hands of Bros. E. Snow and L. D. Barnes. It is true I have some witnesses of my labors, who long since have gone to the west; but the crowd might have been hundreds to one there. I hope they are in Voree. I now feel the force of difficulties much greater than in years gone by. I am poor, and my family is large, but my master must be obeyed. What at first may appear a difficulty may turn out to be a very great blessing, as often has happened to me. I am so situated, that, in all probability, the first time I should bear testimony to the truth, I would raise up a host of enemies in my immediate vicinity, if I should not be turned out of my employment as teacher.

Will you pray for me, that my faith may be strong? I long to meet once again with the church and enjoy the company of the saints. None are able fully to appreciate the society of the brethren, but those who have for a long time been deprived of this privilege. If I were sure of getting employment in the city, I would almost be induced to remove thither, but I suppose this could hardly be, as all places of any worth are immediately filled by some one watching for vacancies. But I must, if possible, pay you a visit this fall; for I am sure this is my duty.

The church may now truly be called a little band. How bitter must be the disappointment of those who have gone to California, when they find that they have gone so many miles, through so many hardships, from the place appointed for their comfort and temporal salvation. How bitter must their reflections be when they come to think of their apostacy, and disobedience to the commandments. How glad I am that I am not among them; and yet I wished to be among them, often and often And there in all probability I would be, if it had not been for a merciful providence in preventing me from gaining the means necessary to convey me and mine to Illinois. But I am satisfied that I will be able to go to Voree. I know my life has been given me in an important era, even in the dispensation of the fulness of times; the time of preparing a people for the coming of the son of man, who shall purify his people and fit them for his glorious reign upon the earth. In this work how earnest should I be, willing to obey my master's calls upon all occasions; for the work is great. And soon will come the day of burning, when the earth shall be purged from all iniquity, and be fitted for the abode of celestial beings

How different is the design of the Almighty in bringing about the rest which is promised to the earth, to the narrow minds of our modern sectarian infidels, who will not even dare express full faith in the scriptures they pretend so much to revere, vainly thinking the Bible means something quite different to that which it expresses. While the Apostle would have us believe the scriptures to be a light to our feet, a light which shineth in a dark place, men now would have us believe them all mystery, incomprehensible, and liable to all kinds of interpretation, just as hireling priests may let their fancies run.

But why need I thus write to you, who are a scribe well instructed in the law, while I am a mere babe in the knowledge of divine things? You will not think me presumptious, I pray, or overly inquisitive, when I ask you to send me the translation of those records found by Bro. Strang. If you have the translation, please send it. If you are going to have a Conference this fall, please let me know, as I would like to be there.

Tell if you have preaching in Baltimore every Sabbath, where the church meets, and when I would be likely to meet you, if I were to visit you. The cars leave the Ferry (Harper's) every morning, and return in the evening. I might come to your place on Saturday morning, and return on Sabbath evening, and thus cause no lost time in my school. I am going to visit Elder Jones at Harper's Ferry, and lay the appointment of Bro. Strang before him. He is a sensible man, and, according to appearances, may be useful; he is a powerful speaker; his faith may, however, be weak. I have not seen him for a year. I know he would be pleased to see you at any time you would come to the Ferry, and would treat you well.

I shall inquire whether any place can be had for preaching there, and if I can obtain a place I shall ask you, if you can, to give the people there a round or two. Who knows what might be done? If I once determine on the time of my visiting you I will let you know, and give you a sign by which you may know me at the car office, if you will be kind enough to meet me there. Well, my sheet is nearly full, and yet I have many things to say, but I must wait until I see you. How wonderful are the ways of providence! I remain your fellow servant in the covenant of the gospel of peace, hoping shortly to see you, WILLIAM GRADY.

DEAR FRANK:—The foregoing letter was not written for publication, but I think it is well worth it, for it shows plainly that God is working. Well, who can hinder? Yours truly, G. J. ADAMS.

☞ Bro. Winders writes from Pittsburgh that there are a few saints there firm in the faith, who are very anxious to have an Elder call on them and preach. Should there be any Elders passing in that region we hope they you a visit this fall; for I am sure this is my duty.

The church may now truly be called a little band. How bitter must be the disappointment of those who have gone to California, when they find that they have gone so many miles, through so many hardships, from the place appointed for their comfort and temporal salvation. How bitter must their reflections be when they come to think of their apostacy, and disobedience to the commandments. How glad I am that I am not among them; and yet I wished to be among them, often and often And there in all probability I would be, if it had not been for a merciful providence in preventing me from gaining the means necessary to convey me and mine to Illinois. But I am satisfied that I will be able to go to Voree. I know my life has been given me in an important era, even in the dispensation of the fulness of times; the time of preparing a people for the coming of the son of man, who shall purify his people and fit them for his glorious reign upon the earth. In this work how earnest should I be, willing to obey my master's calls upon all occasions; for the work is great. And soon will come the day of burning, when the earth shall be purged from all iniquity, and be fitted for the abode of celestial beings

How different is the design of the Almighty in bringing about the rest which is promised to the earth, to the narrow minds of our modern sectarian infidels, who will not even dare express full faith in the scriptures they pretend so much to revere, vainly thinking the Bible means something quite different to that which it expresses. While the Apostle would have us believe the scriptures to be a light to our feet, a light which shineth in a dark place, men now would have us believe them all mystery, incomprehensible, and liable to all kinds of interpretation, just as hireling priests may let their fancies run.

But why need I thus write to you, who are a scribe well instructed in the law, while I am a mere babe in the knowledge of divine things? You will not think me presumptious, I pray, or overly inquisitive, when I ask you to send me the translation of those records found by Bro. Strang. If you have the translation, please send it. If you are going to have a Conference this fall, please let me know, as I would like to be there.

Tell if you have preaching in Baltimore every Sabbath, where the church meets, and when I would be likely to meet you, if I were to visit you. The cars leave the Ferry Harper's every morning, and return in the evening. I might come to your place on Saturday morning, and return on Sabbath evening, and thus cause no lost time in my school. I am going to visit Elder Jones at Harper's Ferry, and lay the appointment of Bro. Strang before him. He is a sensible man, and, according to appearances, may be useful; he is a powerful speaker; his faith may, however, be weak. I have not seen him for a year. I know he would be pleased to see you at any time you would come to the Ferry, and would treat you well.

I shall inquire whether any place can be had for preaching there, and if I can obtain a place I shall ask you, if you can, to give the people there a round or two. Who knows what might be done? If I once determine on the time of my visiting you I will let you know, and give you a sign by which you may know me at the car office, if you will be kind enough to meet me there. Well, my sheet is nearly full, and yet I have many things to say, but I must wait until I see you. How wonderful are the ways of providence! I remain your fellow servant in the covenant of the gospel of peace, hoping shortly to see you, WILLIAM GRADY.

DEAR FRANK:—The foregoing letter was not written for publication, but I think it is well worth it, for it shows plainly that God is working. Well, who can hinder? Yours truly, G. J. ADAMS.

☞ Bro. Winders writes from Pittsburgh that there are a few saints there firm in the faith, who are very anxious to have an Elder call on them and preach. Should there be any Elders passing in that region we hope they will do so. This Bro. has shown his faith by sending on his tithing. If all the saints would manifest a like faith, the house of the Lord would progress more rapidly.

PERFECTION OF NATURE.—Upon examining the edge of the sharpest razor or lancet with a microscope, it will appear fully as broad as the back of a knife—rough, uneven and full of notches and furrows. An exceedingly small needle resembles an iron bar; but the sting of a bee seen through the same instrument exhibits every where the most beautiful polish, without the least flaw, blemish or inequality, and it ends in a point too fine to be discerned. The threads of a fine lawn seem coarser than the yarn with which ropes are made for anchors. But a silk worm's web appears perfectly smooth and shining, and every where equal. The smallest dot that is made with a pen appears irregular and uneven. But the little specks on wings or bodies of insects are found to be the most accurately circular.—How magnificent is the system of nature!—Ex. paper.

CORRECT VIEW.—Mankind might do without physicians, if they would observe the laws of health; without lawyers, if they would keep their tempers; without soldiers, if they would observe the laws of christianity; and perhaps without preachers, if each one would take care of his own conscience; but there is no dispensing with the newspaper.—Ex. paper.

☞ A member of the Darcy Overland California Company, writing to the Newark Advertiser from the City of the Great Salt Lake, thus describes that rendezvous of the Mormons:—

The valley of the Great Salt Lake is some 200 miles long and ranges from 15 to 25 in width, but is without timber, except a few scattered cotton woods. It has a luxuriant, fertile soil, and is well watered by the River Jordan and its tributaries, with many springs and smaller streams. It produces well the crops of the middle States. The climate, though much warmer than the temperature of the mountains we have been traveling in, is very agreeable; so refreshing are the breezes from the snow-capped mountains on the East and the Great Lake on the South. This lake is 60 miles long by 20 broad, and contains salt in such abundance that it can be shoveled up like sand.

The number of Mormons in the valley is supposed to be about 10,000; and those in the city which is regularly laid out 2½ miles square are reckoned at 5000 to 6000; I think these are over estimates. The first settlement was made in the Valley two years ago this month; and in September, 1848, when the large emigration arrived, there was not a house or fence standing within the present limits of the town. The houses are built of mud-brick, dried in the sun, are of one story, and contain but one room. They are comfortable dwellings for this location, being cool in summer and warm in winter, and as it seldom rains here, there is little inconvenience from the porous material.

Each family is allowed an acre and a quarter of land in the city limits, and as much outside as it chooses. The lands have to be irrigated, and several of the mountain streams have been brought into town by trenches. As yet they have no stores or taverns, and their house of worship is a rude shed entirely unprotected at the sides. It stands on an eminence overlooking the city and River Jordan. The effect of a visit to the Sulphur Spring is so delightful and refreshing to me that I must describe it. The spring is situated three miles from town, near the base of a high mountain, and is strongly impregnated with mineral. It is about 90 deg. Fah.—quite warm enough to be agreeable. The water pours out of the mountain through a natural tunnel in the rock the size of a man's body, emptying into a basin some 20 feet square, the sides of which are of rock and the bottom of pure grey sand pebbles; the average depth being two and a half to three feet. Thursday and Friday of each week are reserved for female bathers. We all took a bath, and the effect was most healthful and invigorating. I would ask no greater fortune for myself than to own such a fountain of healing waters in New York or New Jersey.

There is another spring of much higher temperature four miles beyond this one; eggs are cooked in a short time in it, and the Indians who inhabit this valley drive the large crickets which abound here, and which they esteem a great luxury, in the hot water, and they are soon cooked. The Indians also set fire to the grass in the vallies for the sake of crickets. By the time the grass is consumed the crickets are well roasted, and are eagerly devoured. They are about eight times as large as the crickets of the States.

JEWS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Dr. Lilienthal, the Chief Rabbi in the United States, represents the prospects of Judaism there as most encouraging, and promises for it, that, in the course of years, it will obtain a firmer footing than in Europe. The principal congregations are in N. York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Albany, Richmond, Cincinnati, and New-Orleans. Dr. Lilienthal himself is indefatigable in his endeavors. He thus describes the process by which new Jewish congregations are formed: "A single Jew settles in a small town, and there lives, separated from Jews, and everything that is Jewish. No one knows that he is a Jew, for he does not observe any Jewish commandment, or ceremony. In process of time, another Jew settles there, and then a third. The sacred period of a New Year arrives, and the day of atonement draws nigh; the people think of God, look at their prosperity, and at him whom they have to thank for it, then cast a glance on their irreligious life, and are ashamed of it. The desire to return to God rises in their hearts; they count themselves and find that their number amounts to ten; they can form a minyan; one of them proposes that they constitute themselves a congregation, the others cheerfully agree; money is raised, a letter is written to New York, or some other large congregation; they buy a sepher torah, tephilin, mezuzoth and talethim, appoint a chasan, and in the course of five years, a congregation is perfectly organized, a synagogue is erected and a burial-place established."

The number of Jews in North America is estimated at five thousand, and in the West Indies seven thousand more.

EXPLANATION.—Minyan, the number required; sepher torah, book of law; tephilin, phylacteries; mezuzoth, pieces of parchment, containing portions of Scripture, and fastened to the door post; talethin, four-cornered vestments, in which every Jew must be attired at the time of prayer; chasan, reader.

will do so. This Bro. has shown his faith by sending on his tithing. If all the saints would manifest a like faith, the house of the Lord would progress more rapidly.

PERFECTION OF NATURE.—Upon examining the edge of the sharpest razor or lancet with a microscope, it will appear fully as broad as the back of a knife—rough, uneven and full of notches and furrows. An exceedingly small needle resembles an iron bar; but the sting of a bee seen through the same instrument exhibits every where the most beautiful polish, without the least flaw, blemish or inequality, and it ends in a point too fine to be discerned. The threads of a fine lawn seem coarser than the yarn with which ropes are made for anchors. But a silk worm's web appears perfectly smooth and shining, and every where equal. The smallest dot that is made with a pen appears irregular and uneven. But the little specks on wings or bodies of insects are found to be the most accurately circular.—How magnificent is the system of nature!—Ex. paper.

CORRECT VIEW.—Mankind might do without physicians, if they would observe the laws of health; without lawyers, if they would keep their tempers; without soldiers, if they would observe the laws of christianity; and perhaps without preachers, if each one would take care of his own conscience; but there is no dispensing with the newspaper.—Ex. paper.

☞ A member of the Darcy Overland California Company, writing to the Newark Advertiser from the City of the Great Salt Lake, thus describes that rendezvous of the Mormons:—

The valley of the Great Salt Lake is some 200 miles long and ranges from 15 to 25 in width, but is without timber, except a few scattered cotton woods. It has a luxuriant, fertile soil, and is well watered by the River Jordan and its tributaries, with many springs and smaller streams. It produces well the crops of the middle States. The climate, though much warmer than the temperature of the mountains we have been traveling in, is very agreeable; so refreshing are the breezes from the snow-capped mountains on the East and the Great Lake on the South. This lake is 60 miles long by 20 broad, and contains salt in such abundance that it can be shoveled up like sand.

The number of Mormons in the valley is supposed to be about 10,000; and those in the city which is regularly laid out 2½ miles square are reckoned at 5000 to 6000; I think these are over estimates. The first settlement was made in the Valley two years ago this month; and in September, 1848, when the large emigration arrived, there was not a house or fence standing within the present limits of the town. The houses are built of mud-brick, dried in the sun, are of one story, and contain but one room. They are comfortable dwellings for this location, being cool in summer and warm in winter, and as it seldom rains here, there is little inconvenience from the porous material.

Each family is allowed an acre and a quarter of land in the city limits, and as much outside as it chooses. The lands have to be irrigated, and several of the mountain streams have been brought into town by trenches. As yet they have no stores or taverns, and their house of worship is a rude shed entirely unprotected at the sides. It stands on an eminence overlooking the city and River Jordan. The effect of a visit to the Sulphur Spring is so delightful and refreshing to me that I must describe it. The spring is situated three miles from town, near the base of a high mountain, and is strongly impregnated with mineral. It is about 90 deg. Fah.—quite warm enough to be agreeable. The water pours out of the mountain through a natural tunnel in the rock the size of a man's body, emptying into a basin some 20 feet square, the sides of which are of rock and the bottom of pure grey sand pebbles; the average depth being two and a half to three feet. Thursday and Friday of each week are reserved for female bathers. We all took a bath, and the effect was most healthful and invigorating. I would ask no greater fortune for myself than to own such a fountain of healing waters in New York or New Jersey.

There is another spring of much higher temperature four miles beyond this one; eggs are cooked in a short time in it, and the Indians who inhabit this valley drive the large crickets which abound here, and which they esteem a great luxury, in the hot water, and they are soon cooked. The Indians also set fire to the grass in the vallies for the sake of crickets. By the time the grass is consumed the crickets are well roasted, and are eagerly devoured. They are about eight times as large as the crickets of the States.

JEWS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Dr. Lilienthal, the Chief Rabbi in the United States, represents the prospects of Judaism there as most encouraging, and promises for it, that, in the course of years, it will obtain a firmer footing than in Europe. The principal congregations are in N. York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Albany, Richmond, Cincinnati, and New-Orleans. Dr. Lilienthal himself is indefatigable in his endeavors. He thus describes the process by which new Jewish congregations are formed: "A single Jew settles in a small town, and there lives, separated from Jews, and everything that is Jewish. No one knows that he is a Jew, for he does not observe any Jewish commandment, or ceremony. In process of time, another Jew settles there, and then a third. The sacred period of a New Year arrives, and the day of atonement draws nigh; the people think of God, look at their prosperity, and at him whom they have to thank for it, then cast a glance on their irreligious life, and are ashamed of it. The desire to return to God rises in their hearts; they count themselves and find that their number amounts to ten; they can form a minyan; one of them proposes that they constitute themselves a congregation, the others cheerfully agree; money is raised, a letter is written to New York, or some other large congregation; they buy a sepher torah, tephilin, mezuzoth and talethim, appoint a chasan, and in the course of five years, a congregation is perfectly organized, a synagogue is erected and a burial-place established."

The number of Jews in North America is estimated at five thousand, and in the West Indies seven thousand more.

EXPLANATION.—Minyan, the number required; sepher torah, book of law; tephilin, phylacteries; mezuzoth, pieces of parchment, containing portions of Scripture, and fastened to the door post; talethin, four-cornered vestments, in which every Jew must be attired at the time of prayer, chasan, reader.

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD AT BALTIMORE, Nov. 10TH AND 11TH, 1849.

Opened by singing. Pres. Strang read the 1st and 11th Psalm. Prayer by Pres. Strang. Singing. Pres. Strang stated the object of the Conference, and the end to be accomplished by this dispensation; showing by contrast with the work of God in past ages, that the means now at work are commensurate to the end to be accomplished, and that the servants of God were to be gathered out from Babylon, and established in places appointed and consecrated of God, separate from the rest of the world.—C. J. Douglass was chosen Secretary.

G. J. Adams spoke of some of the leading purposes of the Conference. Spoke of what age and dispensation we lived; alluded to the great and glorious things that God will work in this present age, and showed how it was so. Spoke of the thrones that God would set up. Contrasted the officers and governments of this present sectarian generation with the government of God. Made a few remarks on the Brighamites, showing them to be the people who trusted not in the Lord, and went into a salt land not before inhabited. Jer. xvii. 5, 6. No priesthood and nothing but the arm of flesh to sustain them; having established and placed themselves under Gentile government, and yielded themselves servants to obey it. Ridiculed their folly in trying to get a State of their own; said they were not of God, and could not apply to him, or claim his promises, and showed how they would come to an end. He also gave an account of the church at Voree, and their strong hold. And showed what restoration God would accomplish in the last days.—Adjourned until 3 o'clock, P. M. Benediction by A. N. Hosmer.

AFTERNOON.—Met pursuant to adjournment. Pres. Strang read the 84th and 85th Psalm.—Prayer by G. J. Adams. Singing. William Grady and Peter Jones, Elders, who had supposed the church had gone into the wilderness, asked the fellowship of the Conference, and offered to go into the work of the ministry. On motion, it was unanimously resolved that we receive, fellowship and sustain Wm. Grady and Peter Jones as Elders in the church.

The case of Bro. Lehman being called up for consideration, Pres. S. stated that he had a mission given him at the July Conference at Beaver Island, which he did not fill, and was now at Philadelphia waiting to raise a noise the first opportunity, and was rebelling against the authority of the church. Pres. Adams testified that he (Lehman) had been in rebellion from time to time for twelve years, and that as long as we keep him in the church we are nursing a viper. He also testified that Lehman went to Beaver, saying he had provided for his family, and was prepared to stay as long as he liked up to two years; appeared to be very much pleased with the church, and said he was ready to do anything, or go anywhere that the authority of the church sent him; but as soon as he had received his mission he began to rebel, and has been in rebellion ever since. Bro. Lower and Grady gave concurring testimony.

On motion, it was unanimously resolved that we take from Bro. Lehman all priesthood, authority and jurisdiction in the church of God; and because he is disobedient and rebellious, and utterly neglected his mission to preach the gospel according to the appointment of the July Conference, admonish him to repent and make satisfaction; and until he does so be deprived of all privilege in the church but the hearing of the word.

G. J. Adams said he had a sorrowful case to being before the Conference—C. W. Appleton—painful because he had loved him. He testified that he had been a good faithful man formerly, but liquor had ruined him; also testified that he had spent very much money and property in drinking. Spoke of different times when he had seen him intoxicated, and how they had tried to keep him sober, but it all proved vain, for he would get drunk. Much testimony was introduced showing his wayward course under repeated admonition, and

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD AT BALTIMORE, Nov. 10th and 11th, 1849.

Opened by singing. Pres. Strang read the 1st and 11th Psalm. Prayer by Pres. Strang. Singing. Pres. Strang stated the object of the Conference, and the end to be accomplished by this dispensation; showing by contrast with the work of God in past ages, that the means now at work are commensurate to the end to be accomplished, and that the servants of God were to be gathered out from Babylon, and established in places appointed and consecrated of God, separate from the rest of the world.—C. J. Douglass was chosen Secretary.

G. J. Adams spoke of some of the leading purposes of the Conference. Spoke of what age and dispensation we lived; alluded to the great and glorious things that God will work in this present age, and showed how it was so. Spoke of the thrones that God would set up. Contrasted the officers and governments of this present sectarian generation with the government of God. Made a few remarks on the Brighamites, showing them to be the people who trusted not in the Lord, and went into a salt land not before inhabited. Jer. xvii. 5, 6. No priesthood and nothing but the arm of flesh to sustain them, having established and placed themselves under Gentile government, and yielded themselves servants to obey it. Ridiculed their folly in trying to get a State of their own: said they were not of God, and could not apply to him, or claim his promises, and showed how they would come to an end. He also gave an account of the church at Voree, and their strong hold. And showed what restoration God would accomplish in the last days.—Adjourned until 3 o'clock, P. M. Benediction by A. N. Hosmer.

Afternoon.—Met pursuant to adjournment. Pres. Strang read the 84th and 85th Psalm.—Prayer by G. J. Adams. Singing. William Grady and Peter Jones, Elders, who had supposed the church had gone into the wilderness, asked the fellowship of the Conference, and offered to go into the work of the ministry. On motion, it was unanimously resolved that we receive, fellowship and sustain Wm. Grady and Peter Jones as Elders in the church.

The case of Bro. Lehman being called up for consideration, Pres. S. stated that he had a mission given him at the July Conference at Beaver Island, which he did not fill, and was now at Philadelphia waiting to raise a noise the first opportunity, and was rebelling against the authority of the church. Pres. Adams testified that he Lehman had been in rebellion from time to time for twelve years, and that as long as we keep him in the church we are nursing a viper. He also testified that Lehman went to Beaver, saying he had provided for his family, and was prepared to stay as long as he liked up to two years: appeared to be very much pleased with the church, and said he was ready to do anything, or go anywhere that the authority of the church sent him: but as soon as he had received his mission he began to rebel, and has been in rebellion ever since. Bro. Lower and Grady gave concurring testimony.

On motion, it was unanimously resolved that we take from Bro. Lehman all priesthood, authority and jurisdiction in the church of God: and because he is disobedient and rebellious, and utterly neglected his mission to preach the gospel according to the appointment of the July Conference, admonish him to repent and make satisfaction: and until he does so be deprived of all privilege in the church but the hearing of the word.

G. J. Adams said he had a sorrowful case to being before the Conference—C. W. Appleton—painful because he had loved him. He testified that he had been a good faithful man formerly, but liquor had ruined him: also testified that he had spent very much money and property in drinking. Spoke of different times when he had seen him intoxicated, and how they had tried to keep him sober, but it all proved vain, for he would get drunk. Much testimony was introduced showing his wayward course under repeated admonition, and after being repeatedly forgiven and brought sober. Whereupon it was unanimously resolved that we take all power and authority from him, and cut him off from the church until he repent and make satisfaction.

Pres. Strang presented the case of L. D. Hickey, one of the Twelve, who has lately been suspended, together with his conduct and the action of the church at New York. He related the joint conduct of Van Dusen and Hickey. Also the visions and revelations they had pretended to receive. Also testified of the accusations they had made against him, before the church at New York. Pres. Strang read the proceedings in this case, and the trial of Hickey and Van Dusen held at New York City. And it was unanimously resolved that we sanction the proceedings of the church at New York City, in relation to Hickey and Van Dusen. Adjourned until 7 1-2 o'clock this evening. Benediction by Bro Canox.

Evening.—Met pursuant to adjournment.—Singing. Prayer by A. N. Hosmer. Singing. Moved, seconded and carried unanimously, that Bros. Jones and Grady take new licenses from this Conference, and be authorized to preach at Harper's Ferry and vicinity, when they have opportunity. Preaching by Pres. Strang on the authority of the church as the pillar and ground of the truth. G. J. Adams followed in a few remarks. Adjourned until half past ten o'clock to-morrow. Benediction by G. J. Adams.

Nov. 11th.—Met pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by Pres. Strang. Singing.—Preaching by Pres. Strang on the kingdom of God. Adjourned until two o'clock, P. M.—Benediction by G. J. Adams.

Afternoon.—Assembled pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by Bro. Canox. Singing. Voted that we approve the ordination of and grant a license to Bro. Samuel Clough. Remarks by G. J. Adams. Bro. John W. Grierson, late from Council Bluffs, gave a pithy account of his travels with the western camp, and the state of affairs with them, and of his faith, and requested to be received in the fellowship and confidence of the saints, and expressed a strong desire to be again in the work of the Lord, as his church shall counsel. And it appearing that he was a worthy brother, and a member of the Seventies, it was resolved unanimously that we receive and sustain Bro. John W. Grierson as one of the Seventies, and that he preach the gospel as he shall be sent.

Pres. Adams gave instructions to the young Elders how to behave themselves in the preaching of the gospel. Singing. Preaching by G. J. Adams on the subject of the restoration of the Jews. The ordinance of blessing children was attended to and confirmation. Benediction by G. J. Adams. Adjourned until seven o'clock this evening.

Evening.—Assembled pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by G. J. Adams.—Singing. Preaching by Pres. Strang on the kingdom of God. A few remarks by G J. Adams in answer to a question asked by one of the audience. Benediction by G. J. Adams.

JAMES J. STRANG, } Presidents.
GEO. J. ADAMS, }

C. J. Douglass, Clerk.

VOREE.

It is not at all strange for our brethren abroad to wish to know concerning the prosperity of the saints of God in the stakes of Zion. I must say, then, with regard to Voree that the saints are in the "unity of the spirit, in the bond of peace," of one heart and of one mind in the purposes of God, to work with all their might in the great work of the last days. Indeed I may say there is such a unity here as seldom has been witnessed among the saints. The warm season of the year has passed away, and very little time has been misspent or unimproved. The fore part of the season was spent in repairing and making fences, assisting brethren in emigrating to Beaver, at work on the Tower upon the Hill of Promise, putting our seed in the ground, expecting by the blessing of God to reap a rich harvest, when the harafter being repeatedly forgiven and brought sober. Whereupon it was unanimously resolved that we take all power and authority from him, and cut him off from the church until he repent and make satisfaction.

Pres. Strang presented the case of L. D. Hickey, one of the Twelve, who has lately been suspended, together with his conduct and the action of the church at New York. He related the joint conduct of Van Dusen and Hickey. Also the visions and revelations they had pretended to receive. Also testified of the accusations they had made against him, before the church at New York. Pres. Strang read the proceedings in this case, and the trial of Hickey and Van Dusen held at New York City. And it was unanimously resolved that we sanction the proceedings of the church at New York City, in relation to Hickey and Van Dusen. Adjourned until 7 1-2 o'clock this evening. Benediction by Bro Canox.

Evening.—Met pursuant to adjournment.—Singing. Prayer by A. N. Hosmer. Singing. Moved, seconded and carried unanimously, that Bros. Jones and Grady take new licenses from this Conference, and be authorized to preach at Harper's Ferry and vicinity, when they have opportunity. Preaching by Pres. Strang on the authority of the church as the pillar and ground of the truth. G. J. Adams followed in a few remarks. Adjourned until half past ten o'clock to-morrow. Benediction by G. J. Adams.

Nov. 11th.—Met pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by Pres. Strang. Singing.—Preaching by Pres. Strang on the kingdom of God. Adjourned until two o'clock, P. M.—Benediction by G. J. Adams.

Afternoon.—Assembled pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by Bro. Canox. Singing. Voted that we approve the ordination of and grant a license to Bro. Samuel Clough. Remarks by G. J. Adams. Bro. John W. Grierson, late from Council Bluffs, gave a pithy account of his travels with the western camp, and the state of affairs with them, and of his faith, and requested to be received in the fellowship and confidence of the saints, and expressed a strong desire to be again in the work of the Lord, as his church shall counsel. And it appearing that he was a worthy brother, and a member of the Seventies, it was resolved unanimously that we receive and sustain Bro. John W. Grierson as one of the Seventies, and that he preach the gospel as he shall be sent.

Pres. Adams gave instructions to the young Elders how to behave themselves in the preaching of the gospel. Singing. Preaching by G. J. Adams on the subject of the restoration of the Jews. The ordinance of blessing children was attended to and confirmation. Benediction by G. J. Adams. Adjourned until seven o'clock this evening.

Evening.—Assembled pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by G. J. Adams.—Singing. Preaching by Pres. Strang on the kingdom of God. A few remarks by G. J. Adams in answer to a question asked by one of the audience. Benediction by G. J. Adams.

JAMES J. STRANG, } Presidents.
GEO. J. ADAMS, }

C. J. Douglass, Clerk.

VOREE.

It is not at all strange for our brethren abroad to wish to know concerning the prosperity of the saints of God in the stakes of Zion. I must say, then, with regard to Voree that the saints are in the "unity of the spirit, in the bond of peace," of one heart and of one mind in the purposes of God, to work with all their might in the great work of the last days. Indeed I may say there is such a unity here as seldom has been witnessed among the saints. The warm season of the year has passed away, and very little time has been misspent or unimproved. The fore part of the season was spent in repairing and making fences, assisting brethren in emigrating to Beaver, at work on the Tower upon the Hill of Promise, putting our seed in the ground, expecting by the blessing of God to reap a rich harvest, when the harvest season should roll around. And so has it been. Our crops are now secured, or nearly so. Quite a number of our houses have been finished inside, and more are in progression, and probably nearly all the rest will be completed soon.

The Tower has been raised one and a half stories high for about twenty-five feet in length, a roof put on, lathed, plastered and finished up for habitation the coming winter. The Temple has progressed more this season than it has before since Voree became a place of gathering; and although there is but little done compared to what there is to do, yet we think that our brethren abroad would not consider us slothful, if they knew the poverty and want that their brethren here had passed through. Yet the day of trial in Voree seems to be over.

We find ourselves now in as good circumstances as most of our Gentile neighbors, the saints in good spirits, and others coming up to assist them. Our meetings are held on the Sabbath twice, at eleven o'clock and in the evening, and also on Thursday evening. The spirit of truth whispers peace to the saints in their assemblings, and the spirit of God is in their midst. Besides religious meetings we have business meetings of the Order of Enoch frequently, also a lyceum held every Saturday evening, where questions of importance are handed in by members of the lyceum, and a selection made by the judge, who is appointed at each meeting. This is also somewhat interesting, as well as instructive. The last question discussed was this: "Resolved, that the works of nature are better proof of the existence of a God than revelation."

Preparations are being made to quarry a large quantity of stone before the quarry freezes hard, in order that the stone masons may cut and dress a large quantity of them during the winter, and be ready in the spring to place in the Temple and Tower, and thus the coming season push these buildings ahead with all speed. I may say of a truth concerning Voree and her inhabitants, the place is improving faster now than ever before. There is more unity of faith and oneness of feeling at present than ever was before manifested in the place.

S. P. BACON.

A LONDON GRAVE YARD.

An inquest was held on Wednesday by Mr. H. M. Wakely, at the Crown, Clerkenwell-green, on Lousia Mary Price, aged 16, supposed to have died from cholera. As the disease was believed to have been caused by malaria from Spafield burial ground, the inquest excited the greatest interest. Mrs. Price, the mother of the deceased, after giving evidence of the death of her daughter from cholera, stated that in the kitchen where her daughter worked in the service of Mr. Watt, jeweler, Exmouth street, there was a bad smell, which greatly affected her. Mr. Watt, the master of the deceased, stated that the Spafields graveyard was obnoxious, especially lately, some of the old ground having been re-opened and pits dug for the reception of the dead. In the ground, which measured 72 feet by 72, there had been lately buried, at several depths not far removed from the surface, at least 3,000 bodies. Each grave contained seven or eight bodies. How space was made for new comers he could not say, unless by the destruction of the bodies and coffins. He was aware that coffins had been made away with. In consequence of the effluvia from the graveyard he had been compelled to send his children to boarding schools, and remove the other members of his family. He went to the vestry clerk to complain, but found him out of town. It was well known that the same grave had been fifty times opened for bodies, and by the systematic destruction of bodies and coffins room was easily made for new comers. The witness did not know what became of the bodies, but it had been stated some years ago that they and the coffins were burned. Mr. Bird, the proprietor, drove a good trade there. The fees for burial were 9s., and the undertaker got 1s. for every body he brought. The coroner thought this was a premium for crime. Mr. Watt said the system was little short of legalized vest season should roll around. And so has it been. Our crops are now secured, or nearly so. Quite a number of our houses have been finished inside, and more are in progression, and probably nearly all the rest will be completed soon.

The Tower has been raised one and a half stories high for about twenty-five feet in length, a roof put on, lathed, plastered and finished up for habitation the coming winter. The Temple has progressed more this season than it has before since Voree became a place of gathering; and although there is but little done compared to what there is to do, yet we think that our brethren abroad would not consider us slothful, if they knew the poverty and want that their brethren here had passed through. Yet the day of trial in Voree seems to be over.

We find ourselves now in as good circumstances as most of our Gentile neighbors, the saints in good spirits, and others coming up to assist them. Our meetings are held on the Sabbath twice, at eleven o'clock and in the evening, and also on Thursday evening. The spirit of truth whispers peace to the saints in their assemblings, and the spirit of God is in their midst. Besides religious meetings we have business meetings of the Order of Enoch frequently, also a lyceum held every Saturday evening, where questions of importance are handed in by members of the lyceum, and a selection made by the judge, who is appointed at each meeting. This is also somewhat interesting, as well as instructive. The last question discussed was this: "Resolved, that the works of nature are better proof of the existence of a God than revelation."

Preparations are being made to quarry a large quantity of stone before the quarry freezes hard, in order that the stone masons may cut and dress a large quantity of them during the winter, and be ready in the spring to place in the Temple and Tower, and thus the coming season push these buildings ahead with all speed. I may say of a truth concerning Voree and her inhabitants, the place is improving faster now than ever before. There is more unity of faith and oneness of feeling at present than ever was before manifested in the place.

S. P. BACON.

A LONDON GRAVE YARD.

An inquest was held on Wednesday by Mr. H. M. Wakely, at the Crown, Clerkenwell-green, on Lousia Mary Price, aged 16, supposed to have died from cholera. As the disease was believed to have been caused by malaria from Spafield burial ground, the inquest excited the greatest interest. Mrs. Price, the mother of the deceased, after giving evidence of the death of her daughter from cholera, stated that in the kitchen where her daughter worked in the service of Mr. Watt, jeweler, Exmouth street, there was a bad smell, which greatly affected her. Mr. Watt, the master of the deceased, stated that the Spafields graveyard was obnoxious, especially lately, some of the old ground having been re-opened and pits dug for the reception of the dead. In the ground, which measured 72 feet by 72, there had been lately buried, at several depths not far removed from the surface, at least 3,000 bodies. Each grave contained seven or eight bodies. How space was made for new comers he could not say, unless by the destruction of the bodies and coffins. He was aware that coffins had been made away with. In consequence of the effluvia from the graveyard he had been compelled to send his children to boarding schools, and remove the other members of his family. He went to the vestry clerk to complain, but found him out of town. It was well known that the same grave had been fifty times opened for bodies, and by the systematic destruction of bodies and coffins room was easily made for new comers. The witness did not know what became of the bodies, but it had been stated some years ago that they and the coffins were burned. Mr. Bird, the proprietor, drove a good trade there. The fees for burial were 9s., and the undertaker got 1s. for every body he brought. The coroner thought this was a premium for crime. Mr. Watt said the system was little short of legalized murder. He had spent £70 in endeavoring to put it down, and had memorialized the Board of Health and Sir James Graham on the subject. Sir James Graham authorized him to proceed against the proprietor, who pleaded guilty to 1,000 bodies having been annually buried there. The Court of Queen's Bench referred the case to arbitration, and the result was an order for closing of the old ground; but the effluvium was now much worse than it ever had been. Mr. Dove, whose house abuts upon the graveyard, corroborated the above evidence. Six of his children had been poisened by the effluvium from the graves. His wife and himself had been seized with diarrhea from the same cause, and he was obliged to remove his family to save their lives. 50,000 bodies had been buried there, and the ground had been raised to the level of the wall, six feet high. Other witnesses corroborated these statements; and the coroner, after observing that this was really a frightful state of things, expressed his readiness to forward a written statement of the facts to the proper authorities, in order to have the ground closed. The jury found that the deceased had died of Asiactic cholera, and accompanied their verdict with an expression of their opinion that the Spafields burying ground was most injurious to public health, and ought to be closed.

WATER AND ITS EFFECTS.

Water covers the greater part of the earth's surface, and penetrates its most hidden recesses. It circulates through the veins of the various minerals, forming, changing, perfecting them. Petrifactions of wood and animals are its work. Ever in motion, it purifies whatever it comes in contact with, and by its motion restoring its own purity and gathering strength. If confined, it swells the globe—splits the rock—lifts the greatest weight—turns the wheel—bursts the dam—or sends the iron horse snorting through the forest.

Water frozen in the clouds, purifies the air; in the form of snow and ice, it enwraps the earth in a "fleecy mantle," keeping it warm, and preparing it for sustaining vegetable and animal life. Through its virtues the trees grow, the flowers bloom and smell, and the grass springs fresh and green. It develops the garden, the field, the forest. It is the natural drink of all animals—the fleetest, the most sagacious, the strongest, most ferocious, and most gentle. It supplies the wants of birds of the finest plumage and the sweetest song.

Man, in a state of innocence, in Eden, needed no other drink but water, and men used it as their principal beverage till within about one thousand years, and in some countries till the present time. Some of the ancients worshiped water, and it has been used in the most sacred ceremonies of all religions, in all ages and countries; by some as an emblem of purity, by others as possessing sanctifying virtues. Jews, Pagans, Mahometans and Christians still continue to venerate it.

Modern science acknowledges its redeeming power in giving vigorous health, cheerful spirits, public comfort, and social peace and happiness. Hydropathy performs its wonders in curing and preventing diseases. Legislation defends its cleansing effects in cities where crime abounds or cholera threatens. Man has long refused to be blessed by it. Though it gave strength to the lion, fleetness to the deer, sagacity to the hog, docility to the lamb, and innocence to our first parents, yet he disbelieved its strength, disregarded its universal goodness.

What christian needs a stronger argument in favor of total abstinence, than that the parents of the human family had no other drink than cold water bestowed on them? If it was necessary for man then, how much more so now, when the world is deluged with liquid poison—when the cheek of innocence blushes, and the eye of virtue and beauty weeps over its devastating effects?

Like the silent dewy shower which is now falling on the physical world, water will descend on the moral world, dispersing its fogs of gloom, refreshing the landscape of society, revealing the sun of temperance, and reviving the withering flowers of humanity.—Mass. Cataract.

murder. He had spent £70 in endeavoring to put it down, and had memorialized the Board of Health and Sir James Graham on the subject. Sir James Graham authorized him to proceed against the proprietor, who pleaded guilty to 1,500 bodies having been annually buried there. The Court of Queen's Bench referred the case to arbitration, and the result was an order for closing of the old ground; but the effluvium was now much worse than it ever had been. Mr. Dove, whose house abuts upon the graveyard, corroborated the above evidence. Six of his children had been poisened by the effluvium from the graves. His wife and himself had been seized with diarrhea from the same cause, and he was obliged to remove his family to save their lives. 50,000 bodies had been buried there, and the ground had been raised to the level of the wall, six feet high. Other witnesses corroborated these statements; and the coroner, after observing that this was really a frightful state of things, expressed his readiness to forward a written statement of the facts to the proper authorities, in order to have the ground closed. The jury found that the deceased had died of Asiactic cholera, and accompanied their verdict with an expression of their opinion that the Spafields burying ground was most injurious to public health, and ought to be closed.

WATER AND ITS EFFECTS.

Water covers the greater part of the earth's surface, and penetrates its most hidden recesses. It circulates through the veins of the various minerals, forming, changing, perfecting them. Petrifactions of wood and animals are its work. Ever in motion, it purifies whatever it comes in contact with, and by its motion restoring its own purity and gathering strength. If confined, it swells the globe—splits the rock—lifts the greatest weight—turns the wheel—bursts the dam—or sends the iron horse snorting through the forest.

Water frozen in the clouds, purifies the air; in the form of snow and ice, it enwraps the earth in a "fleecy mantle," keeping it warm, and preparing it for sustaining vegetable and animal life. Through its virtues the trees grow, the flowers bloom and smell, and the grass springs fresh and green. It develops the garden, the field, the forest. It is the natural drink of all animals—the fleetest, the most sagacious, the strongest, most ferocious, and most gentle It supplies the wants of birds of the finest plumage and the sweetest song.

Man, in a state of innocence, in Eden, needed no other drink but water, and men used it as their principal beverage till within about one thousand years, and in some countries till the present time. Some of the ancients worshiped water, and it has been used in the most sacred ceremonies of all religions, in all ages and countries; by some as an emblem of purity, by others as possessing sanctifying virtues. Jews, Pagans, Mahometans and Christians still continue to venerate it.

Modern science acknowledges its redeeming power in giving vigorous health, cheerful spirits, public comfort, and social peace and happiness. Hydropathy performs its wonders in curing and preventing diseases. Legislation defends its cleansing effects in cities where crime abounds or cholera threatens. Man has long refused to be blessed by it. Though it gave strength to the lion, fleetness to the deer, sagacity to the hog, docility to the lamb, and innocence to our first parents, yet he disbelieved its strength, disregarded its universal goodness.

What christian needs a stronger argument in favor of total abstinence, than that the parents of the human family had no other drink than cold water bestowed on them? If it was necessary for man then, how much more so now, when the world is deluged with liquid poison—when the cheek of innocence blushes, and the eye of virtue and beauty weeps over its devastating effects?

Like the silent dewy shower which is now falling on the physical world, water will descend on the moral world, dispersing its fogs of gloom, refreshing the landscape of society, revealing the sun of temperance, and reviving the withering flowers of humanity.—Mass. Cataract.

THE OVERLAND EMIGRANTS.

SUFFERING AND WINTERING AT THE MORMON SETTLEMENT AT SALT LAKE.---The St. Louis Republican has a letter from Green River, California Territory, dated Aug. 19th, and another from Fort Larami, Indian Territory, dated Sept. 18th, which give some interesting news from Salt Lake respecting the overland emigrants for California. It is anything but flattering. There is every probability that fifteen to twenty thousand persons will be compelled to pass the winter at the Mormon settlement of Salt Lake, owing to the grass being consumed by fire for two hundred miles beyond, rendering it impossible to subsist the animals in the train of the emigrants. The supplies at Salt Lake are limited, and there will be much suffering unless the emigrants themselves are provided, which is not likely, as they have thrown away everything that could impede their travel.

It is evident that a great want of foresight has characterized this overland expedition.--- The country was but little known, and the difficulties to be encountered not at all understood. First the emigrants overloaded themselves with every useless kind of articles---furniture of no possible use to them, and household luxuries that could well be dispensed with in the new country they were going to. These they were compelled to abandon in a very short time, and subsequently, when their horses, mules and oxen were broken down by this unnecessary lumber, they were compelled to part with more valuable things. About one thousand wagons have been burnt or abandoned on the road. Along the banks of the North Platte to where the Sweetwater road turns off the amount of valuable property thrown away is astonishing---iron, trunks, clothing, &c., lying strewed about to the value of at least fifty thousand dollars in about twenty miles. Five hundred dead oxen, one writer says, he counted on the road.

Those who will succeed in getting across to the land of their hopes will scarcely be much better off than their companions at Salt Lake. They will arrive so late that the season for working the mines will be over, and they will be compelled to pass in idleness a long winter in California, many of them destitute of money or other of the necessaries of life, and compelled to subsist upon the charity and benevolence of those who are better provided. With these prospects before them, we must expect to hear of much suffering among them. The difficulties to be encountered will probably deter any further emigration by the land route.---Philadelphia Ledger.

☞ We have seen letters from the Brighamite Presidency forbidding their brethren at Council Bluffs and in England to bring on any of the poor unless they provide for their support, and saying that wheat will be worth eight dollars per bushel till next harvest. Articles of that import have appeared in the Frontier Guardian and Millenial Star. If that was the prospect before, what chance is there for them now, with a crowd of hungry emigrants unexpectly quartered upon them, who are not only destitute of all faith in the dispensatiou, but look upon Mormons as lawful plunder?

☞ A weak mind sinks under prosperity, as well as under adversity. A strong and deep mind has two highest tides---when the moon is at the full, and when there is no moon.

☞ Men should labor zealously for the community, strenuously for their friends, and sufficiently for themselves.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

MARRIED,

In this place, on the 28th ult., by Gilbert Watson, Bishop, Mr. ANDREW J. PORTER, to Miss ELIZABETH A. WHITCOMB, both of Voree.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Samuel Williams, $2,00 to Vol. IV No. 52
Henry Glidden, 1,00 to Vol. IV No. 38

THE OVERLAND EMIGRANTS.

SUFFERING AND WINTERING AT THE MORMON SETTLEMENT AT SALT LAKE.---The St. Louis Republican has a letter from Green River, California Territory, dated Aug. 19th, and another from Fort Larami, Indian Territory, dated Sept. 18th, which give some interesting news from Salt Lake respecting the overland emigrants for California. It is anything but flattering. There is every probability that fifteen to twenty thousand persons will be compelled to pass the winter at the Mormon settlement of Salt Lake, owing to the grass being consumed by fire for two hundred miles beyond, rendering it impossible to subsist the animals in the train of the emigrants. The supplies at Salt Lake are limited, and there will be much suffering unless the emigrants themselves are provided, which is not likely, as they have thrown away everything that could impede their travel.

It is evident that a great want of foresight has characterized this overland expedition.---The country was but little known, and the difficulties to be encountered not at all understood. First the emigrants overloaded themselves with every useless kind of articles---furniture of no possible use to them, and household luxuries that could well be dispensed with in the new country they were going to. These they were compelled to abandon in a very short time, and subsequently, when their horses, mules and oxen were broken down by this unnecessary lumber, they were compelled to part with more valuable things. About one thousand wagons have been burnt or abandoned on the road. Along the banks of the North Platte to where the Sweetwater road turns off the amount of valuable property thrown away is astonishing---iron, trunks, clothing, &c., lying strewed about to the value of at least fifty thousand dollars in about twenty miles. Five hundred dead oxen, one writer says, he counted on the road.

Those who will succeed in getting across to the land of their hopes will scarcely be much better off than their companions at Salt Lake. They will arrive so late that the season for working the mines will be over, and they will be compelled to pass in idleness a long winter in California, many of them destitute of money or other of the necessaries of life, and compelled to subsist upon the charity and benevolence of those who are better provided. With these prospects before them, we must expect to hear of much suffering among them. The difficulties to be encountered will probably deter any farther emigration by the land route.---Philadelphia Ledger.

☞ We have seen letters from the Brighamite Presidency forbidding their brethren at Council Bluffs and in England to bring on any of the poor unless they provide for their support, and saying that wheat will be worth eight dollars per bushel till next harvest. Articles of that import have appeared in the Frontier Guardian and Millenial Star. If that was the prospect before, what chance is there for them now, with a crowd of hungry emigrants unexpectly quartered upon them, who are not only destitute of all faith in the dispensation, but look upon Mormons as lawful plunder?

☞ A weak mind sinks under prosperity, as well as under adversity. A strong and deep mind has two highest tides---when the moon is at the full, and when there is no moon.

☞ Men should labor zealously for the community, strenuously for their friends, and sufficiently for themselves.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

MARRIED,

In this place, on the 28th ult., by Gilbert Watson, Bishop, Mr. ANDREW J. PORTER, to Miss ELIZABETH A. WHITCOMB, both of Voree.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Samuel Williams,	$2,00 to Vol. IV No. 52
Henry Glidden,	1,00 to Vol. IV No. 38

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 38.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, DEC. 6, 1849. [WHOLE No. 154.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

"LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION."

LUKE XI. 4.

Here is a fair specimen of the idea the Protestant professing christians have of the attributes and principles as taught by Jesus Christ, of "Our Father, who art in heaven." The first thing which presents itself to our minds when we hear the self-called orthodox pray, "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy Kingdom come," is the idea of praying for something to come which all the D. D.'s, Bishops, Elders, Priests, and in fact all of the great divines of the sectarian world, say has come and was set up eighteen hundred years ago by Christ and the Apostles, and has rolled, and continues to roll onward, from that time to this by the means of the hireling clergy, called according to the law of their particular creed, to which they individually stood connected.

What! praying for the kingdom of God to come when it has come, and been progressing for upwards of eighteen hundred years? Where has it been that you learned doctors of mens' souls should be calling for it to come again? Where is the Kingdom of God, if it is to come? A very religious set of people called Pharisees, whose history very much resembles the character of the very pious of our day, asked Jesus, "when the Kingdom of God should come?" He answered, and said, "The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, lo here, or lo there; for, behold, the Kingdom of God is within you." Luke xvii. 20. 21. O how that would have suited them, if Christ had said what King James' translators said he did—the Kingdom of God in those Pharisees' hearts, according to the sectarian Pharisees of our day.

But what said Christ of them? Matt. v. 20: "For I say unto you, (disciples,) that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, you shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of heaven." Here we have in one place the Kingdom of God in the hearts of the Pharisees, and in the next place if the righteousness of the disciples did not exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, they could in no wise enter into the Kingdom of heaven. Why do we wonder that infidelity moves forward with such gigantic strides, when men so pervert the word of God? If the translators had rendered it the "Kingdom of God is among you," instead of "within," and that you are so blind you cannot observe it, or do not know it, through selfish ignorance, they would have come nearer the real meaning.

But to see men willfully blind and ignorant on the subject now, is absolutely disgraceful to human intellect, and grossly wicked. But if the Kingdom of God is on the earth, and has been ever since Christ, where is the consistency of praying for something to come which is here already? Is not this using "vain repetitions, as the heathens do," which Christ commanded his disciples not to do? If the Kingdom has come, has "God's will been done on earth as it is done in heaven?" Again, "Lead us not into temptation." Just as if God, whose essence is "love," would lead men into temptation, and thus make himself a tempter.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. [illegible] No. [illegible] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, DEC. 6, 1849. [WHOLE No. 154.

GOSPEL HERALD.

Pu[illegible]ED WEEKLY FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS [illegible] OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

T[illegible] PER ANNUM, PAYABLE INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE.

All l[illegible] communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER. [illegible] they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

"LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION."

LUKE XI. 4.

Here is a fair specimen of the idea the Protestant professing christians have of the attributes and principles as taught by Jesus Christ, of "Our Father, who art in heaven." The first thing which presents itself to our minds when we hear the self-called orthodox pray, "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy Kingdom come," is the idea of praying for something to come which all the D. D.'s, Bishops, Elders, Priests, and in fact all of the great divines of the sectarian world, say has come and was set up eighteen hundred years ago by Christ and the Apostles, and has rolled, and continues to roll onward, from that time to this by the means of the hireling clergy, called according to the law of their particular creed, to which they individually stood connected.

What! praying for the kingdom of God to come when it has come, and been progressing for upwards of eighteen hundred years? Where has it been that you learned doctors of mens' souls should be calling for it to come again? Where is the Kingdom of God, if it is to come? A very religious set of people called Pharisees, whose history very much resembles the character of the very pious of our day, asked Jesus, "when the Kingdom of God should come?" He answered, and said, "The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, lo here, or lo there; for, behold, the Kingdom of God is within you." Luke xvii. 20 21. O how that would have suited them, if Christ had said what King James' translators said he did—the Kingdom of God in those Pharisees' hearts, according to the sectarian Pharisees of our day.

But what said Christ of them? Matt. v. 20: "For I say unto you, (disciples,) that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, you shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of heaven." Here we have in one place the Kingdom of God in the hearts of the Pharisees, and in the next place if the righteousness of the disciples did not exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, they could in no wise enter into the Kingdom of heaven. Why do we wonder that infidelity moves forward with such gigantic strides, when men so pervert the word of God? If the translators had rendered it the "Kingdom of God is among you," instead of "within," and that you are so blind you cannot observe it, or do not know it, through selfish ignorance, they would have come nearer the real meaning.

But to see men willfully blind and ignorant on the subject now, is absolutely disgraceful to human intellect, and grossly wicked. But if the Kingdom of God is on the earth, and has been ever since Christ, where is the consistency of praying for something to come which is here already? Is not this using "vain repetitions, as the heathens do," which Christ commanded his disciples not to do? If the Kingdom has come, has "God's will been done on earth as it is done in heaven?" Again, "Lead us not into temptation." Just as if God, whose essence is "love," would lead men into temptation, and thus make himself a tempter.

But, says one, is not that the word of the Savior? I answer, emphatically, no! and shall prove it by "the scriptures, which were written aforetime for our edification and learning," &c. In the first place, Christ says, instead of "lead us not into temptation," "Leave us not in temptation." This translation of the word the French versions use exclusively. This idea of the matter is rational, whereas the English or common version is repugnant to the attributes of Deity and the word of God.—"Leave us not in temptation, or in the time of temptation, and deliver us from evil, or the cunning, crafty," &c.

But what says the "Law and the Testimony" on the subject? "for if I speak not according to this word there is no light in me."—Saint James says: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive a crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." Now here comes the commandment from God, through his servant James, long before Christ's words were perverted into poor English: "Let no man say, when he is tempted, I am tempted of God." Why not, I ask? "For God cannot be tempted with evil." Well, will he tempt any man? thus be a tempter of poor frail humanity?

"Neither tempteth he any man." But, Bro. James, how is a man tempted? "But every man (none excepted) is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lusts, and enticed.—Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin, and sin, when it is finished, bringeth death." Here we have it then: "Every man, any man, all men, are tempted when they are drawn away of their own lusts." Amen. Protestants, so-called orthodox, do not try to palm off any more of your false translations, and perversions of the word of God; for, remember, "there is a God in Israel," and we must stand before our Judges to render an account of our doings here in this life.

And ye latter day saints, I ask of you one thing: receive truth wherever you find it, embrace it, obey it, and live by it, and pray God to "leave you not in temptation," and God will deliver you from the "cunning;" and after you are tried and found faithful, he will give you a crown of life, if you "love the Lord your God with all your mind, might and strength, and your neighbor as yourself." H. P. BROWN.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 22d, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I thought I would give you a few ideas of Baltimore. Bro. George J. Adams has raised up a very fine branch here.—They are about forty in number. They are all engaged heart and hand in the work. One Nixon, and another by the name of Brown, have been here trying to get some followers, but they have not succeeded in making one pseudo, and have left the city. Meetings are held nearly every night. Last Sunday Bro. Adams preached three sermons in Washington. to large congregations.

Bro. Grierson, one of the Seventies, lives there, and is laboring constantly to get up an interest of hearing. There was a Brighamite there, but Bro Adams brought him over to the faith, so we have now a good beginning. Bro. Strang has had an invitation to take up free lodging with one of the most worthy citizens. He preached two sermons last Sunday, and Bro. Braidwood (from Philadelphia) one. The congregations were large in the day, and in the evening there were hundreds who went away because they could not get into the hall, although it is very large. There are some baptized nearly every week. All have an interest to hear, and many appear to believe.

Last Monday evening Bro. Strang lectured to the Marrion T. A. Society, by special request. Next Sunday there will be three sermons at the Mechanic's Hall, three at the Eastern Hall, and one at the Marrion Hall, making seven sermons in the city in one day; and I do not think it will diminish the number at the Mechanic's Hall (the usual place of meeting) in the least. There is a great field open for labor here, and in this vicinity. I am truly and sincerely your brother, &c.,

CHARLES J. DOUGLASS.

But, says one, is not that the word of the Savior? I answer, emphatically, no! and shall prove it by "the scriptures, which were written aforetime for our edification and learning," &c. In the first place, Christ says, instead of "lead us not into temptation," "Leave us not in temptation." This translation of the word the French versions use exclusively. This idea of the matter is rational, whereas the English or common version is repugnant to the attributes of Deity and the word of God. "Leave us not in temptation, or in the time of temptation, and deliver us from evil, or the cunning, crafty," &c.

But what says the "Law and the Testimony" on the subject? "for if I speak not according to this word there is no light in me." Saint James says: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive a crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." Now here comes the commandment from God, through his servant James, long before Christ's words were perverted into poor English: "Let no man say, when he is tempted, I am tempted of God." Why not, I ask? "For God cannot be tempted with evil." Well, will he tempt any man? thus be a tempter of poor frail humanity?

"Neither tempteth he any man." But, Bro. James, how is a man tempted? "But every man is drawn away of his own lusts, and enticed.—Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin, and sin, when it is finished, bringeth death." Here we have it then: "Every man, any man, all men, are tempted when they are drawn away of their own lusts." Amen. Protestants, so-called orthodox, do not try to palm off any more of your false translations, and perversions of the word of God; for, remember, "there is a God in Israel," and we must stand before our Judges to render an account of our doings here in this life.

And ye latter day saints, I ask of you one thing: receive truth wherever you find it, embrace it, obey it, and live by it, and pray God to "leave you not in temptation," and God will deliver you from the "cunning," and after you are tried and found faithful he will give you a crown of life, if you "love the Lord your God with all your mind, might and strength, and your neighbor as yourself." H. [illegible] BROWN.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. [illegible], 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I thought I would give you a few ideas of Baltimore. Bro. George J. Adams has raised up a very fine branch here.—They are about forty in number. They are all engaged heart and hand in the work. One Nixon, and another by the name of Brown, have been here trying to get some followers, but they have not succeeded in making one pseudo, and have left the city. Meetings are held nearly every night. Last Sunday Bro. Adams preached three sermons in Washington, to large congregations.

Bro. Grierson, one of the Seventies, lives there, and is laboring constantly to get up an interest of hearing. There was a Brighamite there, but Bro Adams brought him over to the faith, so we have now a good beginning. Bro. Strang has had an invitation to take up free lodging with one of the most worthy citizens. He preached two sermons last Sunday, and Bro. Braidwood (from Philadelphia) one. The congregations were large in the day, and in the evening there were hundreds who went away because they could not get into the hall, although it is very large. There are some baptized nearly every week. All have an interest to hear, and many appear to believe.

Last Monday evening Bro. Strang lectured to the Marrion T. A. Society, by special request. Next Sunday there will be three sermons at the Mechanic's Hall, three at the Eastern Hall, and one at the Marrion Hall, making seven sermons in the city in one day; and I do not think it will diminish the number at the Mechanic's Hall (the usual place of meeting) in the least. There is a great field open for labor here, and in this vicinity. I am truly and sincerely your brother, &c.,

CHARLES J. DOUGLASS.

Salem, Mass., Nov. 22d, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I am now at Salem, where there are all kinds of spirits that ever had an existence since the world was. But I find but few that are decided in favor of any party or sect, but are most all saying the Irish sailor's prayer: "Good God, good Devil; for I do not know whose hands I may yet fall into, and it is a matter of uncertainty." The Millerites are now certain that the Lord will come next spring, or within the next twelve months. But I will tell you what will come more certain, and that is shame on them as usual, for deceiving and being deceived.

I here find some people who do not believe that Brigham Young and his coadjutors can be bad men, and perhaps will not believe it till they find themselves in the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land, not inhabited; and then, because their trust is in man, and not God, they cannot see when good comes. They are not very anxious to know the truth now. They are hardly willing to hear the word of God read, much less spoken. I find day after day that those who had once known the way are standing as stumbling blocks in the way of this generation, and many will go to hell because others go there. Well, broad is the way that leads to death, and many will go therein; but straight is the way and narrow the gate that leads to life, and few there be that find it.

Truly yours in Christ, S. GRAHAM.

☞ The Warsaw Signal, after noticing the organization of the Brighamite State government at the Salt Lake, breaks out in the following tantalizing strain:—

"Hurra! for the State of Deseret! Doubtless their legislative enactments, and proceedings under them, will equal those enacted by some of these same individuals while residing in the 'State' of Nauvoo! The next thing we shall probably hear of will be a new State at Beaver Island, under the Governorship of the Prophet Strang, with John E. Page as Delegate to Congress. Unless Brother Strang does adopt this plan—or something else—the Salt Lake branch of the Saints will beat him at proselyting, and the gulls will go to swell the tide of population in Deseret."

As far as the Brighamites and the Signal are concerned, we are disposed to let them fight it out, not doubting however that it will be very difficult for them to make themselves any more odious than have the mobocrats of Hancock, of which the Signal is the organ. "Brother Strang" will do "something else," instead of exhibiting such consummate folly. John E. Page has been cut off from the church for his misconduct, and is doubtless ready to show his "talent" by serving up a superb dish of "Mormon disclosures" to the Signal, or any other anti-Mormon paper, cheap for cash. We advise the editor of the Signal to get one; his patrons would relish it deliciously.

THE WEEKLY UNIVERSE.

This excellent and elegant family newspaper, devoted to literature, science, arts, news, instruction, &c., containing thirty-six long columns in each number, is published by Williamson and Burns, No. 61, Ann street, New York, at the exceeding low price of one dollar a year. It is decidedly the best paper of the kind we have seen. The fifth volume will commence on the 8th inst., with new type and increased attractions in every department.—Now is the time to subscribe.

SCRAPS.

Be no flatterer, neither play with any one that delights not to be played with.

Read no letters, books or papers in company.

Come not near the books or papers of another so as to read them.

Look not over another when he is writing a letter.

Let your countenance be cheerful, but in serious matters be grave.

Show not yourself glad at another's misfortune.

Let your discourse with others on matters of business be short.

Salem Mass., Nov. 22d, 1849.

DEAR [illegible]:—I am now at Salem, where there are [illegible]ds of spirits that ever had an existence [illegible] the world was. But I find but few that are [illegible]eid. I in favor of any party or sect, but am almost [illegible] saying the Irish sailor's prayer: "Good Devil, good Devil; for I do not know what [illegible] may yet fall into, and it is a matter [illegible]ncertainty." The Millerites are now [illegible] the Lord will come next spring, or within the next twelve months. But I will tell you what will come more certain, and that is shame on them as usual, for deceiving and being deceived.

I here find some people who do not believe that Brigham Young and his coadjutors can be bad men, and perhaps will not believe it till they find themselves in the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land, not inhabited; and then, because their trust is in man, and not God, they cannot see when good comes. They are not very anxious to know the truth now. They are hardly willing to hear the word of God read, much less spoken. I find day after day that those who had once known the way are standing as stumbling blocks in the way of this generation, and many will go to hell because others go there. Well, broad is the way that leads to death, and many will go therein; but straight is the way and narrow the gate that leads to life, and few there be that find it.

Truly yours in Christ, S. GRAHAM.

☞ The Warsaw Signal, after noticing the organization of the Brighamite State government at the Salt Lake, breaks out in the following tantalizing strain:—

"Hurra! for the State of Deseret! Doubtless their legislative enactments, and proceedings under them, will equal those enacted by some of these same individuals while residing in the 'State' of Nauvoo! The next thing we shall probably hear of will be a new State at Beaver Island, under the Governorship of the Prophet Strang, with John E. Page as Delegate to Congress. Unless Brother Strang does adopt this plan—or something else—the Salt Lake branch of the Saints will beat him at proselyting, and the gulls will go to swell the tide of population in Deseret."

As far as the Brighamites and the Signal are concerned, we are disposed to let them fight it out, not doubting however that it will be very difficult for them to make themselves any more odious than have the mobocrats of Hancock, of which the Signal is the organ. "Brother Strang" will do "something else," instead of exhibiting such consummate folly. John E. Page has been cut off from the church for his misconduct, and is doubtless ready to show his "talent" by serving up a superb dish of "Mormon disclosures" to the Signal, or any other anti-Mormon paper, cheap for cash. We advise the editor of the Signal to get one; his patrons would relish it deliciously.

THE WEEKLY UNIVERSE.

This excellent and elegant family newspaper, devoted to literature, science, arts, news, instruction, &c., containing thirty-six long columns in each number, is published by Williamson and Burns, No. 61, Ann street, New York, at the exceeding low price of one dollar a year. It is decidedly the best paper of the kind we have seen. The fifth volume will commence on the 8th inst., with new type and increased attractions in every department.—Now is the time to subscribe.

SCRAPS.

Be no flatterer, neither play with any one that delights not to be played with.

Read no letters, books or papers in company.

Come not near the books or papers of another so as to read them.

Look not over another when he is writing a letter.

Let your countenance be cheerful, but in serious matters be grave.

Show not yourself glad at another's misfortune.

Let your discourse with others on matters of business be short.

BAPTISM A SAVING ORDINANCE,

AND METHODISM TO PROVE IT.

In the M. E. Discipline, section 17, it is said, "Baptism is a sign of regeneration, or the new birth" This section asserts also the validity of infant baptism. Chapter 3, section 2, it is also taught as being indispensable; for none can enter the kingdom of heaven without water baptism. This applies in particular to infants. But on page 109 of the same chapter language verbatim is applied to adults; that is, without water baptism it is not possible for man to be saved in the kingdom of God. That the ordinance of baptism is a saving one is true in the case of adults. But in the case of infants it is false, foolish and unfounded in scripture.

I shall now inquire, who are the subjects of this ordinance? We have the answer obviously in the language of the Apostolic commission: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. None will deny that the word corresponding to teach in the first instance, in which it occurs in this passage, signifies to disciple all nations; that is, to bring them by faith into the school of Christ, in which they are to learn his will.

The persons, then, whom this commission warrants to be baptized are scholars of Christ, having believed in him for salvation. If this needed confirmation, it has it in the record of the commission by Mark, xvi. 15, 16: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; and he that believeth not, shall be damned." Here the persons whom Matthew calls disciples, Mark calls believers.

According to this commission, then, none are warranted to be baptized but believers, or disciples. But our Methodist friends, as also some others, affect to treat this passage as not at all to the point, alledging that, though it commands believers to be baptized, it does not exclude the infants of believers; assuming this as common ground, and as teaching a doctrine which has become very popular in the world. However if there was not another passage in the word of God, this commission alone forbids the baptism of any but believers. It is impossible that a command to baptize believers can be extended to include any but believers.—This cannot be done by inference. Nor by express command. No explanation of command can bring unbelievers into the commission that enjoins the baptism of believers.

Even if there could be found another command enjoining the baptism of infants, I would still say this is not included in the Apostolic commission. This would be another commission, independent of the former, and in no wise connected with the gospel; for the gospel was not said to be the power of God unto the salvation of any but believers. It saves no others. It is good news to those who believe, but to infants it is no news at all. What would be thought of an officer in our army, who should receive a commission from the proper authority to go out and collect a company of men six feet high for the United States service, if, when his company was brought to the inspector's standard of heights, three of every five would measure only five feet and six inches, would this officer receive the "well done good and faithful" from the commander in chief? No, the government's money is expended, and the object for which this commission was given is not accomplished; and, what is worse, the order is disregarded.

But, says the recruiting Sergeant, let me explain. My conduct is consistent with our former practice. I thought that, although the standard mentioned six feet, it did not forbid my receiving those that come under that standard; and, sir, I am prepared to justify my course by reference to the standard christian writers of the day, in their interpretation of the commission given to the Apostles by our Lord. The command to baptize believers does not forbid the baptism of infants, and I reasoned as their custom has taught me to reason. I thought that, though the standard mentioned six feet,

BAPTISM A SAVING ORDINANCE,

AND METHODISM TO PROVE IT.

In the M. E. Discipline, section 17, it is said. "Baptism is a sign of regeneration, or the new birth" This section asserts also the validity of infant baptism. Chapter 3, section 2, it is also taught as being indispensable; for none can enter the kingdom of heaven without water baptism. This applies in particular to infants. But on page 109 of the same chapter language verbatim is applied to adults; that is, without water baptism it is not possible for man to be saved in the kingdom of God. That the ordinance of baptism is a saving one is true in the case of adults. But in the case of infants it is false, foolish and unfounded in scripture.

I shall now inquire, who are the subjects of this ordinance? We have the answer obviously in the language of the Apostolic commission: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. None will deny that the word corresponding to teach in the first instance, in which it occurs in this passage, signifies to disciple all nations; that is, to bring them by faith into the school of Christ, in which they are to learn his will.

The persons, then, whom this commission warrants to be baptized are scholars of Christ, having believed in him for salvation. If this needed confirmation, it has it in the record of the commission by Mark, xvi. 15, 16: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; and he that believeth not, shall be damned." Here the persons whom Matthew calls disciples, Mark calls believers.

According to this commission, then, none are warranted to be baptized but believers, or disciples. But our Methodist friends, as also some others, affect to treat this passage as not at all to the point, alledging that, though it commands believers to be baptized, it does not exclude the infants of believers; assuming this as common ground, and as teaching a doctrine which has become very popular in the world. However if there was not another passage in the word of God, this commission alone forbids the baptism of any but believers. It is impossible that a command to baptize believers can be extended to include any but believers.—This cannot be done by inference. Nor by express command. No explanation of command can bring unbelievers into the commission that enjoins the baptism of believers.

Even if there could be found another command enjoining the baptism of infants, I would still say this is not included in the Apostolic commission. This would be another commission, independent of the former, and in no wise connected with the gospel; for the gospel was not said to be the power of God unto the salvation of any but believers. It saves no others. It is good news to those who believe, but to infants it is no news at all. What would be thought of an officer in our army, who should receive a commission from the proper authority to go out and collect a company of men six feet high for the United States service, if, when his company was brought to the inspector's standard of heights, three of every five would measure only five feet and six inches, would this officer receive the "well done good and faithful" from the commander in chief? No, the government's money is expended, and the object for which this commission was given is not accomplished; and, what is worse, the order is disregarded.

But, says the recruiting Sergeant, let me explain. My conduct is consistent with our former practice. I thought that, although the standard mentioned six feet, it did not forbid my receiving those that come under that standard; and, sir, I am prepared to justify my course by reference to the standard christian writers of the day, in their interpretation of the commission given to the Apostles by our Lord. The command to baptize believers does not forbid the baptism of infants, and I reasoned as their custom has taught me to reason. I thought that, though the standard mentioned six feet, it did not forbid others.

But, says the inspector, you thought, you reasoned: who told you to reason on the subject? Your business, sir, was to obey. Your orders were so plain that you could not mistake. Your conduct is unsoldierly, and would subvert all discipline. Drop your sword, take your musket, and return to the ranks.

Well, does the priest of this age expect a well done good and faithful servant for conduct that would degrade a recruiting sergeant?—Cease to pervert the word of the Lord. Cease to teach his children how to evade his injunctions. Cease to justify as an institution of Christ the inventions of men. Cease to force a commission enjoining the baptism of believers to sanction the baptism of infants. Cease to loose the subject of Christ from the first law of his kingdom. Not only does this commission exclude infants from the baptism it enjoins, but if there were even another commission enjoining the baptism of infants, when these infants who have been baptized in infancy according to this supposed commission believe the gospel, it is their duty to be baptized according to the commission in Matthew xxviii. 19, without any regard to their baptism in infancy.

The commission commands all men to be baptized on believing the gospel. Had there been even a divinely appointed baptism for them in infancy, it cannot interfere with this baptism nor excuse from obedience to the command that enjoins believers to be baptized. The command of Jesus to every believer to be baptized stands engraven in this commission in indelible characters. Till the trump sounds for judgment it cannot be effaced. Then let all believers on their allegiance to the Son of God submit to this ordinance of his kingdom. Heaven and earth will pass away before it will cease to be the duty of believers to be baptized.—No, it is impossible for any explanation or even a command for another baptism to excuse men from obedience to this command.

There is no power on earth to abrogate this command. No, till the end of the world it will remain a duty for all who believe to be baptized on their confession of sins and belief in the gospel. And I will further add, that no man has ever yet entered the celestial glory of God the Father, without faith, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins. And I may further say that no man ever will enter there. As many as attempt to climb up some other way will be esteemed as thieves and robbers. Let all the world know that this is the command of him that sweareth and changeth not; that man must be born of the water and of the spirit, and that too on a belief of the gospel, and continue to walk in all the commandments blameless, or he cannot be saved in the glory of the sons of God. SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Boston, Oct. 14th, 1849.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA.

Ephesus.—The church of Ephesus, the first mentioned by St. John, still maintains its ecclesiastical superiority in giving a title to the Greek Archbishop, while the others have only bishops at their head, though it is low in statistical importance. The port of Ephesus is now choked up by a pestiferous morass, and lonely walls, tenanted only by the jackal, occupy the site of the once populous city. The village of Ayasalux stands about a mile from the ruins, and contains about forty scattered cottages, one only tenanted by a christian. The mosque of the village contains only four granite columns, said to have belonged to the great temple of Diana, whose ruins are still visible near the port. The mosque is going to decay, like the christian church, and everything appears to be in the last stage of dissolution.

Smyrna, the most flourishing of the whole, is an increasing city, its population, which twenty years ago was about 77,000, is now 130,000, and is rapidly increasing. There are five Greek, three Latin and two Protestant churches. The Greeks have numerous schools, and the Latins a large college; but the Protestant schools have failed. The Greek church at Smyrna continues in a flourishing condition.

Pergamos is the most prosperous of the

it did not forbid others.

But, says the inspector, you thought, you reasoned: who told you to reason on the subject? Your business, sir, was to obey. Your orders were so plain that you could not mistake. Your conduct is unsoldierly, and would subvert all discipline. Drop your sword, take your musket, and return to the ranks.

Well, does the priest of this age expect a well done good and faithful servant for conduct that would degrade a recruiting sergeant?—Cease to pervert the word of the Lord. Cease to teach his children how to evade his injunctions. Cease to justify as an institution of Christ the inventions of men. Cease to force a commission enjoining the baptism of believers to sanction the baptism of infants. Cease to loose the subject of Christ from the first law of his kingdom. Not only does this commission exclude infants from the baptism it enjoins, but if there were even another cominission enjoining the baptism of infants, when these infants who have been baptized in infancy according to this supposed commission believe the gospel, it is their duty to be baptized according to the commission in Matthew xxviii. 19, without any regard to their baptism in infancy.

The commission commands all men to be baptized on believing the gospel. Had there been even a divinely appointed baptism for them in infancy, it cannot interfere with this baptism nor excuse from obedience to the command that enjoins believers to be baptized. The command of Jesus to every believer to be baptized stands engraven in this commission in indelible characters. Till the trump sounds for judgment it cannot be effaced. Then let all believers on their allegiance to the Son of God submit to this ordinance of his kingdom. Heaven and earth will pass away before it will cease to be the duty of believers to be baptized.—No, it is impossible for any explanation or even a command for another baptism to excuse men from obedience to this command.

There is no power on earth to abrogate this command. No, till the end of the world it will remain a duty for all who believe to be baptized on their confession of sins and belief in the gospel. And I will further add, that no man has ever yet entered the celestial glory of God the Father, without faith, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins. And I may further say that no man ever will enter there. As many as attempt to climb up some other way will be esteemed as thieves and robbers. Let all the world know that this is the command of him that sweareth and changeth not; that man must be born of the water and of the spirit, and that too on a belief of the gospel, and continue to walk in all the commandments blameless, or he cannot be saved in the glory of the sons of God. SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Boston, Oct. 14th, 1849.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA.

Ephesus.—The church of Ephesus, the first mentioned by St. John, still maintains its ecclesiastical superiority in giving a title to the Greek Archbishop, while the others have only bishops at their head, though it is low in statistical importance. The port of Ephesus is now choked up by a pestiferous morass, and lonely walls, tenanted only by the jackal, occupy the site of the once populous city. The village of Ayasalux stands about a mile from the ruins, and contains about forty scattered cottages, one only tenanted by a christian. The mosque of the village contains only four granite columns, said to have belonged to the great temple of Diana, whose ruins are still visible near the port. The mosque is going to decay, like the christian church, and everything appears to be in the last stage of dissolution.

Smyrna, the most flourishing of the whole, is an increasing city, its population, which twenty years ago was about 77,000, is now 130,000, and is rapidly increasing. There are five Greek, three Latin and two Protestant churches. The Greeks have numerous schools, and the Latins a large college; but the Protestant schools have failed. The Greek church at Smyrna continues in a flourishing condition.

Pergamos is the most prosperous of the churches after Smyrna. The population is 16,000, of whom 14,000 are Turks, and nearly all the rest christians. The Christian Quarter contains two Greek churches and one Armenian. Close to the ancient church is a school.

THYATIRA is still a flourishing town. It had been lost to the christian world from the fall of Constantinople, under the Turkish name of Alkhissar, until brought to light in the seventeenth century. The population is above 19,000, of whom 2,000 are Greeks, and 12,000 Armenians, each having a church; the former said to be on the site of the Apocalyptic church.

SARDIS, the ancient capital of Cresus, is now more desolate than even Ephesus. Scarcely a house remains. The melancholy Græcan Lake, the swampy plain of the hermus, and the thousand mounds forming the metropolis of the Lydian monarchs, among which rises conspicuously the famed tumulus of Alyattes, produce a scene of gloomy solemnity. Massive ruins of buildings still remain, the wall of which is made up of sculptured pieces of Corinthian and Ionic columns, that once formed portions of the ancient temples.

PHILADELPHIA has a population of 10,000 Turks, and 3,000 Greeks. It contains 25 churches, all small and mean, but containing fragments of ancient sepulchers. A massive ruin is pointed out as the church of the Apocalypse.

LAODICEA, whose fate had been forgotten for centuries, was brought to light in the seventeenth century. It was and is a mass of desolate ruins.—Church of England Magazine.

STATISTICS OF LONDON.

The statistics of London are, in many repects, curious. There are for example, in that city of two millions and a half of inhabitants: 1,511 butchers, 260 sausage makers, 58 tripe dealers, 2,256 bakers, 464 pastry cooks, 15 muffin bakers, 2,746 grocers, 856 cheese and butter dealers, 385 fishmongers, 1,108 fruit and vegetable dealers. There are 793 boarding and lodging houses. 330 dining rooms, 883 coffee shops, 398 hotels, 126 breweries, 4,247 publicans, (and sinners,) 790 beer shops, 770 wine merchants. There are, also, 1,795 surgeons, 718 chemists, and 137 hospitals. There are also, 3,191 attorneys, 1,692 barristers, 127 special pleaders, and conveyancers, and 112 proctors. The progress of art and invention is attested by new occupations. There are 16 dealers in gutta-percha, 11 average slaters and adjusters (railways.) Education is not without its representatives. There are 851 private academies, 129 district and parochial schools, 50 collegiate institutions, and 76 other schools. There are 55 teachers of dancing, 83 of drawing, 4 of elocution, 54 of language, 9 of mathematics, 251 of music, 3 of navigation, and 18 of writing. There are 421 master printers, 760 publishers, and 281 book binders.

☞ In a town between thirty and forty miles south of Boston, there were two idiots, one belonging to a family of note, held himself much auperior to the other, who was of low degree. One day they met in the street, when the aristocratic idiot exclaimed to the other: "Leazar! Leazar! you are a fool!" "I know I am a fool," answered Eleazar, drawing in his hanging tongue: "but, Phileomon, you are a fool and don't know it." Phileomon is one of a numerous class.

LAMARTINE.—A letter from Constantinople, dated 5th October, states that the Sultan has granted to M. de Lamartine, gratuitously, an immense tract of country, situated in a fertile plain, within a few miles of Smyrna, and forming part of the domains of the crown, and which, it is said, Lamartine will make his residence in the course of the ensuing spring.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

THE FASHION.

Deformity is as often the fashion as beauty; yet the world in general see no other beauty than fashion, and their vanity, or complaisance, bribes their understanding to disbelieve even their senses. If cleanliness is the fashion, then cleanliness is admired; if dirt, hair powder, and pomatum, are the fashion, then dirt, hair powder, churches after Smyrna. The population is 16,000, of whom 14,000 are Turks, and nearly all the rest christians. The Christian Quarter contains two Greek churches and one Armenian. Close to the ancient church is a school.

THYATIRA is still a flourishing town. It had been lost to the christian world from the fall of Constantinople, under the Turkish name of Alkhissar, until brought to light in the seventeenth century. The population is above 19,000, of whom 2,000 are Greeks, and 12,000 Armenians, each having a church: the former said to be on the site of the Apocalyptic church.

SARDIS, the ancient capital of Cresus, is now more desolate than even Ephesus. Scarcely a house remains. The melancholy Graecan Lake, the swampy plain of the hermus, and the thousand mounds forming the metropolis of the Lydian monarchs, among which rises conspicuously the famed tumulus of Alyattes, produce a scene of gloomy solemnity. Massive ruins of buildings still remain, the wall of which is made up of sculptured pieces of Corinthian and Ionic columns, that once formed portions of the ancient temples.

PHILADELPHIA has a population of 10,000 Turks, and 3,000 Greeks. It contains 25 churches, all small and mean, but containing fragments of ancient sepulchers. A massive ruin is pointed out as the church of the Apocalypse.

LAODICEA, whose fate had been forgotten for centuries, was brought to light in the seventeenth century. It was and is a mass of desolate ruins.—Church of England Magazine.

STATISTICS OF LONDON.

The statistics of London are, in many repects, curious. There are for example, in that city of two millions and a half of inhabitants: 1,511 butchers, 260 sausage makers, 58 tripe dealers, 2,256 bakers, 464 pastry cooks, 15 muffin bakers, 2,746 grocers, 856 cheese and butter dealers, 385 fishmongers, 1,108 fruit and vegetable dealers. There are 793 boarding and lodging houses. 330 dining rooms, 883 coffee shops, 398 hotels, 126 breweries, 4,247 publicans, (and sinners,) 790 beer shops, 770 wine merchants. There are, also, 1,795 surgeons, 718 chemists, and 137 hospitals. There are also, 3,191 attorneys, 1,692 barristers, 127 special pleaders, and conveyancers, and 112 proctors. The progress of art and invention is attested by new occupations. There are 16 dealers in gutta-percha, 11 average slaters and adjusters (railways.) Education is not without its representatives. There are 851 private academies, 129 district and parochial schools, 50 collegiate institutions, and 76 other schools. There are 55 teachers of dancing, 83 of drawing, 4 of elocution, 51 of language, 9 of mathematics, 251 of music, 3 of navigation, and 18 of writing. There are 421 master printers, 760 publishers, and 281 book binders.

☞ In a town between thirty and forty miles south of Boston, there were two idiots, one belonging to a family of note, held himself much auperior to the other, who was of low degree. One day they met in the street, when the aristocratic idiot exclaimed to the other: "Leazar! Leazar! you are a fool!" "I know I am a fool," answered Eleazar, drawing in his hanging tongue: "but, Phileomon, you are a fool and don't know it." Phileomon is one of a numerous class.

LAMARTINE.—A letter from Constantinople, dated 5th October, states that the Sultan has granted to M. de Lamartine, gratuitously, an immense tract of country, situated in a fertile plain, within a few miles of Smyrna, and forming part of the domains of the crown, and which, it is said, Lamartine will make his residence in the course of the ensuing spring.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

THE FASHION.

Deformity is as often the fashion as beauty; yet the world in general see no other beauty than fashion, and their vanity, or complaisance, bribes their understanding to disbelieve even their senses. If cleanliness is the fashion, then cleanliness is admired: if dirt, hair powder, and pomatum, are the fashion, then dirt, hair powder, and pomatum are admired just as much, if not more, from their being disagreeable. The secret is, that fashion is imitating in certain things that are in our power and that are nearly indifferent in themselves, those who possess certain other advantages that are not in our power, and that the possessors are as little disposed to part with, as they are eager to obtrude them upon the notice of others by every external symbol at their immediate control. We think the cut of a coat fine, because it is worn by a man with ten thousand a year, with a fine house, and a fine carriage; as we cannot get the ten thousand a year, the house or the carriage, we get what we can —the cut of the fine gentleman's coat, and thus are in the fashion. —The Lady's Dollar Newspaper.

INTERMENTS IN CITIES.

This subject has caused great excitement in London; and this excitement has produced inquiry, which inquiry has disclosed revolting facts and enormous abuses. Without giving details, we may truly say that every graveyard in London has long been a slaughter-house of the living, and through abuses that could have occurred only in a civilized and Christian country. No savage tribe has ever exhibited so much stupidity, no Pagan or Mahommedan community such profane desecration of the dead, such callous indifference to the living, as our Transatlantic cousins of that most intellectual of races, the Anglo-Saxon, in their administration of cemeteries. Much, if not most of these abuses, were the work of that blessing (!!!) under any form, the established Church; for as the revenues of its clergy depended partly on interments, and as this monopoly of the grave depended upon the clerical necessity of burying in "consecrated ground," they continued to pile coffins upon each other, until every grave and literally became a mountain of corruption for the infection and premature destruction of the living. Whoever supposes that this picture is overcharged, is referred to official reports in the journals of London. And while the political clergy were thus taking fees for promoting disease, they gravely undertook to remove the cholera by a—national fast!

Do these abuses in England inculcate a lesson to their cousins of this side? They do; for though we do not pile corpses in our cities till they rise above ground, we still bury within the limits of cities, and neglect some precautions, even when burying in the country. We should not bury in cities at all, nor in cemeteries without their limits which will probably be overtaken by the tide of our urban population. Every city and town should have its cemeteries in the fields, the open country, and, so far as foresight can judge, in fields sufficiently remote to be secure against the invasion of brick and mortar. But for additional security, we would recommend some practices of the "Ancients," or a practice of the modern French. The Egyptians embalmed corpses; and though modern writers ascribe the practice to superstition, we are quite as much inclined to the hypothesis of scientific knowledge and sound philosophy. Embalming prevented all farther decomposition, and whether the Egyptians knew it or not, enveloped the remains in substances replete with oxygen. Hence every catacomb was a disinfecting agent, a purifyer of the atmosphere. The modern Egyptians do not embalm; and hence Cairo and others of their populous cities are hotbeds of the plague. The Greeks, Romans, and other civilized nations of antiquity burned corpses, and probably derived the practice, through various channels, from the Hindoos. The French, since about 1770, have consumed corpses with quick lime, and were driven to the practice by horrors in Paris, similar to those which are now exciting so much remonstrance in London. Why should not we follow some one of these examples? Embalming would be impracticable through expense and other obstacles, and burning would be inconvenient. But quick lime, thrown into the coffin, is cheap, accessible, and very soon decomposes and consumes all parts excepting the bones, and those eventually, and thus completely prevents all putrefaction, and consequently all danger to the living.—Phil. Ledger.

SELF-RESPECT.

Every one has some sort of opinion, more or less distinct, of all persons with whom he is acquainted. This opinion may embrace intellect, disposition, virtues, vices, personal appearance, deportment, condition in life. So also every one has some opinion of himself on the same, and on many other subjects best known to himself.—When one examines his own opinion of himself, he seems to do it as though he were another person. He uses the eyes of others. He turns aside, as it were, by the way, to see himself pass by. The judgment which one forms of himself is often much more unsound than that which he forms of others. The eye cannot see itself; so neither can any one see himself. He must use a mirror. There are many of these: history, books, daily example, his own experience, every person he comes in contact with, are mirrors. If he sees himself in these, and thereby corrects his own errors and follies, and gives himself reasonable and just credit for his attainments, he may come at length to be entitled to entertain a respect for himself. There is a certain best thing to be done, and a certain best manner of doing it in all possible circumstances, in which one may find himself. Nothing is entitled to be considered best which does not conform to natural law, the law of God, the positive law of the land, the conventional laws of society, (so far as they are founded on reason and good sense,) and to the decencies of life. To that best thing, and that best manner, no one, perhaps, ever perfectly attains; but it cannot be doubted that there is such a standard. He who comes the nearest to it is he who is best entitled to entertain a respect for himself.—Ex. paper.

ENCOURAGING HINTS.

Don't be discouraged, if in the outset of life, things do not go on smoothly. It seldom happens that the hopes we cherish for the future are realized. The path of life appears smooth and easy, but when we come to travel it, we find it all up hill, and generally rough enough. The journey is a laborious one; and whether poor or wealthy, high or low, we shall find it to our disappointment, if we have built on any other calculation. To endure it with as much cheerfulness as possible, and to elbow our way through the great crowd, "hoping for little, yet striving for much," is perhaps, the best plan. Don't be discouraged, if occasionally you slip down by the way, and your neighbor treads over you a little; or in other words, don't let a failure or two dishearten you. Accidents will happen, miscalculations will sometimes be made; things will turn out differently from our expectations, and we may be sufferers.—It is worth while to remember that fortune is like the skies in April, sometimes clear and favorable; and, as it would be folly to despair of again seeing the sun, because to-day is stormy, so it is unwise to sink into despondency when fortune frowns, since, in the common course of things, she may surely be expected to smile and smile again. Don't be discouraged if you are deceived in the people of the world. From such sources as these you may be most unexpectedly deceived, and you will feel sore under such deception; but to these you may become used; if you fare as other people do, they will lose their novelty before you grow grey, and you will learn to trust more cautiously, and examine their character closely, before you allow great opportunities to injure. Don't be discouraged under any circumstance. Go steadily forward. Rather consult your own conscience than the opinions of men, though the latter is not to be disregarded. Be industrious, be sober, be honest; dealing in perfect kindness with all who come in your way, exercising a neighborly and obliging spirit in your whole intercourse; and, if you do not prosper as rapidly now as some of your neighbors, depend upon it you will be at last as happy.—Ex. paper.

and pomatum are inhaled just as much, if not more, from their being disagreeable. The secret is, that fashion is imitating in certain things that are in our power and that are nearly indifferent in themselves, those who possess certain other advantages that are not in our power, and that the possessors are as little disposed to part with, as they are eager to obtrude them upon the notice of others by every external symbol at their immediate control. We think the cut of a coat fine, because it is worn by a man with ten thousand a year, with a fine house, and a fine carriage; as we cannot get the ten thousand a year, the house or the carriage, we get what we can —the cut of the fine gentleman's coat, and thus are in the fashion. —The Lady's Dollar Newspaper.

INTERMENTS IN CITIES.

This subject has caused great excitement in London; and this excitement has produced inquiry, which inquiry has disclosed revolting facts and enormous abuses. Without giving details, we may truly say that every graveyard in London has long been a slaughter house of the living through abuses that could have occurred only in a civilized and Christian country. No savage tribe has ever exhibited so much stupidity, no Pagan or Mahommedan community such profane disregard of the dead, such callous indifference to the living, as our fellow-Christians, the cousins of that most intellectual of races, the Anglo-Saxons, in their administration of cemeteries. Much, if not most of these abuses, were the work of that blessing (!!!) under any form, the established Church; for as the revenues of its clergy depended partly on interments, and as this monopoly of the grave depended upon the clerical necessity of burying in "consecrated ground," they continued to pile coffins upon each other, until every grave and literally became a mountain of corruption for the infection and premature destruction of the living. Whoever supposes that this picture is overcharged, is referred to official reports in the journals of London. And while the political clergy were thus taking fees for promoting disease, they gravely undertook to remove the cholera by a—national fast!

Do these abuses in England inculcate a lesson to their cousins of this side? They do; for though we do not pile corpses in our cities till they rise above ground, we still bury within the limits of cities, and neglect some precautions, even when burying in the country. We should not bury in cities at all, nor in cemeteries without their limits which will probably be overtaken by the tide of our urban population. Every city and town should have its cemeteries in the fields, the open country, and, so far as foresight can judge, in fields sufficiently remote to be secure against the invasion of brick and mortar. But for additional security, we would recommend some practices of the "Ancients," or a practice of the modern French. The Egyptians embalmed corpses; and though modern writers ascribe the practice to superstition, we are quite as much inclined to the hypothesis of scientific knowledge and sound philosophy. Embalming prevented all farther decomposition, and whether the Egyptians knew it or not, enveloped the remains in substances replete with oxygen. Hence every catacomb was a disinfecting agent, a purifyer of the atmosphere. The modern Egyptians do not embalm; and hence Cairo and others of their populous cities are hotbeds of the plague. The Greeks, Romans, and other civilized nations of antiquity burned corpses, and probably derived the practice, through various channels, from the Hindoos. The French, since about 1770, have consumed corpses with quick lime, and were driven to the practice by horrors in Paris, similar to those which are now exciting so much remonstrance in London. Why should not we follow some one of these examples! Embalming would be impracticable through expense and other obstacles, and burning would be inconvenient. But quick lime, thrown into the coffin, is cheap, accessible, and very soon decomposes and consumes all parts excepting the bones, and these eventually, and thus completely prevents all putrefaction, and consequently all danger to the living.—Phil. Ledger.

SELF-RESPECT.

Every one has some sort of opinion, more or less distinct, of all persons with whom he is acquainted. This opinion may embrace intellect, disposition, virtues, vices, personal appearance, deportment, condition in life. So also every one has some opinion of himself on the same, and on many other subjects best known to himself.—When one examines his own opinion of himself he seems to do it as though he were another person. He views the eyes of others. He turns aside, as it were, by the way, to see himself pass by. The judgment which one forms of himself is of much more unsound than that which he forms of others. The eye can not see itself; so neither can any one see himself. He must use a mirror. There are many of these; history, books, daily example, his own experience, every person he comes in contact with, are mirrors. If he sees himself in these, and thereby corrects his own errors and follies, and gives himself reasonable and just credit for his attainments, he may come at length to be entitled to entertain a respect for himself. There is a certain best thing to be done, and a certain best manner of doing it in all possible circumstances, in which one may find himself. Nothing is entitled to be considered best which does not conform to natural law, the law of God, the positive law of the land, the conventional laws of society, (so far as they are founded on reason and good sense,) and to the decencies of life. To that best thing, and that best manner, no one, perhaps, ever perfectly attains; but it can not be doubted that there is such a standard. He who comes nearest to it is he who is best entitled to entertain a respect for himself.—Ex. paper.

ENCOURAGING HINTS.

Don't be discouraged, if in the outset of life, things do not go on smoothly. It seldom happens that the hopes we cherish for the future are realized. The path of life appears smooth and easy, but when we come to travel it, we find it all up hill, and generally rough enough. The journey is a laborious one; and whether poor or wealthy, high or low, we shall find it to our disappointment, if we have built on any other calculation. To endure it with as much cheerfulness as possible, and to elbow our way through the great crowd, "hoping for little, yet striving for much," is perhaps, the best plan. Don't be discouraged, if occasionally you slip down by the way, and your neighbor treads over you a little; or in other words, don't let a failure or two dishearten you. Accidents will happen, miscalculations will sometimes be made; things will turn out differently from our expectations, and we may be sufferers.—It is worth while to remember that fortune is like the skies in April, sometimes clear and favorable; and, as it would be folly to despair of again seeing the sun, because to-day is stormy, so it is unwise to sink into despondency when Fortune frowns, since, in the common course of things, she may surely be expected to smile and smile again. Don't be discouraged if you are deceived in the people of the world. From such sources as these you may be most unexpectedly deceived, and you will feel sore under such deception; but to these you may become used; if you live as other people do, they will lose their novelty before you grow grey, and you will learn to trust more cautiously, and examine their character closely, before you allow great opportunities to injure. Don't be discouraged under any circumstance. Go steadily forward. Rather consult your own conscience than the opinions of men, though the latter is not to be disregarded. Be industrious, be sober, be honest; dealing in perfect kindness with all who come in your way, exercising a neighborly and obliging spirit in your whole intercourse; and, if you do not prosper as rapidly now as some of your neighbors, depend upon it you will be at last as happy.—Ex. paper

☞ The following is from the New York Sun :—

The Mormons.—Considerable interest and sympathy begin to prevail in favor of the Mormons. For a long time their peculiar religious tenets, the strange origin of their faith, the singular personages selected for their prophets and temporal guides, and the books published against them, produced in public opinion a most unfavorable impression. They were represented to be utterly immoveable in their habits and dishonorable in their practices, and it is a remarkable circumstance that the Mormons themselves never opposed to these charges any serious remonstrance. When a lawless mob broke into prison and murdered Joe. Smith, their leader, and his brother Hyrum, the act shocked the community for a while, but it was soon forgotten. A number of persons in the State of Illinois subsequently organized themselves into bands under the name of anti-Mormons, to drive them out of the State and compel them to abandon their farms, their homes and the costly temple which they had erected. For this purpose, the anti-Mormons armed themsilves, obtained cannon and munitions of war and marched into Nauvoo for the purpose of attacking and driving the people out of the city. The position of the Mormons attracted the attention of citizens of other States, but as the State of Illinois itself did nothing for their protection, on the contrary rather permitted the outrages to be perpetrated upon them, it was believed that their characters were so bad and their morals so impure as to justify the determination to drive them to seek some other place of residence.

The Mormons defended themselves and their homes as well as they could, but being overpowered by numbers, having the State against them, having public opinion to contend against, and no aid and no protection, they said "We will go." And they did go, leaving a few friends to take care of their property, their farms and Temple, to sell all at any sacrifice. Men, and women and children, some on foot, some in wagons, carrying with them the remains of their household furniture, left their homes. Thus some 12,000 or 15,000 persons, from a state of comfort and prosperity, were driven from their homes to lie down on the banks of sickly rivers or to encounter the more savage Indians on the vast prairies of the West — It now appears from the testimony of persons worthy of credit, from those who are intimate with the Mormons, and have closely observed their habits and pursuits, that great injustice has been done to the character of those unfortunate people, so treated, so wronged and so abandoned by a sovereign State which was bound to protect them. The late Capt. Allen of the U. S. Dragoons, who had a body of 500 under his command, not only represented them as spirited and patriotic, good and faithful, but describes them "as wonderfully pure and unexceptionable in their moral conduct; frugal, industrious and self-denying, manifesting patient heroism in the endurance of suffering worthy the noblest christian character." And a correspondent of the United States Gazette, of character and veracity, who has traveled and lived among them, declares that the "virtues of the family, chastity, affection, and the spirit of united effort for the advancement of family happiness, form absolute characteristics of this outcast people; together with temperance, frugality, industry, energy, and constancy of purpose." If this be so, words are inadequate to portray the gross injustice and cruelty practiced towards them in the State of Illinois. Some excuse can be found for the religious and personal outrages of the Goths and Vandals, or for the cruelties and persecutions of the darker ages, but in these enlightened times, in a country of laws and free institutions, where the largest liberty is secured to every citizen, that a community of 12,000 or 15,000 people, without having been charged with any legal delinquency, should be driven by force of arms from their homes and property, as outcasts, and that the strong arm of the State should not be held forth for their protection, is a stain on our annals and our country at large, which we apprehend will take years to wash out.

We have no parallel to it in the history of our country. But the tale does not end here. Riot, drunkenness and crime signalized the victory of the anti-Mormons! A reckless body of men seized upon the Mormon property, took possession of their farms, desecrated their temple and the poor, the sick, the aged and the infant were driven half famished into the woods; and the safeguards of domestic and social life were thus outraged and broken down.

If recent statements respecting their condition and character be true, the State of Illinois is bound in honor and in law to restore them to their homes and property, and the Legislature, for the sake of justice and humanity—for the character of the State and the institutions of the country—should direct the Governor to issue a proclamation inviting the Mormons to return to their homes, and offering to guarantee their safety against every attempt to injure or molest them. They are now by the injustice of the State, dying in the wilderness, of sickness and starvation—a prey to savage Indians, and beasts of prey, while brigands have possession of their property.—Let Illinois move in the good work before public opinion everywhere unites in demanding for the Mormons indemnity for the past, and security for the future."

THE BEGGAR AND THE BANKER.

"Do you take notice that God has given me a soul and body, just as good for all the purposes of thinking, eating, drinking, and taking my pleasure as he has you; and then you may remember Dives and Lazarus, as we pass. Then again, it is a free country, and here, too, we are on an equality; for you must know, that here even a beggar's dog may look a gentleman in the face, with as much indifference as he would a brother. You and I have the same common master; are equally free, live equally easy; are both traveling the same journey, bound to the same place, and both have to die and be buried in the end."

"But," observed the Banker, interrupting him, "do you pretend there is then no difference between a beggar and a banker?"

"Not in the least," rejoined the other, with the utmost readiness; "not in the least, as to essentials. You swagger and drink wine, in company of your own choosing; I swagger and drink beer, which I like better than your wine, in company which I like better than your company. You make thousands a day, perhaps; I make a shilling: if you are contented, I am; we're equally happy at night. You dress in new clothes; I am just as comfortable in old ones, and have no trouble in keeping them from soiling. If I have less property than you, I have less to care about. If fewer friends, I have less friendship to lose; and if I do not make as great a figure in the world, I make as great a shadow on the pavement; I am as great as you. Besides, my word for it, I have fewer enemies, meet with fewer losses; carry as light a heart, and sing as merry a song as the best of you."

"But, then, said the Banker, who had all along been trying to get in a word, "is the contempt of the world nothing?"

"The envy of the world is as bad as its contempt; you have, perhaps, the one, and I a share of the other. We are matched there too. And, besides, the world deals in this matter equally unjustly with us both. You and I live by our wits, instead of living by our industry; and the only difference between us in this particular, worth naming, is, that it costs society more to maintain you than it does me. I am content with a little, you want a great deal. Neither of us raise grain or potatoes, or weave cloth, or manufacture anything useful: we therefore add nothing to the common stock; we are only consumers; and if the world judged with strict impartiality, therefore, it seems to me I should be pronounced the cleverest fellow."

☞ The following is from the New York Sun :—

"The Mormons.—Considerable interest and sympathy begin to prevail in favor of the Mormons. For a long time their peculiar religious tenets, the strange origin of their faith, the singular personages selected for their prophets and temporal guides, and the books published against them, produced in public opinion a most unfavorable impression. They were represented to be utterly immoveable in their habits and dishonorable in their practices, and it is a remarkable circumstance that the Mormons themselves never opposed to these charges any serious remonstrance. When a lawless mob broke into prison and murdered Jos. Smith, their leader, and his brother Hyrum, the act shocked the community for a while, but it was soon forgotten. A number of persons in the State of Illinois subsequently organized themselves into bands under the name of anti-Mormons, to drive them out of the State and compel them to abandon their farms, their homes and the costly temple which they had erected. For this purpose, the anti-Mormons armed themsilves, obtained cannon and munitions of war and marched into Nauvoo for the purpose of attacking and driving the people out of the city. The position of the Mormons attracted the attention of citizens of other States, but as the State of Illinois itself did nothing for their protection, on the contrary rather permitted the outrages to be perpetrated upon them, it was believed that their characters were so bad and their morals so impure as to justify the determination to drive them to seek some other place of residence.

The Mormons defended themselves and their homes as well as they could, but being overpowered by numbers, having the State against them, having public opinion to contend against, and no aid and no protection, they said "We will go." And they did go, leaving a few friends to take care of their property, their farms and Temple, to sell all at any sacrifice. Men, and women and children, some on foot, some in wagons, carrying with them the remains of their household furniture, left their homes. Thus some 12,000 or 15,000 persons, from a state of comfort and prosperity, were driven from their homes to lie down on the banks of sickly rivers or to encounter the more savage Indians on the vast prairies of the West — It now appears from the testimony of persons worthy of credit, from those who are intimate with the Mormons, and have closely observed their habits and pursuits, that great injustice has been done to the character of those unfortunate people, so treated, so wronged and so abandoned by a sovereign State which was bound to protect them. The late Capt. Allen of the U. S. Dragoons, who had a body of 500 under his command, not only represented them as spirited and patriotic, good and faithful, but describes them "as wonderfully pure and unexceptionable in their moral conduct; frugal, industrious and self-denying, manifesting patient heroism in the endurance of suffering worthy the noblest christian character." And a correspondent of the United States Gazette, of character and veracity, who has traveled and lived among them, declares that the "virtues of the family, chastity, affection, and the spirit of united effort for the advancement of family happiness, form absolute characteristics of this outcast people; together with temperance, frugality, industry, energy, and constancy of purpose." If this be so, words are inadequate to portray the gross injustice and cruelty practiced towards them in the State of Illinois. Some excuse can be found for the religious and personal outrages of the Goths and Vandals, or for the cruelties and persecutions of the darker ages, but in these enlightened times, in a country of laws and free institutions, where the largest liberty is secured to every citizen, that a community of 12,000 or 15,000 people, without having been charged with any legal delinquency, should be driven by force of arms from their homes and property, as outcasts, and that the strong arm of the State should not be held forth for their protection, is a stain on our annals and our country at large, which we apprehend will take years to wash out.

We have no parallel to it in the history of our country. But the tale does not end here. Riot, drunkenness and crime signalized the victory of the anti-Mormons! A reckless body of men seized upon the Mormon property, took possession of their farms, desecrated their temple and the poor, the sick, the aged and the infant were driven half famished into the woods; and the safeguards of domestic and social life were thus outraged and broken down.

If recent statements respecting their condition and character be true, the State of Illinois is bound in honor and in law to restore them to their homes and property, and the Legislature, for the sake of justice and humanity—for the character of the State and the institutions of the country—should direct the Governor to issue a proclamation inviting the Mormons to return to their homes, and offering to guarantee their safety against every attempt to injure or molest them. They are now by the injustice of the State, dying in the wilderness, of sickness and starvation—a prey to savage Indians, and beasts of prey, while brigands have possession of their property.—Let Illinois move in the good work before public opinion everywhere unites in demanding for the Mormons indemnity for the past, and security for the future."

THE BEGGAR AND THE BANKER.

"Do you take notice that God has given me a soul and body, just as good for all the purposes of thinking, eating, drinking, and taking in, pleasure as he has you; and then you may remember Dives and Lazarus, as we pass. Then again, it is a free country, and here, too, we are on an equality; for you must know, that here even a beggar's dog may look a gentleman in the face, with as much indifference as he would a brother. You and I have the same common master; are equally free, live equally easy; are both traveling the same journey, bound to the same place, and both have to die and be buried in the end."

"But," observed the Banker, interrupting him, "do you pretend there is then no difference between a beggar and a banker?"

"Not in the least," rejoined the other, with the utmost readiness; "not in the least, as to essentials. You swagger and drink wine, in company of your own choosing; I swagger and drink beer, which I like better than your wine, in company which I like better than your company. You make thousands a day, perhaps; I make a shilling: if you are contented, I am; we're equally happy at night. You dress in new clothes; I am just as comfortable in old ones, and have no trouble in keeping them from soiling. If I have less property than you, I have less to care about. If fewer friends, I have less friendship to lose; and if I do not make as great a figure in the world, I make as great a shadow on the pavement; I am as great as you. Besides, my word for it, I have fewer enemies, meet with fewer losses; carry as light a heart, and sing as merry a song as the best of you."

"But, then, said the Banker, who had all along been trying to get in a word, "is the contempt of the world nothing?"

"The envy of the world is as bad as its contempt; you have, perhaps, the one, and I a share of the other. We are matched there too. And, besides, the world deals in this matter equally unjustly with us both. You and I live by our wits, instead of living by our industry; and the only difference between us in this particular, worth naming, is, that it costs society more to maintain you than it does me. I am content with a little, you want a great deal. Neither of us raise grain or potatoes, or weave cloth, or manufacture anything useful: we therefore add nothing to the common stock; we are only consumers; and if the world judged with strict impartiality, therefore, it seems to me I should be pronounced the cleverest fellow."

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 39.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. DEC. 13, 1849. [WHOLE No. 155.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 8th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I am now about to treat the readers of the Herald with something rich, a small slice from the loaf served up at the Melodeon, in this city, by the Rev. Theodore Parker, hoping that some one may season it up a little if I should fail to do so. The following I quote from the fifteenth page of his sermon: "That this body which we bury in the dust, shall one day be raised again, the living soul joined on anew, and both together live the eternal life."

This he thinks preposterous, and asks, "Where is the soul all this time between our death day and day of rising?" Then he gives the answers of several orthodox creeds, as destitute of a knowledge of the true God as himself, and then says: "It seems to me this notion is absurd and impossible—impossible in what it teaches of the resurrection of this body. If my soul is to claim the body again, which shall it be? the body I was born into, or the one I died out of? If I live to the common age of man, changing my body, as I must, dying daily, then I have worn some eight or ten bodies. So at the last which body shall claim my soul, for the ten had her? The soul herself may claim them all.

"But to make it still more intricate, there is in the earth but a certain portion of matter out of which human bodies can be made. Considering all the millions of men now living, the myriads of millions that have been before, it is plain, I think, that all the matter suitable for human bodies has been lived over many times. So if the world were to end to-day, instead of each old man having ten bodies from which to choose the one that fits him best, there would be ten men all clamoring for each body. Shall I, then, have a handful of my former dust, and that alone? That is not the resurrection of my body. This whole doctrine of the resurrection of the body seems to me impossible and absurd. I find no evidence that Jesus taught the resurrection of the body, but rather evidence that he did not."

Is not this rich? I wonder that Jesus had not said something on the subject. But I suppose if he had it would not have been reasonable, and, therefore, he was careful. But yet he did did say something, intimating very strongly that the dead should rise again. I will quote a few passages on the subject:—

"And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Matt. xxvii. 52, 53.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself, hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the son of man. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of, life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John v. 25 to 29.

"But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raiseth up

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 39.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, DEC. 13, 1849. [WHOLE No. 155.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 8th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I am now about to treat the readers of the Herald with something rich, a small slice from the loaf served up at the Melodeon, in this city, by the Rev. Theodore Parker, hoping that some one may season it up a little if I should fail to do so. The following I quote from the fifteenth page of his sermon: "That this body which we bury in the dust, shall one day be raised again, the living soul joined on anew, and both together live the eternal life."

This he thinks preposterous, and asks, "Where is the soul all this time between our death day and day of rising?" Then he gives the answers of several orthodox creeds, as destitute of a knowledge of the true God as himself, and then says: "It seems to me this notion is absurd and impossible—impossible in what it teaches of the resurrection of this body. If my soul is to claim the body again, which shall it be? the body I was born into, or the one I died out of? If I live to the common age of man, changing my body, as I must, dying daily, then I have worn some eight or ten bodies. So at the last which body shall claim my soul, for the ten had her? The soul herself may claim them all.

"But to make it still more intricate, there is in the earth but a certain portion of matter out of which human bodies can be made. Considering all the millions of men now living, the myriads of millions that have been before, it is plain, I think, that all the matter suitable for human bodies has been lived over many times. So if the world were to end to-day, instead of each old man having ten bodies from which to choose the one that fits him best, there would be ten men all clamoring for each body. Shall I, then, have a handful of my former dust, and that alone? That is not the resurrection of my body. This whole doctrine of the resurrection of the body seems to me impossible and absurd. I find no evidence that Jesus taught the resurrection of the body, but rather evidence that he did not."

Is not this rich? I wonder that Jesus had not said something on the subject. But I suppose if he had it would not have been reasonable, and, therefore, he was careful. But yet he did did say something, intimating very strongly that the dead should rise again. I will quote a few passages on the subject:—

"And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared nnto many." Matt. xxvii. 52, 53.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself, hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the son of man. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John v. 25 to 29.

"But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raiseth up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now: and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the spirit; even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." Rom. viii. 11–22, 23.

These passages seem very much like favoring the idea of a literal resurection, and taken in connection with the circumstance of the resurrection of Christ, and his presentation to Thomas, most certainly are very strong evidences in favor of the resurrection of the body. But there seems to be a fear that there will not be matter enough to make bodies for all men, nor territory enough for them to stand upon. Well, it would be a pity indeed if the Lord God had made such a great mistake as here seems to be contemplated. But let us look at this matter a little, and see if we cannot find a way to get along with this, and not have our whole gospel hope upset at this late period, and thus prove all our sacrifice for the gospel vain and useless to us. For if the dead raise not, then is our preaching vain, and our hope vain, and we are, of all men, the most miserably taken in.

But suppose we make an estimate, and see how it will come out. There is now perhaps one thousand million who people the globe. And a generation passing of once in thirty years, since the creation to this present year, might all stand on less than two-thirds of the State of Ohio, allowing four men to stand on one square yard. This is but a small place to be compared with the great city New Jerusalem, that is to come down from God out of heaven. Surely "the wisdom of the wise shall perish, and the understanding of the prudent shall be hid."

The other difficulty in regard to the existence of the soul is about of the same nature, and simply wants the rule of common sense applied to it and then that is all perfectly right. The spirit and the body joined together form the soul of man; but death having obtained a commission from the Son of the Morning to end the first partnership between the spirit and the body, of course the soul is taken care of, until, in Christ, it is raised, incorruptible, and then immortalized, organic matter quickened by Jehovah's life infusing breath, is prepared for the society of God the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, and the church of the first born, and the great company of angels, and the just made perfect.

S. GRAHAM.

IMAGINATION.

The influence of imagination upon the physical powers is well known. It has often been known to cause disease, and sometimes to furnish the most effective remedy.

Some years ago, the people in a manufactory at Preston, Lancashire, England, were very much alarmed by an uncommon distemper breaking out suddenly among the women and girls employed in the spinning department, and spread with great rapidity. A healthy young woman dropped down suddenly in a convulsive fit, and remained in that situation for nearly 36 hours, with only a few slight intervals of about ten minutes each. After this time the convulsions returned for several days in fits of a quarter of an hour, and four hours' continuance, but with much longer intervals. Two days afterwards a person who had worked with this woman, was also affected in the same manner; upon the following day eight more; the next day, six; the next day, four. The patients had little or no warning of the approach of the fits, but fell down speechless, and remained perfectly delirious during their continuance, with the body bent backwards, and so powerfully convulsed that five or six people were scarcely sufficient to prevent a young girl from biting or tearing herself, or dashing her head against the wall or floor. In a few days the terrors of these people, and all around them, were increased to the highest pitch by the spreading of the complaint, and still more by the inefficiency of all the means tried for their recovery, and the dread-

Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now: and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the spirit; even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." Rom. viii. 11-22, 23.

These passages seem very much like favoring the idea of a literal resurection, and taken in connection with the circumstance of the resurrection of Christ, and his presentation to Thomas, most certainly are very strong evidences in favor of the resurrection of the body. But there seems to be a fear that there will not be matter enough to make bodies for all men, nor territory enough for them to stand upon. Well, it would be a pity indeed if the Lord God had made such a great mistake as here seems to be contemplated. But let us look at this matter a little, and see if we cannot find a way to get along with this, and not have our whole gospel hope upset at this late period, and thus prove all our sacrifice for the gospel vain and useless to us. For if the dead raise not, then is our preaching vain, and our hope vain, and we are, of all men, the most miserably taken in.

But suppose we make an estimate, and see how it will come out. There is now perhaps one thousand million who people the globe. And a generation passing of once in thirty years, since the creation to this present year, might all stand on less than two-thirds of the State of Ohio, allowing four men to stand on one square yard. This is but a small place to be compared with the great city New Jerusalem, that is to come down from God out of heaven. Surely "the wisdom of the wise shall perish, and the understanding of the prudent shall be hid."

The other difficulty in regard to the existence of the soul is about of the same nature, and simply wants the rule of common sense applied to it and then that is all perfectly right. The spirit and the body joined together form the soul of man; but death having obtained a commission from the Son of the Morning to end the first partnership between the spirit and the body, of course the soul is taken care of, until, in Christ, it is raised, incorruptible, and then immortalized, organic matter quickened by Jehovah's life infusing breath, is prepared for the society of God the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, and the church of the first born, and the great company of angels, and the just made perfect.

S. GRAHAM.

IMAGINATION.

The influence of imagination upon the physical powers is well known. It has often been known to cause disease, and sometimes to furnish the most effective remedy.

Some years ago, the people in a manufactory at Preston, Lancashire, England, were very much alarmed by an uncommon distemper breaking out suddenly among the women and girls employed in the spinning department, and spread with great rapidity. A healthy young woman dropped down suddenly in a convulsive fit, and remained in that situation for nearly 36 hours, with only a few slight intervals of about ten minutes each. After this time the convulsions returned for several days in fits of a quarter of an hour, and four hours' continuance, but with much longer intervals. Two days afterwards a person who had worked with this woman, was also affected in the same manner; upon the following day eight more; the next day, six; the next day, four. The patients had little or no warning of the approach of the fits, but fell down speechless, and remained perfectly delirious during their continuance, with the body bent backwards, and so powerfully convulsed that five or six people were scarcely sufficient to prevent a young girl from biting or tearing herself, or dashing her head against the wall or floor. In a few days the terrors of these people, and all around them, were increased to the highest pitch by the spreading of the complaint, and still more by the inefficiency of all the means tried for their recovery, and the dreadful idea that the disease was the plague, or some similar infection introduced by the cotton.

A physician of the place being consulted, declared that the disease was entirely nervous; and upon careful investigation ascertained that the person first affected had been thrown into that situation by the wanton application of a living mouse to her cheek; an animal which excited in her a kind of horror; and that the rest, who were chiefly young women, had been affected merely by a kind of sympathetic epidemic. The application of electricity, of soothing medicines, but above all, the separation of the patients, and the quelling of their apprehesions by assurances of a speedy recovery, soon put a stop to the progress of the disorder, and effected a cure, insomuch that in a few weeks they all went to work again, and had no return of the complaint.

It is also related that in 1774, in the parish of Unst, a shocking distemper prevailed among the young women. It began with a palpitation of the heart, then swooning fits followed, and they would fall down, toss their arms about, and twist their bodies into very odd shapes, crying out most dismally. They were commonly seized at church, and when one was seized others would follow. On sacramental occasions, fifty or sixty were carried out into the church yard, where they struggled and screamed for five or ten minutes, and then rose up without any recollection of what had happened to them. A cure was effected by the rudeness of a church officer, who, provoked at the increase of his labors in taking care of those who were under this species of illness, threw one into a ditch of water. The fear of being served in the same manner prevented any other swoonings.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK FOR 1850.

"THE BOOK OF THE NATION!"

The oldest Magazine in America. Published by the present proprietor for twenty years. Edited by Mrs. Sarah J. Hale. Comparison between Godey and the other Philadelphia monthlies. In 1849, the Lady's Book gave 916 pages—which is 116 more than one, and 148 pages more than the other Philadelphia monthly. He gave 281 engravings—among which were 20 colored, and 93 full page—which is 136 more than one, and 180 more than the other.—We gave, in each number, a piece of music printed separately on tinted paper, making 24 pages, or 12 pieces in a year. To show the cheapness of the Lady's Book, this same music, if bought separately at the music stores, would cost exactly the price of the whole year's subscription—$3.

Some of our peculiar embellishments. Ladies' Work Table—which comprises every kind of Needlework, Embroidery, Knitting, Netting, Crochet, Patterns for Caps, Chemisettes, Children's Clothes, Wedding Dresses, In-door and Out-door Costumes; Birds of America; Colored Flower Plates; Model Cottages and Furniture; Fashionable do.; Lace-Work; Vignette Plates at the head of articles, etc. etc. All the above are illustrated by engravings.—And, in 1850, will also be given a set of engravings, illustrative of the costumes of all nations, with descriptions by Mrs. Hale.—Most of the old features of the Book that were so poular last year, will be retained, and new ones added as they may suggest themselves to the publisher. A new novel, by W. Gilmore Simms, will be one of the features for 1850.

Our Reading Matter. We have long stood at the head of the magazine world for our contributions: they are always moral and instructive, and such as may be placed before a family without hesitation. This department is under the control of Mrs. Sarah Josepha Hale, whose name alone is a sufficient guarantee for the propriety of the Lady's Book. We may say the same of our engravings. We will never, as is done by a cotemporary, publish indecent model-artist pictures, such as no parent would allow a child to look at.—Godey's Lady's Book for 1850 shall surpass that of 1849. And exceed all magazines past, present, and to come. Terms, cash in advance, postage paid. Magnificent and expensive premiums.

Subscribers to a Club, or single Subscribers, may chose different Engravings. One copy 1 year $3, with any two of the following splendid premium plates: "Death-Bed of the Rev. John Wesley," "Wesley preaching in the Gwenap Amphitheatre," "America Guided by Wisdom," "General Taylor and Old Whitey," "Likeness of the Rev. John Wesley," "Do. of his co-laborer, Rev. John Fletcher"—the last two, though separate engravings, we count only as one premium.

Two copies for $5, and any two of the above prints to each subscriber. Five copies for $10, and an extra copy of the Book, and any two of the above engravings to the person sending the club.—Eleven copies for $20, and an extra copy of the Book, and any three of the above engravings to the person sending the club. Any person sending $5, in advance, subscription for 1850 and 51, will be entitled to any four of the above engravings. More and most Liberal offers. For $10 in advance, five copies of the Lady's Book will be sent, and a copy of either of the above magnificent prints sent to each subscriber. They can, in all cases, select which they please. For $30, we will send ten copies of the Book, and thirty copies of any of the above engravings. Single number of the Lady's Book, 25 cents.

The above are large-sized parlor prints. The "Death-Bed of Wesley" contains many portraits; "Wesley Preaching in the Amphitheatre" contains hundreds of figures, and cost $1500 to engrave it. "America Guided by Wisdom," is a very large line engraving, and cost $1800 to engrave. "General Taylor and Old Whitey," is one of the largest of the General Taylor prints, and is engraved from an original painting, at a cost of $1000. The heads of Wesley and Fletcher are of a good size for framing. These Plates cannot be purchased at the Stores at less than $3 each. Premiums are only sent when the Subscriptions are remitted direct to the Publisher.

The Lady's Book for 1850 will contain several hundred good engravings. Postmasters and others sending clubs, will oblige us very much by having them all addressed to one name. It is no inconvenience to them, and will be a great favor to us. Premiums to the towns sending the largest number of subscribers. The town sending us the largest number of mail subscribers for 1850, will be entitled to the Lady's Book for 1851 gratis; and the next in number, each subscriber shall receive any one of the above plates. Address L. A. GODEY, 113 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

ful idea that the disease was the plague, or some similar infection introduced by the cotton.

A physician of the place being consulted, declared that the disease was entirely nervous; and upon careful investigation ascertained that the person first affected had been thrown into that situation by the wanton application of a living mouse to her cheek; an animal which excited in her a kind of horror; and that the rest, who were chiefly young women, had been affected merely by a kind of sympathetic epidemic. The application of electricity, of soothing medicines, but above all, the separation of the patients, and the quelling of their apprehesions by assurances of a speedy recovery, soon put a stop to the progress of the disorder, and effected a cure, insomuch that in a few weeks they all went to work again, and had no return of the complaint.

It is also related that in 1774, in the parish of Unst, a shocking distemper prevailed among the young women. It began with a palpitation of the heart, then swooning fits followed, and they would fall down, toss their arms about, and twist their bodies into very odd shapes, crying out most dismally. They were commonly seized at church, and when one was seized others would follow. On sacramental occasions, fifty or sixty were carried out into the church yard, where they struggled and screamed for five or ten minutes, and then rose up without any recollection of what had happened to them. A cure was effected by the rudeness of a church officer, who, provoked at the increase of his labors in taking care of those who were under this species of illness, threw one into a ditch of water. The fear of being served in the same manner prevented any other swoonings.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK FOR 1850.

"THE BOOK OF THE NATION!"

The oldest Magazine in America. Published by the present proprietor for twenty years. Edited by Mrs. Sarah J. Hale. Comparison between Godey and the other Philadelphia monthlies. In 1849, the Lady's Book gave 916 pages—which is 116 more than one, and 148 pages more than the other Philadelphia monthly. He gave 281 engravings—among which were 20 colored, and 93 full page—which is 136 more than one, and 180 more than the other.—We gave, in each number, a piece of music printed separately on tinted paper, making 24 pages, or 12 pieces in a year. To show the cheapness of the Lady's Book, this same music, if bought separately at the music stores, would cost exactly the price of the whole year's subscription—$3.

Some of our peculiar embellishments. Ladies' Work Table—which comprises every kind of Needlework, Embroidery, Knitting, Netting, Crochet, Patterns for Caps, Chemisettes, Children's Clothes, Wedding Dresses, In-door and Out-door Costumes; Birds of America; Colored Flower Plates; Model Cottages and Furniture; Fashionable do.; Lace-Work; Vignette Plates at the head of articles, etc. etc. All the above are illustrated by engravings.—And, in 1850, will also be given a set of engravings, illustrative of the costumes of all nations, with descriptions by Mrs. Hale.—Most of the old features of the Book that were so poular last year, will be retained, and new ones added as they may suggest themselves to the publisher. A new novel, by W. Gilmore Simms, will be one of the features for 1850.

Our Reading Matter. We have long stood at the head of the magazine world for our contributions; they are always moral and instructive, and such as may be placed before a family without hesitation. This department is under the control of Mrs. Sarah Josepha Hale, whose name alone is a sufficient guarantee for the propriety of the Lady's Book. We may say the same of our engravings. We will never, as is done by a cotemporary, publish indecent model-artist pictures, such as no parent would allow a child to look at.—Godey's Lady's Book for 1850 shall surpass that of 1849. And exceed all magazines past, present, and to come. Terms, cash in advance, postage paid. Magnificent and expensive premiums.

Subscribers to a Club, or single Subscribers, may chose different Engravings. One copy 1 year $3, with any two of the following splendid premium plates: "Death-Bed of the Rev. John Wesley," "Wesley preaching in the Gwenap Amphitheatre," "America Guided by Wisdom," "General Taylor and Old Whitey." "Likeness of the Rev. John Wesley," "Do. of his co-laborer, Rev. John Fletcher"—the last two, though separate engravings, we count only as one premium.

Two copies for $5, and any two of the above prints to each subscriber. Five copies for $10, and an extra copy of the Book, and any two of the above engravings to the person sending the club.—Eleven copies for $20, and an extra copy of the Book, and any three of the above engravings to the person sending the club. Any person sending $5, in advance, subscription for 1850 and 51, will be entitled to any four of the above engravings. More and most Liberal offers. For $10 in advance, five copies of the Lady's Book will be sent, and a copy of either of the above magnificent prints sent to each subscriber. They can, in all cases, select which they please. For $30, we will send ten copies of the Book, and thirty copies of any of the above engravings. Single number of the Lady's Book, 25 cents.

The above are large-sized parlor prints. The "Death-Bed of Wesley" contains many portraits; "Wesley Preaching in the Amphitheatre" contains hundreds of figures, and cost $1500 to engrave it. "America Guided by Wisdom," is a very large line engraving, and cost $1800 to engrave. "General Taylor and Old Whitey," is one of the largest of the General Taylor prints, and is engraved from an original painting, at a cost of $1000. The heads of Wesley and Fletcher are of a good size for framing. These Plates cannot be purchased at the Stores at less than $3 each. Premiums are only sent when the Subscriptions are remitted direct to the Publisher.

The Lady's Book for 1850 will contain several hundred good engravings. Postmasters and others sending clubs, will oblige us very much by having them all addressed to one name. It is no inconvenience to them, and will be a great favor to us. Premiums to the towns sending the largest number of subscribers. The town sending us the largest number of mail subscribers for 1850, will be entitled to the Lady's Book for 1851 gratis; and the next in number, each subscriber shall receive any one of the above plates. Address L. A. GODEY, 113 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

The city of Baltimore probably contains more secret societies than any other city in America, possibly than any in the world. It also contains less of poverty and want than is common in cities of the same class, and suffers as little from the oppression of the poor. If, in this respect, it does not stand in the very front rank of the American cities, it certainly has few equals. Whether there is any connection, any mutual dependence, in these two facts, I leave to those who are better able to determine than I am.

Probably not one evening in the week passes without the assembling of one or more of the societies of the eight different secret orders found here. But the recent assembling of the Grand Chapter, and the coming session of the Grand Lodge of Free Masons, the oldest and most influential secret order generally known in the country, has called a drift of thoughts on the subject which possibly may not be profitless.

It is certain that the greatest movements which mark the history of the world have been the work of secret societies A secret society is a combination of a certain number of men, bound to each other by a common obligation, usually dignified and strengthened by ceremonial rites, and having for its object some great action in politics, religion, morals, or trade. It is certain that secret societies produced and directed the American revolution. A secret society, working under ground for twenty years, prepared the grand explosion of the French revolution. A series of secret societies dethroned Charles the tenth. Louis Phillippe, backed by 100,000 soldiers, saw his power crumbled into dust in a moment. A secret society had dug the mine, and at its watchword his throne sank into the abyss.

A secret society promulgates truth which cannot be uttered in public. Sometimes tyrants would kill the public utterers of these truths: sometimes wealthy men, made wealthy by bad laws, would kill both truth and speaker; sometimes the age is not prepared for the full force of truth, and men require to become accustomed to it amidst the shades of mysteries, under the obligations of solemn vows, and by the force of a glittering and awful ceremonial.

In Europe kings have assailed and endeavored to crush every form of secret society. In any country were a public society to speak the same truths which have been uttered in secret societies, in both Europe and America, it would at once be proscribed by the threefold tyranny of CAPITAL, FANATICISM and the COMMON LAW.

These truths do not relate merely to acts of benevolence and charity, so well manifested in the Masons of America; nor to a mutual insurance against sickness, so nobly embodied in Odd Fellowship; nor in a mutual pledge against the evils of intemperance, so ably embraced in the order of the Sons of Temperance. These truths are a declaration against the evils of the social system. These evils are manifested every where; as much in the new world as in the old. Not indeed crying so terribly to God for redress, because God has blessed the new world with abundance of cheap land, with rich harvests, and with the germ of complete social regeneration.

The evils of our social system are manifold. Such is the order established in society, that reward is continually offered for dishonesty; penury and neglect for truth and fairness. All the different ranks and professions of men are set at war with each other, and thrive continually by injuring one another. The wealth of the merchant depends on his successfully disposing of his wares at exorbitant prices; the broker by the distress of tradesmen, and the ruin of business; the farmers by famine and suffering in other countries; judges, lawyers, and bailiffs, by quarrels and litigation; and physicians by wasting pestilence. And in a great variety of cases it is in the power of the very persons interested to produce the calamities out of which they are to grow rich.

In the attempt to establish free government upon the basis of universal suffrage, the control of national affairs has passed into the hands of

SECRET SOCIETIES.

The city of Baltimore probably contains more secret societies than any other city in America, possibly than any in the world. It also contains less of poverty and want than is common in cities of the same class, and suffers as little from the oppression of the poor. If, in this respect, it does not stand in the very front rank of the American cities, it certainly has few equals. Whether there is any connection, any mutual dependence, in these two facts, I leave to those who are better able to determine than I am.

Probably not one evening in the week passes without the assembling of one or more of the societies of the eight different secret orders found here. But the recent assembling of the Grand Chapter, and the coming session of the Grand Lodge of Free Masons, the oldest and most influential secret order generally known in the country, has called a drift of thoughts on the subject which possibly may not be profitless.

It is certain that the greatest movements which mark the history of the world have been the work of secret societies. A secret society is a combination of a certain number of men, bound to each other by a common obligation, usually dignified and strengthened by ceremonial rites, and having for its object some great action in politics, religion, morals, or trade. It is certain that secret societies produced and directed the American revolution. A secret society, working under ground for twenty years, prepared the grand explosion of the French revolution. A series of secret societies dethroned Charles the tenth. Louis Phillippe, backed by 100,000 soldiers, saw his power crumbled into dust in a moment. A secret society had dug the mine, and at its watchword his throne sank into the abyss.

A secret society promulgates truth which cannot be uttered in public. Sometimes tyrants would kill the public utterers of these truths: sometimes wealthy men, made wealthy by bad laws, would kill both truth and speaker; sometimes the age is not prepared for the full force of truth, and men require to become accustomed to it amidst the shades of mysteries, under the obligations of solemn vows, and by the force of a glittering and awful ceremonial.

In Europe kings have assailed and endeavored to crush every form of secret society. In any country were a public society to speak the same truths which have been uttered in secret societies, in both Europe and America, it would at once be proscribed by the threefold tyranny of CAPITAL, FANATICISM and the COMMON LAW.

These truths do not relate merely to acts of benevolence and charity, so well manifested in the Masons of America; nor to a mutual insurance against sickness, so nobly embodied in Odd Fellowship; nor in a mutual pledge against the evils of intemperance, so ably embraced in the order of the Sons of Temperance. These truths are a declaration against the evils of the social system. These evils are manifested every where; as much in the new world as in the old. Not indeed crying so terribly to God for redress, because God has blessed the new world with abundance of cheap land, with rich harvests, and with the germ of complete social regeneration.

The evils of our social system are manifold. Such is the order established in society, that reward is continually offered for dishonesty; penury and neglect for truth and fairness. All the different ranks and professions of men are set at war with each other, and thrive continually by injuring one another. The wealth of the merchant depends on his successfully disposing of his wares at exorbitant prices; the broker by the distress of tradesmen, and the ruin of business; the farmers by famine and suffering in other countries; judges, lawyers, and bailiffs, by quarrels and litigation; and physicians by wasting pestilence. And in a great variety of cases it is in the power of the very persons interested to produce the calamities out of which they are to grow rich.

In the attempt to establish free government upon the basis of universal suffrage, the control of national affairs has passed into the hands of the vicious. The more virtuous part of community are more or less divided in opinions on various subjects. Vicious men seek to widen every such breach; because where parties are violent they can be received as partisans, who would otherwise be rejected for their vices.—And having balanced the virtuous men against each other, a few vicious men control appointments and elections to all public places. They can resort to falsehood and every wicked means to secure their ends. The upright man is left to honest measures alone, and is constantly astonished to see the government pass into the hands of men worse qualified in every way than himself.

The degradation of labor is another consequence of this vicious system. You can degrade labor in many ways. You can rob it of its fruits by making laws solely through and for the wealthy classes; by giving one man a charter to rob a hundred of his fellows; by punishing the laborer for a crime, which a rich man may commit with perfect impunity. You can degrade labor by depriving the laborer of an education which will enable him to battle with his educated oppressor. You can degrade labor by making the doctor, the preacher, the lawyer, the office vampire and the stock gambler more honorable in a social point of view than the man who works—who produces with hand and brain that which society needs for its subsistence or its comfort.

To tell a working man that he is free—that he has a right to vote according to his own will—that he is equal before the law with the wealthiest man in the land—is a bitter mockery; when he knows that his voice is not heard in the formation of government; that his profession is a barrier to his being made a legislator; that the wealth of his rich neighbors will buy a verdict against him in court, or stay the judgment in his favor; subject him to insult in public places; cross him in love, and take his wife or his daughter from him, leaving him a remedy which his enemies will laugh at.

Not now need we touch upon the constantly increasing degradation of the workers of America. To remove this degradation, to elevate the worker to his true pasition, to give him the power of capital, you must teach him the great mystery of COMBINATION. The rich man has a hundred rods in his hand; they are very strong; they can easily crush the single rod which the poor man holds. But let an hundred poor men join their rods together, and then the poor man is on the level with the rich.

The mystery of combination is well learned by studying the secret societies of the past—of the old world, and of the new. An hundred thousand individuals, combined for a common object, bound together by holy pledges, their union strengthened by religious ceremonies, would do more for the cause of human progress than all the external societies in the world.—These external societies are but loosely bound together; they are ruled by mediocrity; they are either very fanatical or very weak.

In the secret society the great purpose of the entire order is the supreme ruler. The hundred thousand minds of the secret society, form one great mind; their hundred thousand arms, one great arm; their hundred thousand separate dollars, one great purse. It is a secret society which must bind the masses together; which must link every true man to his fellow; which must pervade this nation with one great idea, manifested in the actions of a million advocates. The idea is feasible. It is eminently practical.

The Sons of Temperance exist. The Odd Fellows exist. The Masons exist. Suppose a society arises having all that is good in Odd Fellowship and Masonry, with the addition of a certain great idea, which has not yet been embodied in either Odd Fellowship or Masonry. Suppose this idea threefold. 1. The elevation of the man who works. 2. The organization of the workers into a compact, one-minded body, working in silence, in order that it may reap the harvest when the time comes. 3. The establishment and perpetuation of such forms of government as will secure these ends.

Such a society already exists. Its rites, ceremonies and pledges are religious, grand and the vicious. The more virtuous part of community are more or less divided in opinions on various subjects. Vicious men seek to widen every such breach; because where parties are violent they can be received as partisans, who would otherwise be rejected for their vices.—And having balanced the virtuous men against each other, a few vicious men control appointments and elections to all public places. They can resort to falsehood and every wicked means to secure their ends. The upright man is left to honest measures alone, and is constantly astonished to see the government pass into the hands of men worse qualified in every way than himself.

The degradation of labor is another consequence of this vicious system. You can degrade labor in many ways. You can rob it of its fruits by making laws solely through and for the wealthy classes; by giving one man a charter to rob a hundred of his fellows: by punishing the laborer for a crime, which a rich man may commit with perfect impunity. You can degrade labor by depriving the laborer of an education which will enable him to battle with his educated oppressor. You can degrade labor by making the doctor, the preacher, the lawyer, the office vampire and the stock gambler more honorable in a social point of view than the man who works—who produces with hand and brain that which society needs for its subsistence or its comfort.

To tell a working man that he is free—that he has a right to vote according to his own will—that he is equal before the law with the wealthiest man in the land—is a bitter mockery; when he knows that his voice is not heard in the formation of government; that his profession is a barrier to his being made a legislator; that the wealth of his rich neighbors will buy a verdict against him in court, or stay the judgment in his favor; subject him to insult in public places; cross him in love, and take his wife or his daughter from him, leaving him a remedy which his enemies will laugh at.

Not now need we touch upon the constantly increasing degradation of the workers of America. To remove this degradation, to elevate the worker to his true pasition, to give him the power of capital, you must teach him the great mystery of COMBINATION. The rich man has a hundred rods in his hand; they are very strong; they can easily crush the single rod which the poor man holds. But let an hundred poor men join their rods together, and then the poor man is on the level with the rich.

The mystery of combination is well learned by studying the secret societies of the past—of the old world, and of the new. An hundred thousand individuals, combined for a common object, bound together by holy pledges, their union strengthened by religious ceremonies, would do more for the cause of human progress than all the external societies in the world.—These external societies are but loosely bound together; they are ruled by mediocrity; they are either very fanatical or very weak.

In the secret society the great purpose of the entire order is the supreme ruler. The hundred thousand minds of the secret society, form one great mind; their hundred thousand arms, one great arm; their hundred thousand separate dollars, one great purse. It is a secret society which must bind the masses together; which must link every true man to his fellow; which must pervade this nation with one great idea, manifested in the actions of a million advocates. The idea is feasible. It is eminently practical.

The Sons of Temperance exist. The Odd Fellows exist. The Masons exist. Suppose a society arises having all that is good in Odd Fellowship and Masonry, with the addition of a certain great idea, which has not yet been embodied in either Odd Fellowship or Masonry. Suppose this idea threefold. 1. The elevation of the man who works. 2. The organization of the workers into a compact, one-minded body, working in silence, in order that it may reap the harvest when the time comes. 3. The establishment and perpetuation of such forms of government as will secure these ends.

Such a society already exists. Its rites, ceremonies and pledges are religious, grand and imposing. It has no vague and bombastic titles. It proscribes no race of men. It does make war—war by night and day—and war to the last extremity, against every form of oppression. This society, once well organized, will extend over the whole union. It will comprise every honest man in its fold. The Jesuitical politician, the dishonest capitalist, the criminal land speculator, the fraudulent banker—these, and such as these, will fear THIS society. Not yet will we reveal the name of the society; there is a time for all things. Let every man in the land, who works with his hands or his brain, carefully reflect upon this statement. One of the most interesting books the world ever saw might be written upon this subject.

Secret societies have for countless ages been the lever by which the poor and the oppressed have moved the world. They are the relics commonly known of that great system of religion, which, in the days of Abraham and Melchisedec, embraced among its believers the pure and virtuous throughout the habitable globe. The learning of the Hebrews, as well as Egyptians, was taught in the solemn twilight of a secret society. That this wisdom developed the mind and shaped the purposes of Moses, the Hebrew legislator, cannot be denied. At the time of our Savior a secret brotherhood, known as the Essenes, was in existence in Palestine. The Divine Master passed a portion of his life among the brothers of this fraternity.

Following the progress of time, we meet the various chivalric and religious orders which were established in the middle ages. The vow of some of these pointed to the rescue of the holy sepulcher, as the object of the holiest efforts of the brethren: others had in view the inculcation of some peculiar tenet of faith, or the accomplishment of some deed of active benevolence. It was in the dark ages that the WORKMEN of the world began to build those orders which are now known under the general title of Masonic. Despised, oppressed and crushed in the outer world, the workman retreated to the shadows of his Lodge, and there became the equal of the rich and proud, who had ground him to the dust.

The next phrase of the secret society appeared in the creation of the order of Jesus, by Ignatius Loyola—an order which, though engaged in a bad cause, has given half its strength to the Roman church. The order of Rosicrucians, (Brothers of the Rosy Cross,) of which so much is surmised, and so little known—whose existence has often been deemed fabulous—is, in fact, the great fountain head of nearly all the secret societies which now exist throughout the globe. It is the grand source of the rites, signs and ceremonies of other secret societies. Its existence has been deemed fabulous, because its members were forbidden to speak of the order at all, even in the most distant manner. It comes the nearest to the great secret society, which, in the days of Melchisedec, embraced in its shadows all the pure and virtuous throughout the globe.

Taking all these facts into consideration, let us suppose the foundation of an order which shall embrace all that is good in all other orders, and, at the same time, be thoroughly imbued with the idea of human progress—of the rights of labor—of the sanctity of the American continent, set apart by God for the homestead of the redeemed of his people, and of the necessity of establishing the law of God as the only fountain of real justice, and what shall we not hope for in its success and progress?

Such a society, when in full operation, must contain in it all that belonged to its predecessor in the days of the patriarchs; and, consequently, the substance of all those things of which most secret societies have something of the shadow. And it must contain also what that did not contain—a ritual founded on modern events, of which that had not the shadow. A few things only in any ritual have no reference to the time of the event on which they are founded. It is true that Melchisedec administered the bread and wine before the anointed was a broken and bleeding sacrifice. But the mimic fire was never raised till God met Moses in the bush. The pot of manna and imposing. It has no vague and bombastic titles. It proscribes no race of men. It does make war—war by night and day—and war to the last extremity, against every form of oppression. This society, once well organized, will extend over the whole union. It will comprise every honest man in its fold. The Jesuitical politician, the dishonest capitalist, the criminal land speculator, the fraudulent banker—these, and such as these, will fear THIS society. Not yet will we reveal the name of the society; there is a time for all things. Let every man in the land, who works with his hands or his brain, carefully reflect upon this statement. One of the most interesting books the world ever saw might be written upon this subject.

Secret societies have for countless ages been the lever by which the poor and the oppressed have moved the world. They are the relics commonly known of that great system of religion, which, in the days of Abraham and Melchisedec, embraced among its believers the pure and virtuous throughout the habitable globe. The learning of the Hebrews, as well as Egyptians, was taught in the solemn twilight of a secret society. That this wisdom developed the mind and shaped the purposes of Moses, the Hebrew legislator, cannot be denied. At the time of our Savior a secret brotherhood, known as the Essenes, was in existence in Palestine. The Divine Master passed a portion of his life among the brothers of this fraternity.

Following the progress of time, we meet th various chivalric and religious orders which were established in the middle ages. The vow of some of these pointed to the rescue of the holy sepulcher, as the object of the holiest efforts of the brethren: others had in view the inculcation of some peculiar tenet of faith, or the accomplishment of some deed of active benevolence. It was in the dark ages that the WORKMEN of the world began to build those orders which are now known under the general title of Masonic. Despised, oppressed and crushed in the outer world, the workman retreated to the shadows of his Lodge, and there became the equal of the rich and proud, who had ground him to the dust.

The next phrase of the secret society appeared in the creation of the order of Jesus, by Ignatius Loyola—an order which, though engaged in a bad cause, has given half its strength to the Roman church. The order of Rosicrucians, (Brothers of the Rosy Cross,) of which so much is surmised, and so little known—whose existence has often been deemed fabulous—is, in fact, the great fountain head of nearly all the secret societies which now exist throughout the globe. It is the grand source of the rites, signs and ceremonies of other secret societies. Its existence has been deemed fabulous, because its members were forbidden to speak of the order at all, even in the most distant manner. It comes the nearest to the great secret society, which, in the days of Melchisedec, embraced in its shadows all the pure and virtuous throughout the globe.

Taking all these facts into consideration, let us suppose the foundation of an order which shall embrace all that is good in all other orders, and, at the same time, be thoroughly imbued with the idea of human progress—of the rights of labor—of the sanctity of the American continent, set apart by God for the homestead of the redeemed of his people, and of the necessity of establishing the law of God as the only fountain of real justice, and what shall we not hope for in its success and progress?

Such a society, when in full operation, must contain in it all that belonged to its predecessor in the days of the patriarchs; and, consequently, the substance of all those things of which most secret societies have something of the shadow. And it must contain also what that did not contain—a ritual founded on modern events, of which that had not the shadow. A few things only in any ritual have no reference to the time of the event on which they are founded. It is true that Melchisedec administered the bread and wine before the anointed was a broken and bleeding sacrifice. But the mimic fire was never raised till God met Moses in the bush. The pot of manna and the mystical rod were not placed in the ark of the covenant till after the deliverance of Israel. Nor was the death of the widow's son commemorated in the divine mysteries until the temple was nearly complete.

Thus each great event in the history of God's people is repeated either in form or symbol in the constantly accumulating ritual of those who, in the light of God's throne, are constantly seeking for the divine perfection. Nearly all the secret societies in existence are in advance of the age in intelligence, and are distinguished for their unostentatious benevolence, and their boundless charity. They contain in their imposing ceremonies the evidence that they were once administered by an authorized priesthood, or are patterned after those which were so administered.

In the days when the sons of God presented themselves before the Lord, one great congregation included all who were initiated into the sacred mysteries. But every temple had, in addition, its peculiar ritual; and every profession its Lodges; all bound by common bonds, yet each its separate mysteries. And though the parent society has been swallowed up in the universal wreck of all that God has instituted among his people, yet among other relics of olden time the mysteries of the societies of workmen who constructed the two temples at Jerusalem have survived. Hence the Masonic order, with its symbols founded on a single profession; though its votaries are found in all, and its chastity is general.

It was not alone in the Lodge of the architects, but in the congregation of the saints that Solomon presided; and St. John, though a fisherman, filled the same place with honors, distinguished like the chastened rays of the setting sun. When God brings again Zion; calls a nation into the glorious liberty of the gospel; cuts off the tongue of the Egyptian sea; smites the river in the seven streams thereof, and restores Israel to the land he gave to their fathers by revealing himself as in the early days, when he led his people by his holy prophets, it is not too much to say that the congregation of the faithful shall hear again the mysteries of the kingdom in secret places, which the world will hear of only in parables.

CHARLES J. DOUGLASS.

Baltimore, Nov. 17th, 1849.

THE PRESENT AGE.

We see in the intellectual movements of our times the tendency to expansion, to universality, and this must continue. It is not an accident, or an inexplicable result, or a violence on nature; it is founded in eternal truth. Every mind was made for growth, and for knowledge, and its nature is sinned against when it is doomed to ignorance. The divine gift of intelligence was bestowed for higher uses than mere bodily labor, than to make hewers of wood, drawers of water, plowmen or servants. Everything so gifted is intended to acquaint itself with God and his works, and to perform wisely and disinterestedly the duties of life.—Accordingly, when we see the multitude of men begin to thirst for knowledge, for intellectual action, for something more than an animal life, we see the great design of nature about to be accomplished; and society, having received this impulse, will never rest until it shall have taken such a form as will place within every man's reach the means of intellectual culture. This is the revolution to which we are now tending; and, without this, all outward, political changes, would be but children's play, leaving the great work of society yet to be done.—Half hour with the best Authors.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK.—This week we publish the prospectus of this splendid monthly Magazine for 1850, the January number of which is on our table. It contains eighteen magnificent engravings, which are nearly worth the subscription price for one year. Its mechanical execution is equaled by few, and surpassed by none. The reading matter cannot fail of being relished by those who are fond of fashionable light reading.

☞ Action is life and health, repose is death and corruption.

the mystical rod were not placed in the ark of the covenant till after the deliverance of Israel. Nor was the death of the widow's son commemorated in the divine mysteries until the temple was nearly complete.

Thus each great event in the history of God's people is repeated either in form or symbol in the constantly accumulating ritual of those who, in the light of God's throne, are constantly seeking for the divine perfection. Nearly all the secret societies in existence are in advance of the age in intelligence, and are distinguished for their unostentatious benevolence, and their boundless charity. They contain in their imposing ceremonies the evidence that they were once administered by an authorized priesthood, or are patterned after those which were so administered.

In the days when the sons of God presented themselves before the Lord, one great congregation included all who were initiated into the sacred mysteries. But every temple had, in addition, its peculiar ritual; and every profession its Lodges; all bound by common bonds, yet each its separate mysteries. And though the parent society has been swallowed up in the universal wreck of all that God has instituted among his people, yet among other relics of olden time the mysteries of the societies of workmen who constructed the two temples at Jerusalem have survived. Hence the Masonic order, with its symbols founded on a single profession; though its votaries are found in all, and its chastity is general.

It was not alone in the Lodge of the architects, but in the congregation of the saints that Solomon presided; and St. John, though a fisherman, filled the same place with honors, distinguished like the chastened rays of the setting sun. When God brings again Zion; calls a nation into the glorious liberty of the gospel; cuts off the tongue of the Egyptian sea; smites the river in the seven streams thereof, and restores Israel to the land he gave to their fathers by revealing himself as in the early days, when he led his people by his holy prophets, it is not too much to say that the congregation of the faithful shall hear again the mysteries of the kingdom in secret places, which the world will hear of only in parables.

CHARLES J. DOUGLASS.

Baltimore, Nov. 17th, 1849.

THE PRESENT AGE.

We see in the intellectual movements of our times the tendency to expansion, to universality, and this must continue. It is not an accident, or an inexplicable result, or a violence on nature; it is founded in eternal truth. Every mind was made for growth, and for knowledge, and its nature is sinned against when it is doomed to ignorance. The divine gift of intelligence was bestowed for higher uses than mere bodily labor, than to make hewers of wood, drawers of water, plowmen or servants. Everything so gifted is intended to acquaint itself with God and his works, and to perform wisely and disinterestedly the duties of life.—Accordingly, when we see the multitude of men begin to thirst for knowledg , for intellectual action, for something more than an animal life, we see the great design of nature about to be accomplished; and society, having received this impulse, will never rest until it shall have taken such a form as will place within every man's reach the means of intellectual culture. This is the revolution to which we are now tending; and, without this, all outward, political changes, would be but children's play, leaving the great work of society yet to be done.—Half hour with the best Authors.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK.—This week we publish the prospectus of this splendid monthly Magazine for 1850, the January number of which is on our table. It contains eighteen magnificent engravings, which are nearly worth the subscription price for one year. Its mechanical execution is equaled by few, and surpassed by none. The reading matter cannot fail of being relished by those who are fond of fashionable light reading.

☞ Action is life and health, repose is death and corruption.

SCRIPTURE ASTRONOMY.

It is by a lunar eclipse that a mistake has been found in the Christian era; for it is well known that Christ was born when Herod was king of Judea, and Josephus affirms, that just before the death of this Herod there was an eclipse of the moon on the night between the 12th and 13th of March, but it has been clearly proved that this eclipse happened on the fourth year before what is considered the Chrisian era; therefore this era ought to be carried back three years at least. The darkness that occurred at our Savior's crucifixion, and which continued three hours, cannot be attributed to an eclipse of the sun, the passover being kept at the time of full moon: had even the two luminaries been in conjunction, the darkness could only have lasted four or five minutes, owing to their apparent diameters being so nearly equal. Dionysius, a judge of Areopagus, being at Heliopolis, and observing this preternatural phenomenon, cried out, that "Nature was either dissolving, or the God of nature suffering." He afterwards embraced the christian faith, [so called,] and suffered martyrdom for the truth of it.—Rev. B. Sharpe.

SCANDAL.—How much mischief might be avoided if men and women would but divest themselves of the practice of meddling with other people's affairs, instead of attending to their own! In the first place, they have no right to do so; and in the second, they should consider the many consequences which may result from it, which they themselves would not like were they placed in a similar position.

HEALTH OF CHILDREN.—Rising early is a habit of high importance to fix in children; and in forming it there is far greater facility than in other cases. There is a natural propensity in children to early rising, which needs only to be gratified and encouraged.—They generally retire before their parents, and at daylight or at sunrise, are generally awake and anxious to rise. Many of them are actually bred up with difficulty to the habit of taking a morning nap, which, when formed, generally prevails through life. Let his father deny himself so far as to retire early, and become an early riser also. His health, enjoyment and usefulness, he may depend upon it, will be perceptibly benefited.

CONVERT TO ROME.—The Rev. Dr. Forbes, of St. Luke's Church, (Protestant Episcopal,) New York, has written the following letter to the Standing Committee of his diocese:—

New York, Nov. 21, 1849.

To the Rev. Wm. Berrian, D. D., president of the standing committee of his diocese of New York:—

Rev. and Dear Sir:—You may conceive that it is with no ordinary emotion that I feel myself constrained to declare to you, as president of the standing committee of the diocese of New York, that it is my intention no longer to exercise the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church, it having become my deep and conscientious conviction that duty to God requires of me to unite myself to the one Holy and Apostolic Church in communion with the see of Rome, to which alone I feel that my allegiance is due. With great personal consideration I remain, rev'd, and dear sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN MURRAY FORBES.

☞ A cotemporary says that this would be a very benevolent world if benevolence was only more profitable. Almost any man will do good for seven per cent. upon the investment. As Dobbs very justly observed, the most rigid philanthropist likes to see the interest on his benevolence come in at least semi-annually.

IRELAND.—Letters from this unhappy country state, that cases of general suffering were never more severe than at present. The absent land proprietors, (that class of absentees who have derived their main support from Ireland, and spend little or nothing in the country,) have been called together by the government under the pressure of events to see what could be done. The results is, after visiting their landed estates, and seeing for themselves, a general surrender of the rents due, and in addition, a reduction of rent equal to 20 per cent. Quite one eighth part of the population of Ireland, are now living upon charity.

THE TIME TO READ.—How often do we hear men excuse themselves from subscribing to a paper or periodical, by saying they have no time to read. When we hear a man thus excuse himself, we conclude he has never found time to confer any substantial advantage either upon his family, his country, or himself. To hear a freeman thus express himself is truly humiliating, and we can form no other opinion than that such a man is of little importance to society.

☞ They who will abandon a friend for one error, know little of human character, and prove that their hearts are as cold as their judgments are weak.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

DIED,

In Boston, on the 22d ult., JOHN R., Jr., son of John R. and Evelina Teague, of disease of the lungs, aged two months and eighteen days.

How are my hopes, my lambent visions fled!
How disappointment racks my grief-torn heart!
My soul's delight, my darling infant's dead;
Thus end all earthly joys, thus dear connexions part.
Fondly I hoped—how vain that hope appears!
My sprightly love would live for days to come,
With filial love would soothe my lengthening years,
And twine a living wreath to grace my humble tomb.
But hope's opening buds, despair's cold blast destroys,
And pleasures only bloom to wound us when it dies;
But, Oh! the God who lent thee, (thou wast not my own,)
In wisdom claims the boon his goodness gave.
He raised thee from thy cradle to a throne,
To reign with him triumphant o'er the gloomy grave—
Then cease my soul to heave the rising sigh;
No longer chant the melancholy lay.
Stretch thy glad wings, to that bless'd region fly,
Where pensive resignation gently leads the way.

Funeral sermon by Elder Samuel Graham. Text—Gen. xxxvii. 30. "The child is not; and I, whither shall I go."

SCRIPTURE ASTRONOMY.

It is by a lunar eclipse that a mistake has been found in the Christian era; for it is well known that Christ was born when Herod was king of Judea, and Josephus affirms, that just before the death of this Herod there was an eclipse of the moon on the night between the 12th and 13th of March, but it has been clearly proved that this eclipse happened on the fourth year before what is considered the Chrisian era; therefore this era ought to be carried back three years at least. The darkness that occurred at our Savior's crucifixion, and which continued three hours, cannot be attributed to an eclipse of the sun, the passover being kept at the time of full moon: had even the two luminaries been in conjunction, the darkness could only have lasted four or five minutes, owing to their apparent diameters being so nearly equal. Dionysius, a judge of Areopagus, being at Heliopolis, and observing this preternatural phenomenon, cried out, that "Nature was either dissolving, or the God of nature suffering." He afterwards embraced the christian faith, [so called,] and suffered martyrdom for the truth of it.—Rev. B. Sharp.

SCANDAL.—How much mischief might be avoided if men and women would but divest themselves of the practice of meddling with other people's affairs, instead of attending to their own! In the first place, they have no right to do so; and in the second, they should consider the many consequences which may result from it, which they themselves would not like were they placed in a similar position.

HEALTH OF CHILDREN.—Rising early is a habit of high importance to fix in children; and in forming it there is far greater facility than in other cases. There is a natural propensity in children to early rising, which needs only to be gratified and encouraged.—They generally retire before their parents, and at daylight or at sunrise, are generally awake and anxious to rise. Many of them are actually bred up with difficulty to the habit of taking a morning nap, which, when formed, generally prevails through life. Let his father deny himself so far as to retire early, and become an early riser also. His health, enjoyment and usefulness, he may depend upon it, will be perceptibly benefited.

CONVERT TO ROME.—The Rev. Dr. Forbes, of St. Luke's Church, (Protestant Episcopal,) New York, has written the following letter to the Standing Committee of his diocese:—

New York, Nov. 21, 1849.

To the Rev. Wm. Berrian, D. D., president of the standing committee of his diocese of New York:—

Rev. and Dear Sir:—You may conceive that it is with no ordinary emotion that I feel myself constrained to declare to you, as president of the standing committee of the diocese of New York, that it is my intention no longer to exercise the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church, it having become my deep and conscientious conviction that duty to God requires of me to unite myself to the one Holy and Apostolic Church in communion with the see of Rome, to which alone I feel that my allegiance is due. With great personal consideration I remain, rev'd, and dear sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN MURRAY FORBES.

☞ A cotemporary says that this would be a very benevolent world if benevolence was only more profitable. Almost any man will do good for seven per cent. upon the investment. As Dobbs very justly observed, the most rigid philanthropist likes to see the interest on his benevolence come in at least semi-annually.

IRELAND.—Letters from this unhappy country state, that cases of general suffering were never more severe than at present. The absent land proprietors, (that class of absentees who have derived their main support from Ireland, and spend little or nothing in the country,) have been called together by the government under the pressure of events to see what could be done. The results is, after visiting their landed estates, and seeing for themselves, a general surrender of the rents due, and in addition, a reduction of rent equal to 20 per cent. Quite one eighth part of the population of Ireland, are now living upon charity.

THE TIME TO READ.—How often do we hear men excuse themselves from subscribing to a paper or periodical, by saying they have no time to read. When we hear a man thus excuse himself, we conclude he has never found time to consider any essential advantage either upon his family, his country, or himself. To hear a freeman thus express himself is truly humiliating, and we can form no other opinion than that such a man is of little importance to society.

☞ They who will abandon a friend for one error, know little of human character, and prove that their hearts are as cold as their judgments are weak.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

DIED.

In Boston, on the 22d ult., JOHN R., Jr., son of John R. and Evelina Teague, of disease of the lungs, aged two months and eighteen days.

How are my hopes, my lambent visions fled!
How disappointment racks my grief-torn heart!
My soul's delight, my darling infant's dead;
Thus end all earthly joys, thus dear connexions part.
Fondly I hoped—how vain that hope appears!
My sprightly love would live for days to come,
With filial love would soothe my lengthening years,
And twine a living wreath to grace my humble tomb.
But hope's opening buds, despair's cold blast destroys,
And pleasures only bloom to wound us when it dies;
But, Oh! the God who lent thee, (thou wast not my own,)
In wisdom claims the boon his goodness gave.
He raised thee from thy cradle to a throne,
To reign with him triumphant o'er the gloomy grave—
Then cease my soul to heave the rising sigh;
No longer chant the melancholy lay.
Stretch thy glad wings, to that bless'd region fly,
Where pensive resignation gently leads the way.

Funeral sermon by Elder Samuel Graham. Text—Gen. xxxvii. 30. "The child is not; and I, whither shall I go."

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 40.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. DEC. 20, 1849. [WHOLE No. 156.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ The following article, on the organization of the State of Deseret in the Salt Lake Valley, we take from the St. Louis Republican of October 1st, which will clearly show whether the Brighamites are trusting in the arm of flesh or in God :—

It has been already announced that the people residing in the Valley of the great Salt Lake had instituted for themsevles a form of government, which is to be submitted to Congress at its next session. We have been permitted to look at certified copies of the constitution thus established, and of the proceedings of the Legislature under it, and of the reason which led to these movements. The new State is quaintly styled the "State of Deseret," which implies, according to the Mormon history and interpretation, the "honey bee," and is significant of industry and the kindred virtues. It is scarcely necessary to say to our readers, that the population of this new State is composed altogether of persons professing the Mormon faith, of whom the number is rapidly increasing every year, that being the State to which all their emigration is tending. In these proceedings, as in everything else, the peculiarities of this people are preserved, though we cannot see that this will offer any good bar to their application for admission into the Union.

In one respect, at least, the convention which formed the constitution of the new State has set a good example. They were employed only one week in action upon it, and we do not see but what it is as good a one as some of our States have been able to form after months of deliberation. We proceed to give some of its main features.

In February last, notice was given to all the citizens of that portion of Upper California, lying east of the Sierra Nevada mountains, that a convention would be held at the great Salt Lake City, on the 5th of March, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of organizing a territorial or State government.

Accordingly, on the day appointed, the convention met, "consisting of a large portion of the inhabitants of that portion of Upper California, lying east of the Sierra Nevada mountains." Daniel Spencer was elected Chairman; William Clayton, Secretary; Thomas Bullock, Assistant Secretary; and Horace S. Eldridge, Marshal.

After several addresses, a committee of ten was appointed to draft a constitution, under which they could govern themselves until the Congress of the United States should otherwise provide. COMMITTEE: Alfred Carington, Joseph L. Heywood, William W. Phelps, David Fullmer, John S. Fullmer, Charles C. Rich, John Taylor, Parley P. Pratt, John M. Birnhisel, Erastus Snow.

The Convention then adjourned to Thursday, the 8th, when they met to receive the report of the committee.

This report was then made, in the shape of a Preamble and Constitution for the government of the new State. The first clause is as follows:—

"We, the people, grateful to the Supreme Being for the blessings hitherto enjoyed, and feeling our dependence on him for a continuation of those blessings, do ordain and establish a free and independent government, by the

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 10.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. DEC. 20, 1849. [WHOLE No. 156.

GOSPEL HERALD.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ The following article, on the organization of the State of Deseret in the Salt Lake Valley, we take from the St. Louis Republican of October 1st, which will clearly show whether the Brighamites are trusting in the arm of flesh or in God:—

It has been already announced that the people residing in the Valley of the great Salt Lake had instituted for themsevles a form of government, which is to be submitted to Congress at its next session. We have been permitted to look at certified copies of the constitution thus established, and of the proceedings of the Legislature under it, and of the reason which led to these movements. The new State is quaintly styled the "State of Deseret," which implies, according to the Mormon history and interpretation, the "honey bee," and is significant of industry and the kindred virtues. It is scarcely necessary to say to our readers, that the population of this new State is composed altogether of persons professing the Mormon faith, of whom the number is rapidly increasing every year, that being the State to which all their emigration is tending. In these proceedings, as in everything else, the peculiarities of this people are preserved, though we cannot see that this will offer any good bar to their application for admission into the Union.

In one respect, at least, the convention which formed the constitution of the new State has set a good example. They were employed only one week in action upon it, and we do not see but what it is as good a one as some of our States have been able to form after months of deliberation. We proceed to give some of its main features.

In February last, notice was given to all the citizens of that portion of Upper California, lying east of the Sierra Nevada mountains, that a convention would be held at the great Salt Lake City, on the 5th of March, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of organizing a territorial or State government.

Accordingly, on the day appointed, the convention met, "consisting of a large portion of the inhabitants of that portion of Upper California, lying east of the Sierra Nevada mountains." Daniel Spencer was elected Chairman; William Clayton, Secretary; Thomas Bullock, Assistant Secretary; and Horace S. Eldridge, Marshal.

After several addresses, a committee of ten was appointed to draft a constitution, under which they could govern themselves until the Congress of the United States should otherwise provide. COMMITTEE: Alfred Carington, Joseph L. Heywood, William W. Phelps, David Fullmer, John S. Fullmer, Charles C. Rich, John Taylor, Parley P. Pratt, John M. Birnhisel, Erastus Snow.

The Convention then adjourned to Thursday, the 8th, when they met to receive the report of the committee.

This report was then made, in the shape of a Preamble and Constitution for the government of the new State. The first clause is as follows:—

"We, the people, grateful to the Supreme Being for the blessings hitherto enjoyed, and feeling our dependence on him for a continuation of those blessings, do ordain and establish a free and independent government, by the name of the State of Deseret, including all the following boundaries, to wit:—Commecing at the 33d deg. north latitude, where it crosses the 108th deg. longitude, west of Greenwich; thence running south and west to the northern boundary of Mexco; thence west to a d down the main channel of the Gila rive., on the north rn line of Mexico, and on the nothern boundary of Lower California, to the Pacific ceau; thence along the coast northwesterly to the 118th deg. 30 min. of west longitude; thence north to whe e said line intersects the divid ng ridge of the Sierra Nevada mountains; thence norh along the summit of the Sierra Nevada mountains to the dividing range of mountains that separate the waters flowing into the Columbia river from the waters running into the Great Basin; thence easterly along the dividing range of mountains that separate said waters flowing into the Columbia river on the north from the waters flowing into the Great Ba in on the south, to the summit of Wind river chain of mountains; thence south-east and south by the dividing range of mountains that separate the waters flowing into the Gulf of Mexico from the waters flowing into the Gulf of California, to the place of beginning, as set forth in a map drawn by Charles Preuss, and published by order of the Senate of the United States, in 1848."

The powers of the government are then divided into three apartments—Legislative, Executive, and Judicial.

The article in relation to the Legislative Department is not essentially different from the constitution of the several States. Members are required to be free white male citizens of the United States, and to take an oath to support the constitution thereof. The first Senate is to consist of seventeen members, and the House of thirty-five members.

In the Executive Department, provision is made for the election of Governor, Lieutenant Governo , Secretary of State, Auditor of public accounts, and Treasurer. The judicial power is vested in a Supreme Court and such inferior tribunals as the Legislature shall establish A Chief Justice and two associates compose the Supreme Court.

The fifth article provides for the election of all the officers named in the constitution, on the first Monday of May, [last,] and for a vote for, or against, the adoption of the constitution, "and if a majority of all the legal votes shall be in favor of its adoption, the same shall take effect from and after said election."

In the Declaration of Rights, it is declared "that all men have a natural and inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and the General Assembly shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or disturbing any person in his religious worship or sentiments—provided he does not disturb the public peace nor obstruct others in their religious worship."

This Constitution was adopted on the 10th of March, 1849.

The first General Assembly met on the 2d of July. Speaker of the House Millard Snow. Clerk, Frederick Carrington. Assistant Clerk, John D. Lee. Sergeant at Arms, George D. Grant. After the organization, the Chairman announced to the House, that a majority of all the votes of the people had been for the adoption of the constitution. The following persons were announced as elected State officers:—

Governor, Brigham Young. Lieutenant Governor, Heber C. Kemball. Secretary of State, William Richards. Auditor of public accounts, William Clayton. Treasurer, Joseph S. Heywood.

On the 3d a resolution was passed providing for a joint committee to memoralize Congress for a State or Territorial Government, which was afterwards reported and adopted.

On the 5th inst. according to previous resolutions, the Legislature met in joint session, and proceeded to ballot for a delegate and Representative to Congress, when Almon W. Babbitt, Esq., having received a majority of all the votes, was declared duly elected.

On the 9th the Legislature adjourned sine

name of the State of Deseret, including all the following boundaries, to wit:—Commencing at the 33d deg. north latitude, where it crosses the 108th deg. longitude, west of Greenwich; thence running south and west on the northern boundary of Mexico; thence west to and down the middle channel of the Gila river, on the northern line of Mexico, and on the nothern boundary of Lower California, to the Pacific ocean; thence along the coast northwesterly to the 33d deg. 30 min. of west longitude; thence north to where said line intersects the dividing ridge of the Sierra Nevada mountains; thence north along the summit of the Sierra Nevada mountains to the dividing range of mountains that separate the waters flowing into the Columbia river from the waters running into the Great Basin; thence easterly along the dividing range of mountains that separate said waters flowing into the Columbia river on the north from the waters flowing into the Great Basin on the south, to the summit of Wind river chain of mountains; thence south-east and south by the dividing range of mountains that separate the waters flowing into the Gulf of Mexico from the waters flowing into the Gulf of California, to the place of beginning, as set forth in a map drawn by Charles Preuss, and published by order of the Senate of the United States, in 1848."

The powers of the government are then divided into three apartments--Legislative, Executive, and Judicial.

The article in relation to the Legislative Department is not essentially different from the constitution of the several States. Members are required to be free white male citizens of the United States, and to take an oath to support the constitution thereof. The first Senate is to consist of seventeen members, and the House of thirty-five members.

In the Executive Department, provision is made for the election of Governor, Lieutenant Governo, Secretary of State, Auditor of public accounts, and Treasurer. The judicial power is vested in a Supreme Court and such inferior tribunals as the Legislature shall establish. A Chief Justice and two associates compose the Supreme Court.

The fifth article provides for the election of all the officers named in the constitution, on the first Monday of May, [last,] and for a vote for, or against, the adoption of the constitution, "and if a majority of all the legal votes shall be in favor of its adoption, the same shall take effect from and after said election."

In the Declaration of Rights it is declared "that all men have a natural and inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and the General Assembly shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or disturbing any person in his religious worship or sentiments—provided he does not disturb the public peace nor obstruct others in their religious worship."

This Constitution was adopted on the 10th of March, 1849.

The first General Assembly met on the 2d of July. Speaker of the House Millard Snow. Clerk, Frederick Carrington. Assistant Clerk, John D. Lee. Sergeant at Arms, George D. Grant. After the organization, the Chairman announced to the House, that a majority of all the votes of the people had been for the adoption of the constitution. The following persons were announced as elected State officers:—

Governor, Brigham Young. Lieutenant Governor, Heber C. Kemball. Secretary of State, William Richards. Auditor of public accounts, William Clayton. Treasurer, Joseph S. Heywood.

On the 3d a resolution was passed providing for a joint committee to memorialize Congress for a State or Territorial Government, which was afterwards reported and adopted.

On the 5th inst. according to previous resolutions, the Legislature met in joint session, and proceeded to ballot for a delegate and Representative to Congress, when Almon W. Babbitt, Esq., having received a majority of all the votes, was declared duly elected.

On the 9th the Legislature adjourned sine

die. Before doing so, they adopted a memorial to Congress, in which they set forth the reasons which have induced them to organize a State government. They cite the failure of Congress to provide a government for the territory acquired from Mexico, the abrogation of the Mexican law, the anarchy which has followed; "the revolver and the bowie-knife, (they say,) have been the highest law of the land--the strong have prevailed against the weak--while persons, property, character and religion have been unaided, and virtue unprotected." Finally, they represented that there is now a sufficient number of inhabitants residing within the State of Deseret to support a State government, and to relieve the general government from the expense of a territorial government; and they therefore ask that the constitution accompanying this memorial be ratified, and that the State of Deseret be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the other States, or that such form of government may be given to them as may be deemed expedient; and that their delegate may be received, and their interests properly represented in the Congress of the United States.

Not a word is said in the constitution about slavery or the Wilmot proviso, such things not having entered into the imaginations of the lawgivers as important for their welfare. The constitution will be pressed upon Congress, and, if ratified, two new Senators and a representative will soon appear in that body from the State of Deseret—a State which was without a settled inhabitant four years ago, and which is some twenty-five hundred miles from the seat of the Federal Government.

BE NOT UNKIND.

It strikes us that there can be nothing more hard to bear than unkindness from those we have labored to benefit. If we have watched for opportunities for doing good to others—if we have befriended them in days of poverty, or in hours of distress—how hard will an unkind look from such fall upon the sensitive heart!—When we have spared no effort to assist and bless them---when our purse has been opened and our hearts enlarged---what will pain the heart like harsh treatment? An angry word from those we have taken to our bosoms in the hour of adversity, is like a poisoned arrow to the heart.

Reader, have you a friend? One who has assisted you; who has stood by you in the midst of darkness and danger; who has poured out the richest treasures of his heart---the warm impulses of his soul, to bless and make you happy? Then be careful how you wound his feelings by lifting your heel against him and uniting with those who would destroy his reputation and his influence. If he has been kind and indulgent to you---if every thought of his heart and every act of his life, were promotings for your happiness, no matter how he may have erred in other respects, turn not against him. If he has enemies, be his friend; stand firmly and faithfully by him. Let him feel there is one heart that sympathizes with him---one soul drawn out in love and kindness---one bosom ever open to his misfortunes, and ever ready to shield him in the dark hours of adversity.--- This is kindness---true kindness, that will not be found lacking in "that day for which all other days were made."

SCOTT'S WEEKLY PAPER.—A few weeks since the prospectus of this elegant family paper appeared in the "Lady's Dollar Newspaper," with a notice that all papers publishing the prospectus entire, or abridged, or making an editorial notice of the same were entitled to an exchange. We accordingly published it abridged at the time, and sent it marked, addressed to "Scott's Weekly Paper, Philadelphia, Pa.," but as yet have received nothing in exchange. What is the matter?

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Ruth Foster,	$1,00 to Vol. V No. 13
Jesse Seely,	1,00 to Vol. V No. 4
Elias Downing,	2,00 to Vol. IV No. 26
H. P. Brown,	3,00 to Vol. III No. 40
Judah Wear,	2,00 to Vol. III No. 52

die. Before doing so, they adopted a memorial to Congress, in which they set forth the reasons which have induced them to organize a State government. They cite the failure of Congress to provide a government for the territory acquired from Mexico, the abrogation of the Mexican law, the anarchy which has followed; "the revolver and the bowie-knife, (they say,) have been the highest law of the land--the strong have prevailed against the weak--while persons, property, character and religion have been unaided, and virtue unprotected." Finally, they represented that there is now a sufficient number of inhabitants residing within the State of Deseret to support a State government, and to relieve the general government from the expense of a territorial government; and they therefore ask that the constitution accompanying this memorial be ratified, and that the State of Deseret be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the other States, or that such form of government may be given to them as may be deemed expedient; and that their delegate may be received, and their interests properly represented in the Congress of the United States.

Not a word is said in the constitution about slavery or the Wilmot proviso, such things not having entered into the imaginations of the lawgivers as important for their welfare. The constitution will be pressed upon Congress, and, if ratified, two new Senators and a representative will soon appear in that body from the State of Deseret—a State which was without a settled inhabitant four years ago, and which is some twenty-five hundred miles from the seat of the Federal Government.

BE NOT UNKIND.

It strikes us that there can be nothing more hard to bear than unkindness from those we have labored to benefit. If we have watched for opportunities for doing good to others--if we have befriended them in days of poverty, or in hours of distress—how hard will an unkind look from such fall upon the sensitive heart!—When we have spared no effort to assist and bless them---when our purse has been opened and our hearts enlarged---what will pain the heart like harsh treatment? An angry word from those we have taken to our bosoms in the hour of adversity, is like a poisoned arrow to the heart.

Reader, have you a friend? One who has assisted you; who has stood by you in the midst of darkness and danger; who has poured out the richest treasures of his heart---the warm impulses of his soul, to bless and make you happy? Then be careful how you wound his feelings by lifting your heel against him and uniting with those who would destroy his reputation and his influence. If he has been kind and indulgent to you---if every thought of his heart and every act of his life, were promotings for your happiness, no matter how he may have erred in other respects, turn not against him. If he has enemies, be his friend; stand firmly and faithfully by him. Let him feel there is one heart that sympathizes with him---one soul drawn out in love and kindness---one bosom ever open to his misfortunes, and ever ready to shield him in the dark hours of adversity.---This is kindness---true kindness, that will not be found lacking in "that day for which all other days were made."

SCOTT'S WEEKLY PAPER.—A few weeks since the prospectus of this elegant family paper appeared in the "Lady's Dollar Newspaper," with a notice that all papers publishing the prospectus entire, or abridged, or making an editorial notice of the same were entitled to an exchange. We accordingly published it abridged at the time, and sent it marked, addressed to "Scott's Weekly Paper, Philadelphia, Pa.," but as yet have received nothing in exchange. What is the matter?

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Ruth Foster,	$1,00 to Vol. V No. 13
Jesse Seely,	1,00 to Vol. V No. 4
Elias Downing,	2,00 to Vol. IV No. 26
H. P. Brown,	3,00 to Vol III No. 40
Judah Wear,	2,00 to Vol. III No. 52

A SHORT SERMON.

BY J. S. C.

"For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." 1st Cor. xiv. 33. The assertion here made by the Apostle is by way of concluding the argument previously adduced, as may be seen by consulting the epistle. Particular reference is had in this chapter to the gift of tongues, together with the superior gift of prophecy. And Paul exhorts to covet the one and encourage or forbid not the other, but to observe order as a leading principle established by God, "as in all churches of the saints."

My object in discoursing from this text will be to compare this fundamental principle of divine truth with the present state of affairs as they exist in the nominal religious world, as also to offer some remarks in confirmation of this truth by an appeal to the works of creation and the established laws of God. 1st. God is not the author of confusion. Need I ask, who will deny this truth? If there are none to deny in word or deed, then no plea is necessary to defend it. Perhaps few individuals will volunteer publicly to controvert this principle by oral or written discussion. But many and even most the wide world over are living in confusion and disorder, both by precept and example. And, what is still more to be wondered at, by far the greater part of the enlightened community, professedly religious, are living as foreign from that order that heaven has established as true solid peace is absent from the wicked.

To prove that God is not the author of confusion we need only appeal to the works of his hands, where free moral agents have had nothing to do. Here his works have not been marred by human skill. Here vain sophistry stands apparent, contrasted with divine logic. Here, when men are required to reason with God, he cries out, I am vile, I am a worm, and no man. The perfect order of time, place, distance, sixe and connection, and revolution, together with all that is necessary to the perfection of his works, is clearly apparent. So that he that denies this doctrine charges God foolishly, and is in danger of eternal death.

Words are said to be cheap things, but the scripture saith by thy words thou shalt be condemned. But words which do not embody a principle of good or evil weigh nothing in argument. Every word is useful in its proper place, and weighs in proportion to the principle it stands connected with. For instance, sun, the fountain of light, standing in its proper place and order as a principle established by God, weighs not only in proportion to its size, but to its place and to the several bodies with which it stands connected. And probably without that word or its substance in its proper place we could not long survive in this state of being; and universal disorder must take place, and confusion throughout the solar system. So perfect is every principle established by God, that each part is always essential to the perfection of the whole.

Before God made man he made him an abode or place of habitation, with all things necessary to his happiness or perfection, with a perfect rule of life to extenuate his bliss. He made him lord over this lower world; of course free to break, or capable of breaking, the laws of his God, and of legislating for himself, and lording it in unrighteousness over this portion of his maker's creation to a certain extent. So that whatever man does in disobedience God is not the author of, as in the language of the text. And, consequently, God's being the origin of man's creation does not make him the author of confusion. For we see God's works are all perfect, which are found beyond his influence, (that is, man's influence.)

The critic may say we behold confusion among the sinless brutes, and imperfection through inanimate creation. True; but is it not clear that the sin of man has introduced this disorder and confusion also? There might not have been an imperfect tree, thorn or thistle but for man's disobedience; no stagnant swamps or sluggish streams, or cragged hills and mountains. The waters were gathered together into one place, and the dry land ap-

A SHORT SERMON.

BY J. S. C.

"For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." 1st Cor. xiv. 33. The assertion here made by the Apostle is by way of concluding the argument previously adduced, as may be seen by consulting the epistle. Particular reference is had in this chapter to the gift of tongues, together with the superior gift of prophecy. And Paul exhorts to covet the one and encourage or forbid not the other, but to observe order as a leading principle established by God, "as in all churches of the saints."

My object in discoursing from this text will be to compare this fundamental principle of divine truth with the present state of affairs as they exist in the nominal religious world, as also to offer some remarks in confirmation of this truth by an appeal to the works of creation and the established laws of God. 1st. God is not the author of confusion. Need I ask, who will deny this truth? If there are none to deny in word or deed, then no plea is necessary to defend it. Perhaps few individuals will volunteer publicly to controvert this principle by oral or written discussion. But many and even most the wide world over are living in confusion and disorder, both by precept and example. And, what is still more to be wondered at, by far the greater part of the enlightened community, professedly religious, are living as foreign from that order that heaven has established as true solid peace is absent from the wicked.

To prove that God is not the author of confusion we need only appeal to the works of his hands, where free moral agents have had nothing to do. Here his works have not been marred by human skill. Here vain sophistry stands apparent, contrasted with divine logic. Here, when men are required to reason with God, he cries out, I am vile, I am a worm, and no man. The perfect order of time, place, distance, size and connection, and revolution, together with all that is necessary to the perfection of his works, is clearly apparent. So that he that denies this doctrine charges God foolishly, and is in danger of eternal death.

Words are said to be cheap things, but the scripture saith by thy words thou shalt be condemned. But words which do not embody a principle of good or evil weigh nothing in argument. Every word is useful in its proper place, and weighs in proportion to the principle it stands connected with. For instance, sun, the fountain of light, standing in its proper place and order as a principle established by God, weighs not only in proportion to its size, but to its place and to the several bodies with which it stands connected. And probably without that word or its substance in its proper place we could not long survive in this state of being; and universal disorder must take place, and confusion throughout the solar system. So perfect is every principle established by God, that each part is always essential to the perfection of the whole.

Before God made man he made him an abode or place of habitation, with all things necessary to his happiness or perfection, with a perfect rule of life to extenuate his bliss. He made him lord over this lower world; of course free to break, or capable of breaking, the laws of his God, and of legislating for himself, and lording it in unrighteousness over this portion of his maker's creation to a certain extent. So that whatever man does in disobedience God is not the author of, as in the language of the text. And, consequently, God's being the origin of man's creation does not make him the author of confusion. For we see God's works are all perfect, which are found beyond his influence, (that is, man's influence.)

The critic may say we behold confusion among the sinless brutes, and imperfection through inanimate creation. True; but is it not clear that the sin of man has introduced this disorder and confusion also? There might not have been an imperfect tree, thorn or thistle but for man's disobedience; no stagnant swamps or sluggish streams, or cragged hills and mountains. The waters were gathered together into one place, and the dry land appeared, and presented one beautiful vast extended plain, without the least disorder or confusion. It was all pronounced good by an allwise and perfect God. It continued good until new and contrary precepts were listened to.

Here is the origin of confusion. And will any man say that God was the author of it?—God forbid. The law of the Lord is perfect, making wise the simple, and converting the soul. It appears after man had broken the law of his God, there was no salvation for him. He could not possibly mend it. He was out of order, confused, and sought to hide from the threatened judgment. But, alas! he could not. Not only his nakedness was felt, but his shame also. Like a plant disconnected from its sphere and hurled amidst universal systems into unknown regions of darkness, where naught but confusion and death in silence reigned, appeared in the dark prospect and wild maze of confusion before him.

Here love unbounded, here mercy pleads, and here infinite wisdom institutes a new order; creates, as it were, a new sun to this disordered system, and new laws and new ordinances, by obedience to which lost man might be saved, and confusion eventually restored to order. Some have supposed that the penalty was death eternal. If so, (and it is plain that no promise of life was offered, even in the most remote distance in the provision then made known,) it would appear that God is able to save where he has promised no salvation; provided he has not set bounds beyond which he can never go, and so we are informed by Jesus Christ himself, that whoso sinneth against the Holy Ghost hath no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come, but is in danger of eternal death. So that to venture upon the mercy of God in disobedience is almost as much as hoping that God will lie to spare the sinner, as some men threaten to punish their children, and repent. But God is not a man that he should lie, or the son of man that he should repent.

The denunciation upon man's disobedience appears evidently fulfilled to the letter, as days were counted before the fall, even one day as a thousand years. And so death has reigned from Adam to the present time. And thus we have it fulfilled continually and indisputably, and if any have returned they have given us no certain information of the destiny of the departed. But life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel. Christ himself hath shown us the way, the means, the end. He has even become the end of the law for righteousness, to every one that believeth, both Jew and Greek. And God out of Christ is a consuming fire.

Christ came to restore order; to bring order out of confusion. He died and rose to establish himself the triumphant king over death and the grave. All power is given to him. He can create and he destroy. By him kings reign and princes decree justice. He putteth down one and setteth up another. He reigneth over kings. He must reign till all enemies are put under his feet; even till death is swallowed up in victory, and universal peace, harmony and perfect order be restored throughout the universe of God, and peace supply the place of confusion.

But, first, let us consider a little of the consequences of breaking God's law, as it has already been developed in the history of the almost six thousand years that are past. Had the consequence of Adam's breaking over the order that God instituted ended with his death, it would have been a small affair compared with what has been the result. Here is an idea that aught to be called to mind by every individual who dares violate a known command of his maker, seeing he visits the iniquities of the fathers upon their children, as a natural consequence, and the evil may be increased in that same ratio that the parent bears to the number of his children. And who can know where the influence of a bad example will end? And, coming in contact with varied dispositions, who can know the excesses to which it may be carried?

Little thought Eve, perhaps, when listening to the reasoning of God's disputant, of what peared, and presented one beautiful vast extended plain, without the least disorder or confusion. It was all pronounced good by an allwise and perfect God. It continued good until new and contrary precepts were listened to.

Here is the origin of confusion. And will any man say that God was the author of it?—God forbid. The law of the Lord is perfect, making wise the simple, and converting the soul. It appears after man had broken the law of his God, there was no salvation for him. He could not possibly mend it. He was out of order, confused, and sought to hide from the threatened judgment. But, alas! he could not. Not only his nakedness was felt, but his shame also. Like a plant disconnected from its sphere and hurled amidst universal systems into unknown regions of darkness, where naught but confusion and death in silence reigned, appeared in the dark prospect and wild maze of confusion before him.

Here love unbounded, here mercy pleads, and here infinite wisdom institutes a new order; creates, as it were, a new sun to this disordered system, and new laws and new ordinances, by obedience to which lost man might be saved, and confusion eventually restored to order. Some have supposed that the penalty was death eternal. If so, (and it is plain that no promise of life was offered, even in the most remote distance in the provision then made known,) it would appear that God is able to save where he has promised no salvation; provided he has not set bounds beyond which he can never go, and so we are informed by Jesus Christ himself, that whoso sinneth against the Holy Ghost hath no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come, but is in danger of eternal death. So that to venture upon the mercy of God in disobedience is almost as much as hoping that God will lie to spare the sinner, as some men threaten to punish their children, and repent. But God is not a man that he should lie, or the son of man that he should repent.

The denunciation upon man's disobedience appears evidently fulfilled to the letter, as days were counted before the fall, even one day as a thousand years. And so death has reigned from Adam to the present time. And thus we have it fulfilled continually and indisputably, and if any have returned they have given us no certain information of the destiny of the departed. But life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel. Christ himself hath shown us the way, the means, the end. He has even become the end of the law for righteousness, to every one that believeth, both Jew and Greek. And God out of Christ is a consuming fire.

Christ came to restore order; to bring order out of confusion. He died and rose to establish himself the triumphant king over death and the grave. All power is given to him. He can create and he destroy. By him kings reign and princes decree justice. He putteth down one and setteth up another. He reigneth over kings. He must reign till all enemies are put under his feet; even till death is swallowed up in victory, and universal peace, harmony and perfect order be restored throughout the universe of God, and peace supply the place of confusion.

But, first, let us consider a little of the consequences of breaking God's law, as it has already been developed in the history of the almost six thousand years that are past. Had the consequence of Adam's breaking over the order that God instituted ended with his death, it would have been a small affair compared with what has been the result. Here is an idea that aught to be called to mind by every individual who dares violate a known command of his maker, seeing he visits the iniquities of the fathers upon their children, as a natural consequence, and the evil may be increased in that same ratio that the parent bears to the number of his children. And who can know where the influence of a bad example will end? And, coming in contact with varied dispositions, who can know the excesses to which it may be carried?

Little thought Eve, perhaps, when listening to the reasoning of God's disputant, of what has since followed. Her fear of punishment did not overbalance her thirst for knowledge, and participation of joy in things forbidden.—And this same want of fear, to an alarming degree, is witnessed in her posterity. Even at the present time many seem to be wholly destitute. Their continued transgressions say there is no fear of God before their eyes. But among those who profess to fear and to love God, we see most are willing to swerve at least a little from the plain commandment, as though a little deviation would not be noticed. Remember it was but a little honey taken from the end of his staff that Jonathan forfeited his life. And cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them. From these remarks, and many other arguments that might be drawn, we see the importance of close attention to the laws and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ, by which we are to escape death, and be saved in his kingdom.

I now come to speak more particularly in reference to the perfect order of the church of God, and to compare it with that which assays to be his church. And if the difference is not plainly discernible, methinks the devil can deceive much easier than when he had to dispute plain commands to offer an inducement to break the order that God had established, and thus introduce confusion and every evil work. There are many ways to detect a counterfeit in this matter. A bill being perfect excepting one counterfeit word would be sufficient to condemn it.

It would seem as though no argument were necessary to convince any individual that the church of God, in an organized state, is sought for in vain in the confused mass of Roman Catholic or Protestant sectarian divisions. But seeing that some, and not a few only, are thus bewildered, or are in fellowship with darkness and confusion, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish a righteousness of their own, and have not submitted to the righteousness of God, which is by faith, it may be here proper to set forth the church of God in the order set up by Jesus Christ, with its officers and authorities, together with its ordinances specified, and unchangeable doctrine.

1st. The order: Apostles and prophets, thirdly teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? Were these questions put to the sectarian churches, how many or which among them could answer to the Apostolic church in reference to the several grades of officers?

And then, again, if, as some pretend, they have only changed the name and not the character, in what do their official duties consist? And why are men more competent to fill the dignified station of prophet and apostle than formerly, while destitute of the functions of that or those offices? Suppose a man assumes to be cashier of a certain bank bill by answering to the name of the real cashier. When the bill is presented to be footed, and the cash equivalent demanded, what will the mere name amount to?

So also of the present day, heaps of teachers that swallow up the name of prophet under the name of diviners, and so on. When the official duties of the prophet's office are called for, what answer do we get? And what but confusion of face and confusion of language might we reasonably expect from such a mass of disorder and confusion? God is not the author, or any church destitute of the officers and authorities and gifts by which he honors his church. God never honors a people who reject his prophets.

The present is not the first time that men have despised those officers and that office work that God has employed in his vineyard. And God is unchangeable. As he has done he will do again. He will miserably destroy all pretenders who assume to fill offices to which God appointed not. We will admit of course that there might be a counterfeit where the real has since followed. Her fear of punishment did not overbalance her thirst for knowledge, and participation of joy in things forbidden.—And this same want of fear, to an alarming degree, is witnessed in her posterity. Even at the present time many seem to be wholly destitute. Their continued transgressions say there is no fear of God before their eyes. But among those who profess to fear and to love God, we see most are willing to swerve at least a little from the plain commandment, as though a little deviation would not be noticed. Remember it was but a little honey taken from the end of his staff that Jonathan forfeited his life. And cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them. From these remarks, and many other arguments that might be drawn, we see the importance of close attention to the laws and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ, by which we are to escape death, and be saved in his kingdom.

I now come to speak more particularly in reference to the perfect order of the church of God, and to compare it with that which assays to be his church. And if the difference is not plainly discernible, methinks the devil can deceive much easier than when he had to dispute plain commands to offer an inducement to break the order that God had established, and thus introduce confusion and every evil work. There are many ways to detect a counterfeit in this matter. A bill being perfect excepting one counterfeit word would be sufficient to condemn it.

It would seem as though no argument were necessary to convince any individual that the church of God, in an organized state, is sought for in vain in the confused mass of Roman Catholic or Protestant sectarian divisions. But seeing that some, and not a few only, are thus bewildered, or are in fellowship with darkness and confusion, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish a righteousness of their own, and have not submitted to the righteousness of God, which is by faith, it may be here proper to set forth the church of God in the order set up by Jesus Christ, with its officers and authorities, together with its ordinances specified, and unchangeable doctrine.

1st. The order: Apostles and prophets, thirdly teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? Were these questions put to the sectarian churches, how many or which among them could answer to the Apostolic church in reference to the several grades of officers?

And then, again, if, as some pretend, they have only changed the name and not the character, in what do their official duties consist? And why are men more competent to fill the dignified station of prophet and apostle than formerly, while destitute of the functions of that or those offices? Suppose a man assumes to be cashier of a certain bank bill by answering to the name of the real cashier. When the bill is presented to be footed, and the cash equivalent demanded, what will the mere name amount to?

So also of the present day, heaps of teachers that swallow up the name of prophet under the name of diviners, and so on. When the official duties of the prophet's office are called for, what answer do we get? And what but confusion of face and confusion of language might we reasonably expect from such a mass of disorder and confusion? God is not the author, or any church destitute of the officers and authorities and gifts by which he honors his church. God never honors a people who reject his prophets.

The present is not the first time that men have despised those officers and that office work that God has employed in his vineyard. And God is unchangeable. As he has done he will do again. He will miserably destroy all pretenders who assume to fill offices to which God appointed not. We will admit of course that there might be a counterfeit where the real name was not at all changed, only in the style of the hand writing. But who will be so barefaced as to attempt to palm off upon the public or impose upon the credulity, or take advantage of the ignorance of mankind so far as to cheat in this matter by pretending to genuine honesty, after having changed both name and character?

Who for one moment will hold his peace, when thus imposed upon? And are we thus involved? Are we so easily duped? so completely covered with sectarian churches upon churches that we are shut out from the light of common sense, as well as the light of revelation? Need we any further refutation?—Need we further to examine for evidence to condemn? Shall we withhold our judgment in this case for fear of opposing truth or things sacred? If we cannot tell truth from error, let us give up the search, and make the best of the present time.

But there is none occasion for despairing in this matter. God is the author of his church and of its order, and of its doctrine, and of its ordinances; and they are all plain and easy to be understood, and never was and never can be successfully counterfeited so as to make it difficult to detect the fraud. So perfect is the work of God in the redemption of mankind and in the establishment of his kingdom among men, that it is decreed by the Almighty that it shall be diverse from all churches and kingdoms upon the earth, having in it those principles of holiness and that perfect order which are essential to its perfection and eternal duration. Even so. Amen.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

The extremes of society in England are awful and threatening, foreboding a speedy crisis, if not averted by conciliatory, equitable and vigorous measures—measures that will place the laboring man nearer on a level, as respects his worldly position, with those who profit by his industry and luxuriate on the fruit of his toil. We are the richest, and at the same time the poorest nation on the face of the earth. Palaces with fragrant odors are surrounded with cellars and garrets, deadly with typhus; the opera-clad dandy steps from his magnificent mansion, and passes unheedingly by the shivering, half-naked, famished wretch, whose only couch is the flagstone of the pavement, and his pillow the stepping-stone of the door. The contrast is too great to last, and too much for human endurance to prolong. But it is not the poor—in the commonplace acceptation of the word—nor is it the simply destitute who are to be dreaded, but those are to be feared who are reduced to want by no fault of their own, whilst they behold interests flourishing—interests they have been led to believe identified with their own, but which they afterwards discover are separated by the overwhelming control exercised by capital over labor.

Then comes the natural and oft repeated question—"Why should others reap all the benefits of labor, and revel in luxury, whilst the producers are perishing from want?" One day this problem must be solved, and then wo to the tyrannical oppressors who have fattened by trafficing on the labor of their fellow men! At present capital and labor regard each other with jealous looks; the proprietor of the former characterizes the latter as belonging to one of the dangerous, discontented, and turbulent class that must be put down; while the working man justly regards with a dissatisfied eye the product of his own soil swelling the revenues of a master who scarcely grants the originator of his wealth sufficient for the decencies and necessaries of life. This must shortly be altered, or what would now be considered as a concession, will, in a little time, be converted into compulsion. Social reforms are daily becoming the most pressing of all reforms, and the great, the all-absorbing question must be—postpone it as you will for a time—the condition of the working classes. Land was at first the capital that swept everything before it, then came capital, and now must come labor—the only real and permanent capital—the only currency upon which society can with safety calculate for its endurance, and which must before long assert its supremacy and independence. It is a notion, then, too absurd to entertain that the possessors of this only genuine and legitimate capital are forever to remain crushed to the earth and borne down by abject misery and neglect, whilst they possess in their sinews the wealth of the nation.

It is because the working men of England have never raised the cry of "down with the rich," or put forth their tremendous and overwhelming power to crush an impotent minority—is it for that reason the cry of "down with the poor" is to be persisted in, and carried out to the very letter—that barracks are built in our manufacturing towns to contain soldiery, sufficient to suppress, by the bayonet and the sabre, the voice of remonstrance and complaint—and that the petitions of the poor are of no value or weight with the legislature of the country, unless backed by the influence of wealth, or that of political interest? There is no country in the world that has reaped such immense benefit from the exertions of the working classes as England, and in no other country on the face of the earth are they so neglected and contemned.

☞ The bright spots of a man's life are few enough, without blotting any out; and since for a moment of mirth, we have an hour of sadness, it were a sorry policy to diminish the few rays that illumine our chequered existence. Life is an April day—sunshine and showers. The heart, like the earth, would cease to yield good fruit, were it not sometimes watered with the tears of sensibility, and the fruit would be worthless, but for the sushine of smiles.

☞ The best cure for low spirits is business. One half of the melancholy that you run against is caused by indolence and feather beds. The best fun in the world is activity.

☞ Good sense is the body of poetic genius; fancy its drapery; motion, its life; and imagination its soul, that is everywhere, and on such, and forms all into one graceful and intelligent whole.

name was not at all changed, only in the style of the hand writing. But who will be so barefaced as to attempt to palm off upon the public or impose upon the credulity, or take advantage of the ignorance of mankind so far as to cheat in this matter by pretending to genuine honesty, after having changed both name and character?

Who for one moment will hold his peace, when thus imposed upon? And are we thus involved? Are we so easily duped? so completely covered with sectarian churches upon churches that we are shut out from the light of common sense, as well as the light of revelation? Need we any further refutation? Need we further to examine for evidence to condemn? Shall we withhold our judgment in this case for fear of opposing truth or things sacred? If we cannot tell truth from error, let us give up the search, and make the best of the present time.

But there is none occasion for despairing in this matter. God is the author of his church and of its order, and of its doctrine, and of its ordinances; and they are all plain and easy to be understood, and never was and never can be successfully counterfeited so as to make it difficult to detect the fraud. So perfect is the work of God in the redemption of mankind and in the establishment of his kingdom among men, that it is decreed by the Almighty that it shall be diverse from all churches and kingdoms upon the earth, having in it those principles of holiness and that perfect order which are essential to its perfection and eternal duration. Even so. Amen.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

The extremes of society in England are awful and threatening, foreboding a speedy crisis, if not averted by conciliatory, equitable and vigorous measures—measures that will place the laboring man nearer on a level, as respects his worldly position, with those who profit by his industry and luxuriate on the fruit of his toil. We are the richest, and at the same time the poorest nation on the face of the earth. Palaces with fragrant odors are surrounded with cellars and garrets, deadly with typhus; the opera-clad dandy steps from his magnificent mansion, and passes unheedingly by the shivering, half-naked, famished wretch, whose only couch is the flagstone of the pavement, and his pillow the stepping-stone of the door. The contrast is too great to last, and too much for human endurance to prolong. But it is not the poor—in the commonplace acceptation of the word—nor is it the simply destitute who are to be dreaded, but those are to be feared who are reduced to want by no fault of their own, whilst they behold interests flourishing—interests they have been led to believe identified with their own, but which they afterwards discover are separated by the overwhelming control exercised by capital over labor.

Then comes the natural and oft repeated question—"Why should others reap all the benefits of labor, and revel in luxury, whilst the producers are perishing from want?" One day this problem must be solved, and then wo to the tyrannical oppressors who have fattened by trafficing on the labor of their fellow men! At present capital and labor regard each other with jealous looks; the proprietor of the former characterizes the latter as belonging to one of the dangerous, discontented, and turbulent class that must be put down; while the working man justly regards with a dissatisfied eye the product of his own soul swelling the revenues of a master who scarcely grants the originator of his wealth sufficient for the decencies and necessaries of life. This must shortly be altered, or what would now be considered as a concession, will, in a little time, be converted into compulsion. Social reforms are daily becoming the most pressing of all reforms, and the great, the all-absorbing question must be—postpone it as you will for a time—the condition of the working classes. Land was at first the capital that swept everything before it, then came capital, and now must come labor—the only real and permanent capital—the only currency upon which society can with safety calculate for its endurance, and which must before long assert its supremacy and independence. It is a notion, then, too absurd to entertain that the possessors of this only genuine and legitimate capital are forever to remain crushed to the earth and borne down by abject misery and neglect, whilst they possess in their sinews the wealth of the nation.

It is because the working men of England have never raised the cry of "down with the rich," or put forth their tremendous and overwhelming power to crush an impotent minority—is it for that reason the cry of "down with the poor" is to be persisted in, and carried out to the very letter—that barracks are built in our manufacturing towns to contain soldiery, sufficient to suppress, by the bayonet and the sabre, the voice of remonstrance and complaint—and that the petitions of the poor are of no value or weight with the legislature of the country, unless backed by the influence of wealth, or that of political interest? There is no country in the world that has reaped such immense benefit from the exertions of the working classes as England, and in no other country on the face of the earth are they so neglected and contemned.

☞ The bright spots of a man's life are few enough, without blotting any out; and since for a moment of mirth, we have an hour of sadness, it were a sorry policy to diminish the few rays that illumine our chequered existence. Life is an April day—sunshine and showers. The heart, like the earth, would cease to yield good fruit, were it not sometimes watered with the tears of sensibility, and the fruit would be worthless, but for the sushine of smiles.

☞ The best cure for low spirits is business. One half of the melancholy that you run against is caused by indolence and feather beds. The best fun in the world is activity.

☞ Good sense is the body of poetic genius; fancy its drapery & motion, its life; and imagination its soul, that is everywhere, and on such, and forms all into one graceful and intelligent whole.

THE HEART'S MEMORY.

BY Z. PORTER.

With solemn impulse memory traces back
To spots in life's variegated track,
Where hope—a pearl drop'd here, another there,
Till bankrupt prov'd—she left us to despair.
Staid retrospection lends a soothing view,
Of blooming flow'rs, that by the way-side grew,
And buds of promise, lovely, sweet and fair,
E'er blooming, perish'd from the heart's parterre.
The spoiler comes—exempt are no home bow'rs;—
He culls and takes from all our darling flow'rs—
Bears them in triumph from our sight away,
The yearning soul cries out where—where are they?
Time has its signals all along the road,
That tells us where his reckless agent strode.
Yet those mark'd bounds thought dearly traces,
And loves to linger near those sacred places.
The past! the past! my soul is with the past!
The unwearied stream of time flows on so fast,
To-morrow and to-morrow—as to day—
Can scarce be greeted ere they're pass'd away.
All life that is can but a moment last,
And quick as thought the present is the past.
Time, the extinguisher, makes no delay,
Then let us trust in God, on Him rely,
That we may dare to live, nor fear to die.
While Faith points upward 'yond the silent tomb,
Where bright as stars in sweet perennial bloom,
And in their native soil, with angels fair,
Do our own blossoms thrive 'neath heav'nly care,
Forever green where sweet life-fountains play,
Where shines Infinite Love with joy-inspiring ray.

THE BEGGAR.

At the time of the great famine, on a cold winter's day a poor woman came to a village and began begging for charity. Her clothes were clean, but torn and patched in many places. The snow was falling fast—her head was wrapped in a handkerchief; in one hand she had a stick and with the other she carried a basket. From most of the houses she received only a very scanty succor: even some rich persons drove her away with harsh words. There was but one poor peasant who invited her into his house, where there was a good fire in the grate, and his wife took a cake out of the oven and gave the woman a large slice.

The next day every one where this stranger had asked for charity was invited quite unexpectedly, and to the general surprise, to sup at the castle. When all the guests were arrived, they proceeded to the dining room, where they saw two tables laid out. One was very small, but upon it were many exquisite dishes. The other was large and magnificent, had a great number of plates, but they held but scanty nourishment—such as a piece of half musty bread, a couple of potatoes, a handful of brand, and some held nothing at all.

Whilst the guests were wondering what this meant, the lady of the castle spoke thus:—"The beggar who passed through the village was myself, in order to judge for myself, of your charity in this time of need. The two poor people whom you see here, took me in and treated me the best they could. In consequence they will eat at my table to-day, and I will give them a pension. As to you, regale yourselves with the offerings you gave me yesterday, and which you see here upon your plates; and fail not to reflect while you do honor to the good cheer, that thus you may be treated in another world.

This story is not fabulous; the heroine of the adventure is Lady Grey.—Ex paper.

I HAVE NO TIME TO STUDY.—The idea about the want of time is a mere phantom. Franklin found time in the midst of all his labors to dive into the hidden recesses of philosophy, and to explore the untrodden path of science. The great Frederick, with an empire at his direction, in the midst of war, on the eve of battles which were to decide the fate of his kingdom, found time to revel in the charms of philosophy and intellectual pleasures. Bonaparte, with all Europe at his disposal, with kings in his anti-chamber begging for vacant thrones, with thousands of men whose destinies were suspended on the brittle thread of his arbitraty pleasures, had time to converse with books. Cæsar, when he had curbed the spirits of the Roman people, and was thronged with visitors from the remotest kingdoms, found time for intellecual cultivation. Every man has time if he improves it as well as he might, he can reap a three-fold reward. Let mechanics then make use of the hours at their disposal, if they want to obtain a proper influence in society. They are the life-blood of the community; they can if they please hold in their hands the destinies of the nations; they are numerous, respectable, and powerful; and they have only to be educated to make laws for the nations rightly.

THE JEWS.—It is thought wonderful that these people should have so long remained separate from all others, and have continued to believe in their peculiar faith. But it must be remembered that their faith is acknowledged by the civilized world, that all Christian nations regard them as the people first chosen by the Almighty, and their prophets and teachers as inspired men. Therfore they are continually reminded of their faith, and of the wonderful history of their nation. This keeps them in countenance, and preserves their respect for their religion, and their nation.—N. Y. Daily Times.

THE CHICKASAW INDIANS.—From the Texas papers we learn that the Chickasaw tribe of Indians lately concluded near Fort Wachita one of their largest and best attended councils. The delegation of the tribe to Washington city had but a short time previously returned, and were to report the situation of their affairs with the U. S. government. Having been swindled by speculators and sharpers out of hundreds and thousands of dollars of their money, the Indians are beginning to be greatly alarmed for the safety of their national funds. They have memorialized President Taylor to remove their present agent, Col. Upshaw, stating that they have lost all confidence in him, and charging him with want of capacity and honesty. They recommend Charles A. Gallaway, Esq, as a successor to Col. Upshaw.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

THE HEART'S MEMORY.

BY Z. PORTER.

With solemn impulse memory traces back
To spots in life's variegated track,
Where hope—a pearl drop'd here, another there,
Till bankrupt prov'd—she left us to despair.
Staid retrospection lends a soothing view,
Of blooming flow'rs, that by the way-side grew,
And buds of promise, lovely, sweet and fair,
E'er blooming, perish'd from the heart's parterre.
The spoiler comes—exempt are no home bow'rs;—
He culls and takes from all our darling flow'rs—
Bears them in triumph from our sight away,
The yearning soul cries out where—where are they?
Time has its signals all along the road,
That tells us where his reckless agent strode.
Yet those mark'd bounds thought dearly traces,
And loves to linger near those sacred places.
The past! the past! my soul is with the past!
The unwearied stream of time flows on so fast,
To-morrow and to-morrow—as to day—
Can scarce be greeted ere they're pass'd away.
All life that is can but a moment last,
And quick as thought the present is the past.
Time, the extinguisher, makes no delay,
Then let us trust in God, on Him rely,
That we may dare to live, nor fear to die.
While Faith points upward 'yond the silent tomb,
Where bright as stars in sweet perennial bloom,
And in their native soil, with angels fair,
Do our own blossoms thrive 'neath heav'nly care,
Forever green where sweet life-fountains play,
Where shines Infinite Love with joy-inspiring ray.

THE BEGGAR.

At the time of the great famine, on a cold winter's day a poor woman came to a village and began begging for charity. Her clothes were clean, but torn and patched in many places. The snow was falling fast—her head was wrapped in a handkerchief; in one hand she had a stick and with the other she carried a basket. From most of the houses she received only a very scanty succor: even some rich persons drove her away with harsh words. There was but one poor peasant who invited her into his house, where there was a good fire in the grate, and his wife took a cake out of the oven and gave the woman a large slice.

The next day every one where this stranger had asked for charity was invited quite unexpectedly, and to the general surprise, to sup at the castle. When all the guests were arrived, they proceeded to the dining room, where they saw two tables laid out. One was very small, but upon it were many exquisite dishes. The other was large and magnificent, had a great number of plates, but they held but scanty nourishment—such as a piece of half musty bread, a couple of potatoes, a handful of brand, and some held nothing at all.

Whilst the guests were wondering what this meant, the lady of the castle spoke thus:—"The beggar who passed through the village was myself, in order to judge for myself, of your charity in this time of need. The two poor people whom you see here, took me in and treated me the best they could. In consequence they will eat at my table to-day, and I will give them a pension. As to you, regale yourselves with the offerings you gave me yesterday, and which you see here upon your plates; and fail not to reflect while you do honor to the good cheer, that thus you may be treated in another world.

This story is not fabulous; the heroine of the adventure is Lady Grey.—Ex paper.

I HAVE NO TIME TO STUDY.—The idea about the want of time is a mere phantom. Franklin found time in the midst of all his labors to dive into the hidden recesses of philosophy, and to explore the untrodden path of science. The great Frederick, with an empire at his direction, in the midst of war, on the eve of battles which were to decide the fate of his kingdom, found time to revel in the charms of philosophy and intellectual pleasures. Bonaparte, with all Europe at his disposal, with kings in his anti-chamber begging for vacant thrones, with thousands of men whose destinies were suspended on the brittle thread of his arbitraty pleasures, had time to converse with books. Cæsar, when he had curbed the spirits of the Roman people, and was thronged with visitors from the remotest kingdoms, found time for intellecual cultivation. Every man has time if he improves it as well as he might, he can reap a three-fold reward. Let mechanics then make use of the hours at their disposal, if they want to obtain a proper influence in society. They are the life-blood of the community; they can if they please hold in their hands the destinies of the nations; they are numerous, respectable, and powerful; and they have only to be educated to make laws for the nations rightly.

THE JEWS.—It is thought wonderful that these people should have so long remained separate from all others, and have continued to believe in their peculiar faith. But it must be remembered that their faith is acknowledged by the civilized world, that all Christian nations regard them as the people first chosen by the Almighty, and their prophets and teachers as inspired men. Therfore they are continually reminded of their faith, and of the wonderful history of their nation. This keeps them in countenance, and preserves their respect for their religion, and their nation.—N. Y. Daily Times.

THE CHICKASAW INDIANS.—From the Texas papers we learn that the Chickasaw tribe of Indians lately concluded near Fort Wachita one of their largest and best attended councils. The delegation of the tribe to Washington city had but a short time previously returned, and were to report the situation of their affairs with the U. S. government. Having been swindled by speculators and sharpers out of hundreds and thousands of dollars of their money, the Indians are beginning to be greatly alarmed for the safety of their national funds. They have memorialized President Taylor to remove their present agent, Col. Upshaw, stating that they have lost all confidence in him, and charging him with want of capacity and honesty. They recommend Charles A. Gallaway, Esq, as a successor to Col. Upshaw.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 41.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. DEC. 27, 1849. [WHOLE No. 167.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM.

It is common to judge of systems by their adherents; and with proper qualifications this is right. "By their fruits ye shall know them," is a saying of our Saviour; true for all time, in all the senses intended. But like every other law enunciated by him, it must be understood, and properly applied.

We often see amiable men; and those who pass as good men; and whom we may hope in the judgment of charity to be such, adopting views of truth, which are plainly erroneous; and applying Christ's rule above stated, with no discrimination, the world draws an inference at once in favor of their systems of error. It seems hard to conceive that men of piety could embrace such heinous errors as these are alledged to be. It is not easily credited, that men of enlarged minds, such as these appear to be, in relation to most things, could be carried away by follies so contemptible. And yet constant experience affirms that it is so. A man of strong and disciplined mind—disciplined in certain directions—takes up with a foolish and absurd dogma, and pins his faith to it as if it were an ascertained truth. A man who has proved himself a sincere Christian by his works of love, falls in with some specious but pestilent error and embraces it with all his soul. A mild and amiable man lays hold of a shred of belief which, when carried into practice, would work nothing but destruction among men, and hugs t to his bosom. As the world reasons, the fact that such men embrace such doctrines, affords presumptive evidence that the doctrines are truth; and if a doubt is expressed, the words of our Lord are quoted in proof.

The error commonly lies in supposing the good which we see in the man's character and life, to be the fruits of his error; whereas it is no such thing at all. The good we see is the fruit of better doctrines earlier held; of instruction elsewhere given; and of a character formed under better auspices. Thus we find persons who infer that Mormonism cannot be the system of villiany it is represented to be, because there are quiet and honest people connected with it. The latter fact is undoubtedly true; but their honesty and quietude is no part of the fruit of Mormonism. It is the result of an earlier religious education; perhaps in connection with some of the denominations of the land, with whom for a time they may have held an unblamed membership. Wait till their children, and their children's children have been educated as Mormons, and they will then be found to correspond with it in every feature of its atrociousness. It is not according to the analogies of nature for fruits to appear without an interval from their time of ripening. No more will the fruits of truth or error be gathered without time for their growth and ripening.

We must not then mistake the product of one system for that of another. We are not entitled to suppose that because the Roman Catholic, or Unitarian, or Universalist, or Swedenborgian churches embrace men whom we personally esteem, that these systems of belief are of course right. The question is, what will the product of the system be when its own fruit has time for perfection? The men of whom we speak may possibly be saved; their errors being the "wood, hay or stubble," to

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 41.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, DEC. 27, 1849. [WHOLE No. 167.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM.

It is common to judge of systems by their adherents; and with proper qualifications this is right. "By their fruits ye shall know them," is a saying of our Saviour; true for all time, in all the senses intended. But like every other law enunciated by him, it must be understood, and properly applied.

We often see amiable men; and those who pass as good men; and whom we may hope in the judgment of charity to be such, adopting views of truth, which are plainly erroneous; and applying Christ's rule above stated, with no discrimination, the world draws an inference at once in favor of their systems of error. It seems hard to conceive that men of piety could embrace such heinous errors as these are alledged to be. It is not easily credited, that men of enlarged minds, such as these appear to be, in relation to most things, could be carried away by follies so contemptible. And yet constant experience affirms that it is so. A man of strong and disciplined mind—disciplined in certain directions—takes up with a foolish and absurd dogma, and pins his faith to it as if it were an ascertained truth. A man who has proved himself a sincere Christian by his works of love, falls in with some specious but pestilent error and embraces it with all his soul. A mild and amiable man lays hold of a shred of belief which, when carried into practice, would work nothing but destruction among men, and hugs it to his bosom. As the world reasons, the fact that such men embrace such doctrines, affords presumptive evidence that the doctrines are truth; and if a doubt is expressed, the words of our Lord are quoted in proof.

The error commonly lies in supposing the good which we see in the man's character and life, to be the fruits of his error; whereas it is no such thing at all. The good we see is the fruit of better doctrines earlier held; of instruction elsewhere given; and of a character formed under better auspices. Thus we find persons who infer that Mormonism cannot be the system of villiany it is represented to be, because there are quiet and honest people connected with it. The latter fact is undoubtedly true; but their honesty and quietude is no part of the fruit of Mormonism. It is the result of an earlier religious education; perhaps in connection with some of the denominations of the land, with whom for a time they may have held an unblamed membership. Wait till their children, and their children's children have been educated as Mormons, and they will then be found to correspond with it in every feature of its atrociousness. It is not according to the analogies of nature for fruits to appear without an interval from their time of ripening. No more will the fruits of truth or error be gathered without time for their growth and ripening.

We must not then mistake the product of one system for that of another. We are not entitled to suppose that because the Roman Catholic, or Unitarian, or Universalist, or Swedenborgian churches embrace men whom we personally esteem, that these systems of belief are of course right. The question is, what will the product of the system be when its own fruit has time for perfection? The men of whom we speak may possibly be saved; their errors being the "wood, hay or stubble," to be burned up, while their own souls are delivered as by fire. No error we may be sure can be safely hugged to a man's bosom. The product of a lie cannot be fruit fit for the garner of God; and it makes no difference who the men are by whom it is cherished and cultured. Let us look narrowly at the truth in the heading of this article, and read it as it should be read. "By their fruits ye shall know them."—Prairie Herald.

☞ "It is a poor rule that will not work both ways;" therefore let us apply the reasoning in the foregoing article to Protestantism.—It is a common error to suppose the good "which we see in the man's character and life to be the fruits of his error;" whereas it is no such thing at all. The good which we see is the fruit of better doctrines, earlier held; of instruction elsewhere given; and of a character formed under better auspices. Thus we find persons who have inferred that the Protestant reformation could not be "the system of villainy it is represented to be, because there" were "quiet and honest people connected with it." The latter fact is undoubtedly true; but their honesty and quietude was "no part of the fruit of" Protestantism. It was "the result of an earlier religious education, perhaps in connection with" the Roman Catholic church, "with whom for a time they may have held an unblamed membership." 'Their children and their children's children, who have been educated as Protestants, have been found to correspond with it in every feature of its atrociousness.'

Whenever Catholic nations have conquered uncivilized nations they have converted them. But all the countries which are accessions to Protestantism have become so by colonizing and extirminating the natives; not one by converting them. The votaries of this hydra-headed system generally subsist by oppressing, defrauding and robbing each other, and those around them. The time has been when they amused themselves by torturing and killing one another; but since the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has been established the Protestants of America have been nearly all engaged in a general crusade against her. And although they have several times succeeded in plundering and robbing the saints of their possessions; tortured and killed twenty-two of their number, among whom were Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the prophet and patriarch, whom they murdered in cold blood, after they had pledged their faith for their protection, yet the church still lives, and will triumph, for God is with her. "Let us look narrowly at the truth in the heading" of the preceding article, and understand it as it reads. "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire."

Georgetown, Mass., Dec. 9th, 1849.

FRANCIS COOPER,—DEAR SIR:—As my term for the Herald expires with the 36th No., I wish it to be continued as heretofore the ensuing six months, for which I send you one dollar. It is the only messenger among all the Latter Day Saints that visits me in my lonely situation. The glad tidings which it often brings revives my poor care-worn spirit, and keeps my sinking hope alive. There sometimes comes to hand a little sheet from Wm. Smith's Editor, but it contains so much blackguardism, and pounces so heavily on Pres. Strang, I do not like it. I saw in the Herald sometime since a notice that E. Page had an appointment to come to Georgetown. I fondly hoped I should once more have the privilege of seeing some of the faithful servants of God, but thus far I have hoped in vain. I have also learned that Elder S. Graham has been in Boston, but know not that he is there now. If he is, I make this request, that he may come to Georgetown. There are a few Brighamites left here, and a few who do not follow Brigham, but they seem to be lost in the fog that has overspread the church. I feel that there is something yet to be done in this region. There are souls here to save. Will not the Lord yet have mercy on the people in this region? To the saints I would say, I feel the need of your prayers while I dwell here deso-

be burned up, while their own souls are delivered as by fire. No error we may be sure can be safely hugged to a man's bosom. The product of a lie cannot be fruit fit for the garner of God; and it makes no difference who the men are by whom it is cherished and cultured. Let us look narrowly at the truth in the heading of this article, and read it as it should be read. "By their fruits ye shall know them."—Prairie Herald.

☞ "It is a poor rule that will not work both ways;" therefore let us apply the reasoning in the foregoing article to Protestantism.—It is a common error to suppose the good "which we see in the man's character and life to be the fruits of his error;" whereas it is no such thing at all. The good which we see is the fruit of better doctrines, earlier held; of instruction elsewhere given; and of a character formed under better auspices. Thus we find persons who have inferred that the Protestant reformation could not be "the system of villainy it is represented to be, because there" were "quiet and honest people connected with it." The latter fact is undoubtedly true; but their honesty and quietude was "no part of the fruit of" Protestantism. It was "the result of an earlier religious education, perhaps in connection with" the Roman Catholic church, "with whom for a time they may have held an unblamed membership." 'Their children and their children's children, who have been educated as Protestants, have been found to correspond with it in every feature of its atrociousness.'

Whenever Catholic nations have conquered uncivilized nations they have converted them. But all the countries which are accessions to Protestantism have become so by colonizing and extirminating the natives; not one by converting them. The votaries of this hydra-headed system generally subsist by oppressing, defrauding and robbing each other, and those around them The time has been when they amused themselves by torturing and killing one another; but since the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has been established the Protestants of America have been nearly all engaged in a general crusade against her. And although they have several times succeeded in plundering and robbing the saints of their possessions; tortured and killed twenty-two of their number, among whom were Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the prophet and patriarch, whom they murdered in cold blood, after they had pledged their faith for their protection, yet the church still lives, and will triumph, for God is with her. "Let us look narrowly at the truth in the heading" of the preceding article, and understand it as it reads. "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire."

Georgetown, Mass., Dec. 9th, 1849.

FRANCIS COOPER,—DEAR SIR:—As my term for the Herald expires with the 36th No., I wish it to be continued as heretofore the ensuing six months, for which I send you one dollar. It is the only messenger among all the Latter Day Saints that visits me in my lonely situation. The glad tidings which it often brings revives my poor care-worn spirit, and keeps my sinking hope alive. There sometimes comes to hand a little sheet from Wm. Smith's Editor, but it contains so much blackguardism, and pounces so heavily on Pres. Strang, I do not like it. I saw in the Herald sometime since a notice that E. Page had an appointment to come to Georgetown. I fondly hoped I should once more have the privilege of seeing some of the faithful servants of God, but thus far I have hoped in vain. I have also learned that Elder S. Graham has been in Boston, but know not that he is there now. If he is, I make this request, that he may come to Georgetown. There are a few Brighamites left here, and a few who do not follow Brigham, but they seem to be lost in the fog that has overspread the church. I feel that there is something yet to be done in this region. There are souls here to save. Will not the Lord yet have mercy on the people in this region? To the saints I would say, I feel the need of your prayers while I dwell here desolate and lonely. Perhaps some may ask why I do not gather with the saints. I would give you a history of my local situation, but it would take to much space. Suffice it to say, I am a captive in Babylon. My way is hedged up on every side. The Lord only knows when I shall obtain a release.

A short time since I received a letter from a friend who has gone with the Brighamite camp to the Salt Valley. Among other things it contained a sharp rebuke for having turned away from the principles I once embraced. But I here take the opportunity to say to all saints or people, (Brighamites not excepted,) that I have not turned away from any principle that is contained in the fulness of the Gospel. No, not even the principle of having a prophet to stand at the head of the church, which they themselves have abundantly taught, without which there could be no church of Christ. Brigham Young has said there was none on earth. So of course they are not it. This writer describes the Salt Valley as being one of the Lord's secret chambers. Jesus said, when they shall say lo here, or lo there, believe them not. If they shall say he is in the desert, go not after them. If they shall say he is in the secret chambers, believe it not. Give me the word of the Lord, and not of men. Yours in the faith of the new and everlasting covenant,

A. P. HOLMES.

☞ The human body consists of 240 bones, 9 kinds of articulation or joinings, 100 cartilages or ligaments, 400 muscles or tendons, and 100 nerves, besides blood, arteries, veins, &c.

WOMEN STRONGER THAN OXEN.—A distinguished physician says: I anticipate the period when the fairest portion of creation will step forth unencumbered with slabs of walnut and tiers of whalebone. The constitution of our females must be first rate to withstand in any tolerable degree the terrible inflictions of the corset eight long hours every day. No animal could survive it. Take the honest ox, and inclose his sides with hoop poles, put an oak plank beneath him, and gird the whole with a bed cord and demand of him labor.---He would labor indeed, but it would be for breath.

A SHORT ROAD TO COMFORT.—As a straight or right line is the shortest distance between two points, so the obedience of faith is the shortest road to comfort. They who turn aside after their crooked ways, only weary themselves with vanity; till at length their day is consumed, and their mercies gone, God leads them forth with the workers of iniquity. But wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. Here is no painful retrospective. Lost time and wasted powers shall never reproach the service of God. They belong to the folly of sinners and the wages of sin; while every act of holy obedience gives present satisfaction, and gains upon ultimate hope.—Mason.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.—Life is a battle.---The field is the world, and every son of Adam has his part to act in the great struggle. But, of the vast host engaged, no two have, in all respects, the same post assigned them, though every one has a post which is of the greatest importance to himself and to others.

The battle of life, like all other battles, is waged with various success. Now victory crowns a combatant; and anon the victory becomes the vanquished. Here, one fights with the unflinching ardor of assured success; and there, another but languidly repels the fierce assaults of his enemies, as if just ready to yield in the hopeless contest, while all around are to be seen the melancholy fruits of the hard fought battles.

☞ The greatest gift we can bestow on others is a good example.

late and lonely. Perhaps some may ask why I do not gather with the saints. I would give you a history of my local situation, but it would take to much space. Suffice it to say, I am a captive in Babylon. My way is hedged up on every side. The Lord only knows when I shall obtain a release.

A short time since I received a letter from a friend who has gone with the Brighamite camp to the Salt Valley. Among other things it contained a sharp rebuke for having turned away from the principles I once embraced. But I here take the opportunity to say to all saints or people, (Brighamites not excepted,) that I have not turned away from any principle that is contained in the fulness of the Gospel. No, not even the principle of having a prophet to stand at the head of the church, which they themselves have abundantly taught, without which there could be no church of Christ. Brigham Young has said there was none on earth. So of course they are not it. This writer describes the Salt Valley as being one of the Lord's secret chambers. Jesus said, when they shall say lo here, or lo there, believe them not. If they shall say he is in the desert, go not after them. If they shall say he is in the secret chambers, believe it not. Give me the word of the Lord, and not of men. Yours in the faith of the new and everlasting covenant, A. P. HOLMES.

☞ The human body consists of 240 bones, 9 kinds of articulation or joinings, 100 cartilages or ligaments, 400 muscles or tendons, and 100 nerves, besides blood, arteries, veins, &c.

WOMEN STRONGER THAN OXEN.—A distinguished physician says: I anticipate the period when the fairest portion of creation will step forth unencumbered with slabs of walnut and tiers of whalebone. The constitution of our females must be first rate to withstand in any tolerable degree the terrible inflictions of the corset eight long hours every day. No animal could survive it. Take the honest ox, and inclose his sides with hoop poles, put an oak plank beneath him, and gird the whole with a bed cord and demand of him labor.—He would labor indeed, but it would be for breath.

A SHORT ROAD TO COMFORT.—As a straight or right line is the shortest distance between two points, so the obedience of faith is the shortest road to comfort. They who turn aside after their crooked ways, only weary themselves with vanity; till at length their day is consumed, and their mercies gone, God leads them forth with the workers of iniquity. But wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. Here is no painful retrospective. Lost time and wasted powers shall never reproach the service of God. They belong to the folly of sinners and the wages of sin; while every act of holy obedience gives present satisfaction, and gains upon ultimate hope.—Mason.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.—Life is a battle.—The field is the world, and every son of Adam has his part to act in the great struggle. But, of the vast host engaged, no two have, in all respects, the same post assigned them, though every one has a post which is of the greatest importance to himself and to others.

The battle of life, like all other battles, is waged with various success. Now victory crowns a combatant; and anon the victory becomes the vanquished. Here, one fights with the unflinching ardor of assured success; and there, another but languidly repels the fierce assaults of his enemies, as if just ready to yield in the hopeless contest, while all around are to be seen the melancholy fruits of the hard fought battles.

☞ The greatest gift we can bestow on others is a good example.

FORGIVENESS OF L. D. HICKEY.

New York, Dec. 3d, 1849.

DEAR BRO.:—Yours of the 28th ult. is received. I have written the news to you from Philadelphia, which was good. The church here is in a good state. One was baptized last week, and two young men this week. There are four of the old members that did not attend our meetings when you was here who have come back again to the church. I found Bro. Hickey like a lamb; the most humble man that I ever saw. He made the strongest kind of a confession, and has given full evidence of a lasting repentance. He is like a child.—He humbly desired that I would cast the devils out of him, which I did; and now he is clothed and in his right mind.

He has been in the tombs, lost his clothes, and sent to the lunatic asylum. I found him at Bro. Leech's. He was afraid we would not forgive him. I let him speak on Sunday. It had a great effect. He said he had wronged two of the best men on earth, viz. you and me. He said he did it because the devil was in him. We hold a council to-night, and I think of sending him to Philadelphia and Jersey. I hope you will approve of what we shall do in the matter. I am afraid he will die if we do not let him preach. James, let us have mercy on him. Suppose you recall his suspension.—I think he will make one of the best friends we ever had. The Hickey affair has done great good here, and it will do immense good in Philadelphia. It is looked upon as the mighty power of God. Yours in haste,

G. J. ADAMS.

New York, Dec. 5th, 1849.

DEAR BRO.:—I haste to inform you that we held our meeting last night, and a good one we had. God and your spirit was with us. Two men were confirmed, and many bore testimony. Van Deusen was there, but we bound up the devils so tight in him that he could not open his mouth, and he trembled like a reed shaken by the wind. After the meeting he raged a little. Bro. Hickey told him to his face that he was a liar, a knave, a puppy, and a scoundrel. The brethren gave Bro. Hickey their united forgiveness, and prayers, and confidence, and I have sent him to Philadelphia and Jersey to preach. I hope I have done right. He will write to you without delay. I hope you will write to Bro. Hess, and approve my counsel in this matter. God have you all in his holy keeping.

G. J. ADAMS.

Philadelphia, Dec. 6th, 1849.

DEAR BRO. STRANG:—I am at Bro. Long's through the all-wise providence of God, and I feel as Nebuchadnezzar did after he had been driven out from among men. Dan. iv. 37.—And all I have to say is, I love you as I never loved before. I have confessed to God and man, and I ask your forgiveness and your prayers that I may be just such a man as God shall own and bless in the future. I would like to see you, and tell you what I have passed through since I saw you. I feel like a child. I ask your counsel and advice, that I may do the thing that will please God. I heard your voice. It seemed sweet to me. My prayer to God is, that he may bless you and guide you in all things aright.

Bro. Adams I suppose will tell you the particulars of my sufferings since I saw you. I ask your forgiveness for talking as I did in the hall at New York, and by the grace of God and the prayer of the saints I will try to do the thing that is right in the future. If you have any news for me I hope you will communicate.—You know what I have said, and I hope you will aid me that I may learn to do good and not evil. I have had sore temptations. I have had no news from my family since I saw you, except a letter that Bro. Greig sent to Bro. Hess from the Island. If you know anything about my family please send me word if they have left, &c.

Bro. Jackson is here. He does not know what to do, but I think we shall open a door to Germans here before two weeks pass by. He feels rather down his fear is so great, but I think he will make a mighty man among them. Give all the good counsel you have.—Whip me when and where I deserve, but re-

FORGIVENESS OF L. D. HICKEY.

New York, Dec. 3d, 1849.

DEAR BRO.:—Yours of the 28th ult. is received. I have written the news to you from Philadelphia, which was good. The church here is in a good state. One was baptized last week, and two young men this week. There are four of the old members that did not attend our meetings when you was here who have come back again to the church. I found Bro. Hickey like a lamb; the most humble man that I ever saw. He made the strongest kind of a confession, and has given full evidence of a lasting repentance. He is like a child.—He humbly desired that I would cast the devils out of him, which I did; and now he is clothed and in his right mind.

He has been in the tombs, lost his clothes, and sent to the lunatic asylum. I found him at Bro. Leech's. He was afraid we would not forgive him. I let him speak on Sunday. It had a great effect. He said he had wronged two of the best men on earth, viz. you and me. He said he did it because the devil was in him. We hold a council to-night, and I think of sending him to Philadelphia and Jersey. I hope you will approve of what we shall do in the matter. I am afraid he will die if we do not let him preach. James, let us have mercy on him. Suppose you recall his suspension.—I think he will make one of the best friends we ever had. The Hickey affair has done great good here, and it will do immense good in Philadelphia. It is looked upon as the mighty power of God. Yours in haste,

G. J. ADAMS.

New York, Dec. 5th, 1849.

DEAR BRO.:—I haste to inform you that we held our meeting last night, and a good one we had. God and your spirit was with us. Two men were confirmed, and many bore testimony. Van Deusen was there, but we bound up the devils so tight in him that he could not open his mouth, and he trembled like a reed shaken by the wind. After the meeting he raged a little. Bro. Hickey told him to his face that he was a liar, a knave, a puppy, and a scoundrel. The brethren gave Bro. Hickey their united forgiveness, and prayers, and confidence, and I have sent him to Philadelphia and Jersey to preach. I hope I have done right. He will write to you without delay. I hope you will write to Bro. Hess, and approve my counsel in this matter. God have you all in his holy keeping.

G. J. ADAMS.

Philadelphia, Dec. 6th, 1849.

DEAR BRO. STRANG:—I am at Bro. Long's through the all-wise providence of God, and I feel as Nebuchadnezzar did after he had been driven out from among men. Dan iv. 37.—And all I have to say is, I love you as I never loved before. I have confessed to God and man, and I ask your forgiveness and your prayers that I may be just such a man as God shall own and bless in the future. I would like to see you, and tell you what I have passed through since I saw you. I feel like a child. I ask your counsel and advice, that I may do the thing that will please God. I heard your voice. It seemed sweet to me. My prayer to God is, that he may bless you and guide you in all things aright.

Bro. Adams I suppose will tell you the particulars of my sufferings since I saw you. I ask your forgiveness for talking as I did in the hall at New York, and by the grace of God and the prayer of the saints I will try to do the thing that is right in the future. If you have any news for me I hope you will communicate.—You know what I have said, and I hope you will aid me that I may learn to do good and not evil. I have had sore temptations. I have had no news from my family since I saw you, except a letter that Bro. Greig sent to Bro. Hess from the Island. If you know anything about my family please send me word if they have left, &c.

Bro. Jackson is here. He does not know what to do, but I think we shall open a door to Germans here before two weeks pass by. He feels rather down his fear is so great, but I think he will make a mighty man among them. Give all the good counsel you have.—Whip me when and where I deserve, but remember mercy, for I am weak and not strong. I thought I was strong, but, alas! I am as a little child. I send my best respects to you and all the saints. I hope you will pray for me. Yours in love and true friendship,

L. D. HICKEY.

P. S. Bro. Greig wrote a good letter. Yes, one that is calculated to do good. One that will learn me as well as others to mind my own business.

L. D. H.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 7th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I send you the foregoing for publication. And having given the matter a careful consideration have concurred in the action of Bro. Adams and the church in New York. Bro. Hickey is forgiven. I look upon the matter as containing a most serious warning to all whose hearts contain the germ of rebellion, for it is as the sin of witchcraft. Here was a strong man in the vigor of intellect and manhood, first given to lies and all manner of uncleanness, then to diabolical delusions and insanity, merely for denying the authority of the priesthood of God, and following after one of the many false spirits which are abroad in the land.

John well said, "believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world. We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." Again our brother is clothed in his right mind, because he has been forgiven and blessed by the priesthood, which holds the keys of the kingdom.

JAMES J. STRANG.

PRIVATE INTERPRETATION OF THE SCRIPTURE.

"Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation."—PETER.

All the difficulty that remains in order to understand the Apostle's teaching here, rests upon the word private. This mysterious word is thought by many to admit of a variety of constructions. Let us examine it; because the gospel is of no good use to us until we understand it. And when we settle the dispute about this one little word, we shall hush the quarrel got up by Babel's prints. Private, then, means not public, but secret, dark or hidden. No is an adverb of negation. Consequently this meaning is negatived in the text. Hereby we learn what it does not mean, according to the understanding of all wise or learned men. This point, then, is settled beyond dispute.—And now it only remains to show what is its true meaning.

Here the difficulty lies. Some assert that every prophecy of the scripture should be literally understood. If so, why have so many mistakes been made by men of letters, doctors of divinity, &c.? And why did the Jews overlook the many pointed prophecies concerning the first advent of our Lord? And why is it that our modern sectaries do not each and all discover thereby what the prophecies so plainly declare respecting them? Is not the present state of things pointedly penned down by prophets and apostles? If literal, why not men of science understand it? And is it not evident that they do honestly, or at least sincerely, differ, even upon the prophecies? And these differences are by no means non-essential. They are as wide apart as the east is from the west, and as directly opposed as the north and south poles. So evident are these facts that proofs are unnecessary.

And when Mr. Miller declared from the prophecies the burning of the world in 1843, how did the sectarian foundations shake? To feed the flame, did not rumor travel from one end of the earth to the other? And was it not hurried along by many who did not openly commit themselves, or fully embrace the doctrine? Were not evidences brought from the testimony of heathen nations to prove an important era just about to take place, &c.? And if to be understood literally, then nothing is plainer than that the Jews must soon be gathered to their land of promise. But if not literally to be understood, what then?

member mercy, for I am weak and not strong. I thought I was strong, but, alas! I am as a little child. I send my best respects to you and all the saints. I hope you will pray for me. Yours in love and true friendship,

L. D. HICKEY.

P. S. Bro. Greig wrote a good letter. Yes, one that is calculated to do good. One that will learn me as well as others to mind my own business. L. D. H.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 7th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I send you the foregoing for publication. And having given the matter a careful consideration have concurred in the action of Bro. Adams and the church in New York. Bro. Hickey is forgiven. I look upon the matter as containing a most serious warning to all whose hearts contain the germ of rebellion, for it is as the sin of witchcraft. Here was a strong man in the vigor of intellect and manhood, first given to lies and all manner of uncleanness, then to diabolical delusions and insanity, merely for denying the authority of the priesthood of God, and following after one of the many false spirits which are abroad in the land.

John well said, "believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world. We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." Again our brother is clothed in his right mind, because he has been forgiven and blessed by the priesthood, which holds the keys of the kingdom.

JAMES J. STRANG.

PRIVATE INTERPRETATION OF THE SCRIPTURE.

"Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation."—PETER.

All the difficulty that remains in order to understand the Apostle's teaching here, rests upon the word private. This mysterious word is thought by many to admit of a variety of constructions. Let us examine it; because the gospel is of no good use to us until we understand it. And when we settle the dispute about this one little word, we shall hush the quarrel got up by Babel's prints. Private, then, means not public, but secret, dark or hidden. No is an adverb of negation. Consequently this meaning is negatived in the text. Hereby we learn what it does not mean, according to the understanding of all wise or learned men. This point, then, is settled beyond dispute.—And now it only remains to show what is its true meaning.

Here the difficulty lies. Some assert that every prophecy of the scripture should be literally understood. If so, why have so many mistakes been made by men of letters, doctors of divinity, &c.? And why did the Jews overlook the many pointed prophecies concerning the first advent of our Lord? And why is it that our modern sectaries do not each and all discover thereby what the propheeies so plainly declare respecting them? Is not the present state of things pointedly penned down by prophets and apostles? If literal, why not men of science understand it? And is it not evident that they do honestly, or at least sincerely, differ, even upon the prophecies? And these differences are by no means non-essential. They are as wide apart as the east is from the west, and as directly opposed as the north and south poles. So evident are these facts that proofs are unnecessary.

And when Mr. Miller declared from the prophecies the burning of the world in 1843, how did the sectarian foundations shake? To feed the flame, did not rumor travel from one end of the earth to the other? And was it not hurried along by many who did not openly commit themselves, or fully embrace the doctrine? Were not evidences brought from the testimony of heathen nations to prove an important era just about to take place, &c.? And if to be understood literally, then nothing is plainer than that the Jews must soon be gathered to their land of promise. But if not literally to be understood, what then?

Now we want or need positive proof in this matter, and such as cannot be successfully controverted. We want something better than Miller's key of exposition, although that was thought by some an improvement in the sectarian world. And, in fact, it did call the attention of many to awake from midnight darkness to search the scriptures to see if after all there was any true light to be gained therefrom, by the help of Miller's new invented key to unlock the before sealed book—sealed to human intellects by spiritualizing divines. The people flew with eager haste, perishing with hunger to get a taste; that if possible, during so short a notice, they might prepare their ascension robes.

But, as I said, we want a positive definition of this word private; for we have had many private definitions given already, and many of them are made since very public. And yet, after all, the difficulty still remains. Is it a riddle to be guessed out, that so many learned wits are ignorant of, while at the same time teaching their ignorant neighbors by charging? I do not wonder so many are turning infidels to what nobody understands, or can understand, after so much searching and disputing and failing to prove. But, by the grace of God, the mystery is revealed, the little word private is understood.

And now, if they will endure sound doctrine, any of them in the sectarian world, we will tell them what has always proved an offence to them and the most of mankind. And I would like to touch them as tenderly as possible, lest they should stop their ears, as they usually do, and cry out, away with him. For I am reminded by prophecy that you will not endure sound doctrine, because your ears are turned away from the truth to follow such as you have procured to yourselves, who teach fables. But no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

Here it is explained. The holy man of God is what we want. This will tell the story right. He will speak as moved by the Holy Ghost. And, consequently, will prophecy, and give also correct expositions of prophecies already penned. And such a man is a man of God, a holy man, a truly public man, because he is a minister of God, God-made and God-sent—sent to teach the public, and not a party merely. And since we live in an age when men deny these things, it is difficult to persuade; nevertheless it is positively proved as clearly as at any former period that God has raised up a prophet, and in a time too when he is much needed; while all the world beside are lost to God, and blind to the scripture predictions.

Then let us know this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation, &c. No, not any. But the holy man of God is necessary to guide us as the man Philip was sent to guide the Ethiopian eunuch. The natural man cannot discover the things of God. We cannot live without a prophet, and live in the church of God. For such is God's order, and he that opposes it opposes the work of God, and is at war with the gospel of Jesus Christ. Come, then, all ye sectarian priests, be obedient to the faith once delivered to the saints. Acknowledge him whom God has made your superior, and you shall live. And the people who are looking to you for light shall open their eyes upon the yawning pit that they with you were almost ready to enter. J. S. C.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

Bennington, N. Y., Dec. 8th, 1849.

Dear Frank:—I improve the present opportunity to inform you and your readers what has become of me, so I will proceed. I left the city of James, Beaver Island, on the 7th of November, on board the propellor Ohio. We had heavy winds in our stern, which took us to Cleveland in less than three days; but the storm increased so furiously that we lay there two days and three nights. While there I visited some of the saints in Cleveland. I found them cold and indifferent, and the sequel was they had become Brighamites. I then warned them and left. We got to Buffa-

Now we want or need positive proof in this matter, and such as cannot be successfully controverted. We want something better than Miller's key of exposition, although that was thought by some an improvement in the sectarian world. And, in fact, it did call the attention of many to awake from midnight darkness to search the scriptures to see if after all there was any true light to be gained therefrom, by the help of Miller's new invented key to unlock the before sealed book—sealed to human intellects by spiritualizing divines. The people flew with eager haste, perishing with hunger to get a taste; that if possible, during so short a notice, they might prepare their ascension robes.

But, as I said, we want a positive definition of this word private; for we have had many private definitions given already, and many of them are made since very public. And yet, after all, the difficulty still remains. Is it a riddle to be guessed out, that so many learned wits are ignorant of, while at the same time teaching their ignorant neighbors by charging? I do not wonder so many are turning infidels to what nobody understands, or can understand, after so much searching and disputing and failing to prove. But, by the grace of God, the mystery is revealed, the little word private is understood.

And now, if they will endure sound doctrine, any of them in the sectarian world, we will tell them what has always proved an offence to them and the most of mankind. And I would like to touch them as tenderly as possible, lest they should stop their ears, as they usually do, and cry out, away with him. For I am reminded by prophecy that you will not endure sound doctrine, because your ears are turned away from the truth to follow such as you have procured to yourselves, who teach fables. But no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

Here it is explained. The holy man of God is what we want. This will tell the story right. He will speak as moved by the Holy Ghost. And, consequently, will prophecy, and give also correct expositions of prophecies already penned. And such a man is a man of God, a holy man, a truly public man, because he is a minister of God, God-made and God-sent—sent to teach the public, and not a party merely. And since we live in an age when men deny these things, it is difficult to persuade; nevertheless it is positively proved as clearly as at any former period that God has raised up a prophet, and in a time too when he is much needed; while all the world beside are lost to God, and blind to the scripture predictions.

Then let us know this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation, &c. No, not any. But the holy man of God is necessary to guide us as the man Philip was sent to guide the Ethiopian eunuch. The natural man cannot discover the things of God. We cannot live without a prophet, and live in the church of God. For such is God's order, and he that opposes it opposes the work of God, and is at war with the gospel of Jesus Christ. Come, then, all ye sectarian priests, be obedient to the faith once delivered to the saints. Acknowledge him whom God has made your superior, and you shall live. And the people who are looking to you for light shall open their eyes upon the yawning pit that they with you were almost ready to enter. J. S. C.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

Bennington, N. Y., Dec. 8th, 1849.

Dear Frank:—I improve the present opportunity to inform you and your readers what has become of me, so I will proceed. I left the city of James, Beaver Island, on the 7th of November, on board the propellor Ohio. We had heavy winds in our stern, which took us to Cleveland in less than three days; but the storm increased so furiously that we lay there two days and three nights. While there I visited some of the saints in Cleveland. I found them cold and indifferent, and the sequel was they had become Brighamites. I then warned them and left. We got to Buffalo on the thirteenth. I then went down to the falls, and from there to Bennington.

I am now at the house of R. T. Nichols.—He seems, since my arrival here, to take new courage, and is fully determined to do God's will hereafter. He intends to go to the Island in the spring. Bro. Sanford Cooper intends to go to Voree. Bro. J. W. Briggs was here some five weeks ago, and preached once, and pleased all first rate. He was well, and making his way to Steuben county. He expressed a strong desire for a partner in his mission, and wanted Bro. Nichols or Cooper to go with him. I shall try to get with him myself. All who know me, know that I need a partner, because I am hard of hearing. I think we would make a full team. I am well, and onward.—I am your brother in the bonds of the new covenant, EBENEZER PAGE.

SLANDER.

This is one of the most ruinous evils of the world. It spreads strife and contentions in the hearts of the people. It is not confined to any one town, city or country, but it spreads its blasting influence throughout all the countries of the earth. Nor is it confined to that part of community called sinners and ungodly, but it is in all christian (so called) societies; even in the PRAISED Republic of America. It is found at home and abroad, leaving bitterness and enmity wherever it is practiced.

There are many different denominations of religious people, who all say and think they are on the road to heaven; also have charity for each other's doctrines and creeds; and say, "they do not think it makes any difference to which church they belong, for they are all going to heaven;" and yet they are slandering one another all the time. Do they ever stop to think whether they will keep it up the same way in heaven? Will they have divisions and separate parties there? Or will they all join in one body, and be united under one general ruler? What! be united in union after death with those they are at enmity with through life? No, indeed. There is slandering enough in the different churches to damn them, if they do nothing else. God will never suffer a slanderer to enter the kingdom of heaven.

I think there is altogether too much slandering practiced among the saints. They are too ready and willing to hear and cherish an evil report of a brother or sister. Whether they really believe it or not, they will tell it from one to another till at last it is taken for truth by all who hear it. It has a deadening influence to the work of God in these last days.—Unbelievers think the church of God no better than sectarian churches, and this is one reason for it. The saints never will live in love and union, and inherit the kingdom of God, until they quit slandering one another. It is one of the most cursed, despisable evils in the known world. It should be shunned like the adder, for it is as poison as the poisonest serpent. It is twin sister to intemperance, and therefore will at last meet the same end.

"Then speak no ill—but lenient be
To other's feelings as your own;
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known.

For life is but a passing day,
No lip can tell how brief its span;
Then, Oh! the little time we stay,
Let's speak of all the best we can."

CHARLES J. DOUGLASS.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

A. P. Holmes,	$1,00 to Vol. V No. 10
Palmer H. Stevens,	1,00 to Vol. III No. 38
Samuel Whitney,	3,00 to Vol. IV No. 30
Alvah Yarrington,	2,00 to Vol. IV No. 52

HOW TO PRESERVE HEALTH.—Medicine will never remedy bad habits. It is utterly futile to think of living in gluttony, intemperance and every excess, and keeping the body in health by medicine. Indulgence of the appetite, and indiscriminate dosing and drugging, have ruined the health and destroyed the life of more persons than famine, sword and pestilence. If you will take advice, you will become regular in your habits, eat and drink wholesome things, sleep on mattresses, and retire and rise very regularly. Make a free use of water to purify the skin, and when sick follow nature.

lo on the thirteenth. I then went down to the falls, and from there to Bennington.

I am now at the house of R. T. Nichols.—He seems, since my arrival here, to take new courage, and is fully determined to do God's will hereafter. He intends to go to the Island in the spring. Bro. Sanford Cooper intends to go to Voree. Bro. J. W. Briggs was here some five weeks ago, and preached once, and pleased all first rate. He was well, and making his way to Steuben county. He expressed a strong desire for a partner in his mission, and wanted Bro. Nichols or Cooper to go with him. I shall try to get with him myself. All who know me, know that I need a partner, because I am hard of hearing. I think we would make a full team. I am well, and onward.—I am your brother in the bonds of the new covenant, EBENEZER PAGE.

SLANDER.

This is one of the most ruinous evils of the world. It spreads strife and contentions in the hearts of the people. It is not confined to any one town, city or country, but it spreads its blasting influence throughout all the countries of the earth. Nor is it confined to that part of community called sinners and ungodly, but it is in all christian (so called) societies; even in the PRAISED Republic of America. It is found at home and abroad, leaving bitterness and enmity wherever it is practiced.

There are many different denominations of religious people, who all say and think they are on the road to heaven; also have charity for each other's doctrines and creeds; and say, "they do not think it makes any difference to which church they belong, for they are all going to heaven;" and yet they are slandering one another all the time. Do they ever stop to think whether they will keep it up the same way in heaven? Will they have divisions and separate parties there? Or will they all join in one body, and be united under one general ruler? What! be united in union after death with those they are at enmity with through life? No, indeed. There is slandering enough in the different churches to damn them, if they do nothing else. God will never suffer a slanderer to enter the kingdom of heaven.

I think there is altogether too much slandering practiced among the saints. They are too ready and willing to hear and cherish an evil report of a brother or sister. Whether they really believe it or not, they will tell it from one to another till at last it is taken for truth by all who hear it. It has a deadening influence to the work of God in these last days.—Unbelievers think the church of God no better than sectarian churches, and this is one reason for it. The saints never will live in love and union, and inherit the kingdom of God, until they quit slandering one another. It is one of the most cursed, despisable evils in the known world. It should be shunned like the adder, for it is as poison as the poisonest serpent. It is twin sister to intemperance, and therefore will at last meet the same end.

"Then speak no ill—but lenient be
To other's feelings as your own;
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known.
For life is but a passing day,
No lip can tell how brief its span;
Then, Oh! the little time we stay,
Let's speak of all the best we can."

CHARLES J. DOUGLASS.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

A. P. Holmes,	$1,00 to Vol. V No. 10
Palmer H. Stevens,	1,00 to Vol. III No. 38
Samuel Whitney,	3,00 to Vol. IV No. 30
Alvah Yarrington,	2,00 to Vol. IV No. 52

HOW TO PRESERVE HEALTH.—Medicine will never remedy bad habits. It is utterly futile to think of living in gluttony, intemperance and every excess, and keeping the body in health by medicine. Indulgence of the appetite, and indiscriminate dosing and drugging, have ruined the health and destroyed the life of more persons than famine, sword and pestilence. If you will take advice, you will become regular in your habits, eat and drink wholesome things, sleep on mattresses, and retire and rise very regularly. Make a free use of water to purify the skin, and when sick follow nature.

DISPERSION, SITUATION AND RESTORATION OF THE JEWS.

Lo! Judea's remnants—long dispersed abroad,
Without a prophet, king, or priest of God—
Have wandered exiles from their native home,
To darkness doomed, till their deliverance comes.
Their city once so glorious to behold,
Their temple, decked with precious stones and gold,
The seat of wisdom, and the light of kings,
Where mighty nations did their tribute bring,
Have long remained in one wide ruin round,
And desolation reigned o'er all the ground.
But comfort ye my people, saith your God;
Proclaim the joyful tidings far abroad:
Thy sins are pardoned, and thy warfare o'er,
Thy sons and daughters now shall grieve no more;
But kings thy nursing fathers shall become;
Their ships, and beasts, and chariots bring thee home.
The Gentiles, in their arms, thy sons return:
Thy daughters on their shoulders shall be borne.
Trees crowned with fruit their fainting souls shall cheer,
Their desert land like Eden shall appear;
Their fields, where desolation long has reigned,
Shall now, be fenced, and tilled, and sowed again;
And flocks and herds, in plenty shall be seen,
O'er all the plains they feed in pastures green.
Thy ruined cities shall in splendor rise,
Thy lofty towers point upwards to the skies:
Thy temple reared, most glorious to behold,
Its courts adorned with precious stones and gold:
All things restored, as prophets long declared,
Thus king Messiah's way shall be prepared. P. P.

LIFE'S SORROWS AND COMFORTS.

This world has been termed a vale of tears. And to a great degree it is so. Though the sky is bright above us, and the earth is fair and lovely—though we are surrounded by the works of art, and strength, and wealth, and though we hear at the festive board and in the hall of gayety the voice of mirth and pleasure, there are none without their griefs. Some sorrow preys upon the heart of each one crowding through our busy streets, thronging the active marts, and bowing at the shrine of fashion and amusement. Not one lies down at night upon his couch without being visited with painful reflections, and heaving a sigh in remembrance of some heavy misfotune or sad bereavement. How many are the homes where poverty creates its painful anxieties, where the disappointed, with affections blighted, weep in loneliness; where the sick languish on beds of pain, and the stricken in heart mourn that death has snatched from their embrace the dearest object of their affection. How many are the unkindnesses, and wronge, and deceptions which all encounter; how many the perplexities and hardships and uncertainties of business; how many the accidents and reverses against which no foresight, however prudent, can guard.

Such is life. It is a valley of sorrow; but dark as this valley is, it is not wholly overshadowed with clouds. There are not only occasional glimpses of sunlight which relieve its gloom, but the stars of Faith and Hope are ever gilding it with their mild beams.—Indeed, with all its sorrows, life has many consolations. When weary with the labors of the day, it is a consolation to reflect that night will give repose; when deceived by one in whom we confided, it is a consolation to know that we have a friend who will never deceive; when disappointed in the pursuit of wealth, it is a consolation to feel assured that we shall never ask in vain for that wealth which is imperishable; when crippled and enervated by disease, it is a consolation to know that death will come to our relief.—Ex. paper.

THE RISING GENERATION.—Temperance societies may use their utmost exertions for the moral improvement of society, and may effect much good, courts of justice may punish guilt, and ministers of the Gospel reprove sin; but all will be ineffectual whilst parents neglect to instil proper principles into their offspring, and train up the youthful mind to the observanco of decency and good order.

Mere infants, if neglected by their parents, will become vagrants and vagabonds, and commence a course leading directly to the penitentiary or the gallows. Yet notwithstanding the certain disgrace which awaits children who are uninstructed in their religious, moral and social duties, too many of them are left to evil associations by fathers and mothers until they contract habits alike dmoralizing to themselves and injurious to society.

A CURIOUS FACT.

Two virtuous white parents in New Jersey, were as much astonished as mortified to find, in one of their children, the dark skin, curly hair, thick lips, and other unequivocal marks of African lineage; upon which, of course, neighborhood scandal seized to discredit the mother's fidelity. But she so solemnly protested her innocence, and had been so far above suspicion, that the father visited the native town of her ancestry, on the borders of France, when he found that the fifth ancestor back from the molatto infant, his wife's grandfather, was an African, yet no intermediate traces of the African sire had made its appearance.

Those who think this incredible, can often see children who "take after" neither parent, but strongly resemble a grandparent; and will also find that consumption, and other diseases, talent included, appertain to grandparents—that is pass over one generation wholly, without leaving any intermediate marks. Cases like these are too common and palpable to be disputed. Randall's case renders it certain that such peculiarities sometimes run under ground two generations, and apppear only to the first and fourth.

Now as these peculiarities actually do disappear one or two generations, why not more? Why should not that same law which suppresses them one generation, also suppress them two, three, and four, or more, yet ultimately bring them out again? At all events, our facts are facts—disbelief to the contrary notwithtanding.—Fowler's "Hereditary Descent," pp. 50 and 51.

DISPERSION, SITUATION AND RESTORATION OF THE JEWS.

Lo! Judea's remnants—long dispersed abroad,
Without a prophet, king, or priest of God—
Have wandered exiles from their native home,
To darkness doomed, till their deliverance comes.
Their city once so glorious to behold,
Their temple, decked with precious stones and gold,
The seat of wisdom, and the light of kings,
Where mighty nations did their tribute bring,
Have long remained in one wide ruin round,
And desolation reigned o'er all the ground.
But comfort ye my people, saith your God;
Proclaim the joyful tidings far abroad:
Thy sins are pardoned, and thy warfare o'er,
Thy sons and daughters now shall grieve no more;
But kings thy nursing fathers shall become;
Their ships, and beasts, and chariots bring thee home.
The Gentiles, in their arms, thy sons return:
Thy daughters on their shoulders shall be borne.
Trees crowned with fruit their fainting souls shall cheer,
Their desert land like Eden shall appear;
Their fields, where desolation long has reigned,
Shall now, be fenced, and tilled, and sowed again;
And flocks and herds, in plenty shall be seen,
O'er all the plains they feed in pastures green.
Thy ruined cities shall in splendor rise,
Thy lofty towers point upwards to the skies:
Thy temple reared, most glorious to behold,
Its courts adorned with precious stones and gold:
All things restored, as prophets long declared,
Thus king Messiah's way shall be prepared. P. P.

LIFE'S SORROWS AND COMFORTS.

This world has been termed a vale of tears. And to a great degree it is so. Though the sky is bright above us, and the earth is fair and lovely—though we are surrounded by the works of art, and strength, and wealth, and though we hear at the festive board and in the hall of gayety the voice of mirth and pleasure, there are none without their griefs. Some sorrow preys upon the heart of each one crowding through our busy streets, thronging the active marts, and bowing at the shrine of fashion and amusement. Not one lies down at night upon his couch without being visited with painful reflections, and heaving a sigh in remembrance of some heavy misfotune or sad bereavement. How many are the homes where poverty creates its painful anxieties, where the disappointed, with affections blighted, weep in loneliness; where the sick languish on beds of pain, and the stricken in heart mourn that death has snatched from their embrace the dearest object of their affection. How many are the unkindnesses, and wrongs, and deceptions which all encounter; how many the perplexities and hardships and uncertainties of business; how many the accidents and reverses against which no foresight, however prudent, can guard.

Such is life. It is a valley of sorrow; but dark as this valley is, it is not wholly overshadowed with clouds. There are not only occasional glimpses of sunlight which relieve its gloom, but the stars of Faith and Hope are ever gilding it with their mild beams.—Indeed, with all its sorrows, life has many consolations. When weary with the labors of the day, it is a consolation to reflect that night will give repose; when deceived by one in whom we confided, it is a consolation to know that we have a friend who will never deceive; when disappointed in the pursuit of wealth, it is a consolation to feel assured that we shall never ask in vain for that wealth which is imperishable; when crippled and enervated by disease, it is a consolation to know that death will come to our relief.—Ex. paper.

The Rising Generation.—Temperance societies may use their utmost exertions for the moral improvement of society, and may effect much good, courts of justice may punish guilt, and ministers of the Gospel reprove sin; but all will be ineffectual whilst parents neglect to instil proper principles into their offspring, and train up the youthful mind to the observance of decency and good order.

Mere infants, if neglected by their parents, will become vagrants and vagabonds, and commence a course leading directly to the penitentiary or the gallows. Yet notwithstanding the certain disgrace which awaits children who are uninstructed in their religious, moral and social duties, too many of them are left to evil associations by fathers and mothers until they contract habits alike dmoralizing to themselves and injurious to society.

A CURIOUS FACT.

Two virtuous white parents in New Jersey, were as much astonished as mortified to find, in one of their children, the dark skin, curly hair, thick lips, and other unequivocal marks of African lineage; upon which, of course, neighborhood scandal seized to discredit the mother's fidelity. But she so solemnly protested her innocence, and had been so far above suspicion, that the father visited the native town of her ancestry, on the borders of France, when he found that the fifth ancestor back from the molatto infant, his wife's grandfather, was an African, yet no intermediate traces of the African sire had made its appearance.

Those who think this incredible, can often see children who "take after" neither parent, but strongly resemble a grandparent; and will also find that consumption, and other diseases, talent included, appertain to grandparents—that is pass over one generation wholly, without leaving any intermediate marks. Cases like these are too common and palpable to be disputed. Randall's case renders it certain that such peculiarities sometimes run under ground two generations, and apppear only to the first and fourth.

Now as these peculiarities actually do disappear one or two generations, why not more? Why should not that same law which suppresses them one generation, also suppress them two, three, and four, or more, yet ultimately bring them out again? At all events, our facts are facts—disbelief to the contrary notwithtanding.—Fowler's "Hereditary Descent," pp. 50 and 51.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 12] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JAN. 3, 1850. [WHOLE No. 168.

GOSPEL HERALD.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

GOD IS LOVE.

So saith the scripture, and so we believe.—But how do we understand it? Few now a days among us reject the Bible. All agree that God is love. And some infer from this fact that he will not punish beyond this life. Now is this reasoning logical? If God is unchangeable, how is it, upon this hypothesis, that mankind have suffered since the time that sin entered the world? How is it that the whole creation groaneth, travailing in pain? For God is love to-day as yesterday, and henceforward. Consequently reason would say, there must be a change of causes before these effects will cease. And since God is unchangeable, unless some change is produced in the creature suffering will be continued, notwithstanding God is love. And until it can be proved that man is fully rewarded in this life for all the good or ill that he does, it will be in vain to contend that God is love, or even just, if he should leave all mankind on an equal footing when they enter the eternal world.

We may reason from cause to effect with some hopes of success. But it is hard to reason against acknowledged facts. And since God has permitted suffering to be continued on earth for six thousand years, who will be so vain as to plead that God's love will put an end to man's suffering? As well, and far better, might the undutiful child hope to escape the justice due to his crimes, upon the ground that his father loved him. Loves him! He might be love and not in love with sin, and consequently angry and wrathful towards the sinner. Why not? Is he not just? Can he, or will his love clear the guilty? How then could he be just? Will it do to rob God of the attribute of justice, because he is merciful? How then could God judge the world in righteousness?

The same scripture teaches that God is truth, and cannot lie. Consequently whom he loves he rebukes and chastens, that his soul may love them more. God is love. He said he would punish the guilty. So he loves to fulfill his word. And that too because he hates iniquity, and loves to reclaim mankind from it. And how could God be love, if he did not hate evil? And how could God be love, if he did not punish the guilty? Surely if sin were to go unpunished love must eventually become entirely extinct, and God himself must abdicate his throne, and universal hate reign triumphant.

It is true that it is hard to reconcile the idea of eternal punishment with the attributes of Deity, provided the guilty should will to repent, and comply with the will of his maker. However this may be we have only to rely upon the testimony of revelation, unless reason be thought a better guide. Revelation says the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment. Now let us see if it will do to liberate them. They have gone there refusing to reason with God, and refusing to believe and obey his word. And now if it is possible to reason them out of that, I presume God will have no objection. For God is love still. And reason would seem to whisper that since God has now proved himself just in executing the sentence of death and banishment upon the wicked, that possibly his boundless mercy and loving kindness combined with almighty power may have sought out another remedy beyond what he be-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 12. VOREE, WIS. THURSDAY, JAN. 3, 1850. [WHOLE No. 168.

GOSPEL HERALD.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

GOD IS LOVE.

So saith the scripture, and so we believe. But how do we understand it? Few now a days among us reject the Bible. All agree that God is love. And some infer from this fact that he will not punish beyond this life. Now is this reasoning logical? If God is unchangeable, how is it, upon this hypothesis, that mankind have suffered since the time that sin entered the world? How is it that the whole creation groaneth, travailing in pain? For God is love to-day as yesterday, and henceforward. Consequently reason would say, there must be a change of causes before these effects will cease. And since God is unchangeable, unless some change is produced in the creature suffering will be continued, notwithstanding God is love. And until it can be proved that man is fully rewarded in this life for all the good or ill that he does, it will be in vain to contend that God is love, or even just, if he should leave all mankind on an equal footing when they enter the eternal world.

We may reason from cause to effect with some hopes of success. But it is hard to reason against acknowledged facts. And since God has permitted suffering to be continued on earth for six thousand years, who will be so vain as to plead that God's love will put an end to man's suffering? As well, and far better, might the undutiful child hope to escape the justice due to his crimes, upon the ground that his father loved him. Loves him! He might be love and not in love with sin, and consequently angry and wrathful towards the sinner. Why not? Is he not just? Can he, or will his love clear the guilty? How then could he be just? Will it do to rob God of the attribute of justice, because he is merciful? How then could God judge the world in righteousness?

The same scripture teaches that God is truth, and cannot lie. Consequently whom he loves he rebukes and chastens, that his soul may love them more. God is love. He said he would punish the guilty. So he loves to fulfill his word. And that too because he hates iniquity, and loves to reclaim mankind from it. And how could God be love, if he did not hate evil? And how could God be love, if he did not punish the guilty? Surely if sin were to go unpunished love must eventually become entirely extinct, and God himself must abdicate his throne, and universal hate reign triumphant.

It is true that it is hard to reconcile the idea of eternal punishment with the attributes of Deity, provided the guilty should will to repent, and comply with the will of his maker. However this may be we have only to rely upon the testimony of revelation, unless reason be thought a better guide. Revelation says the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment. Now let us see if it will do to liberate them. They have gone there refusing to reason with God, and refusing to believe and obey his word. And now if it is possible to reason them out of that, I presume God will have no objection. For God is love still. And reason would seem to whisper that since God has now proved himself just in executing the sentence of death and banishment upon the wicked, that possibly his boundless mercy and loving kindness combined with almighty power may have sought out another remedy beyond what he before had clearly revealed.

And in fact I am strongly inclined to believe that reason need not remain altogether unassisted by revelation in this matter. For whoever will read the twenty-fourth chapter of Isaiah need not doubt the promise of God that the spirits in prison shall be visited after they shall have been shut up and confined many days in the pit, and that too after the general burning day. Neither is this by any means all the revelation given upon this subject in the Old and New Testament, to say nothing of the revelations given in this dispensation also in reference to salvation being attainable in the spirit world.

But so far as this matter is concerned I choose to leave it where God has left it, until called to preach to the spirits in prison. That will be time for me to offer pardon and peace to such. But now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation. Whoso will repent and obey the gospel shall have eternal life by Jesus Christ, for God is love, and will by no means clear the guilty. And he that will not willingly bow the knee here shall be compelled hereafter, saith the gospel. J. S. C.

Harper's Ferry, Dec. 16th, 1849.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG,—RESPECTED BRO.:—Last Monday I started for Bro. Grady's, where I made another effort to obtain his school house to hold a meeting in. The commissioner put me to all the trouble he possibly could, viz.: to go round the neighborhood and get their consent, and if they were willing he had no objection You know what a neighborhood is in the country, two miles one way, three miles another, three-fourths another, and so on. And although the snow lay nine inches deep, I succeeded in obtaining the consent of several, but did not go round to all, and appointed a meeting for Wednesday evening, and made calculations for giving them the gospel in good earnest.

But at the same time I felt that all was not right, and told Bro. Grady he had better bring the key of the house along with him; for, in my opinion, they would do all in their power to stop me preaching, and I thought it likely they would nail up the door, or some other leviltry. And so it was as I predicted. When Bro. Grady went down to open the house he found seven nails in the door, and he removed them as soon as possible, and we had a meeting, although but small. They paid strict attention, and I appointed another for Friday night. But the following day Bro. Grady received a note from the commissioner stating it was not agreeable that I should have the school house to preach in any more. And this is the county of Jefferson, the native state of Washington! Of what religious and political hypocrisy is this nation guilty!

I then went forward to Shepherdstown, and in spite of the pious opposition I met with before I got a place for meeting. The mayor of the town is a gentleman, and in the kindest manner consented for me to have the town hall, and took some trouble to see when I could get it. Accordingly I preach at that place next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. I preached here yesterday, but, as usual, it stormed in the morning, and not a single person attended, and but few in the afternoon. But in the evening I had a good and attentive congregation. There appears to be considerable interest awakened here, and as far as I can learn the gospel is the general conversation of the town.

Yours sincerely,

THOMAS BRAIDWOOD.

Beaver Island, Nov. 20th, 1849.

MR. S. GRAHAM,—DEAR BRO.:—The weather is beautiful here. It is almost as warm as summer. Last week we found several ripe strawberries. What do you say to that? We have also picked within the last month quite a number of ripe raspberries, and you can see huckleberries in blossom. I hope this winter will be short, and spring will come and fetch back all our friends, brothers and sisters; for we shall know how to prize their company.—I subscribe myself your friend and sister in the new and everlasting covenant,

LOIS L. AUSTIN.

fore had clearly revealed.

And in fact I am strongly inclined to believe that reason need not remain altogether unassisted by revelation in this matter. For whoever will read the twenty-fourth chapter of Isaiah need not doubt the promise of God that the spirits in prison shall be visited after they shall have been shut up and confined many days in the pit, and that too after the general burning day. Neither is this by any means all the revelation given upon this subject in the Old and New Testament, to say nothing of the revelations given in this dispensation also in reference to salvation being attainable in the spirit world.

But so far as this matter is concerned I choose to leave it where God has left it, until called to preach to the spirits in prison. That will be time for me to offer pardon and peace to such. But now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation. Whoso will repent and obey the gospel shall have eternal life by Jesus Christ, for God is love, and will by no means clear the guilty. And he that will not willingly bow the knee here shall be compelled hereafter, saith the gospel. J. S. C.

Harper's Ferry, Dec. 16th, 1849.

Mr. James J. Strang,—Respected Bro.:—Last Monday I started for Bro. Grady's, where I made another effort to obtain his school house to hold a meeting in. The commissioner put me to all the trouble he possibly could, viz.: to go round the neighborhood and get their consent, and if they were willing he had no objection. You know what a neighborhood is in the country, two miles one way, three miles another, three-fourths another, and so on. And although the snow lay nine inches deep, I succeeded in obtaining the consent of several, but did not go round to all, and appointed a meeting for Wednesday evening, and made calculations for giving them the gospel in good earnest.

But at the same time I felt that all was not right, and told Bro. Grady he had better bring the key of the house along with him; for, in my opinion, they would do all in their power to stop me preaching, and I thought it likely they would nail up the door, or some other leviltry. And so it was as I predicted. When Bro. Grady went down to open the house he found seven nails in the door, and he removed them as soon as possible, and we had a meeting, although but small. They paid strict attention, and I appointed another for Friday night. But the following day Bro. Grady received a note from the commissioner stating it was not agreeable that I should have the school house to preach in any more. And this is the county of Jefferson, the native state of Washington! Of what religious and political hypocrisy is this nation guilty!

I then went forward to Shepherdstown, and in spite of the plots opposition I met with before I got a place for meeting. The mayor of the town is a gentleman, and in the kindest manner consented for me to have the town hall, and took some trouble to see when I could get it. Accordingly I preach at that place next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. I preached here yesterday, but, as usual, it stormed in the morning, and not a single person attended, and but few in the afternoon. But in the evening I had a good and attentive congregation. There appears to be considerable interest awakened here, and as far as I can learn the gospel is the general conversation of the town.

Yours sincerely,

THOMAS BRAIDWOOD.

Beaver Island, Nov. 20th, 1849.

Mr. S. Graham.—Dear Bro.:—The weather is beautiful here. It is almost as warm as summer. Last week we found several ripe strawberries. What do you say to that? We have also picked within the last month quite a number of ripe raspberries, and you can see huckleberries in blossom. I hope this winter will be short, and spring will come and fetch back all our friends, brothers and sisters: for we shall know how to prize their company.—I subscribe myself you friend and sister in the new and everlasting covenant,

LOIS L. AUSTIN.

Boston, Dec. 11th, 1849.

PRES STRANG,—DEAR PRO.:—I just received your letter. Stern, cold, hard winter is here around us in all his fierceness. I preached here three times on Sunday in a large hall that our dear Pro. Samuel had procured for me.—Our meetings were crowded to overflowing, although it did storm. What few brethren there are here Bro. Graham has built up firm in the faith, and they received me gladly and kindly. But the public at large have received me with a perfect rush, a regular enthusiastic demonstration, even more so by far than they did when you was here with me.

There are no old "hunkers" here now to trouble us. Thank God. I am decidedly the peoples' man in Boston. They say I am the man for the "million." Brighamism is dead here. Yes, it is as dead as red herring. Bro. Graham commenced baptizing last night. I cannot leave here until after next Sunday. I am now going to prayer meeting with Bro. Graham, to see who is on the Lord's side.—More when I come from meeting.

Wednesday morning.—We had a good meeting last night—a first rate meeting—a regular built old fashioned Latter Day Saint meeting. The prospect here brightens. We shall prevail over all opposition, and no mistake. May God bless you all. I expect to leave here for Buffalo early next week. Yours in love, truth and everlasting friendship, G. J. ADAMS.

THE NEW YEAR.

1850 has come rolling upon us, ushering us forward with the rapidty of whirling spheres into the unknown future, leaving the events that have transpired in the by-gone year to mingle with those of past ages. A retrospective view of the past year brings to our mind many peculiar reflections. The revolutions with which it commenced have nearly all ended in despotism in fact, if not in name. The oppressed millions, whose bosoms glowed with a fond hope that they were the preludes of a universal reign of liberty, are now desponding. The iron hand of the oppressor has apparently renewed its hold more firmly than ever.

But fear not, neither be discouraged, ye down trodden millions; for the "Lord is king forever and ever," and he is preparing his kingdom and his throne for judgment. "And he shall judge the world in righteousness: he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness." "He will pour contempt upon princes, and cause them to wander in the wilderness where there is no way. He will set the poor and the oppressed on high from affliction and oppression, and make him families like a flock.' "The righteous shall see it, and rejoice; and all iniquity shall stop her mouth. Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord."

The cholera, the messenger of death, has been diligently at work on both continents, carrying its thousands to the silent tomb. The high and the low, the rich and the poor, have alike been the subjects of this dreadful scourge. But the Lord in his mercy has not suffered it to visit the stakes of Zion, which are appointed for the gathering of his saints. It has been all around this place, but an unseen hand kept it from our midst. Beaver Island escaped, though situated in the great thoroughfare of the lake navigation, and receiving calls almost daily from boats passing and repassing from ports where it was raging severely. Mackinac, which is only about fifty miles from there, suffered seriously.

Thus we discover that the saints who have gathered out of Babylon to the places appointed and kept the commandments of God have not been moved; but those who have not have partaken of her plagues. To those who still linger in Babylon we would say, make speed to gather as God has commanded, lest worse calamities befall you. "The Lord will not be mocked in these last days." W.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

Boston, Dec. 11th, 1849.

Pres Strang,--Dear Bro.:--I just received your letter. Stern, cold, hard winter is here around us in all his fierceness. I preached here three times on Sunday in a large hall that our dear Bro. Samuel had procured for me.—Our meetings were crowded to overflowing, although it did storm. What few brethren there are here Bro. Graham has built up firm in the faith, and they received me gladly and kindly. But the public at large have received me with a perfect rush, a regular enthusiastic demonstration, even more so by far than they did when you was here with me.

There are no old "hunkers" here now to trouble us. Thank God. I am decidedly the peoples' man in Boston. They say I am the man for the "million." Brighamism is dead here. Yes, it is as dead as red herring. Bro. Graham commenced baptizing last night. I cannot leave here until after next Sunday. I am now going to prayer meeting with Bro. Graham, to see who is on the Lord's side.—More when I come from meeting.

Wednesday morning.--We had a good meeting last night--a first rate meeting--a regular built old fashioned Latter Day Saint meeting. The prospect here brightens. We shall prevail over all opposition, and no mistake. May God bless you all. I expect to leave here for Buffalo early next week Yours in love, truth and everlasting friendship, G. J. ADAMS.

THE NEW YEAR.

1850 has come rolling upon us, ushering us forward with the rapidty of whirling spheres into the unknown future, leaving the events that have transpired in the by-gone year to mingle with those of past ages. A retrospective view of the past year brings to our mind many peculiar reflections. The revolutions with which it commenced have nearly all ended in despotism in fact, if not in name The oppressed millions, whose bosoms glowed with a fond hope that they were the preludes of a universal reign of liberty, are now desponding. The iron hand of the oppressor has apparently renewed its hold more firmly than ever.

But fear not, neither be discouraged, ye down trodden millions; for the "Lord is king forever and ever," and he is preparing his kingdom and his throne for judgment. "And he shall judge the world in righteousness: he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness." 'He will pour contempt upon princes, and cause them to wander in the wilderness where there is no way. He will set the poor and the oppressed on high from affliction and oppression, and make him families like a flock.' "The righteous shall see it, and rejoice; and all iniquity shall stop her mouth. Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord."

The cholera, the messenger of death, has been diligently at work on both continents, carrying its thousands to the silent tomb. The high and the low, the rich and the poor, have alike been the subjects of this dreadful scourge. But the Lord in his mercy has not suffered it to visit the stakes of Zion, which are appointed for the gathering of his saints. It has been all around this place, but an unseen hand kept it from our midst. Beaver Island escaped, though situated in the great thoroughfare of the lake navigation, and receiving calls almost daily from boats passing and repassing from ports where it was raging severely. Mackinac, which is only about fifty miles from there, suffered seriously.

Thus we discover that the saints who have gathered out of Babylon to the places appointed and kept the commandments of God have not been moved; but those who have not have partaken of her plagues. To those who still linger in Babylon we would say, make speed to gather as God has commanded, lest worse calamities befall you. "The Lord will not be mocked in these last days." W.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

PROGRESS OF BEAVER ISLAND.

MR. EDITOR:—Beaver Island having now become one of the prominent gathering places of the saints, nay, almost the head quarters, and is, judging from past and present appearances, destined ere long to become a place of no small note, even in this land of unequaled progression, I had thought perhaps it might not be uninteresting to most of your readers to hear a brief sketch of the history of this place from the commencement of the Mormon settlement to the present time. Some two years and a half ago the first company of Mormons, five in number, landed on Beaver Island the 8th or 9th of May, among strangers, and entirely destitute of dollars; the Island being then almost entirely a dense forest. Among this number was the Mormon prophet. They went to work and soon reared them a small log hut. In this substitute or rather apology for a house they took up their lodging, without either fire, bed or bedclothes. In order to prepare their eatables they built a fire out of doors, mixed up their bread with cold water, and baked it before the fire. Bread and water at this time constituted their living, as will be seen from the following extracts, which we take from Wells' memorandum, he being one of the number. He says:—

"They tell us that Strang's object in pretending to be a prophet is, to live at his ease, upon the luxuries of the earth. They talk to us of his being rich, &c., &c. Talk not thus to me. I happen to be somewhat acquainted with the gent. And I am well persuaded from personal acquaintance that few men live poorer or endure more privations and hardships than this same Mormon prophet does. And that too without the least murmur or complaint. Well do I remember of this reputed rich man making a breakfast of cold water and bread, and that mixed up by uninitiated hands, and baked before a fire out of doors. And, to use a common expression, would make good whetstones. And after having taken off the only pair of pants that he had, and mending them for half or three-fourths of an hour, then starting in company with myself for the purpose of exploring the Island.

"It was through beech forests and cedar swamps, and cedar swamps and beech forests again that we traveled. Thus we traveled until near night, when we started for home. I soon became quite weary, but still pressed onward. Night soon overtook us, when, although a young man just in the prime of life, I rolled down in the sand and boldly avowed that I could go no further. So we encamped for the night, without either dinner or supper, fire or cover other than the broad canopy of the heavens.

"Here we lay until some time past midnight, when I was laying awake nearly stiff with the cold, I was saluted with the well known voice of the prophet inquiring if I was not sufficiently rested so that I could proceed. I replied that there was but two alternatives, to either go or freeze. So on we went, and arrived at the cabin about sun rise. We eat the last bread we had for breakfast, making about half a meal. All this did the prophet unmurmuringly submit to, for not a syllable of complaint did I hear from him. You may inquire why it was that we had no more to eat. It was early in the spring, and there had not as yet any provisions arrived. Consequently all on the Island were just out, and there was none here to be had."

The foregoing I have merely given for the information of those who suppose that the prophet lives at his ease, and upon the fat of the land, being furnished by his followers with an overabundance of everything to insure his comfort and ease; hoping at the same time that those who are disposed when they arrive here now, under ten times as disparaging circumstances, yet found murmuring and complaining, may derive some valuable hints therefrom.—Could they but have been here from the start, and continued until now, they would be ready to exclaim:—

If nature's blessings can satisfy the human breast
Most assuredly the sons of Beaver are greatly blest.

PROGRESS OF BEAVER ISLAND.

MR. EDITOR:—Beaver Island having now become one of the prominent gathering places of the saints, nay, almost the head quarters, and is, judging from past and present appearances, destined ere long to become a place of no small note, even in this land of unequaled progression, I had thought perhaps it might not be uninteresting to most of your readers to hear a brief sketch of the history of this place from the commencement of the Mormon settlement to the present time. Some two years and a half ago the first company of Mormons, five in number, landed on Beaver Island the 8th or 9th of May, among strangers, and entirely destitute of dollars; the Island being then almost entirely a dense forest. Among this number was the Mormon prophet. They went to work and soon reared them a small log hut. In this substitute or rather apology for a house they took up their lodging, without even fire, bed or bedclothes. In order to prepare their eatables they built a fire out of doors, mixed up their bread with cold water, and baked it before the fire. Bread and water at this time constituted their living, as will be seen from the following extracts, which we take from Wells' memorandum, he being one of the number. He says:—

"They tell us that Strang's object in pretending to be a prophet is, to live at his ease, upon the luxuries of the earth. They talk to us of his being rich, &c., &c. Talk not thus to me. I happen to be somewhat acquainted with the gent. And I am well persuaded from personal acquaintance that few men live poorer or endure more privations and hardships than this same Mormon prophet does. And that too without the least murmur or complaint. Well do I remember of this repated rich man making a breakfast of cold water and bread, and that mixed up by uninitiated hands, and baked before a fire out of doors. And, to use a common expression, would make good whetstones. And after having taken off the only pair of pants that he had, and mending them for half or three-fourths of an hour, then starting in company with myself for the purpose of exploring the Island.

"It was through beech forests and cedar swamps, and cedar swamps and beech forests again that we traveled. Thus we traveled until near night, when we started for home. I soon became quite weary, but still pressed onward. Night soon overtook us, when, although a young man just in the prime of life, I reeled down in the sand and boldly avowed that I could go no further. So we encamped for the night, without either dinner or supper, fire or cover other than the broad canopy of the heavens.

"Here we lay until some time past midnight, when I was laying awake nearly stiff with the cold, I was saluted with the well known voice of the prophet inquiring if I was not sufficiently rested so that I could proceed. I replied that there was but two alternatives, to either go or freeze. So on we went, and arrived at the cabin about sun rise. We eat the last bread we had for breakfast, making about half a meal. All this did the prophet unmurmuringly submit to, for not a syllable of complaint did I hear from him. You may inquire why it was that we had no more to eat. It was early in the spring, and there had not as yet any provisions arrived. Consequently all on the Island were just out, and there was none here to be had."

The foregoing I have merely given for the information of those who suppose that the prophet lives at his ease, and upon the fat of the land, being furnished by his followers with an overabundance of everything to insure his comfort and ease; hoping at the same time that those who are disposed when they arrive here now, under ten times as disparaging circumstances, yet found murmuring and complaining, may derive some valuable hints therefrom.—Could they but have been here from the start, and continued until now, they would be ready to exclaim:—

If nature's blessings can satisfy the human breast
Most assuredly the sons of Beaver are greatly blest.

Now we will return to the intended point, which is to institute a comparison between the years 1847, 1848 and 1849. In the year 1847, which was the first year of our settlement, there was but four Mormon families wintered here. In 1848 there was twelve. And now, in 1849, there is near fifty. And where last year it was a dense forest, you can now see the seeds of industry and civilization have been sown.—Now in regard to the arrival of steam craft, the increase is largely over that of last year, notwithstanding the prevalence of the cholera.—In 1847, from a partial account, I judge there was not far from four, not to exceed that. In 1848 there was 62, and we then calculated that there would be one hundred this year.—There has been nearly the same number of calls at each dock.

Your readers are, I presume, mostly aware that the steam craft that call here are generally propellers. We have had but nine calls of steamboats this year—four different boats.—The passengers and freight to and from this place this season is estimated at $3,000. We are now nearly ready to commence a wharf over in Troy, (the south location,) and intend to have it completed for use another season. This is the point where the steam mill is to be located.

GR: ELEY.

Beaver Island, Nov. 4th, 1849.

☞ The following article we take from the Boston Advertiser and Guide:—

THE MORMONS, OR "LATTER DAY SAINTS," AND THEIR MOVEMENTS.

It is not without some degree of interest that we have watched the operations of this sect in the revolutions and changes of modern times. Their history has been inseparably connected with all the great changes that have taken place in the religious world for the last few years. After the assassination of their first prophet and leader Joe Smith, they became divided into three parties, viz.: one under Sidney Rigdon, one under the notorious Brigham Young, the first founder of the "Spiritual Wife Doctrine," and a third party under James J. Strang, who claims to be their present prophet, and successor of Joseph Smith; presenting a letter of appointment from Smith to said office.

The party under Rigdon has entirely passed away; and he has gone into obscurity without a single follower to adhere to his claims, and has not left a stone to tell where slumbers the ashes of the fallen leader. The gang under Brigham Young are known as the Salt Lake party, or the "fighting Mormons," who are located at the Valley of Great "Salt Lake," and at "Council Bluffs," and have carried with them cannons, guns, revolvers, knives, and other implement of warfare, and almost entirely laid aside the name of "Saint" and taken that of "Mormons;" and the combined testimony that has recently been received, and that can be fully relied upon, is that they still hold on to their cursed Spiritual Wife Doctrine; Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Parley P. Pratt, and some other of their leaders, having more than twenty wives each; they have also established their famous "Danite Legion," and pretend to be twenty thousand in number, and seek admission into the union, with the notorious Brigham Young as Governor.

It might be supposed that they would learn wisdom from the history of the past, and let such things alone. In relation to their being twenty thousand in number at the "Salt Lake," there is not one word of truth in the statement. It is a deception, and base falsehood from first to last, for the purpose of deceiving this government, and their duped followers; and we are prepared to prove that there is not now, and never has been three thousand Mormons at the Salt Lake, men, women and children all put together; and if they continue to practice such deception and abominations, they will soon be overthrown and broken up.

The followers of Mr. Strang claim for him that he was regularly appointed a prophet according to the laws of the church, as a kind of second "Joshua," to succeed Joe Smith in the priesthood and prophetic office to finish or close up the great work of what they call the "dis-

Now we will return to the intended point, which is to institute a comparison between the years 1847, 1848 and 1849. In the year 1847, which was the first year of our settlement, there was but four Mormon families wintered here. In 1848 there was twelve. And now, in 1849, there is near fifty. And where last year it was a dense forest, you can now see the seeds of industry and civilization have been sown.—Now in regard to the arrival of steam craft, the increase is largely over that of last year, notwithstanding the prevalence of the cholera.—In 1847, from a partial account, I judge there was not far from four, not to exceed that. In 1848 there was 62, and we then calculated that there would be one hundred this year.—There has been nearly the same number of calls at each dock.

Your readers are, I presume, mostly aware that the steam craft that call here are generally propellers. We have had but nine calls of steamboats this year—four different boats.—The passengers and freight to and from this place this season is estimated at $3,000. We are now nearly ready to commence a wharf over in Troy, (the south location,) and intend to have it completed for use another season. This is the point where the steam mill is to be located. GR. ELEY.

Beaver Island, Nov. 4th, 1849.

☞ The following article we take from the Boston Advertiser and Guide:—

THE MORMONS, OR "LATTER DAY SAINTS," AND THEIR MOVEMENTS.

It is not without some degree of interest that we have watched the operations of this sect in the revolutions and changes of modern times. Their history has been inseparably connected with all the great changes that have taken place in the religious world for the last few years. After the assassination of their first prophet and leader Joe Smith, they became divided into three parties, viz.: one under Sidney Rigdon, one under the notorious Brigham Young, the first founder of the "Spiritual Wife Doctrine," and a third party under James J. Strang, who claims to be their present prophet, and successor of Joseph Smith; presenting a letter of appointment from Smith to said office.

The party under Rigdon has entirely passed away; and he has gone into obscurity without a single follower to adhere to his claims, and has not left a stone to tell where slumbers the ashes of the fallen leader. The gang under Brigham Young are known as the Salt Lake party, or the "fighting Mormons," who are located at the Valley of Great "Salt Lake," and at "Council Bluffs," and have carried with them cannons, guns, revolvers, knives, and other implement of warfare, and almost entirely laid aside the name of "Saint" and taken that of "Mormons;" and the combined testimony that has recently been received, and that can be fully relied upon, is that they still hold on to their cursed Spiritual Wife Doctrine; Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Parley P. Pratt, and some other of their leaders, having more than twenty wives each; they have also established their famous "Danite Legion," and pretend to be twenty thousand in number, and seek admission into the union, with the notorious Brigham Young as Governor.

It might be supposed that they would learn wisdom from the history of the past, and let such things alone. In relation to their being twenty thousand in number at the "Salt Lake," there is not one word of truth in the statement. It is a deception, and base falsehood from first to last, for the purpose of deceiving this government, and their duped followers; and we are prepared to prove that there is not now, and never has been three thousand Mormons at the Salt Lake, men, women and children all put together; and if they continue to practice such deception and abominations, they will soon be overthrown and broken up.

The followers of Mr. Strang claim for him that he was regularly appointed a prophet according to the laws of the church, as a kind of second "Joshua," to succeed Joe Smith in the priesthood and prophetic office to finish or close up the great work of what they call the "dispensation of the fulness of times." And what is most remarkable in the whole affair is that we find such men as William Marks, (former President of the "stake" at Nauvoo,) young Joseph, (the eldest son of the prophet,) Moses Smith, Aaron Smith, with scores of others, that were known to be firm friends of the dead prophet; and last, not least, our old friend and Boston favorite Elder G. J. Adams, have all rallied around the standard of prophet Strang, and they may be called the peace party of the Mormons, or "Saints." They are the party that are now gaining numbers every where, particularly in the south. Their head quarters are in Voree, Wiscousin, and Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan.

In Voree they have established a community that they call the "Order of Enoch," which has been in operation over two years, with complete success. They are there building a Temple four times as large as the one at Nauvoo, with walls eight feet thick, marble floors and roof. They have been living at Voree over five years, and had no difficulty with the other inhabitants, which seems a wonder in their history. But their movements at Beaver Island seems most strange of all; they are gathering and locating there by hundreds, by virtue of a professed Revelation, that Strang has received from God commanding them to gather there and take possession of the land, as a gift of God, on the "Free Soil" principle, without money, and without price, declaring they shall never be driven from their possessions; and they are there establishing an "Order" that they call the "Independent Order of the Kingdom of God," or the kingdom of the Saints, spoken of in the 7th Chapter of Daniel's prophecy, and say that they will be governed by no laws but the laws of God. They use no "weapons of war," and depend entirely on heaven for protection, and deliverance. Their prophet is now in Washington City preparing documents, professedly by the command of God, to lay before Congress in relation to these things. Truly wonders will never cease.

A PLEASANT TEMPER.

If we condemn vices according to the actual mischief which results from them, we should place the indulgence of a fretful, complaining bad temper in the very front rank. It makes one a social nuisance. Of two men otherwise the same, one of whom is sometimes intemperate in drink, and the other temperate, except in the indulgence of a fretful, complaining disposition, we confess that we greatly prefer the former.

One of the bad effects of a fretful temper is, that it hides what is good in a man. We have known persons to whose honor and uprightness we would have intrusted our lives, persons capable of the most generous deeds, ready to labor for others, moral men and religious men, having one fault, an uncomfortable temper; but that was on the surface, obtruding itself like an eruption, always starting up, and interfering with social intercourse; and this one infirmity, so much on the outside, hid all their virtues. They were disagreeable men. When away from them you reproached yourself that you did not like them better, you respect them, and knew that they deserved respect, but the moment you were with them, the evil spirit showed itself, and you felt thankful to have as little to do with them as possible.

One of the penalties of a complaining temper is that it prevents one from receiving the sympathy which he deserves. You wonder, my friend, that no one sympathizes with you in this serious trial through which you are passing. The reason is that you have long ago monopolized more than your share of sympathy. You have been calling on people every day of your life to mourn over your sorrows, or to admire the heroism with which you bore them, and, after all, it turned out that your troubles were neither more nor less than such as your neighbors were bearing without mentioning them. You have cried wolf so often when there was no wolf, that though they hear your complainings, they do not believe there is any more foundation for them than pensation of the fulness of times." And what is most remarkable in the whole affair is that we find such men as William Marks, (former President of the "stake" at Nauvoo,) young Joseph, (the eldest son of the prophet,) Moses Smith, Aaron Smith, with scores of others, that were known to be firm friends of the dead prophet; and last, not least, our old friend and Boston favorite Elder G. J. Adams, have all rallied around the standard of prophet Strang, and they may be called the peace party of the Mormons, or "Saints." They are the party that are now gaining numbers every where, particularly in the south. Their head quarters are in Voree, Wisconsin, and Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan.

In Voree they have established a community that they call the "Order of Enoch," which has been in operation over two years, with complete success. They are there building a Temple four times as large as the one at Nauvoo, with walls eight feet thick, marble floors and roof. They have been living at Voree over five years, and had no difficulty with the other inhabitants, which seems a wonder in their history. But their movements at Beaver Island seems most strange of all; they are gathering and locating there by hundreds, by virtue of a professed Revelation, that Strang has received from God commanding them to gather there and take possession of the land, as a gift of God, on the "Free Soil" principle, without money, and without price, declaring they shall never be driven from their possessions; and they are there establishing an "Order" that they call the "Independent Order of the Kingdom of God," or the kingdom of the Saints, spoken of in the 7th Chapter of Daniel's propheey, and say that they will be governed by no laws but the laws of God. They use no "weapons of war," and depend entirely on heaven for protection, and deliverance. Their prophet is now in Washington City preparing documents, professedly by the command of God, to lay before Congress in relation to these things. Truly wonders will never cease.

A PLEASANT [illegible]ER.

If we condemn vices according to their actual mischief which results from them, we should place the indulgence of a fretful, complaining bad temper in the very first rank. It makes one a social nuisance. [illegible] one otherwise the same, one of whom is sometimes intemperate in drink, and the other temperate, except in the indulgence of a complaining disposition, we confess that we greatly prefer the former.

One of the bad effects of a fretful temper is, that it hides [illegible] good in a man. We have known persons to whose honor and uprightness we would have intrusted our lives, persons capable of the most generous deeds, ready to labor for others, moral men and religious men, having one fault, an uncomfortable temper; but that was on the surface, obtruding itself like an eruption, always starting up, and interfering with social intercourse; and this one infirmity, so much on the outside, hid all their virtues. They were disagreeable men. When away from them you reproached yourself that you did not like them better, you respect them, and knew that they deserved respect, but the moment you were with them, the evil spirit showed itself, and you felt thankful to have as little to do with them as possible.

One of the penalties of a complaining temper is that it prevents one from receiving the sympathy which he deserves. You wonder, my friend, that no one sympathizes with you in this serious trial through which you are passing. The reason is that you have long ago monopolized more than your share of sympathy. You have been calling on people every day of your life to mourn over your sorrows, or to admire the heroism with which you bore them, and, after all, it turned out that your troubles were neither more nor less than such as your neighbors were bearing without mentioning them. You have cried wolf so often when there was no wolf, that though they hear your complainings, they do not believe there is any more foundation for them than there has been before. Besides, they cannot spend life in pitying you; they have already heard enough of your troubles, and it is time for them to pay attention to the trials of others, which your louder complainings have made them disregard.

It is martyrdom to be obliged to live with one of a complaining temper. To hear the eternal sound of complaint and murmuring, to have every pleasant thought scared away, by this evil spirit, is in time a more trial. It seems nothing, but it is like a perpetual nettle, always rubbing against you, and irritating and annoying you more than the severest injuries.

Worst of all is a bad temper in the home. Its influence is irresistibly diffused through all its members. The sunniest temper is by degrees soured by the presence of such a person. You may say that one ought not to feel the bad temper of another, but it would be equally reasonable to lay a plaster of Spanish flies upon the skin, and not expect it to draw. One string out of tune will destroy the music of an instrument otherwise perfect. One uncomfortable temper in a family will put ajar the whole household. Its presence is like a raw north east wind, and seems to have power to penetrate into every room of the house. Where the heads of a family or its older members are cursed with such a temper, like leprosy of old, the curse will spread to all. Domestics are neither satisfying, no satisfied; children catch the acrid and imperative tone of voice; there is a constant suspicion of wrong and intended offence, there are taunting tones and recriminating words, and the general discomfort produced is such that the members of the family look for enjoyment to any place but home.

This may be an extreme case, but it only shows the true character of a bad and uncontrolled temper. When we see how love and kindness and all the genial virtues are withered by the frosty atmosphere which it produces we do not hesitate to say that the indulgence of a fretful, complaining, and bad temper is one of the most mischievous vices, while the cultivation of a kind and considerate temper, of a disposition to please or to be pleased, of a state of the heart which reveals itself in kind, forbearing, pleasant thoughts, and words, and deeds, is in our judgment to be ranked among the primary virtues. Certain we are that there are many vices with much worse names, which are not a tenth part as fatal to the best qualities of the character, as the indulgence of a complaining temper.—Register.

Baltimore, Dec. 18th, 1849.

Dear Frank:—I have been very much out of health for a fortnight, and quite sick during the last week. Sunday, 15th, I got up from a bed of severe sickness to preach. God gave me strength for the occasion. And though it was with much difficulty I got to the hall, only four doors away, I preached three long sermons to large and attentive audiences. The church here is growing in faith and knowledge, and is of good report without. A very general interest is awakened, and not a few of the clergy of different churches attend our meetings, especially Methodists and Roman Catholics. I am mending in health, and have sat up much of the day to-day, and hope to be out to morrow.

JAMES J STRANG.

Boston, Dec. 12th, 1849.

Dear Bro.:—Yours of the 10th is received. We had a first rate meeting last night. The spirit of God was on us, and on the people.—We are about hiring the large Methodist house on Benit st. We calculate to make a stir here by the help of God, whether Providence is willing or not. Write to me as often as you have anything to say. Bro Skimmings is going to move in the spring. I have commenced baptizing, and the prospect is fine for going ahead. We are bound to prosper. As ever yours, &c.,

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Beaver Island, Nov. 16th, 1849.

Dear Bro.:—We enjoy the best of health on the Island, and have good hopes of a pleasant and prosperous winter. Business will be good, and provisions abundant. I would say to those who think ill of us either physically or spiritually, come and see us. If evil influences are not suffered to master us, we may be the happiest and healthiest people in the world. May God keep you and all who will keep his law.

JAMES M. GREIG.

there to be before. Besides, they cannot spend time in saying you: they have already heard enough of your troubles; and it is time for their sympathies to the trials of others, which your complainings have made them disregard.

It is a sad doom to be obliged to live with one of a complaining temper. To hear the eternal tone of complaint and murmuring, to have every pleasant thought scared away, by this evil spirit, is a time more trial. It seems no blow but it is like a perpetual nettle, always stinging against you, and irritating and annoying you more than the severest injuries.

Worst of all is a bad temper in the home. Its influence is irresistibly diffused through all its members. The sunniest temper is by degrees soured by the presence of such a person. You may say that one ought not to feel the bad temper of another, but it would be equally reasonable to lay a plaster of pumice stone upon the skin, and not expect it to draw. One string out of tune will destroy the music of an instrument otherwise perfect. One uncomfortable temper in a family will put ajar the whole household. Its presence is like a raw north east wind, and seems to have power to penetrate into every room of the house. Where the heads of a family or its older members are cursed with such a temper, like leprosy of old, the curse will spread to all. Domestics are neither satisfying, nor satisfied; children catch the acrid and imperative tone of voice; there is a constant suspicion of wrong and intended offence, there are taunting tones and recriminating words, and the general discomfort produced is such that the members of the family look for enjoyment to any place but home.

This may be an extreme case, but it only shows the true character of a bad and uncontrolled temper. When we see how love and kindness and all the genial virtues are withered by the frosty atmosphere which it produces we do not hesitate to say that the indulgence of a fretful, complaining, and bad temper is one of the most mischievous vices, while the cultivation of a kind and considerate temper, of a disposition to please or to be pleased, of a state of the heart which reveals itself in kind, forbearing, pleasant thoughts, and words, and deeds, is in our judgment to be ranked among the primary virtues. Certain we are that there are many vices with much worse names, which are not a tenth part as fatal to the best qualities of the character, as the indulgence of a complaining temper.—Register.

Baltimore, Dec. 18th, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—I have been very much out of health for a fortnight, and quite sick during the last week. Sunday, 15th, I got up from a bed of severe sickness to preach. God gave me strength for the occasion. And though it was with much difficulty I got to the hall, only four doors away, I preached three long sermons to large and attentive audiences. The church here is growing in faith and knowledge, and is of good report without. A very general interest is awakened, and not a few of the clergy of different churches attend our meetings, especially Methodists and Roman Catholics. I am recruiting in health, and have sat up much of the day to day, and hope to be out to-morrow. JAMES J. STRANG.

Boston, Dec. 12th, 1849.

DEAR BRO.:—Yours of the 10th is received. We had a first rate meeting last night. The spirit of God was on us, and on the people.—We are about hiring the large Methodist house on Benit st. We calculate to make a stir here by the help of God, whether Providence is willing or not. Write to me as often as you have anything to say. Bro Skimmings is going to move in the spring. I have commenced baptizing, and the prospect is fine for going ahead. We are bound to prosper. As ever yours, &c., SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Beaver Island, Nov. 16th, 1849.

DEAR BRO.:—We enjoy the best of health on the Island, and have good hopes of a pleasant and prosperous winter. Business will be good, and provisions abundant. I would say to those who think ill of us either physically or spiritually, come and see us. If evil influences are not suffered to master us, we may be the happiest and healthiest people in the world. May God keep you and all who will keep this law. JAMES M. GREIG.

LOOK ALWAYS ON THE SUNNY SIDE.

When little things may sweeten life
If we but view them rightly;
Our darkest moments oft are rife
While pleasure's beaming brightly.

The mind that wraps itself in grief
And vents its woes in groaning,
Would never gain one hour's relief,
For ages pass'd in moaning.

Look always on the sunny side—
The sun is ever shining;
The shadow may be dark and wide,
But 'tis no use repining.

Nay, tho' the sun seem'd vanish'd quite,
We are not unenlightened,
The glittering stars show best at night,
As tho' by darkness brightened.

Your path may be thro' deserts drear,
But springs e'en there are flowing—
Keep your spirits never fear,
Heaven still is joy bestowing.

As a bright flower that may be found,
Where all beside is dreary,
Seems to shed sweeter fragrance round,
In comfort to the weary.

Just so, a joy the mourner sees
Amid the gloom of sorrow,
Possesses double power to please,
And strengthens for the morrow.

Then let us always look for joy,
Even in our griefs invite her—
And what would otherwise annoy,
Will help to make it brighter.

PROSPECTUS OF THE SOUTHERN LITERARY MESSENGER, FOR 1850.

SIXTEENTH VOLUME.

A new volume of this long established and favorite monthly will be commenced on the 1st of January next. In issuing its Prospectus, the Editor does not deem it necessary to publish any long list of contributors or to indulge in any fulsome laudations of the Magazine. Its character is well known throughout the country. For nearly sixteen years it has occupied the first rank of excellence in periodical literature. The Editor is determined to maintain its standing, by filling it with articles from the best pens in the country. The contents will embrace Reviews, Historical and Biographical Sketches, Novels, Tales, Travels, Essays, Poems, Critiques, and Papers on the Army, Navy and other National Subjects.

The Messenger will also continue to present articles of a scientific character, such as during the past year, have excited the most marked attention on both sides of the Atlantic. In the forthcoming volume, the Original Novel, of the Chevalier Merlin will be continued. This work was pronounced by the late Edgar A. Poe to be the finest effort of genius in course of publication in this country.

The Editor has pleasure in announcing that his accomplished European Correspondent will continue to furnish the Magazine with monthly letters from Paris, comprising all the items of foreign intelligence, and critical remarks on all novelties in Science, Literature and Art. The reader will find this correspondence a faithful reflection of Life in the French Capital. The political sagacity of the writer has been commended in the highest terms by the National Intelligencer.

Of the Editorial and Critical Department of the Messenger, the Editor will only say that it will embrace copious notes on current literature, and reviews of all new American or Foreign works of general interest and value. His opinions will at least be always fearlessly and honestly avowed.

CONDITIONS OF THE SOUTHERN LITERARY MESSENGER.

The Literary Messenger is published in monthly numbers. Each number contains not less than 64 large super-royal pages, printed on good type, and in the best manner, and on paper of the most beautiful quality.

The Messenger is mailed regularly on or about the first day of every month in the year. Twelve numbers make a volume,—and the price of subscription is $5 per volume, payable in advance;—nor will the work be sent to any one, unless the order for it is accompanied with the cash. The year commences with the January number. No subscription Received for less than the year, unless the individual subscribing chooses to pay the full price of a year's subscription, for a less period.

The risk of transmitting subscription by mail will be assumed by the proprietor. But every subscriber thus transmitting payment, is required (besides taking proper evidence of the fact and date of mailing) to retain a memorandum of the number and particular marks of the note sent; or subscription may be remitted through the Post Masters, according to the present laws.

If a subscription is not directed to be discontinued before the first number of a volume has been published, it will be taken as a continuance for another year.

Any one inclosing a $20 current bill, at one time, with names of five new subscribers, shall receive five copies of the Messenger, for one year.

The mutual obligations of the publisher and subscriber, for the year, are fully incurred as soon as the first No. of the volume is issued: and after that time, no discontinuance of a subscription will be permitted. Nor will any subscription be discontinued while anything remains due thereon, unless at the option of the editor. JNO. R. THOMPSON, Editor and Proprietor.

Richmond, Virginia, October, 1849.

A STRIKING THOUGHT.—"The death of an old man's wife," says Lamartine, "is like cuting down an oak that has long shaded the family mansion. Henceforth the glare of the world, with its cares and vicissitudes, fall upon the old widower's heart, and there is nothing to break their force, or shield him from the full weight of misfortune. It is as if his right hand was withered—as if one wing of his eagle was broken, and every movement that he made only brought him to the ground.—His eyes are dim and glassy, and when the film of death falls over him, he misses those accustomed tones which might have smoothed his passage to the grave."

LOOK ALWAYS ON THE SUNNY SIDE.

When little things may sometimes be
If we but view them rightly;
Our darkest moments all are rife
With pleasures beaming brightly.

The mind that wraps itself in grief
And veils its views to gloomy,
Would never gain one hour's relief,
For ages passed in misery.

Look always on the sunny side—
The sun is ever shining;
The shade we may be dark and wide,
But 'tis no use repining.

Nay, tho' the sun seemed vanish'd quite,
We are not unenlightened,
The gentle twinkling stars above best at night,
As tho' by darkness brightened.

Your path may be thro' deserts drear,
But springs will burst around you—
Keep your spirits never fear,
Heaven will to joy bestowing.

As a bright flower that may be found,
Where all beside is dreary,
Seems to shed sweeter fragrance round,
In contrast to the weary.

Just so, a joy the mourner sees
Amid the gloom of sorrow,
Possesses double power to please,
And strengthens for the morrow.

Then let us always look for joy,
Even in our grief invite her—
And what we find otherwise annoy,
We'll help to make it brighter.

PROSPECTUS OF THE SOUTHERN LITERARY MESSENGER, FOR 1850.

SEVENTH VOLUME.

A new volume of this long established and favorite monthly will be commenced on the 1st of January next. In issuing its Prospectus, the Editor does not deem it necessary to publish any long list of contributors or to indulge in any fulsome laudations of the Magazine. Its character is well known throughout the country. For nearly sixteen years it has occupied the first rank of excellence in periodical literature. The Editor is determined to maintain its standing, by filling it with articles from the best pens in the country. The contents will embrace Reviews, Historical and Biographical Sketches, Novels, Tales, Travels, Essays, Poems, Critiques, and Papers on the Army, Navy and other National Subjects.

The Messenger will also continue to present articles of a scientific character, such as during the past year, have excited the most marked attention on both sides of the Atlantic. In the forthcoming volume, the Original Novel, of the Chevalier Merlin will be continued. This work was pronounced by the late Edgar A. Poe to be the finest effort of genius in course of publication in this country.

The Editor has pleasure in announcing that his accomplished European Correspondent will continue to furnish the Magazine with monthly letters from Paris, comprising all the items of foreign intelligence, and critical remarks on all novelties in Science, Literature and Art. The reader will find this correspondence a faithful reflection of Life in the French Capital. The political sagacity of the writer has been commended in the highest terms by the National Intelligencer.

Of the Editorial and Critical Department of the Messenger, the Editor will only say that it will embrace copious notices of current literature, and reviews of all new American or Foreign works of general interest and value. His opinions will at least be always fearlessly and honestly avowed.

CONDITIONS OF THE SOUTHERN LITERARY MESSENGER.

The Literary Messenger is published in monthly numbers. Each number contains not less than 64 large super-royal pages, printed on good type, and in the best manner, and on paper of the most beautiful quality.

The Messenger is mailed regularly on or about the first day of every month in the year. Twelve numbers make a volume,—and the price of subscription is $5 per volume, payable in advance;—nor will the work be sent to any one, unless the order for it is accompanied with the cash. The year commences with the January number. No subscription Received for less than the year, unless the individual subscribing chooses to pay the full price of a year's subscription, for a less period.

The risk of transmitting subscription by mail will be assumed by the proprietor. But every subscriber thus transmitting payment, is required (besides taking proper evidence of the fact and date of mailing) to obtain a memorandum of the number and particular marks of the note sent; or subscription may be remitted through the Post Masters, according to the present laws.

If a subscription is not directed to be discontinued before the first number of a volume has been published, it will be taken as a continuance for another year.

Any one inclosing a $20 current bill, at one time, with names of five new subscribers, shall receive five copies of the Messenger, for one year.

The mutual obligations of the publisher and subscriber, for the year, are fully incurred as soon as the first No. of the volume is issued: and after that time, no discontinuance of a subscription will be permitted. Nor will any subscription be discontinued while anything remains due thereon, unless at the option of the editor.

JNO. R. THOMPSON, Editor and Proprietor.

Richmond, Virginia, October, 1849.

A STRIKING THOUGHT.—"The death of an old man's wife," says Lamartine, "is like cutting down an oak that has long shaded the family mansion. Henceforth the glare of the world, with its cares and vicissitudes, fall upon the old widower's heart, and there is nothing to break their force, or shield him from the full weight of misfortune. It is as if his right hand was withered—as if one wing of his eagle was broken, and every movement that he made only brought him to the ground.—His eyes are dim and glassy, and when the film of death falls over him, he misses those accustomed tones which might have smoothed his passage to the grave."

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 43.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JAN. 10, 1850 [WHOLE No. 159.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

———, December 20th, 1849.

DEAR BROTHER:—I am now at Bro. Adams' in Baltimore. George is up to Boston, raising a tremendous excitement. He is there the man of the "million," and making more of a stir than "Father Matthew." The papers teem with notices of him, of the most friendly kind. They have baptized some three every week for four weeks.

In Europe every struggle has resulted in favor of arbitrary power. There is not a nation there which is not worse off than it was two years ago. The government of Louis Napoleon is more tyrannical at home, and less respected by foreign powers than that of Louis Philip. Though the Pope is not in fact returned to Rome, the provisional government which he has established there is more tyrannical than the Papal government has been for three centuries. Russia sits proudly in the north, dictating half the nations of Europe, and menacing all the rest. Austria has made all Hungary a mere slaughter house, where men are executed without mercy on the most vague charges, irrespective of all law new or old. The very idea of the German union is obsolete; and as for Poland, men have forgot that there ever was such a nation.

This picture looks horrid, but I think in truth the United States present a worse one. Not that such acts are done avowedly by the powers that be, and therefore charged to the responsibility of the nation, but murders to the amount of a score in a day are constantly committed, and no effort made to punish the murderers. I am satisfied, by a close observation, that in the three great cities, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, there are more cases where the efforts of the officers are made in favor of the guilty than against them.

The election of Mayors and Aldermen in all these cities is, and for many years has been, within the control of thieves, pickpockets, gamblers and prostitues, and no persons can hold those offices who are not satisfactory to them. Seeking no offices themselves, but only anxious that such men may be elected as will give immunity to their crimes, they are ready at all times to play between Whigs, Democrats and Free Soilers; between Conservatives and Reformers; between Protestants and Romanists; always giving popularity and success to such candidates as they know will favor them, and always electing them. The man who will not do it is hissed in the popular assembly, cried down in the caucus, and voted down at the polls. He is seldom nominated to office, and never elected.

It is a common event for hundreds of prisoners to be discharged from the various prisons on the eve of the elections, to cast not unfrequently votes enough to decide the fate of the day. And certain street rowdies, burglars and pickpockets, whose lives are one continual scene of villainy, are always sure of a pardon from the prison, do what they may; because it is known that there is a gang of the same stripe, whose vote depends on that fact.

This is the sixteenth day in the session of Congress, and the House of Representatives has no speaker yet. The 58th ballot was taken yesterday, the highest candidate receiv-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 43.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. JAN. 10, 1850 [WHOLE No. 159.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

———, December 20th, 1849.

DEAR BROTHER:—I am now at Bro. Adams' in Baltimore. George is up to Boston, raising a tremendous excitement. He is there the man of the "million," and making more of a stir than "Father Matthew." The papers teem with notices of him, of the most friendly kind. They have baptized some three every week for four weeks.

In Europe every struggle has resulted in favor of arbitrary power. There is not a nation there which is not worse off than it was two years ago. The government of Louis Napoleon is more tyrannical at home, and less respected by foreign powers than that of Louis Philip. Though the Pope is not in fact returned to Rome, the provisional government which he has established there is more tyrannical than the Papal government has been for three centuries. Russia sits proudly in the north, dictating half the nations of Europe, and menacing all the rest. Austria has made all Hungary a mere slaughter house, where men are executed without mercy on the most vague charges, irrespective of all law new or old. The very idea of the German union is obsolete; and as for Poland, men have forgot that there ever was such a nation.

This picture looks horrid, but I think in truth the United States present a worse one. Not that such acts are done avowedly by the powers that be, and therefore charged to the responsibility of the nation, but murders to the amount of a score in a day are constantly committed, and no effort made to punish the murderers. I am satisfied, by a close observation, that in the three great cities, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, there are more cases where the efforts of the officers are made in favor of the guilty than against them.

The election of Mayors and Aldermen in all these cities is, and for many years has been, within the control of thieves, pickpockets, gamblers and prostitues, and no persons can hold those offices who are not satisfactory to them. Seeking no offices themselves, but only anxious that such men may be elected as will give immunity to their crimes, they are ready at all times to play between Whigs, Democrats and Free Soilers; between Conservatives and Reformers; between Protestants and Romanists; always giving popularity and success to such candidates as they know will favor them, and always electing them. The man who will not do it is hissed in the popular assembly, cried down in the caucus, and voted down at the polls. He is seldom nominated to office, and never elected.

It is a common event for hundreds of prisoners to be discharged from the various prisons on the eve of the elections, to cast not unfrequently votes enough to decide the fate of the day. And certain street rowdies, burglars and pickpockets, whose lives are one continual scene of villainy, are always sure of a pardon from the prison, do what they may; because it is known that there is a gang of the same stripe, whose vote depends on that fact.

This is the sixteenth day in the session of Congress, and the House of Representatives has no speaker yet. The 58th ballot was taken yesterday, the highest candidate receiving 86 votes, and 113 necessary to elect. And the prospect of an election is every day less. Indeed there is no mode by which an election can be accomplished without one party or the other yielding to another what it both wishes and has the power to retain.

Democrats and Whigs are about equally balanced; the advantage being a little in favor of the former. But the Free Soilers have a few Representatives, just sufficient to hold the balance. Being very few in number, they do not look to the control of the house, nor expect any of its patronage. But knowing that neither party can elect a speaker without their assistance, they refuse to give their votes to any man who will not so constitute the Committees on Territories, the Districts and the Judiciary, as to give them a fair hearing. A majority of either party would gladly accede to their terms, but the moment they do it the whole Southern wing of the party would fall off and leave them still worse behind than they now are. So it is impossible for either of the leading parties to obtain a majority coalescing with them.

There are up from the South several members both Whigs and Democrats, who would be willing to go over to their opponents and elect a speaker, so they could get one peculiarly southern. But as several of the northern Whigs and Democrats are Free Soilers in their predilections, the moment they saw a movement of that kind they would draw off upon a northern candidate. Therefore neither party dare bid for them.

I think they will keep on the present struggle till after the holydays, and then trusting that the north, who are disgusted at such a waste of time, will acquiesce in everything rather than a farther delay, both parties will bid for the entire vote of the south, and that the one which will go the farthest in favor of slavery will get the speaker. If such an attempt should fail, its reaction would bring in a northern speaker, and either event would continue the present glorious disunion with a new phase to it.

In the Senate the southern members have taken a very exclusive position. The control of all the Committees who will have cognizance of sectional questions is given to the south. Col. Benton has been read out of the Democratic party for favoring the Free Soil movement. He is dropped from being Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and Mr. King, a rabid southerner, and much his inferior, placed in his stead. Hale and Chase, the two Free Soil Senators, are left off from all Committees, and the southern Senators proposed to do the same with Col. Benton.

At the instance of some northern men he was finally given an insignificant place on a Committee, of which he was the former head, with two Whigs on one side and two Democrats on the other to take turns firing at him. Of course he will not serve. The south even made an effort to drop Douglass from the Committee on Territories, because he was a Representative of a free State, though he is opposed to the Wilmot Proviso, and his wife is the owner of numerous slaves. But this they finally gave up. Houston was also underrated, because not deemed sufficiently pro-slavery. When we consider that the number of Senators from free and slave States are equal, and that two of the proscribed Senators are from the slave States, this is a remarkable transaction.

It is already strongly given out that California will not be admitted at this session. That is, she is allowed to organize a State government, and govern herself as a State, but by refusing to pass an act for her admission her Senators will be kept out, and in the meantime an effort will be made to cause a new slave State out of Texas, to come in at the same time. It is not improbable also that efforts will be made for slave States, both out of the Indian Territory west of Arkansaw, and the Brighamite settlement at Salt Lake, in each of which places there are a few slaves.

Certain it is that the south now see a strong

ing 86 votes, and 113 necessary to elect. And the prospect of an election is every day less. Indeed there is no mode by which an election can be accomplished without one party or the other yielding to another what it both wishes and has the power to retain.

Democrats and Whigs are about equally balanced; the advantage being a little in favor of the former. But the Free Soilers have a few Representatives, just sufficient to hold the balance. Being very few in number, they do not look to the control of the house, nor expect any of its patronage. But knowing that neither party can elect a speaker without their assistance, they refuse to give their votes to any man who will not so constitute the Committees on Territories, the Districts and the Judiciary, as to give them a fair hearing. A majority of either party would gladly accede to their terms, but the moment they do it the whole Southern wing of the party would fall off and leave them still worse behind than they now are. So it is impossible for either of the leading parties to obtain a majority coalescing with them.

There are up from the South several members both Whigs and Democrats, who would be willing to go over to their opponents and elect a speaker, so they could get one peculiarly southern. But as several of the northern Whigs and Democrats are Free Soilers in their predilections, the moment they saw a movement of that kind they would draw off upon a northern candidate. Therefore neither party dare bid for them.

I think they will keep on the present struggle till after the holydays, and then trusting that the north, who are disgusted at such a waste of time, will acquiesce in everything rather than a farther delay, both parties will bid for the entire vote of the south, and that the one which will go the farthest in favor of slavery will get the speaker. If such an attempt should fail, its reaction would bring in a northern speaker, and either event would continue the present glorious disunion with a new phase to it.

In the Senate the southern members have taken a very exclusive position. The control of all the Committees who will have cognizance of sectional questions is given to the south. Col. Benton has been read out of the Democratic party for favoring the Free Soil movement. He is dropped from being Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and Mr. King, a rabid southerner, and much his inferior, placed in his stead. Hale and Chase, the two Free Soil Senators, are left off from all Committees, and the southern Senators proposed to do the same with Col. Benton.

At the instance of some northern men he was finally given an insignificant place on a Committee, of which he was the former head, with two Whigs on one side and two Democrats on the other to take turns firing at him. Of course he will not serve. The south even made an effort to drop Douglass from the Committee on Territories, because he was a Representative of a free State, though he is opposed to the Wilmot Proviso, and his wife is the owner of numerous slaves. But this they finally gave up. Houston was also underrated, because not deemed sufficiently pro-slavery. When we consider that the number of Senators from free and slave States are equal, and that two of the proscribed Senators are from the slave States, this is a remarkable transaction.

It is already strongly given out that California will not be admitted at this session. That is, she is allowed to organize a State government, and govern herself as a State, but by refusing to pass an act for her admission her Senators will be kept out, and in the meantime an effort will be made to cause a new slave State out of Texas, to come in at the same time. It is not improbable also that efforts will be made for slave States, both out of the Indian Territory west of Arkansaw, and the Brighamite settlement at Salt Lake, in each of which places there are a few slaves.

Certain it is that the south now see a strong prospect of more free States than slave out of the late acquisitions from Mexico, and that they are resolved on very violent measures to prevent it. Many of the southern Representatives, knowing that the government cannot go on without appropriations, which cannot be made without an organization of the House, express great satisfaction with the present state of things, and a wish that it may continue; and the Free Soilers, believing that it is only necessary to rouse the north in order to obtain the entire triumph of their principles, rejoice at the crisis, and intend to make the most of it.

Unless the question can be settled some way, it will not be possible to keep up the present party distinction. Once settled, I think all parties would submit, and things go on as usual. But even that is uncertain. The south have got up a convention after the manner of the old Hartford convention, to meet sometime next spring, and talk very loudly o very energetic measures, in case things are not done to their liking. We shall see what we shall see.

P. S. Dec. 22d.—A joint Committee of Whigs and Democrats have been laboring for two days, and I am unable to learn of any prospect of a speedy settlement of the difficulty. One more ineffectual ballot was taken yesterday, and to-day Mr. Toombes, a southern disunionist, got up a regular row, defying the whole House, and talking a long time in spite of a general call to order. He succeeded in getting a resolution passed allowing indiscriminate debate pending the election. If the Committee can agree, it is probable that their measure may be rapidly pushed through the House. But if they do not agree, the organization of the House becomes extremely uncertain.

Voree, January 4th, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—I have just received a letter from Bro. R. G. Steele, of Herkimer village, Herkimer Co., N. Y., containing five dollars from a young man, to be appropriated to the building of the Temple or Tower, or both, just as I see fit. Although this young gentleman has not as yet united with us, yet he has manifested a degree of faith in this dispensation by his works that many saints would do well to imitate. Certainly such a spirit of liberality is seldom exhibited by those without.

One half of the money will accordingly be appropriated to the Temple, and the other half to the Tower, and the donors name entered on the records in connection with this generous deed, as a memorial to future generations of his faith in the latter day work. Bro. Steele writes that there is a great anxiety for "Mormon" preaching in that region; that Elders passing that way can find a welcome entertainment by calling on him or Messrs. Peter or David Smith, at Herkimer village. By inserting this in the Herald you will confer a token of respect on an act of pure and disinterested benevolence, and a favor on your brother in the gospel covenant,

GILBERT WATSON.

BE THYSELF.

There is a babbling more than enough; but among it all, one finds little true speech and true silence. The dullest mind has some beauty peculiarly its own; but it echoes and does not speak itself. It strives to write as schools have taught, as customers dictate, or as sects prescribe; and so it stammers and makes no utterance. Nature made us individual, as she did the flowers and pebbles, but we are afraid to be peculiar, and so our society resembles a bag of marbles or a string of mould candles. Why should we all dress after the same fashion? The frost never paints my windows twice alike.—Emerson.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Polly Briggs,	$0,50	to Vol. III No. 44
Chauncey Jennings,	2,00	to Vol. V No. 28

prospect of more free States than slave out of the late acquisitions from Mexico, and that they are resolved on very violent measures to prevent it. Many of the southern Representatives, knowing that the government cannot go on without appropriations, which cannot be made without an organization of the House, express great satisfaction with the present state of things, and a wish that it may continue; and the Free Soilers, believing that it is only necessary to rouse the north in order to obtain the entire triumph of their principles, rejoice at the crisis, and intend to make the most of it.

Unless the question can be settled some way, it will not be possible to keep up the present party distinction. Once settled, I think all parties would submit, and things go on as usual. But even that is uncertain. The south have got up a convention after the manner of the old Hartford convention, to meet sometime next spring, and talk very loudly o very energetic measures, in case things are not done to their liking. We shall see what we shall see.

P. S. Dec. 22d.—A joint Committee of Whigs and Democrats have been laboring for two days, and I am unable to learn of any prospect of a speedy settlement of the difficulty. One more ineffectual ballot was taken yesterday, and to-day Mr. Toombes, a southern disunionist, got up a regular row, defying the whole House, and talking a long time in spite of a general call to order. He succeeded in getting a resolution passed allowing indiscriminate debate pending the election. If the Committee can agree, it is probable that their measure may be rapidly pushed through the House. But if they do not agree, the organization of the House becomes extremely uncertain.

Voree, January 4th, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—I have just received a letter from Bro. R. G. Steele, of Herkimer village, Herkimer Co., N. Y., containing five dollars from a young man, to be appropriated to the building of the Temple or Tower, or both, just as I see fit. Although this young gentleman has not as yet united with us, yet he has manifested a degree of faith in this dispensation by his works that many saints would do well to imitate. Certainly such a spirit of liberality is seldom exhibited by those without.

One half of the money will accordingly be appropriated to the Temple, and the other half to the Tower, and the donors name entered on the records in connection with this generous deed, as a memorial to future generations of his faith in the latter day work. Bro. Steele writes that there is a great anxiety for "Mormon" preaching in that region; that Elders passing that way can find a welcome entertainment by calling on him or Messrs. Peter or David Smith, at Herkimer village. By inserting this in the Herald you will confer a token of respect on an act of pure and disinterested benevolence, and a favor on your brother in the gospel covenant, GILBERT WATSON.

BE THYSELF.

There is a babbling more than enough; but among it all, one finds little true speech and true silence. The dullest mind has some beauty peculiarly its own; but it echoes and does not speak itself. It strives to write as schools have taught, as customers dictate, or as sects prescribe; and so it stammers and makes no utterance. Nature made us individual, as she did the flowers and pebbles, but we are afraid to be peculiar, and so our society resembles a bag of marbles or a string of mould candles.—Why should we all dress after the same fashion? The frost never paints my windows twice alike.—Emerson.

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Polly Briggs,	$0,50 to Vol. III No. 44
Chauncey Jennings,	2,00 to Vol. V No. 28

PROPHETS.

"Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.—Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?—Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit." Matt. vii. 13, 14, 15, 16 & 17.

The above texts are often quoted by established religious sects, as well as by every religious partisan, from the highest down to the lowest, apostate Mormons not excepted, especially the one referring to the false prophets, when anything strange or new is presented.—But I am confident that no passage of sacred writ is more erroneously applied and perverted than this is. Let us see. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Consequently every man considers himself qualified to judge a prophet at once, having decided in their own minds what the fruits of true prophets are, as well as the fruits of false ones. But let us examine the christian world at large, and see whether they are capable in truth for the task, by saying to them, give us your views what the fruits of a true prophet are, and how will you determine them from false ones.

They answer readily, that true prophets will perform many wonderful works, and show signs and wonders, so that all but the willful and stubborn will be constrained to say that such a man is indeed a prophet of God. Such then is the rule modern christians have adopted. But let us see how it will compare with what is written in the scriptures relative to the matter. Christ, in the same chapter, continued the subject with regard to false prophets by saying: "Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophecied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

From this we learn that false prophets will make as great pretensions to prophesying and working miracles as true ones. Consequently the fruits that the modern christians have taken to be the fruits of true prophets, are no more the fruits of true prophets than of false ones. But the idea may be advanced that this was only a pretension that some would make; that they would prophesy, cast out devils, and work miracles, &c., and not a reality. Then if this passage is not sufficient proof, we will quote others.

"And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many." "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Matt. xxiv. 11, 24. "And John answered him, (Christ,) saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbade him, because he followeth not us." Mark ix. 38.

"And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders." 2 Thes. ii. 8, 9. "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Rev. xvi. 13, 14.

We think the foregoing passages are sufficiently plain to show that miracles, signs and wonders are the fruits of false prophets as well as true ones. If we did not we would mention many prophets of the Lord who performed no miracles. We discover also that the people were no more wise with regard to this matter in the days of John the Baptist and Christ than they are now; for they said concerning John,

PROPHETS.

"Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.—Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?—Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit." Matt. vii. 13, 14, 15, 16 & 17.

The above texts are often quoted by established religious sects, as well as by every religious partisan, from the highest down to the lowest, apostate Mormons not excepted, especially the one referring to the false prophets, when anything strange or new is presented.—But I am confident that no passage of sacred writ is more erroneously applied and perverted than this is. Let us see. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Consequently every man considers himself qualified to judge a prophet at once, having decided in their own minds what the fruits of true prophets are, as well as the fruits of false ones. But let us examine the christian world at large, and see whether they are capable in truth for the task, by saying to them, give us your views what the fruits of a true prophet are, and how will you determine them from false ones.

They answer readily, that true prophets will perform many wonderful works, and show signs and wonders, so that all but the willful and stubborn will be constrained to say that such a man is indeed a prophet of God. Such then is the rule modern christians have adopted. But let us see how it will compare with what is written in the scriptures relative to the matter. Christ, in the same chapter, continued the subject with regard to false prophets by saying: "Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophecied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

From this we learn that false prophets will make as great pretensions to prophesying and working miracles as true ones. Consequently the fruits that the modern christians have taken to be the fruits of true prophets, are no more the fruits of true prophets than of false ones. But the idea may be advanced that this was only a pretension that some would make; that they would prophesy, cast out devils, and work miracles, &c., and not a reality. Then if this passage is not sufficient proof, we will quote others.

"And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many." "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Matt. xxiv. 11, 24. "And John answered him, (Christ,) saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbade him, because he followeth not us." Mark ix. 38.

"And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders." 2 Thes. ii. 8, 9. "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Rev. xvi. 13, 14.

We think the foregoing passages are sufficiently plain to show that miracles, signs and wonders are the fruits of false prophets as well as true ones. If we did not we would mention many prophets of the Lord who performed no miracles. We discover also that the people were no more wise with regard to this matter in the days of John the Baptist and Christ than they are now; for they said concerning John,

"that he came neither eating or drinking, and he hath a devil." "Christ came both eating and drinking, and they say, behold a glutonous man and a wine bibber." And when he cast out devils they said, "he done it by the prince of devils," of course showing that they had different ideas with regard to the fruits of true prophets from the present generation; and yet neither of them are correct, as we have already shown.

But if none of these miraculous manifestations are proof of true prophets, how shall we determine them? The key for unlocking this subject is given in the verse first quoted. "Enter ye in at the straight gate, for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." But one may inquire, what has this to do with the subject? I answer, it is spoken in direct connection and reference to this subject, and is only separated by the translator or reviser, by placing a paragraph between the verses. And we shall find by viewing the subject that man, in order to become a prophet of God, has to enter through a certain gate or process, which distinguishes him as a God appointed prophet from a false one. For instance, God, in order to deliver Israel, raised up Moses, and sent an angel to minister unto him, and by the hand of the angel sent him to be a ruler and deliverer to Israel. Acts vii. 35.

By this means Moses was placed at the head, not merely to deliver Israel from Egyptian bondage, but to be a prophet and lawgiver unto them. This Moses, speaking concerning Christ, said he should be a prophet like him. Consequently he received his priesthood in the same way. These two prophets, both standing at the head of the dispensation which they established, each pouring out anathemas against all who should oppose the work in which they were engaged. Joshua succeeds Moses, and Peter receives commandment previous to Christ's ascension to both "feed sheep and lambs," which would include all in his flock; and also "that whatsoever he should bind on earth should be bound in heaven," Matt. xvi. 19, making him the chief shepherd of the whole flock, when he should leave. Accordingly we find Peter sitting at the head of the grand councils of the church, receiving revelation on points of doctrine, and giving the word of the Lord unto the church. Acts xv. 6. 2 Peter iii. 5.

After Peter's death we find John standing in the same place, receiving revelations and dictating them unto the church. Rev. i. Each dispensation having an established rule by which men were made prophets and placed at the head of the church. But what was the gate through which they entered? Christ said with regard to himself, when standing on earth as a prophet to the church, "I am the door: (gate:) by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." John x. 9.

We then discover the only means by which Peter could be made the chief shepherd; that is, by the appointment of Christ. And when Peter had obtained the keys, so he had power that "whatsoever he bound on earth was bound in heaven," he became the door, or gate, and whoever succeeded him would enter through him; that is, by his appointment. And we find John giving a rule for the church in his time, whereby they might know all false prophets and spirits. "We are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickness." 1 John v. 19. "We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." 1 John iv. 6.

We then have the established rule in that dispensation, and now we will look at it as it has been given by revelation in this. God, then, in order to establish this dispensation, raised up Joseph Smith, and ministered unto him by an holy angel, and gave unto him commandment to translate the Book of Mormon, by the means which were before prepared, "confirming the same to others by the ministering of angels;" D. & C. sec. ii. p. 2; afterwards administered unto him, and ordained him by that he came neither eating or drinking, and he hath a devil." "Christ came both eating and drinking, and they say, behold a glutonous man and a wine bibber." And when he cast out devils they said, "he done it by the prince of devils," of course showing that they had different ideas with regard to the fruits of true prophets from the present generation; and yet neither of them are correct, as we have already shown.

But if none of these miraculous manifestations are proof of true prophets, how shall we determine them? The key for unlocking this subject is given in the verse first quoted. "Enter ye in at the straight gate, for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." But one may inquire, what has this to do with the subject? I answer, it is spoken in direct connection and reference to this subject, and is only separated by the translator or reviser, by placing a paragraph between the verses. And we shall find by viewing the subject that man, in order to become a prophet of God, has to enter through a certain gate or process, which distinguishes him as a God appointed prophet from a false one. For instance, God, in order to deliver Israel, raised up Moses, and sent an angel to minister unto him, and by the hand of the angel sent him to be a ruler and deliverer to Israel. Acts vii. 35.

By this means Moses was placed at the head, not merely to deliver Israel from Egyptian bondage, but to be a prophet and lawgiver unto them. This Moses, speaking concerning Christ, said he should be a prophet like him. Consequently he received his priesthood in the same way. These two prophets, both standing at the head of the dispensation which they established, each pouring out anathemas against all who should oppose the work in which they were engaged. Joshua succeeds Moses, and Peter receives commandment previous to Christ's ascension to both "feed sheep and lambs," which would include all in his flock; and also "that whatsoever he should bind on earth should be bound in heaven," Matt. xvi. 19, making him the chief shepherd of the whole flock, when he should leave. Accordingly we find Peter sitting at the head of the grand councils of the church, receiving revelation on points of doctrine, and giving the word of the Lord unto the church. Acts xv. 6. 2 Peter iii. 5.

After Peter's death we find John standing in the same place, receiving revelations and dictating them unto the church. Rev. i. Each dispensation having an established rule by which men were made prophets and placed at the head of the church. But what was the gate through which they entered? Christ said with regard to himself, when standing on earth as a prophet to the church, "I am the door: (gate:) by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." John x. 9.

We then discover the only means by which Peter could be made the chief shepherd; that is, by the appointment of Christ. And when Peter had obtained the keys, so he had power that "whatsoever he bound on earth was bound in heaven," he became the door, or gate, and whoever succeeded him would enter through him; that is, by his appointment. And we find John giving a rule for the church in his time, whereby they might know all false prophets and spirits. "We are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickness." 1 John v. 19. "We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us, Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." 1 John iv. 6.

We then have the established rule in that dispensation, and now we will look at it as it has been given by revelation in this. God, then, in order to establish this dispensation, raised up Joseph Smith, and ministered unto him by an holy angel, and gave unto him commandment to translate the Book of Mormon, by the means which were before prepared, "confirming the same to others by the ministering of angels;" D. & C. sec. ii. p. 2; afterwards administered unto him, and ordained him by holy angels to be an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. D. & C. sec. 1. p. 3.

He having received both priesthoods, the less in May and the greater in June following, 1829, on the 6th day of April, 1830, the same day the church was organized, the church was commanded to keep a record, and in it he (Joseph) was to be called a Seer, a Translator, a Prophet, an Apostle of Jesus Christ, an Elder of the church, &c. D. & C. sec. xlvi. p. 1.—At the same time there was another commandment given expressly to the church, that "thou (the church) shalt give heed unto all his (Joseph Smith's) words and commandments which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me: for his word ye shall receive as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by doing these things the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good," &c.

It will be discovered that no commandment was binding on the church by this quotation which Joseph Smith should give except he first received it himself from God to give. Again, it will be discovered that all commandments that were thus received were binding, and the church by giving heed unto all of them were to have the powers of darkness removed from before them, and the heavens were to shake for their good, &c.

But, says one, we are not bound to receive the word of God through him, unless he "walks in all holiness before God." Indeed! This is a new thing under the sun. By this rule we would reject a great share of the revelations God has given to man since the creation. But let us see if the history of the past will bear us out in such a conclusion. Moses transgressed; that is, walked unholy at the waters of Meribah; Num. xx. 13; and by this transgression he lost his privilege of leading the house of Israel into the promised land: yet no one rose up to say the revelations and commandments which he afterwards gave were not binding, and that Joshua was not appointed of God to lead the people, and that Eleazar was not placed in the place of Aaron. And so it was with other prophets, as we could abundantly show.

But coming down to our day, to Joseph Smith, we find that after God called him to the work of translating the "Book of Mormon," God accused him of transgression, even before he began to translate, and after he translated a part of it the Lord said to him, speaking concerning the work of translation: "But how strict were your commandments; and remember, also, the promises which were made unto you, if you did not transgress them; and behold, how oft you have transgressed the commandments and the laws of God." D. & C. sec. xxx. p. 3. Yet no Mormon considers the "Book of Mormon" not binding because of Joseph's unholiness or transgression, and it was never dreamed of until within a few years past by any person in the church, that because Josep Smith was accused of transgression repeatedly by the revelations that God gave to him that those revelations were not binding on the church.

But we now find men who are willing not only to do so themselves, but teach others to do so, setting the time of his transgression at various periods, according to their views. But carrying out this principle and running back through the history of Joseph Smith from one transgression to another, we would carry it back until the very name of Mormonism would be blotted out from under heaven. But the question is asked, how will you construe the above revelation? We answer, we will not construe it at all; but let it stand in its most plain, simple manner; that as it is a commandment given directly to the church, we will let the church receive it, "walking in all holiness before the Lord," receiving God's word from the mouth of his prophet as from his own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by so doing the powers of darkness will be dispersed.

But, again, it is said, if the prophet speak in the name of the Lord that which the Lord hath not spoken, must we follow that prophet?—"But the prophet that shall presume to speak holy angels to be an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. D. & C. sec. 1. p. 3.

He having received both priesthoods, the less in May and the greater in June following, 1829, on the 6th day of April, 1830, the same day the church was organized, the church was commanded to keep a record, and in it he (Joseph) was to be called a Seer, a Translator, a Prophet, an Apostle of Jesus Christ, an Elder of the church, &c. D. & C. sec. xlvi. p. 1.—At the same time there was another commandment given expressly to the church, that "thou (the church) shalt give heed unto all his (Joseph Smith's) words and commandments which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me: for his word ye shall receive as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by doing these things the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good," &c.

It will be discovered that no commandment was binding on the church by this quotation which Joseph Smith should give except he first received it himself from God to give. Again, it will be discovered that all commandments that were thus received were binding, and the church by giving heed unto all of them were to have the powers of darkness removed from before them, and the heavens were to shake for their good, &c.

But, says one, we are not bound to receive the word of God through him, unless he "walks in all holiness before God." Indeed! This is a new thing under the sun. By this rule we would reject a great share of the revelations God has given to man since the creation. But let us see if the history of the past will bear us out in such a conclusion. Moses transgressed; that is, walked unholy at the waters of Meribah; Num. xx. 13; and by this transgression he lost his privilege of leading the house of Israel into the promised land: yet no one rose up to say the revelations and commandments which he afterwards gave were not binding, and that Joshua was not appointed of God to lead the people, and that Eleazar was not placed in the place of Aaron. And so it was with other prophets, as we could abundantly show.

But coming down to our day, to Joseph Smith, we find that after God called him to the work of translating the "Book of Mormon," God accused him of transgression, even before he began to translate, and after he translated a part of it the Lord said to him, speaking concerning the work of translation: "But how strict were your commandments; and remember, also, the promises which were made unto you, if you did not transgress them; and behold, how oft you have transgressed the commandments and the laws of God." D. & C. sec. xxx. p. 3. Yet no Mormon considers the "Book of Mormon" not binding because of Joseph's unholiness or transgression, and it was never dreamed of until within a few years past by any person in the church, that because Josep Smith was accused of transgression repeatedly by the revelations that God gave to him that those revelations were not binding on the church.

But we now find men who are willing not only to do so themselves, but teach others to do so, setting the time of his transgression at various periods, according to their views. But carrying out this principle and running back through the history of Joseph Smith from one transgression to another, we would carry it back until the very name of Mormonism would be blotted out from under heaven. But the question is asked, how will you construe the above revelation? We answer, we will not construe it at all; but let it stand in its most plain, simple manner; that as it is a commandment given directly to the church, we will let the church receive it, "walking in all holiness before the Lord," receiving God's word from the mouth of his prophet as from his own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by so doing the powers of darkness will be dispersed.

But, again, it is said, if the prophet speak in the name of the Lord that which the Lord hath not spoken, must we follow that prophet?—"But the prophet that shall presume to speak a word in my name which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die." Deut. xviii. 20. "I have sent forth the fulness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph: and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead." D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4. But if the prophet die for such a sin, how shall we know the word the Lord hath not spoken? "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken." Deut. xviii. 22.

We find, then, Joseph Smith placed at the head of this dispensation, a lawgiver as Moses, Christ and Peter were in their days. And as we have seen that Moses was the appointer of Joshua, in order that he might come in through the gate, and be a true prophet and leader to Israel, to lead them into the land of promise—a privilege of which Moses failed to receive, because of transgression—at the same time discovering that Christ was the door and the appointer of Peter, in order that he might come in through the gate, and be the true and lawful prophet to the church. So we will now see, as Joseph Smith failed to stand till the coming of Christ because of transgression, how the church shall know so as not to be deceived, as many have risen up like mushrooms in the night, claiming to be prophets, leaders, &c.

"This shall be a law unto you, (the church,) that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments: and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the grte, and be ordained as I have told you before." We then ask the question, what is the gate? "But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him; for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead." D. & C. sec xiv. p. 2.

Thus we discover that Joseph Smith became the gate or appointer of his successor, like all prophets in former dispensations. But, says one, if there arise a prophet that does not come in through the gate who tells you that you have been led wrong, and shows you a sign or a wonder, and it comes to pass, are you not bound to follow that prophet? "If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul." Deut. xiii. 1, 2, 3.

We have then only to remember that "he that entereth in by the door (or gate) is the shepherd of the sheep;" "and he that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber, and cometh not but for to steal, to kill, and to destroy." John x. 2, 10. Here then we have a rule to determine true prophets from false ones, and one that has been given in all dispensations; and when people adhere to it they are safe; but when they depart from it they are carried about by every wind of doctrine and cunning craftiness of men.

S. P. BACON.

SECOND CROP OF FRUIT IN A VERY HIGH LATITUDE.—We learn that Mr. Strang, from Beaver Island, has letters from that place under date of Nov. 20th, saying: "The weather is beautiful, and almost as warm as summer. We have, within a few days, picked ripe strawberries and raspberries, and the whortleberry bushes are in bloom." This island is in Lake Michigan, and is in 45 40 latitude; and is the seat of a new Mormon colony, of which Mr. Strang is the founder.—Baltimore Clipper.

a word in my name which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die." Deut. xviii. 20. "I have sent forth the fulness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph: and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead." D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4. But if the prophet die for such a sin, how shall we know the word the Lord hath not spoken? "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken." Deut. xviii. 22.

We find, then, Joseph Smith placed at the head of this dispensation, a lawgiver as Moses, Christ and Peter were in their days. And as we have seen that Moses was the appointer of Joshua, in order that he might come in through the gate, and be a true prophet and leader to Israel, to lead them into the land of promise—a privilege of which Moses failed to receive, because of transgression—at the same time discovering that Christ was the door and the appointer of Peter, in order that he might come in through the gate, and be the true and lawful prophet to the church. So we will now see, as Joseph Smith failed to stand till the coming of Christ because of transgression, how the church shall know so as not to be deceived, as many have risen up like mushrooms in the night, claiming to be prophets, leaders, &c.

"This shall be a law unto you, (the church,) that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments: and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the grte, and be ordained as I have told you before." We then ask the question, what is the gate? "But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him; for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead." D. & C. sec xiv. p. 2.

Thus we discover that Joseph Smith became the gate or appointer of his successor, like all prophets in former dispensations. But, says one, if there arise a prophet that does not come in through the gate who tells you that you have been led wrong, and shows you a sign or a wonder, and it comes to pass, are you not bound to follow that prophet? "If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul." Deut. xiii. 1, 2, 3.

We have then only to remember that "he that entereth in by the door (or gate) is the shepherd of the sheep;" "and he that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber, and cometh not but for to steal, to kill, and to destroy." John x. 2, 10. Here then we have a rule to determine true prophets from false ones, and one that has been given in all dispensations; and when people adhere to it they are safe; but when they depart from it they are carried about by every wind of doctrine and cunning craftiness of men.

S. P. BACON.

SECOND CROP OF FRUIT IN A VERY HIGH LATITUDE.—We learn that Mr. Strang, from Beaver Island, has letters from that place under date of Nov. 20th, saying: "The weather is beautiful, and almost as warm as summer. We have, within a few days, picked ripe strawberries and raspberries, and the whortleberry bushes are in bloom." This island is in Lake Michigan, and is in 45 40 latitude; and is the seat of a new Mormon colony, of which Mr. Strang is the founder.—Baltimore Clipper.

SOAR HIGH! SOAR HIGH!

Soar high! soar high! nor fear to fly—
Think not about the falling—
Stay not to shrink upon the brink
Of high and holy calling;
But, being right, with all thy might
Go on—the clouds of sorrow
That here to-day obscure thy way,
May all be gone to-morrow.

The world may sneer, and laugh and jeer,
Yet stay not for repining;
Alike for all, the great and small,
Creation's light is shining.
Take heart of oak, there is no stroke
Man strikes, but it may aid him;
For if the deed from good proceed,
Say what on earth shall shade him?

As every joy we unemploy
Is an ungracious measure,
So every gift we cast adrift
Is a most wasted treasure.
And it may be, perchance, if we
Should once alike refuse them,
We may in vain strive to retain
The slightest power to use them.

Soar high! soar high! nor fear to fly—
Think not about the falling—
There is a power in every hour
To help us in our calling,
If only more we would adore,
And seek its mighty aiding,
Nor rack our brains, and take such pains
To search for things so fading.

NEW YORK RELIGION.

We see it stated that of the four hundred thousand people of New York, between two and three hundred thousand are professors of religion. This is a large estimate, since it covers rather more than the whole adult population; but making every reasonable allowance, there must be enough professors of religion, were those professions genuine, to make a very different state of society from what we see around us.

Were there even one hundred thousand genuine followers of Christ, in his principles and actions, we should have a very different state of society. There is probably no religion in the world that is not lived up to more consistently by its professors. It is notorious that the countries which make the greatest professions of christianity are the most unchristian. The Mahommedans, the Budhists, the Jews, practice much nearer what they profess.

Then, for example, is England a christian nation, setting at defiance every principle of christianity at home and abroad; showing her love for her neighbor by ravaging and plundering weaker nations, and her idea of human brotherhood by the most outrageous oppressions that man ever inflicted on his fellow man.

Of all our thousands of christians, and our hundreds of churches in New York, how much religion is there which comes up to the standard of the sermon on the mount? It may be very good christianity in Wall street or in Broadway; it looks very well in a fashionable church on Sunday, but tried by its principles or its results it is sorry stuff.—N. Y. Daily Times.

☞ The ravages of the cholera at Siam, in the East Indies, according to the last European papers, are beyond measure dreadful. About 20,000 persons have fallen victims to it. So great was the number of deaths that they found it impracticable to burn them all, and many were buried, and multitudes more thrown in the river just as they had died.—They were brought and laid in piles and fuel applied, when they were consumed like heaps of logs. In three days not less than from 2,000 to 3,000 died daily; and at the end of twelve days it was known that more than 20,000 had fallen victims to its fearful ravages. Since that time it has very much abated, but has by no means ceased. It is thought that within a radius of twenty-five or thirty miles not less than 30,000 have been swept off by this fatal scourge within two or three weeks. The cholera and the small pox always make dreadful ravages in Siam.—Newark Daily.

☞ In Turkey, whenever a store keeper is convicted of telling a lie his house is painted black to remain so for one month. If there were such a law in force in this country, what a sombre and gloomy appearance some of our cities would present.

SOAR HIGH! SOAR HIGH!

Soar high! soar high! nor fear to fly—
  Think not about the falling—
Stay not to shrink upon the brink
  Of high and holy calling;
But, being right, with all thy might
  Go on—the clouds of sorrow
That here to-day obscure thy way,
  May all be gone to-morrow.

The world may sneer, and laugh and jeer,
  Yet stay not for repining;
Alike for all, the great and small,
  Creation's light is shining.
Take heart of oak, there is no stroke
  Man strikes, but it may aid him;
For if the deed from good proceed,
  Say what on earth shall shade him?

As every joy we unemploy
  Is an ungracious measure,
So every gift we cast adrift
  Is a most wasted treasure.
And it may be, perchance, if we
  Should once alike refuse them,
We may in vain strive to retain
  The slightest power to use them.

Soar high! soar high! nor fear to fly—
  Think not about the falling—
There is a power in every hour
  To help us in our calling,
If only more we would adore,
  And seek its mighty aiding,
Nor rack our brains, and take such pains
  To search for things so fading.

NEW YORK RELIGION.

We see it stated that of the four hundred thousand people of New York, between two and three hundred thousand are professors of religion. This is a large estimate, since it covers rather more than the whole adult population; but making every reasonable allowance, there must be enough professors of religion, were those professions genuine, to make a very different state of society from what we see around us.

Were there even one hundred thousand genuine followers of Christ, in his principles and actions, we should have a very different state of society. There is probably no religion in the world that is not lived up to more consistently by its professors. It is notorious that the countries which make the greatest professions of christianity are the most unchristian. The Mahommedans, the Budhists, the Jews, practice much nearer what they profess.

Then, for example, is England a christian nation, setting at defiance every principle of christianity at home and abroad; showing her love for her neighbor by ravaging and plundering weaker nations, and her idea of human brotherhood by the most outrageous oppressions that man ever inflicted on his fellow man.

Of all our thousands of christians, and our hundreds of churches in New York, how much religion is there which comes up to the standard of the sermon on the mount? It may be very good christianity in Wall street or in Broadway; it looks very well in a fashionable church on Sunday, but tried by its principles or its results it is sorry stuff.—N. Y. Daily Times.

☞ The ravages of the cholera at Siam in the East Indies, according to the last European papers, are beyond measure dreadful. About 20,000 persons have fallen victims to it. So great was the number of deaths that they found it impracticable to burn them all and many were buried, and multitudes more thrown in the river just as they had died.—They were brought and laid in piles and fuel applied, when they were consumed like heaps of logs. In three days not less than from 2,000 to 3,000 died daily; and at the end of twelve days it was known that more than 20,000 had fallen victims to its fearful ravages. Since that time it has very much abated, but has by no means ceased. It is thought that within a radius of twenty-five or thirty miles not less than 30,000 have been swept off by this fatal scourge within two or three weeks. The cholera and the small pox always make dreadful ravages in Siam.—Newark Daily.

☞ In Turkey, whenever a store keeper is convicted of telling a lie his house is painted black to remain so for one month. If there were such a law in force in this country, what a sombre and gloomy appearance some of our cities would present.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 44.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JAN. 17, 1850 [WHOLE No. 160.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

PROGRESS OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS—A SERMON BY THE CELEBRATED ELDER G. J. ADAMS—ELOQUENCE AND A NEW DODGE FOR CHRISTIANITY.

We looked into Washington Hall on Sunday evening for the purpose of listening to that Boanerges of the Church of Latter Day Saints, Elder G. J. Adams. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity, and many ladies and gentlemen were obliged to retire for want of seats.

The subject selected by the preacher was "the salvation of the dead." The curiosity of the auditory was excited to the utmost, to know in what manner he would handle a proposition so startling and novel. The Elder, however, entered upon his task with the greatest confidence. He told his congregation that he should bow himself to the work as did Sampson in the Temple of the Philistines, and he should feel for the main pillars of error, superstition, and priestcraft, that they might be swept away by the principles of God's eternal truth.

In order to a correct understanding of the subject, the preacher said there were three preliminary inquiries which it was important to settle, before coming to the main proposion to be proved. He would state them thus:—"What is the soul? What is it to be saved from? What will the soul be after it is saved?"

In answering the first question Elder Adams said that he was led to investigate this subject by an incident that occurred at a revival meeting, which he attended in company with Rev. John Newland Maffit. At that time, after a warm and passionate appeal to the congregation to save their souls, Maffit, as was his wont, began to gather people to the anxious seats. Among those who came up was a young, intelligent man, and he asked Bro. Maffit the question:—"What is my soul, and what is it to be saved from?" Maffit replied in the standing jargon of priestcraft when it is nonplused—"Don't tempt God, my young friend, don't tempt God!" He then fell upon his knees and asked God in prayer to smite the querist, that he might know and feel the power of divine anger. But the young man was not to be smote for asking a fair question, and as he retired he reiterated the inquiry, "What is my soul?"

I went home abashed and ashamed that professed ministers of Christ were unable to answer a question so pregnant. I prayed to God that night, for the first time in my life, in earnest. After retiring to rest, I dreamed that I should rise and look at the 7th verse of the 2d chap. of Genesis for an answer to my prayer. I dreamed a second and a third time the same thing. Now I believe in dreams—put faith in them—and God never sent a man to preach his truth who does not believe in dreams. Well, I arose and opened my bible at the place indicated, and then and there for the first time fully understood what the soul of man is composed of. I read as follows:—

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

Here I found that the soul is composed of two eternal principles, matter and spirit.

Both have existed from eternity, but by the

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 44.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. JAN. 17, 1850 [WHOLE No. 160.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

PROGRESS OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS—A SERMON BY THE CELEBRATED ELDER G. J. ADAMS—ELOQUENCE AND A NEW DODGE FOR CHRISTIANITY.

We looked into Washington Hall on Sunday evening for the purpose of listening to that Boanerges of the Church of Latter Day Saints, Elder G. J. Adams. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity, and many ladies and gentlemen were obliged to retire for want of seats.

The subject selected by the preacher was "the salvation of the dead." The curiosity of the auditory was excited to the utmost, to know in what manner he would handle a proposition so startling and novel. The Elder, however, entered upon his task with the greatest confidence. He told his congregation that he should bow himself to the work as did Sampson in the Temple of the Philistines, and he should feel for the main pillars of error, superstition, and priestcraft, that they might be swept away by the principles of God's eternal truth.

In order to a correct understanding of the subject, the preacher said there were three preliminary inquiries which it was important to settle, before coming to the main proposition to be proved. He would state them thus:—"What is the soul? What is it to be saved from? What will the soul be after it is saved?"

In answering the first question Elder Adams said that he was led to investigate this subject by an incident that occurred at a revival meeting, which he attended in company with Rev. John Newland Maffit. At that time, after a warm and passionate appeal to the congregation to save their souls, Maffit, as was his wont, began to gather people to the anxious seats. Among those who came up was a young, intelligent man, and he asked Bro. Maffit the question:—"What is my soul, and what is it to be saved from?" Maffit replied in the standing jargon of priestcraft when it is nonplused—"Don't tempt God, my young friend, don't tempt God!" He then fell upon his knees and asked God in prayer to smite the querist, that he might know and feel the power of divine anger. But the young man was not to be smote for asking a fair question, and as he retired he reiterated the inquiry, "What is my soul?"

I went home abashed and ashamed that professed ministers of Christ were unable to answer a question so pregnant. I prayed to God that night, for the first time in my life, in earnest. After retiring to rest, I dreamed that I should rise and look at the 7th verse of the 2d chap. of Genesis for an answer to my prayer. I dreamed a second and a third time the same thing. Now I believe in dreams—put faith in them—and God never sent a man to preach his truth who does not believe in dreams. Well, I arose and opened my bible at the place indicated, and then and there for the first time fully understood what the soul of man is composed of. I read as follows:—

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

Here I found that the soul is composed of two eternal principles, matter and spirit.

Both have existed from eternity, but by the power of God uniting them, they become a living soul. This body, then, purified from sin and corruption, is the soul to which salvation is promised.

We now know what the soul is, and understanding that it is something material, and substantial, it acquires in our estimation, a more profound interest. Its salvation becomes to us, yet more precious, and the emphatic question of the Savior, "what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul," has a more profound meaning than if that soul was a mere airy nothing, floating about in the immensity of space. The priestly idea of the unsubstantiality of a soul, is unworthy of any man, and a direct insult to Jehovah himself.

The soul is to be saved from the primal curse, death. For disobedience, it was ordained in the council of the most High, that, "The day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The Bible tells us that "a day with God is as a thousand years." The Devil, or Lucifer, son of the morning, that ambitious son of God, who rebelled against the throne, because his elder brother, the first begotten, was selected to form this planet, took upon himself a form and whispered in the ear of the woman, "ye shall not surely die, for God doth know in the day ye eat thereof, your eyes shall be opened and ye shall become as Gods." The rebel told a lie, and yet he told the truth. They did not die in that literal day when they ate of the tree; but where have we any account of a son or daughter of Adam living out a day of God's time. Methusaleh died before the day had passed. Death by this curse, has passed upon all men. The soul is to be saved from this curse.

Life and immortality are brought to light by the mission of Christ. The resurrection of the dead is the only hope of man: "If Christ be not risen from the dead," says St. Paul, "then is our preaching vain, and your hope also is vain." This resurrection will be in an immortal body, purged from the principle of corruption and decay, even as Christ's glorious body was. The three prelimnary questions are now answered.

The subject of salvation of the dead is one of peculiar interest to us. We know from the scriptures that the dead will have an opportunity to hear the gospel and will be saved, but in a different degree of glory from those who hear it on earth, and joyfully receive it.

Christ, when he had risen, said unto Mary in the garden, "Touch me not, for I have not yet ascended to my God and to your God, to my Father and your Father." Upon the cross he said to the thief, "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Now it becomes an important inquiry to know where the spirit of Christ was while the body lay in the grave. We have his own word that he had not been to Heaven--had not seen the Father.

The Bible is only valuable because of its clearness, its simplicity, and its beauty.—"There is nothing hidden that shall not be made plain." Turning over to the 3d epistle of Peter, iii. 5, 6, we learn that after being put to death Christ went to preach to the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient when once the long suffering of God waited: and further on in the next chapter we are told the reason--the cause why the gospel was preached to them that are dead, to wit:—"That they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."

The argument throughout was one of the most ingenious and interesting we have ever listened to. It was fortified from beginning to end with scriptnre quotations that had a bearing upon the subject. The discourse occupied nearly two hours. We have given but a meagre outline of it. One of the most striking peculiarities of the Elder, is his wonderful knowledge of the Bible. Every topic is familiar to him, and the best of all is, he harmonizes the scriptures. Out of the discord and confusion which jarring sectaries make in their interpretations, he brings to light order, beauty, simplicity, and the vast and benevolent purposes of deity concerning man.—Boston Herald.

power of God uniting them, they become a living soul. This body, then, purified from sin and corruption, is the soul to which salvation is promised.

We now know what the soul is, and understanding that it is something material, and substantial, it acquires in our estimation, a more profound interest. Its salvation becomes to us, yet more precious, and the emphatic question of the Savior, "what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul," has a more profound meaning than if that soul was a mere airy nothing, floating about in the immensity of space. The priestly idea of the unsubstantiality of a soul, is unworthy of any man, and a direct insult to Jehovah himself.

The soul is to be saved from the primal curse, death. For disobedience, it was ordained in the council of the most High, that, "The day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The Bible tells us that "a day with God is as a thousand years." The Devil, or Lucifer, son of the morning, that ambitious son of God, who rebelled against the throne, because his elder brother, the first begotten, was selecte to form this planet, took upon himself a form and whispered in the ear of the woman, "ye shall not surely die, for God doth know in the day ye eat thereof, your eyes shall be opene and ye shall become as Gods." The rebe told a lie, and yet he told the truth. They did not die in that literal day when they ate of the tree; but where have we any account of a son or daughter of Adam living out a day of God's time. Methusaleh died before the day had passed. Death by this curse, has passed upon all men. The soul is to be saved from this curse.

Life and immortality are brought to light by the mission of Christ. The resurrection of the dead is the only hope of man: "If Christ be not risen from the dead," says St. Paul, "then is our preaching vain, and your hope also is vain." This resurrection will be in an immortal body, purged from the principle of corruption and decay, even as Christ's glorious body was. The three preliminary questions are now answered.

The subject of salvation of the dead is one of peculiar interest to us. We know from the scriptures that the dead will have an opportunity to hear the gospel and will be saved, but in a different degree of glory from those who hear it on earth, and joyfully receive it.

Christ, when he had risen, said unto Mary in the garden, "Touch me not, for I have not yet ascended to my God and to your God, to my Father and your Father." Upon the cross he said to the thief, "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Now it becomes an important inquiry to know where the spirit of Christ was while the body lay in the grave. We have his own word that he had not been to Heaven--had not seen the Father.

The Bible is only valuable because of its clearness, its simplicity, and its beauty.--"There is nothing hidden that shall not be made plain." Turning over to the 3d epistle of Peter, iii. 5, 6, we learn that after being put to death Christ went to preach to the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient when once the long suffering of God waited: and further on in the next chapter we are told the reason--the cause why the gospel was preached to them that are dead, to wit:—"That they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."

The argument throughout was one of the most ingenious and interesting we have ever listened to. It was fortified from beginning to end with scripture quotations that had a bearing upon the subject. The discourse occupied nearly two hours. We have given but a meagre outline of it. One of the most striking peculiarities of the Elder, is his wonderful knowledge of the Bible. Every topic is familiar to him, and the best of all is, he harmonizes the scriptures. Out of the discord and confusion which jarring sectaries make in their interpretations, he brings to light order, beauty, simplicity, and the vast and benevolent purposes of deity concerning man.—Boston Herald.

GREAT EVENTS.

In the first thousand years was witnessed the fall of man, the building up of Zion, when Enoch with all his people walked with God three hundred and sixty-five years on earth, and then were taken up into heaven.

In the second thousand years the world was deluged with a flood for its wickedness; the tower was built that men might go to heaven; the language was confounded; the earth divided into continents and oceans; the people scattered upon the face of the whole earth, and America was peopled by the Jaredites.

In the third thousand years Pharaoh and his host were swallowed up in the Red Sea; Israel, the chosen of the Lord, was overshadowed by his glory in a cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night, and the building of the temple the Lord at Jerusalem.

In the fourth thousand years the ten tribes of Israel were led away captive out of the land of Canaan, and taken to a place by the hand of the Lord that has not yet been discovered by the Gentiles; the Jaredites were destroyed because of their wickedness; Lehi was guided by the matchless power of God to this continent.

In the fifth thousand years the Savior of the world was born, crucified, and rose again from the dead; and most of the Apostles were slain for preaching the gospel, and Jerusalem was destroyed.

In the sixth thousand years America, the land of liberty, choice above all others, was settled by the Gentiles; the gospel of Jesus Christ came forth in the Book of Mormon; the church established, and the gathering of the saints commenced, preparatory to the second coming of their Lord, that in the seventh thousand years the earth may rest.

SUGGESTIONS TO THE YOUNG.

Rise early and offer up your praise to the giver of all good. Enter steadily and fearlessly upon the duties of the day. Be determined that no trial shall overcome your patience. If your object be a good one, say 'I will try to attain it.' Never be found without an object. Ask yourself how you have decided, throw your soul into the purpose. Never do good to obtain praise. Take a redhot iron in your hand rather than a dishonest penny. Do no bad action to serve a good friend. Be indulgent to others' faults, but implacable to your own. Wage war with evil, and give no quarter. Die for truth rather than uphold a lie. Never court needless danger, nor fly from a peril which duty imposes. Read good books, seek good companions, attend to good counsels, and imitate good examples.

Never give way to despondency. Does the sun shine?—rejoice. Is it covered with a cloud? wait till the cloud has passed away.—Calender.

☞ The other day, in Congress, Mr. Johnson of Tennessee offered a resolution that the reverend clergy be invited to offer up prayers for a speedy organization of the House. An amendment was suggested, that until the prayers should be granted, the members should fast—but this was promptly voted down; which shows how much faith the majority of Congressmen have in the efficacy of prayer. For our own part we believe them to be past praying for. They should be sent home "without the benefit of clergy."—Universe.

☞ That is our mind exactly.

CHEER UP.—What if you have failed in business, you still have life and health. Do not sit down and cry over your mishap, for they will never get you out of debt, nor buy your children frocks. Go to work at something, eat sparingly, dress moderately, drink nothing exciting, and above all keep a merry heart, and you will be up in the world again.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Roswell Packard, $3,00 to Vol. V No. 12
Travis Stowers, 1,00 to Vol. V No. 12

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

GREAT EVENTS.

In the first thousand years was witnessed the fall of man, the building up of Zion, when Enoch with all his people walked with God three hundred and sixty-five years on earth, and then were taken up into heaven.

In the second thousand years the world was deluged with a flood for its wickedness; the tower was built that men might go to heaven; the language was confounded; the earth divided into continents and oceans; the people scattered upon the face of the whole earth, and America was peopled by the Jaredites.

In the third thousand years Pharaoh and his host were swallowed up in the Red Sea; Israel, the chosen of the Lord, was overshadowed by his glory in a cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night, and the building of the temple the Lord at Jerusalem.

In the fourth thousand years the ten tribes of Israel were led away captive out of the land of Canaan, and taken to a place by the hand of the Lord that has not yet been discovered by the Gentiles; the Jaredites were destroyed because of their wickedness; Lehi was guided by the matchless power of God to this continent.

In the fifth thousand years the Savior of the world was born, crucified, and rose again from the dead; and most of the Apostles were slain for preaching the gospel, and Jerusalem was destroyed.

In the sixth thousand years America, the land of liberty, choice above all others, was settled by the Gentiles; the gospel of Jesus Christ came forth in the Book of Mormon; the church established, and the gathering of the saints commenced, preparatory to the second coming of their Lord, that in the seventh thousand years the earth may rest.

SUGGESTIONS TO THE YOUNG.

Rise early and offer up your praise to the giver of all good. Enter steadily and fearlessly upon the duties of the day. Be determined that no trial shall overcome your patience. If your object be a good one, say 'I will try to attain it.' Never be found without an object. Ask yourself how you have decided, throw your soul into the purpose. Never do good to obtain praise. Take a redhot iron in your hand rather than a dishonest penny. Do no bad action to serve a good friend. Be indulgent to others' faults, but implacable to your own. Wage war with evil, and give no quarter. Die for truth rather than uphold a lie. Never court needless danger, nor fly from a peril which duty imposes. Read good books, seek good companions, attend to good counsels, and imitate good examples.

Never give way to despondency. Does the sun shine?—rejoice. Is it covered with a cloud? wait till the cloud has passed away.—Calender.

☞ The other day, in Congress, Mr. Johnson of Tennessee offered a resolution that the reverend clergy be invited to offer up prayers for a speedy organization of the House. An amendment was suggested, that until the prayers should be granted, the members should fast—but this was promptly voted down; which shows how much faith the majority of Congressmen have in the efficacy of prayer. For our own part we believe them to be past praying for. They should be sent home "without the benefit of clergy."—Universe.

☞ That is our mind exactly.

Cheer Up.—What if you have failed in business, you still have life and health. Do not sit down and cry over your mishap, for they will never get you out of debt, nor buy your children frocks. Go to work at something, eat sparingly, dress moderately, drink nothing exciting, and above all keep a merry heart, and you will be up in the world again.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Roswell Packard, $3,00 to Vol. V No. 12
Travis Stowers, 1,00 to Vol. V No. 12

☞ All letters and communications intended for James J. Strang should be directed to Washington, D. C., until further notice.

Harper's Ferry, Va., Dec. 21st, 1849.

MR. FRANCIS COOPER,—DEAR BRO.:—I have been laboring a few weeks in this, the native State of the immortal Washington, and endeavoring to spread the principles of religious liberty and the truths of the gospel of the Son of God among the good citizens of Jefferson county. When I arrived here I called upon Col. Lucas, the school commissioner for this district, and told him I wanted the school house to preach in. He consented with all the honesty of a man, and the frankness of a gentleman.—The following day (Sunday) was stormy, and but few people came out.

I stayed a few days with Elder Jones, until the storm abated, and then pushed my way forward about six miles, where Elder Grady has a school; found him strong in the faith; tried to obtain his school house for meeting, but the commissioner was not at home. I stayed with Bro. Grady until the next day, and then went as far as Shepherdstown, and endeavored to get a place for meeting; but churches, school houses, meeting houses and all public places were closed against me. The minister of the German Reformed church told me a deliberate falsehood. And one of his flock, a school teacher, who could have given a place to preach in, but would not, said the people here were satisfied with their religion, and wanted nothing better than they had got.

He inquired what I believed in. I told him, and said that we looked upon all the Protestant churches as the daughters of that bad woman spoken of in Revelations. It would have made you laugh to have seen the long face he pulled when he replied, "I don't know what we will do if you tell the people that we are the harlots of the Romish prostitute. The peoples' hearts are hard enough now, and I don't know what we will do if you tell them we are no better than they." I told him the truth had to be told, regardless of consequences; and if the priests or any of their officers thought they could disprove by the Bible the doctrine I advocated, that all they had to do was to try in order to be convinced of the contrary. I bid this long faced hypocrite good day, and retraced my steps among the mighty mountains toward Harper's Ferry, where I preached the Sunday following to large and very attentive congregations, who treated me first rate. I made an appointment for the following Sabbath, and went forward to Bro. Grady's and obtained his school house for meeting; but in the evening when I went to preach the door was nailed up, by the counsel of a pious old bigot by the name of Mohlar.

Bro. Grady promptly removed the nails, and I preached to about thirty people. I made another appointment to preach there, but Bro. Grady received a note the next day saying I could not have the school house to preach in any more. So much for religious toleration in the native State of Washington, and in the county named after Jefferson, the friend of civil and religious liberty. Three groans for American freedom! American freedom—bah! I started for Shepherdstown again, determined they should hear the gospel. And when in sight of the town I knelt and prayed to God for him to direct me. I called upon Dr. Taylor, the Mayor of the town, and told him what I wanted. He said I could have the court house any time it was not occupied. I thanked the honest gentleman, for gentleman he is.

I preached accordingly last Tuesday evening, to a large and somewhat boisterous congregation. Some Methodists interrupted me, and at the conclusion of my sermon I gave liberty for any one to speak. A Methodist arose and asked a few questions; but a few well aimed vollies of truth silenced him, and I came off with the approbation of the meeting. The following night (Wednesday) I preached, and the house was crammed as full as it could hold.—They paid good attention, treated me first rate, and showed their approbation in the usual way, by cheering and stamping on the floor. I did all I could to stop them, by asking them to keep in their heads what I said, and not to kick it out at their heels. But it was no use. I preach at this place next Wednesday night, and on Thursday evening at the house of Mr.

Harper's Ferry, Va., Dec. 21st, 1849.

MR. FRANCIS COOPER,—DEAR BRO.:—I have been laboring a few weeks in this, the native State of the immortal Washington, and endeavoring to spread the principles of religious liberty and the truths of the gospel of the Son of God among the good citizens of Jefferson county. When I arrived here I called upon Col. Lucas, the school commissioner for this district, and told him I wanted the school house to preach in. He consented with all the honesty of a man, and the frankness of a gentleman.—The following day (Sunday) was stormy, and but few people came out.

I stayed a few days with Elder Jones, until the storm abated, and then pushed my way forward about six miles, where Elder Grady has a school; found him strong in the faith; tried to obtain his school house for meeting, but the commissioner was not at home. I stayed with Bro. Grady until the next day, and then went as far as Shepherdstown, and endeavored to get a place for meeting; but churches, school houses, meeting houses and all public places were closed against me. The minister of the German Reformed church told me a deliberate falsehood. And one of his flock, a school teacher, who could have given a place to preach in, but would not, said the people here were satisfied with their religion, and wanted nothing better than they had got.

He inquired what I believed in. I told him, and said that we looked upon all the Protestant churches as the daughters of that bad woman spoken of in Revelations. It would have made you laugh to have seen the long face he pulled when he replied, "I don't know what we will do if you tell the people that we are the harlots of the Romish prostitute. The peoples' hearts are hard enough now, and I don't know what we will do if you tell them we are no better than they." I told him the truth had to be told, regardless of consequences; and if the priests or any of their officers thought they could disprove by the Bible the doctrine I advocated, that all they had to do was to try in order to be convinced of the contrary. I bid this long faced hypocrite good day, and retraced my steps among the mighty mountains toward Harper's Ferry, where I preached the Sunday following to large and very attentive congregations, who treated me first rate. I made an appointment for the following Sabbath, and went forward to Bro. Grady's and obtained his school house for meeting; but in the evening when I went to preach the door was nailed up, by the counsel of a pious old bigot by the name of Mohlar.

Bro. Grady promptly removed the nails, and I preached to about thirty people. I made another appointment to preach there, but Bro. Grady received a note the next day saying I could not have the school house to preach in any more. So much for religious toleration in the native State of Washington, and in the county named after Jefferson, the friend of civil and religious liberty. Three groans for American freedom! American freedom—bah! I started for Shepherdstown again, determined they should hear the gospel. And when in sight of the town I knelt and prayed to God for him to direct me. I called upon Dr. Taylor, the Mayor of the town, and told him what I wanted. He said I could have the court house any time it was not occupied. I thanked the honest gentleman, for gentleman he is.

I preached accordingly last Tuesday evening, to a large and somewhat boisterous congregation. Some Methodists interrupted me, and at the conclusion of my sermon I gave liberty for any one to speak. A Methodist arose and asked a few questions; but a few well aimed vollies of truth silenced him, and I came off with the approbation of the meeting. The following night (Wednesday) I preached, and the house was crammed as full as it could hold.—They paid good attention, treated me first rate, and showed their approbation in the usual way, by cheering and stamping on the floor. I did all I could to stop them, by asking them to keep in their heads what I said, and not to kick it out at their heels. But it was no use. I preach at this place next Wednesday night, and on Thursday evening at the house of Mr.

Myers, a farmer about two miles from Shepherdstown. I preach twice at this place (Harper's Ferry) next Sunday. So you see I am not idle. Yours in hope of the rest of God,

THOS. W. BRAIDWOOD.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 21st, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—As I am now in the "Athens" of America, or the city of "notions," and have been for some days, I thought it might gratify you and the saints at large to know how the great work of this last time is progressing in these parts. I left Baltimore for the east and north about three weeks ago, by the counsel and instruction of Pres. Strang, to carry out an important mission connected with the gathering of the saints to Beaver Island, where they are to plant the kingdom of God as a grain of mustard seed.

Bro. Strang will labor in Baltimore and Washington for a few weeks. The work in that direction is spreading in power and great glory. On my way here I stopped in Philadelphia two days, and am happy to say that the prospect there is better than I have seen it since the death of Joseph. A good number will go from there to the Island in the spring. From Philadelphia I came to New York, where I found the cause moving steadily onward, under the efficient labors of our very worthy Bro. and fellow laborer Samuel Bennett, who has stood firm in every trial. He is baptizing every week. May God raise up more such men to labor in the dispensation of the fulness of times.

In New York I found Bro. L. D. Hickey in a most deplorable condition, ready and willing to make confession and restitution in a most humble manner; which he did, and was so far restored as to be sent to Philadelphia to bear witness unto the truth. May God keep him from falling again. From New York I came to this city, where I found our faithful and untiring Bro. Samuel Graham, whose prudence and wisdom had worked wonders in removing prejudice from the minds of the few brethren that remained here. I have preached two Sundays to full houses, of course. And I can truly say the prospect here is good, very good indeed. Quite a number are going forward to be baptized. You may know how the public receive us by the papers we send you.

Brighamism is entirely dead here. May it never rise again. Bro. Graham and myself last night visited a Baptist prayer meeting, by invitation of Mr. Dunn, the pastor. Liberty was given to speak, and of course I improved the opportunity, and spoke very mild and plain for about fifteen minutes on the gospel. Deacon Lovejoy took offence at what I said, and spoke in a mean contemptible manner of the saints. Bro. Graham arose to reply. The Deacon told him to sit down. Bro. Graham said he would not. The Deacon again ordered him to take his seat. Bro. Graham asked him, by what authority? No matter, said the Deacon, I order you down. Said Samuel, are you more than man? I shall not take my seat until I say what I have to say, and no power that sways the will of man shall stir me hence until I have uttered my thoughts.

He was as good as his word; for he gave them a regular dressing, particularly the Deacon, one that he will not forget very soon.—The Deacon threatened to take up Bro. Graham on the following morning, and have him put in the Boston jail, (or hell;) but I knew the Deacon lied when he said so. And sure enough he did lie. I wish he had put Bro. Samuel in jail, for I should have liked to prayed him out.

Monday, Dec. 24th.—Yesterday was a great day for us here---the best that we have had in Boston since the death of Joseph. Hundreds went away, unable to obtain seats. Many are believing, and our prospect here for the spread of truth is truly grand. To God be the glory. Amen. Yours in truth, G. J. ADAMS.

☞ Thoughts are in the brain like flowers in their native soil; but, on paper, like exotics in a green house, probably maintaining a dwarfish existence, but oftener killed by transplanting.

Myers, a farmer about two miles from Shepherdstown. I preach twice at this place (Harper's Ferry) next Sunday. So you see I am not idle. Yours in hope of the rest of God,

THOS. W. BRAIDWOOD.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 21st, 1849.

DEAR FRANK:—As I am now in the "Athens" of America, or the city of "notions," and have been for some days, I thought it might gratify you and the saints at large to know how the great work of this last time is progressing in these parts. I left Baltimore for the east and north about three weeks ago, by the counsel and instruction of Pres. Strang, to carry out an important mission connected with the gathering of the saints to Beaver Island, where they are to plant the kingdom of God as a grain of mustard seed.

Bro Strang will labor in Baltimore and Washington for a few weeks. The work in that direction is spreading in power and great glory. On my way here I stopped in Philadelphia two days, and am happy to say that the prospect there is better than I have seen it since the death of Joseph. A good number will go from there to the Island in the spring. From Philadelphia I came to New York, where I found the cause moving steadily onward, under the efficient labors of our very worthy Bro. and fellow laborer Samuel Bennett, who has stood firm in every trial. He is baptizing every week. May God raise up more such men to labor in the dispensation of the fulness of times.

In New York I found Bro. L. D. Hickey in a most deplorable condition, ready and willing to make confession and restitution in a most humble manner; which he did, and was so far restored as to be sent to Philadelphia to bear witness unto the truth. May God keep him from falling again. From New York I came to this city, where I found our faithful and untiring Bro. Samuel Graham, whose prudence and wisdom had worked wonders in removing prejudice from the minds of the few brethren that remained here. I have preached two Sundays to full houses, of course. And I can truly say the prospect here is good, very good indeed. Quite a number are going forward to be baptized. You may know how the public receive us by the papers we send you.

Brighamism is entirely dead here. May it never rise again. Bro. Graham and myself last night visited a Baptist prayer meeting, by invitation of Mr. Dunn, the pastor. Liberty was given to speak, and of course I improved the opportunity, and spoke very mild and plain for about fifteen minutes on the gospel. Deacon Lovejoy took offence at what I said, and spoke in a mean contemptible manner of the saints. Bro. Graham arose to reply. The Deacon told him to sit down. Bro. Graham said he would not. The Deacon again ordered him to take his seat. Bro. Graham asked him, by what authority? No matter, said the Deacon, I order you down. Said Samuel, are you more than man? I shall not take my seat until I say what I have to say, and no power that sways the will of man shall stir me hence until I have uttered my thoughts.

He was as good as his word; for he gave them a regular dressing, particularly the Deacon, one that he will not forget very soon.—The Deacon threatened to take up Bro. Graham on the following morning, and have him put in the Boston jail, (or hell;) but I knew the Deacon lied when he said so. And sure enough he did lie. I wish he had put Bro. Samuel in jail, for I should have liked to prayed him out.

Monday, Dec. 24th.—Yesterday was a great day for us here---the best that we have had in Boston since the death of Joseph. Hundreds went away, unable to obtain seats. Many are believing, and our prospect here for the spread of truth is truly grand. To God be the glory. Amen. Yours in truth, G. J. ADAMS.

☞ Thoughts are in the brain like flowers in their native soil; but, on paper, like exotics in a green house, probably maintaining a dwarfish existence, but oftener killed by transplanting.

Pittsburgh, U. C., Dec. 4th, 1849.

Bro. Cooper :—As I am preparing to cross the St. Lawrence river, I think it best to write you a few lines, knowing that the saints feel a deep interest in the welfare of Zion, and in her friends and advocates. When I wrote you last I was alone, Bro. Savage not having met me according to appointment. I then asked the Lord to send Bro. Gurley. You may judge my feelings when I heard that he was preaching only about fifteen miles from me. I immediately met him, and our feelings were such that they may be easier imagined than described—such that I cannot forget, but will be remembered by me with thankfulness as an everlasting testimony that God has and will hear the prayers of his servants.

We immediately commenced preaching together. Many came out to hear the truth.—We traveled together through Crosby, Lansdown and Leeds, administering the word of life by the power of the spirit. At the close of one of our meetings a Methodist preacher gave notice that, at some future period, he would reply in full to the doctrine that we had advanced. We requested him to name the time. This he declined; but replied that he wished us to be present. To us, as well as others, it was evident that he wished to take the advantage of our absence to destroy the work of God.

We then started for Crosby, and on the Saturday following we received word that the reply was to come off on the morrow. And as he was allowed to be the champion of all Methodist preachers, a great anxiety prevailed to hear the discussion. Our arrangements were such that but one of us could attend. I therefore requested Bro. Gurley to meet him. To this he cheerfully consented. He immediately gathered up his things, and at a late hour started for the onset, having some fifteen miles to travel. Sunday morning the people got together at an early hour, and at the time appointed for meeting the house was filled to overflowing. Mr. Birney then commenced by referring to the sermon delivered by Bro. Gurley; stated that we believed the Savior to be a mere man, the son of Joseph, and as such was not or could not be an object of faith, and then closed up his remarks by introducing a few of Madam Rumor's false reports.

His lecture produced a painful effect on the congregation. And at the close many voices were heard to say that a reply was unnecessary, and the general impression was that his arguments could not be answered. All was confusion, and there was a general apprehension that Mormonism was down. Bro. Gurley gave an appointment for a reply in fifteen minutes. At the appointed time he called the house to order, and commenced his reply, and continued it for about three-fourths of an hour. The heat and fatigue made it impossible to continue longer. He then adjourned it until next Sabbath. His reply, however, produced a wonderful effect on the people.

On the following Sabbath, at the appointed time, the house was filled. I was with him. A death like silence prevailed. I opened the meeting. He then commenced, and in a master like manner he met the Rev. gent on the points which formed the Gibraltar of his argument; and showing that his positions were but mere fables, and that they could not be supported or proved by scripture or logic. Thus once more compelling Methodism to draw back and give room to Mormonism or truth, which but a short time before they had hoped to sink into oblivion. All the glory be to God, now henceforth and forever. Amen. Yours, &c.

P. WRIGHT.

Boston, December 24th, 1849.

Dear Bro. Cooper :—Having a leisure moment I write to you of the onward march of truth in this place. When I came here I found but few who had any faith at all in the work of the dispensation of the fulness of times. Among that number our old friend and God blessed brother Wm. Skimmings stood foremost, and may the blessings of God ever be with him.—Bros. Greenwood, Teague and others have shown kindness to me, although they said they

Pittsburgh, U. C., Dec. 4th, 1849.

Bro. Cooper:—As I am preparing to cross the St. Lawrence river, I think it best to write you a few lines, knowing that the saints feel a deep interest in the welfare of Zion, and in her friends and advocates. When I wrote you last I was alone, Bro Savage not having met me according to appointment. I then asked the Lord to send Bro. Gurley. You may judge my feelings when I heard that he was preaching only about fifteen miles from me. I immediately met him, and our feelings were such that they may be easier imagined than described—such that I cannot forget, but will be remembered by me with thankfulness as an everlasting testimony that God has and will hear the prayers of his servants.

We immediately commenced preaching together. Many came out to hear the truth.—We traveled together through Crosby, Lansdown and Leeds, administering the word of life by the power of the spirit. At the close of one of our meetings a Methodist preacher gave notice that, at some future period, he would reply in full to the doctrine that we had advanced. We requested him to name the time. This he declined; but replied that he wished us to be present. To us, as well as others, it was evident that he wished to take the advantage of our absence to destroy the work of God.

We then started for Crosby, and on the Saturday following we received word that the reply was to come off on the morrow. And as he was allowed to be the champion of all Methodist preachers, a great anxiety prevailed to hear the discussion. Our arrangements were such that but one of us could attend. I therefore requested Bro. Gurley to meet him. To this he cheerfully consented. He immediately gathered up his things, and at a late hour started for the onset, having some fifteen miles to travel. Sunday morning the people got together at an early hour, and at the time appointed for meeting the house was filled to overflowing. Mr. Birney then commenced by referring to the sermon delivered by Bro. Gurley; stated that we believed the Savior to be a mere man, the son of Joseph, and as such was not or could not be an object of faith, and then closed up his remarks by introducing a few of Madam Rumor's false reports.

His lecture produced a painful effect on the congregation. And at the close many voices were heard to say that a reply was unnecessary, and the general impression was that his arguments could not be answered. All was confusion, and there was a general apprehension that Mormonism was down. Bro. Gurley gave an appointment for a reply in fifteen minutes. At the appointed time he called the house to order, and commenced his reply, and continued it for about three-fourths of an hour. The heat and fatigue made it impossible to continue longer. He then adjourned it until next Sabbath. His reply, however, produced a wonderful effect on the people.

On the following Sabbath, at the appointed time, the house was filled. I was with him. A death like silence prevailed. I opened the meeting. He then commenced, and in a master like manner he met the Rev. gent on the points which formed the Gibraltar of his argument; and showing that his positions were but mere fables, and that they could not be supported or proved by scripture or logic. Thus once more compelling Methodism to draw back and give room to Mormonism or truth, which but a short time before they had hoped to sink into oblivion. All the glory be to God, now henceforth and forever. Amen. Yours, &c.

P. WRIGHT.

Boston, December 24th, 1849.

Dear Bro. Cooper:—Having a leisure moment I write to you of the onward march of truth in this place. When I came here I found but few who had any faith at all in the work of the dispensation of the fulness of times. Among that number our old friend and God blessed brother Wm. Skimmings stood foremost, and may the blessings of God ever be with him.—Bros. Greenwood, Teague and others have shown kindness to me, although they said they had but little faith. I can assure you that faith has increased, and Bro. C. Greenwood is now faithfully preaching the gospel, contrary to his expectations when I came here.

I have the assistance of Bro. G. J. Adams at present, and I assure you he is some, when he gets roused. I would to God that all his enemies realized the power and talent that he is in possession of. He is a full team, and, knowing the truth, dare maintain it. He is not one of the many who are so afraid to do wrong that they dare not do right. And by the blessing of God he is bound to put his foot on all his foes. May God defend the right.

We shall baptize several more this week, and I am expecting to raise up in this place, by the blessing of God, many true friends for the church and kingdom of God; and some of them, and I hope all, will gather up in the spring to our God-given inheritance, Beaver Island, there to be a light to the world, and a terror to evil doers. I am expecting to have the help of Bro. George one week more at present. I shall go to Georgetown to-morrow, and see if God has any friends there who love the truth for its own sake. My love to all in Christ. SAMUEL GRAHAM.

P. S. Yesterday our congregation was double what could get into the house in the evening. S. G.

TWO EXCEPTIONS.

Gen. T., of New York, a gentleman of known wealth and liberality, was not long since called upon by a person to obtain his signature on a petition for the abolition of capital punishment. The person unfolded his papers and documents, and presented and enforced his argument in rather a tiresome speech, stopping occasionally to deposit a mouthful of tobacco juice upon a nice parlor carpet. Gen. T. was in favor of diminishing capital punishments, but doubted the propriety or expediency of abolishing them in all cases. At the expression of his opinion, his visitor began to bridle up and prepare to lay down his arguments with greater force; and in order to give greater facility to his enunciation, he took from his mouth a huge quid of tobacco and threw it upon the white marble hearth, saying he wished the Gen. would be so good as to inform him in what cases capital punishment could ever be justified or defended.

"Well," said the general, "it strikes me that, if we are going to abolish capital punishment, there are two cases which should be made exceptions."

"Two cases, are there?" said the petitioner.

"Well, sir, I should like to hear them stated, and the arguments for them."

"The first," said the general, "is that of clear, cold blooded, premeditated murder. I think the person who lies in waiting, or in ambush, with malice prepense, and takes the life of a fellow creature, ought to forfeit his life in return. He deserves to be hung."

"Well, I have abundance of argument to meet that occasion," said the visitor. "Now I should like to know what is your other case."

"The other case," said the general, "is that of the animal that walks on two legs, calls itself man, and carries a mouthful of disgusting filth into a clean house, and there pours it forth upon the carpet and scatters it over the hearth. Such a being is certainly not fit to live in decent society, and I do not know of any better or more ready mode of getting rid of him than to hang him. With these two exceptions, I think I should be willing to sign your petition for the abolition of capital punishment."

The visitor gathered up his papers, thrust them into his pocket, and with a very blank look hastily withdrew. He has not called since to receive the general's signature.—Ex. paper.

THE "SOUTHERN LITERARY MESSENGER."—Week before last we published the prospectus of this valuable Magazine. During the past year we have often taken great pleasure in perusing its pages, and anticipate many similar enjoyments in this. In our judgment it is decidedly the best literary Magazine in the country. Its literature is not of that light and airy sort that so generally characterize many of the popular periodicals of the day, but it is sound and sentimental, such as tends to please the imagination and improve the intellect. Those who want a good literary Magazine will get the worth of their money by subscribing for the "Southern Literary Messenger," and be amply rewarded besides.

had but little faith. I can assure you that faith has increased, and Bro. C. Greenwood is now faithfully preaching the gospel, contrary to his expectations when I came here.

I have the assistance of Bro. G. J. Adams at present, and I assure you he is some, when he gets roused. I would to God that all his enemies realized the power and talent that he is in possession of. He is a full team, and, knowing the truth, dare maintain it. He is not one of the many who are so afraid to do wrong that they dare not do right. And by the blessing of God he is bound to put his foot on all his foes. May God defend the right.

We shall baptize several more this week, and I am expecting to raise up in this place, by the blessing of God, many true friends for the church and kingdom of God; and some of them, and I hope all, will gather up in the spring to our God-given inheritance, Beaver Island, there to be a light to the world, and a terror to evil doers. I am expecting to have the help of Bro. George one week more at present. I shall go to Georgetown to-morrow, and see if God has any friends there who love the truth for its own sake. My love to all in Christ. SAMUEL GRAHAM.

P. S. Yesterday our congregation was double what could get into the house in the evening. S. G.

TWO EXCEPTIONS.

Gen. T., of New York, a gentleman of known wealth and liberality, was not long since called upon by a person to obtain his signature on a petition for the abolition of capital punishment. The person unfolded his papers and documents, and presented and enforced his argument in rather a tiresome speech, stopping occasionally to deposit a mouthful of tobacco juice upon a nice parlor carpet. Gen. T. was in favor of diminishing capital punishments, but doubted the propriety or expediency of abolishing them in all cases. At the expression of his opinion, his visitor began to bridle up and prepare to lay down his arguments with greater force; and in order to give greater facility to his enunciation, he took from his mouth a huge quid of tobacco and threw it upon the white marble hearth, saying he wished the Gen. would be so good as to inform him in what cases capital punishment could ever be justified or defended.

"Well," said the general, "it strikes me that, if we are going to abolish capital punishment, there are two cases which should be made exceptions."

"Two cases, are there?" said the petitioner.

"Well, sir, I should like to hear them stated, and the arguments for them."

"The first," said the general, "is that of clear, cold blooded, premeditated murder. I think the person who lies in waiting, or in ambush, with malice prepense, and takes the life of a fellow creature, ought to forfeit his life in return. He deserves to be hung."

"Well, I have abundance of argument to meet that occasion," said the visitor. "Now I should like to know what is your other case."

"The other case," said the general, "is that of the animal that walks on two legs, calls itself man, and carries a mouthful of disgusting filth into a clean house, and there pours it forth upon the carpet and scatters it over the hearth. Such a being is certainly not fit to live in decent society, and I do not know of any better or more ready mode of getting rid of him than to hang him. With these two exceptions, I think I should be willing to sign your petition for the abolition of capital punishment."

The visitor gathered up his papers, thrust them into his pocket, and with a very blank look hastily withdrew. He has not called since to receive the general's signature.—Ex. paper.

THE "SOUTHERN LITERARY MESSENGER."—Week before last we published the prospectus of this valuable Magazine. During the past year we have often taken great pleasure in perusing its pages, and anticipate many similar enjoyments in this. In our judgment it is decidedly the best literary Magazine in the country. Its literature is not of that light and airy sort that so generally characterize many of the popular periodicals of the day, but it is sound and sentimental, such as tends to please the imagination and improve the intellect. Those who want a good literary Magazine will get the worth of their money by subscribing for the "Southern Literary Messenger," and be amply rewarded besides.

A NEW YEAR'S SONG.

This morning in silence I ponder and mourn,
O'er the scenes that have passed no more to return;
How vast are the labors, the troubles and fears,
Of eight hundred millions who've toiled through the year.

How many ten thousands were slain by their foes,
While widows and orphans have mourn'd o'er their woes,
While pestilence, famine and earthquakes appear,
And signs in the heavens throughout the past year.

How many been murder'd and plunder'd and robb'd,
How many oppressed and driven by mobs,
How oft have the heav'ns bedewed with their tears
The earth o'er the scenes they beheld the past year.

But the day star has dawn'd o'er the land of the bless'd,
The first beams of morning, the morning or rest;
When cleans'd from pollution the earth shall appear
As the garden of Edep, and peace crown the year.

Then welcome the new year, I hail with delight,
The season approaching with time's rapid flight;
While each fleeting moment brings near and more near,
The day long expected, the great thousand years.

NOTHING IS LOST.---The drop that mingles with the flood---the sand dropped on the sea shore---the word you have spoken---will not be lost. Each will have its influence and be felt, till time shall be no more. Have you ever thought of the effect that might be produced by a single word? Drop it pleasantly among a group, and it will make a dozen happy, to return to their homes to produce the same effect on a hundred, perhaps. A bad word may arouse the indignation of a whole neighborhood; it may spread like wild fire to produce disastrous effects. As no word is lost, be careful how you speak---speak right, speak kindly.---The influence you may exert by a life of kindness---by words dropped among the young and the old---is incalculable. It will not cease when your bodies lie in the grave; but will be felt wider and still wider as years pass away. Who then will not exert himself for the welfare of millions?---Ex.

DEATH OF MILLER, THE MILLERITE.---We perceive by our exchanges that Mr. Wm. Miller, noted as the founder of the Second Advent party, died on the 20th ult., aged 68 years, at his residence at Low Hampton, N. Y. He was a captain in the last war, and fought at Plattsburg, and has been for years a justice of the peace.

SILENCE.

What a strange power there is in silence! How many resolutions are formed---how many sublime conquests effected during that pause, when the lips are closed, and the soul secretly feels the eye of her maker upon her! When some of those cutting, sharp, blighthing, words have been spoken which send the hot indignant blood into the face and head, if those to whom they are addressed keep silence, look on with awe, for a mighty work is going on within them, and the spirit of evil, or their guardian angel, is very near to them in that hour. During that pause they have made a step towards heaven or towards hell, and an item has been scored in the book which the day of judgement shall see opened. They are the strong ones of the earth, the mighty food for good or evil, those who know how to keep silence when it is a pain and grief to them; those who give time to their own souls, to wax strong against temptation; or to the powers of wrath, to stamp them with their withering passage.---Ex.

AN EXTRAORDINARY METEOR.

On Friday evening, the 7th instant, soon after sunset, the attention of many persons in town was attracted towards the west by the blaze of a large meteor in that direction, about 45 degrees above the horizon. Some say that it shot upward; and others that its course was either downward or diagonal. But the most remarkable appearance was that which succeeded the flight of the body. About in the place where it was first seen, there was visible, for the space of at least fifteen minutes, a very light trail of light, of irregular form, something of the zig zag shape. It was as though a streak of lightning had been daguerreotyped on the sky. The length of the luminous trail was to appearance three or four rods. We do not remember to have read any account of the light of a meteor remaining so long visible. We have not understood that any report was heard, but we doubt not there was further west than this.---Wilmington (N. C.) Chronicle.

A NEW YEAR'S SONG.

This morning in silence I ponder and mourn,
O'er the scenes that have passed no more to return;
How vast are the labors, the troubles and fears,
Of eight hundred millions who've toiled through the year.

How many ten thousands were slain by their foes,
While widows and orphans have mourn'd o'er their woes,
While pestilence, famine and earthquakes appear,
And signs in the heavens throughout the past year.

How many been murder'd and plunder'd and robb'd,
How many oppressed and driven by mobs,
How oft have the heav'ns bedewed with their tears
The earth o'er the scenes they beheld the past year.

But the day star has dawn'd o'er the land of the bless'd,
The first beams of morning, the morning or rest;
When cleans'd from pollution the earth shall appear
As the garden of Edep, and peace crown the year.

Then welcome the new year, I hail with delight,
The season approaching with time's rapid flight;
While each fleeting moment brings near and more near,
The day long expected, the great thousand years.

NOTHING IS LOST.---The drop that mingles with the flood---the sand dropped on the sea shore---the word you have spoken---will not be lost. Each will have its influence and be felt, till time shall be no more. Have you ever thought of the effect that might be produced by a single word? Drop it pleasantly among a group, and it will make a dozen happy, to return to their homes to produce the same effect on a hundred, perhaps. A bad word may arouse the indignation of a whole neighborhood; it may spread like wild fire to produce disastrous effects. As no word is lost, be careful how you speak---speak right, speak kindly.---The influence you may exert by a life of kindness---by words dropped among the young and the old---is incalculable. It will not cease when your bodies lie in the grave; but will be felt wider and still wider as years pass away. Who then will not exert himself for the welfare of millions?---Ex.

DEATH OF MILLER, THE MILLERITE.---We perceive by our exchanges that Mr. Wm. Miller, noted as the founder of the Second Advent party, died on the 20th ult., aged 68 years, at his residence at Low Hampton, N. Y. He was a captain in the last war, and fought at Plattsburg, and has been for years a justice of the peace.

SILENCE.

What a strange power there is in silence! How many resolutions are formed---how many sublime conquests effected during that pause, when the lips are closed, and the soul secretly feels the eye of her maker upon her! When some of those cutting, sharp, blighthing, words have been spoken which send the hot indignant blood into the face and head, if those to whom they are addressed keep silence, look on with awe, for a mighty work is going on within them, and the spirit of evil, or their guardian angel, is very near to them in that hour. During that pause they have made a step towards heaven or towards hell, and an item has been scored in the book which the day of judgement shall see opened. They are the strong ones of the earth, the mighty food for good or evil, those who know how to keep silence when it is a pain and grief to them; those who give time to their own souls, to wax strong against temptation; or to the powers of wrath, to stamp them with their withering passage.---Ex.

AN EXTRAORDINARY METEOR.

On Friday evening, the 7th instant, soon after sunset, the attention of many persons in town was attracted towards the west by the blaze of a large meteor in that direction, about 45 degrees above the horizon. Some say that it shot upward; and others that its course was either downward or diagonal. But the most remarkable appearance was that which succeeded the flight of the body. About in the place where it was first seen, there was visible, for the space of at least fifteen minutes, a very light trail of light, of irregular form, something of the zig zag shape. It was as though a streak of lightning had been daguerreotyped on the sky. The length of the luminous trail was to appearance three or four rods. We do not remember to have read any account of the light of a meteor remaining so long visible. We have not understood that any report was heard, but we doubt not there was further west than this.---Wilmington (N. C.) Chronicle.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 45.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. JAN. 24, 1850. [WHOLE No. 161.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE BROWN SILK DRESS.

'Why, Eliza! what a choice for a wedding dress! Your other dresses are in good style, and you have a plenty of them, considering the changes in fashion—but a brown silk to be married in—whoever heard of sueh a fancy in a girl of eighteen?"

''Tis true, aunt, that my choice may seem somewhat sombre, but you know very well that I am about to become the wife of a poor mechanic who depends on his daily labor for support. As the wife of such a man, I must necessarily limit my expenditures to my circumstances, and I have thought it better to purchase something which would be useful for some time to come, than to consult any appearance as a splendid bride for one short evening—especially as I am to see no strangers.'

'There is something in that. There is Maria's wedding dress. She will never wear it again in the world. She had a white satin, with a lace dress over it. Oh, she did look beautifully! I do admire to see a handsome bride.'

'Yes it is very well for them that can afford it. But it would be quite absurd for me to purchase an expensive dress for one, or even a few evenings, when by the expenditure of half the money, I can procure that which will be serviceable for some years. But come, put on your bonnet and step over to our new house. It is all furnished, at least all that is finished; I value it more highly than I should if it was not so near my mother's.

'There, William has left his small parlor, this sitting room and three chambers to finish at his leisure, when he is out of employment. See how everything is arranged. So handy for my work.'

'You don't say you are going to do your own work?'

'Certainly I do. There is only one apprentice, and I should think it strange if I could not do it with all ease.'

'My heart, what strange fancies you have. To be sure, it is well enough if you can bring your mind to do it, but then folks do so differently now-a-days. There is my Maria, she has moved into an elegant house all furnished from top to bottom. She keeps a great girl to do the work, and a little one to wait and tend. Oh, things do go on beautifully, I promise you.

'Her husband is a young lawyer, is he not—is he wealthy?'

'Oh! he is very well off. He does not get much practice yet, but I dare say he will soon. He has a thousand dollars at interest; besides, Maria could not have married a mechanic, their hands get so hard and black, and their complexions, especially if they are exposed, get so brown. I would not wish to hurt your feelings, but I do think that, for pride's sake, for the sake of your family, you might have made a little different choice.'

'Oh, aunt, excuse my language—I have yet to learn that a man's occupation, whether it produces hard hands or white soft hands, whether it gives the cheek a brown or pale hue, is any disparagement to him. You must get acquainted with William and hear him converse. You will not think of hard hands, and his animated, intelligent countenance, will drive his bronzed skin quite out of your head.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 45.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JAN. 24, 1850. [WHOLE No. 161.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE BROWN SILK DRESS.

'Why, Eliza! what a choice for a wedding dress! Your other dresses are in good style, and you have a plenty of them, considering the changes in fashion--but a brown silk to be married in—whoever heard of such a fancy in a girl of eighteen?"

"'Tis true, aunt, that my choice may seem somewhat sombre, but you know very well that I am about to become the wife of a poor mechanic who depends on his daily labor for support. As the wife of such a man, I must necessarily limit my expenditures to my circumstances, and I have thought it better to purchase something which would be useful for some time to come, than to consult any appearance as a splendid bride for one short evening -especially as I am to see no strangers.'

'There is something in that. There is Maria's wedding dress. She will never wear it again in the world. She had a white satin, with a lace dress over it. Oh, she did look beautifully! I do admire to see a handsome bride.'

'Yes it is very well for them that can afford it. But it would be quite absurd for me to purchase an expensive dress for one, or even a few evenings, when by the expenditure of half the money, I can procure that which will be serviceable for some years. But come, put on your bonnet and step over to our new house. It is all furnished, at least all that is finished; I value it more highly than I should if it was not so near my mother's.

'There, William has left his small parlor, this sitting room and three chambers to finish at his leisure, when he is out of employment. See how everything is arranged. So handy for my work.'

'You don't say you are going to do your own work?'

'Certainly I do. There is only one apprentice, and I should think it strange if I could not do it with all ease.'

'My heart, what strange fancies you have. To be sure, it is well enough if you can bring your mind to do it, but then folks do so differently now-a-days. There is my Maria, she has moved into an elegant house all furnished from top to bottom. She keeps a great girl to do the work, and a little one to wait and tend. Oh, things do go on beautifully, I promise you.

'Her husband is a young lawyer, is he not --is he wealthy?'

'Oh! he is very well off. He does not get much practice yet, but I dare say he will soon. He has a thousand dollars at interest; besides, Maria could not have married a mechanic, their hands get so hard and black, and their complexions, especially if they are exposed, get so brown. I would not wish to hurt your feelings, but I do think that, for pride's sake, for the sake of your family, you might have made a little different choice.'

'Oh, aunt, excuse my language—I have yet to learn that a man's occupation, whether it produces hard hands or white soft hands, whether it gives the cheek a brown or pale hue, is any disparagement to him. You must get acquainted with William and hear him converse. You will not think of hard hands, and his animated, intelligent countenance, will drive his bronzed skin quite out of your head.

But, aunt, you don't say anything about my furniture—and you must see my nice closets.

'Oh! your furniture is well enough. The less then you will have to take care of, you know.'

'Yes we could not get much furniture. I insisted upon William taking the money which my grandfather left me, to pay off a few hundred dollars which he owed for this place, in order to enable us to begin in the world. We both have such horror of debt that we were determined not to incur any, if we could possibly help it. See what a nice press for the bed clothes this is.'

'Why, what a quantity of bed and table linen! it is really nice too. You have more than my Maria has, I declare.'

'Yes, I always want an abundance of such things. This drawer is filled with towels—this is filled with table cloths--this for my ironing sheet and blanket---and this closet contains my tin and wooden ware.'

'I declare, Eliza, you are a strange thoughtful girl. I must tell you one thing about Maria, that made us have a good hearty laugh. The Monday morning after she was married, the girl came to ask where the tubs were, and don't you think that the child had actually forgotten to buy a tub, and a clothes line and pins! She said it never popped into her head. But la! it wan't strange—she had never been used to do anything of the kind.'

'I believe, aunt, I have shown you all, now. We will go if you please. I hope you will not let my brown dress, or William's brown hands, frighten you away this evening?'

'Oh, no! But as I must take the stage for Maria's early in the morning, you must allow me to retire early.' * * *

'What fellows these Yankees are for combining elegance and usefulness,' said a southern gentleman to himself as he sat on the piazza of the hotel in the town of———. 'Sir,' said he addressing himself to a venerable looking man near him, 'can you tell me who resides in that elegant cottage---where the grounds are laid out with so much taste?'

'Oh, that is Squire Bill Thorndyke's. You must be a stranger in these parts not to know him.'

'I am, sir; and since he seems such a prominent member of society, I should be happy to know something of his history.'

'Oh there is nothing remarkable in it, nothing at all, sir. His father was a man of great learning, but he nearly run through a fortune in trying to live in style. He died, and left three boys. Their mother then went from the place, and was a woman of strong sense. She sold property, paid off all the debts, and had enough left to buy that little house to the left. It had but two rooms, and there is a garden spot attached to it. Here she puts out her boys to trades. One to a mason, one to a wheel wright, and this Bill to a carpenter. They were mighty smart boys, and settled in distant towns. Bill staid however. He married the widow Perry's daughter. She was as smart as a steel trap; she was a right good scholar, and has made an excellent wife. They've got along wonderfully. He did not make better wages than other men, but somehow the money increased. It was no mystery to me, for I watched them pretty sharp. You never saw him before he kept a horse riding out for pleasure. No, they both pulled one way, and took their pleasure in being sober, 'ndustrious and useful, and now they reap their reward in being universally respected.'

'Why, there aint a man that has so much money to let as Squire Thorndyke, and he is never hard and screwing about it as some are. He isn't stingy either. He has taken the two sons of Lawyer Willis to bring up, and he does as well by them as he does by his own. Lawyer Willis' wife was a kind of cousin to Squire Thorndyke's wife. She was a dashy, showy gal. Lord! you'd ha' thought the richest folks upon the earth were married, when they had the knot tied. Poor fellow, he had a hard time, notwithstanding, to support his lady wife in style. He took to drink and died. I've heard say that she turned up her nose at her cousin's match, but she little thought that her

But, aunt, you don't say anything about my furniture—and you must see my nice closets.

'Oh! your furniture is well enough. The less then you will have to take care of, you know.'

'Yes we could not get much furniture. I insisted upon William taking the money which my grandfather left me, to pay off a few hundred dollars which he owed for this place, in order to enable us to begin in the world. We both have such horror of debt that we were determined not to incur any, if we could possibly help it. See what a nice press for the bed clothes this is.'

'Why, what a quantity of bed and table linen! it is really nice too. You have more than my Maria has, I declare.'

'Yes, I always want an abundance of such things. This drawer is filled with towels—this is filled with table cloths--this for my ironing sheet and blanket---and this closet contains my tin and wooden ware.'

'I declare, Eliza, you are a strange thoughtful girl. I must tell you one thing about Maria, that made us have a good hearty laugh. The Monday morning after she was married, the girl came to ask where the tubs were, and don't you think that the child had actually forgotten to buy a tub, and a clothes line and pins! She said it never popped into her head. But la! it wan't strange—she had never been used to do anything of the kind.'

'I believe, aunt, I have shown you all; now. We will go if you please. I hope you will not let my brown dress, or William's brown hands, frighten you away this evening?'

'Oh, no! But as I must take the stage for Maria's early in the morning, you must allow me to retire early.' * * *

'What fellows these Yankees are for combining elegance and usefulness,' said a southern gentleman to himself as he sat on the piazza of the hotel in the town of———. 'Sir,' said he addressing himself to a venerable looking man near him, 'can you tell me who resides in that elegant cottage---where the grounds are laid out with so much taste?'

'Oh, that is Squire Bill Thorndyke's. You must be a stranger in these parts not to know him.'

'I am, sir; and since he seems such a prominent member of society, I should be happy to know something of his history.'

'Oh there is nothing remarkable in it, nothing at all, sir. His father was a man of great learning, but he nearly run through a fortune in trying to live in style. He died, and left three boys. Their mother then went from the place, and was a woman of strong sense. She sold property, paid off all the debts, and had enough left to buy that little house to the left. It had but two rooms, and there is a garden spot attached to it. Here she puts out her boys to trades. One to a mason, one to a wheel wright, and this Bill to a carpenter. They were mighty smart boys, and settled in distant towns. Bill staid however. He married the widow Perry's daughter. She was as smart as a steel trap; she was a right good scholar, and has made an excellent wife. They've got along wonderfully. He did not make better wages than other men, but somehow the money increased. It was no mystery to me, for I watched them pretty sharp. You never saw him before he kept a horse riding out for pleasure. No, they both pulled one way, and took their pleasure in being sober, industrious and useful, and now they reap their reward in being universally respected.'

'Why, there aint a man that has so much money to let as Squire Thorndyke, and he is never hard and screwing about it as some are. He isn't stingy either. He has taken the two sons of Lawyer Willis to bring up, and he does as well by them as he does by his own. Lawyer Willis' wife was a kind of cousin to Squire Thorndyke's wife. She was a dashy, showy gal. Lord! you'd ha' thought the richest folks upon the earth were married, when they had the knot tied. Poor fellow, he had a hard time, notwithstanding, to support his lady wife in style. He took to drink and died. I've heard say that she turned up her nose at her cousin's match, but she little thought that her boys would be glad to go to that same cousin for a home, while she would be glad to take up with the little house that Squire Thorndyke's mother lived in.'

'Ah, sir,' continued the old man, 'this is a changing world; but to my mind, if folks would only be prudent and industrious, and give up hankering after things beyond their means, there would be more real good done in the world and fewer changes.'

JOSEPH'S WELL AT CAIRO.

The most remarkable well ever made by man, is Joseph's well at Cairo. Its magnitude, and the skill displayed in its construction, which is perfectly unique, have never been surpassed. All travelers have spoken of it with admiration.

This stupendous well is an oblong square, twenty-four feet by eighteen; being sufficiently capacious to admit within its mouth a moderate-sized house. It is excavated (of these dimensions) through solid rock, to the depth of one hundred and sixty-five feet, where it is enlarged into a capacious chamber, in the bottom of which is formed a basin or reservoir to receive the water raised from below (for this chamber is not at the bottom of the well.) On one side of the reservoir another shaft is continued, one hundred and thirty feet lower, where it emerges through the rock into a bed of gravel in which the water is found. The whole depth being two hundred and ninety-seven feet. The lower shaft is not in the same vertical line with the upper one, nor is it so large, being fifteen feet by nine. As the water is first raised into the basin, by means of machinery propelled by horses or oxen within the chamber it may be asked, how are these animals conveyed to that depth in this tremendous pit, and by what means do they ascend? It is the solution of this problem that renders Joseph's Well so peculiarly interesting, and which indicates an advanced state of the arts at the period of its construction.

A spiral passage way is cut through the rock, from the surface of the ground to the chamber, independent of the well, round which it winds with so gentle a descent that persons sometimes ride up or down upon asses or mules. It is six feet four inches wide, and seven feet two inches high. Between it and the interior of the well a wall of rock is left to prevent persons from falling into, or even looking down it, (which in some cases would be equally fatal,) except through certain openings or windows, by means of which it is faintly lighted from the interior of the well; by this passage the animals descend, which drive the machinery that raises the water from the lower shaft into the reservoir or basin, from which it is again elevated by similar machinery, by other oxen on the surface of the ground. In the lower shaft a path is also cut down to the water; but as no portion is left between it and the well, it is extremely perilous for strangers to descend.

This celebrated production of former times resembles an enormous hollow screw, the centre of which forms the well and the threads a winding staircase round it. To erect of granite a flight of "geometrical" or "well stairs," two or three hundred feet high on the surface of the ground, would require extraordinary skill: although in the execution every aid from rules, measures, and the light of day, would guide the workmen at every step; but to begin such a work at the top, and construct it downward by excavation alone in the dark bowels of the earth, is a more arduous undertaking, especially as deviations from the correct lines could not be remedied; yet, in Joseph's well, the partition of rock between the pit, and the passage way, and the uniform inclination of the latter, seems to have been ascertained with equal precision, as if the whole had been constructed of cut stone on the surface. Was the pit or the passage formed first? Or were they simultaneously carried on and the excavated masses from both bore up the latter?

The extreme thinness of the partition wall excited the astonishment of M. Jomark, whose account of the well is inserted in the second volume of memoirs in Napoleon's great work of Egypt, part 2d, p. 691. It is according to him but sixteen centimers thick (about six inches!) He justly remarks that it must have required singular care to leave and preserve so small a portion while excavating the rock from both sides of it. It would seem no stronger in proportion than sheets of pasteboard placed on edge, to support one end of the stair of a modern built house, for it should be borne in mind that the massive roof of the spiral passage next the well has nothing but this film of rock to support it, or to prevent such portions from falling as are loosened by fissures, or such as from changes in the direction of the strata, are not firmly united to the general mass.

But this is not all; thus insufficient as it may seem, the bold designer has pierced it through its whole extent with semicircular openings, to admit light from the well.

Opinions respecting the date of this well are exceedingly various. Pococke thought it was built by a visier named Joseph, eight hundred years ago; other authorities more generally attribute it to Saladin, the intrepid defender of his country against the hordes of European savages, who, under the name of crusaders, spread rapine and carnage through his land. His name was Yusef (Joseph.)—By the common people of Egypt it has long been ascribed to the patriarch of that name, and their traditions are often well founded; of which we shall give an example in the account of the Nilometer.—Van Sled, who visited Egypt several times in the 17th century, says some of the people in his time thought it was digged by spirits, and he adds, "I am almost inclined to believe it, for I cannot conceive how man can compass so wonderful a work."—Eckard's Hydraulics and Mechanics.

WHAT I WOULD DO.

If I were possessed of the most valuable things in the world, and was about to will them away, the following would be my plan of distribution:—

I would will to the world truth and friendship, which are very scarce.

I would give an additional portion of truth to lawyers, traders and merchants.

I would give to physicians skill and learning.

I would give to printers their pay.

To gossiping women short tongues.

To young women, good sense, modesty, large waists, and natural teeth.

To young sprouts or dandies, common sense, little cash, and hard labor.

To old maids, good temper, smooth faces, little and good husbands.

To old bachelors, love for virtue, children and wives.—Ex.

boys would be glad to go to that same cousin for a home, while she would be glad to take up with the little house that Squire Thorndyke's mother lived in.'

'Ah, sir,' continued the old man, 'this is a changing world; but to my mind, if folks would only be prudent and industrious, and give up hankering after things beyond their means, there would be more real good done in the world and fewer changes.'

JOSEPH'S WELL AT CAIRO.

The most remarkable well ever made by man, is Joseph's well at Cairo. Its magnitude, and the skill displayed in its construction, which is perfectly unique, have never been surpassed. All travelers have spoken of it with admiration.

This stupendous well is an oblong square, twenty-four feet by eighteen; being sufficiently capacious to admit within its mouth a moderate-sized house. It is excavated (of these dimensions) through solid rock, to the depth of one hundred and sixty-five feet, where it is enlarged into a capacious chamber, in the bottom of which is formed a basin or reservoir to receive the water raised from below, (for this chamber is not at the bottom of the well.) On one side of the reservoir another shaft is continued, one hundred and thirty feet lower, where it emerges through the rock into a bed of gravel in which the water is found. The whole depth being two hundred and ninety-seven feet. The lower shaft is not in the same vertical line with the upper one, nor is it so large, being fifteen feet by nine. As the water is first raised into the basin, by means of machinery propelled by horses or oxen within the chamber it may be asked, how are these animals conveyed to that depth in this tremendous pit, and by what means do they ascend? It is the solution of this problem that renders Joseph's Well so peculiarly interesting, and which indicates an advanced state of the arts at the period of its construction.

A spiral passage way is cut through the rock, from the surface of the ground to the chamber, independent of the well, round which it winds with so gentle a descent that persons sometimes ride up or down upon asses or mules. It is six feet four inches wide, and seven feet two inches high. Between it and the interior of the well a wall of rock is left to prevent persons from falling into, or even looking down it, (which in some cases would be equally fatal,) except through certain openings or windows, by means of which it is faintly lighted from the interior of the well; by this passage the animals descend, which drive the machinery that raises the water from the lower shaft into the reservoir or basin, from which it is again elevated by similar machinery, by other oxen on the surface of the ground. In the lower shaft a path is also cut down to the water; but as no portion is left between it and the well, it is extremely perilous for strangers to descend.

This celebrated production of former times resembles an enormous hollow screw, the centre of which forms the well and the threads a winding staircase round it. To erect of granite a flight of "geometrical" or "well stairs," two or three hundred feet high on the surface of the ground, would require extraordinary skill: although in the execution every aid from rules, measures, and the light of day, would guide the workmen at every step; but to begin such a work at the top, and construct it downward by excavation alone in the dark bowels of the earth, is a more arduous undertaking, especially as deviations from the correct lines could not be remedied; yet, in Joseph's well, the partition of rock between the pit, and the passage way, and the uniform inclination of the latter, seems to have been ascertained with equal precision, as if the whole had been constructed of cut stone on the surface. Was the pit or the passage formed first? Or were they simultaneously carried on and the excavated masses from both bore up the latter?

The extreme thinness of the partition wall excited the astonishment of M. Jomark, whose account of the well is inserted in the second volume of memoirs in Napoleon's great work of Egypt, part 2d, p. 691. It is according to him but sixteen centimers thick (about six inches!) He justly remarks that it must have required singular care to leave and preserve so small a portion while excavating the rock from both sides of it. It would seem no stronger in proportion than sheets of pasteboard placed on edge, to support one end of the stair of a modern built house, for it should be borne in mind that the massive roof of the spiral passage next the well has nothing but this film of rock to support it, or to prevent such portions from falling as are loosened by fissures, or such as from changes in the direction of the strata, are not firmly united to the general mass.

But this is not all; thus insufficient as it may seem, the bold designer has pierced it through its whole extent with semicircular openings, to admit light from the well.

Opinions respecting the date of this well are exceedingly various. Pococke thought it was built by a visier named Joseph, eight hundred years ago; other authorities more generally attribute it to Saladin, the intrepid defender of his country against the hordes of European savages, who, under the name of crusaders, spread rapine and carnage through his land. His name was Yusef (Joseph.)—By the common people of Egypt it has long been ascribed to the patriarch of that name, and their traditions are often well founded; of which we shall give an example in the account of the Swape.—Van Sled, who visited Egypt several times in the 17th century, says some of the people in his time thought it was digged by spirits, and he adds, "I am almost inclined to believe it, for I cannot conceive how man can compass so wonderful a work."—Esbank's Hydraulics and Mechanics.

WHAT I WOULD DO.

If I were possessed of the most valuable things in the world, and was about to will them away, the following would be my plan of distribution:---

I would will to the world truth and friendship, which are very scarce.

I would give an additional portion of truth to lawyers, traders and merchants.

I would give to physicians skill and learning.

I would give to printers their pay.

To gossiping women short tongues.

To young women, good sense, modesty, large waists, and natural teeth.

To young sprouts or dandies, common sense, little cash, and hard labor.

To old maids, good temper, smooth faces, little and good husbands.

To old bachelors, love for virtue, children and wives.—Ex.

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD REPRESENTED BY THE SIMILITUDE OF A DREAM.

As I was reposing one day in a beautiful grove, and meditating upon the present condition of the world, my mind became lost as to the things that were around me, and I fell into a deep sleep, and dreamed a dream; and behold I was carried away and set down in a great field, and it was filled with a numerous concourse of people who seemed to be in great confusion, and they did not appear to agree with each other, but walked in different directions. When I saw this I marveled greatly, and when I viewed them more closely, I discovered they were people of all ranks and grades of society; and what still more astonished me, was, they were people from all the nations of the earth. I also discovered that they were engaged in several different exercises — I inquired of one that stood by what this meant; he told me that it was their several exercises in religious worship. While beholding the heathen part of this company I was much pained to see the awful cruelties that they inflicted upon themselves during their ceremonies;—I exclaimed, O ignorance! thou foul monster! why hast thou so much degraded this people?

I then turned my attention to that part of the multitude that professed christianity. As I drew near and entered into the midst of the company, I was asked if I enjoyed religion, and belonged to any society: I answered, and made known my condition, hoping to receive such instructions as would relieve my mind, and remove the burden from it. I entered into conversation with several, and found them to have opposite opinions. Some manifested a warm zeal for their cause, and strenuously opposed others; and others were more candid.— At this warring about creeds, and clashing of opinions, I was astonished; for they all pretended to prove their sentiments true by the Bible. I was much disgusted, and was about to turn from the scene in despair; but several gathered around me, who tried to persuade me to embrace their several creeds. Some said this difference of opinion was of minor consequence.

I soon turned from the scene of contention about creeds, and listened to hear some of them give their descriptions of the glory, majesty and beauty of heaven; also the advantage of being a christian. On the other hand some attempted to describe the woes and pains of hell that will be inflicted upon those who disobey the commands of God. This produced much contention among them; some said there was a hell, others said there was none. I was also displeased at this, and was about to turn away and have nothing more to do with religion or its votaries: but being urged by all parties to read the scriptures and satisfy myself—which I resolved to do; but when I thoroughly examined them for myself I found that the mass of the christian part of this company were professing one thing and living by another.

In order to reconcile my mind to this I was cited to learned men to get an explanation of the scriptures. I called on them, and truly they made much exertion to explain the scriptures to my satisfaction, and at the same time to suit their creeds. With their fine speeches, and the rehearsing of popular traditions, and through the means of the modern spiritualizing system, I was in part converted to their opinions.— Therefore, I resolved to embrace some popular doctrine, and float with the current of popularity. I then forsook candid investigation, and commenced to support a party, and abide by the teachings of men. But before I was so deeply involved in party spirit that I could not be prevailed upon to investigate for myself, the scene was changed, and I was rescued: before bigotry and superstition had fastened their serpent fangs upon me, I was aroused to see my situation.

Suddenly there appeared a cloud which hovered over the multitude, having a singular appearance, being accompanied with a terrible noise. The bustle and noise of the multitude was soon hushed, and a profound silence reigned in its stead, whilst every eye looked upon this singular phenomenon with wonder and as-

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD REPRESENTED BY THE SIMILITUDE OF A DREAM.

As I was reposing one day in a beautiful grove, and meditating upon the present condition of the world, my mind became lost as to the things that were around me, and I fell into a deep sleep, and dreamed a dream; and behold I was carried away and set down in a great field, and it was filled with a numerous concourse of people who seemed to be in great confusion, and they did not appear to agree with each other, but walked in different directions. When I saw this I marveled greatly, and when I viewed them more closely, I discovered they were people of all ranks and grades of society; and what still more astonished me, was, they were people from all the nations of the earth. I also discovered that they were engaged in several different exercises—I inquired of one that stood by what this meant; he told me that it was their several exercises in religious worship. While beholding the heathen part of this company I was much pained to see the awful cruelties that they inflicted upon themselves during their ceremonies;—I exclaimed, O ignorance! thou foul monster! why hast thou so much degraded this people?

I then turned my attention to that part of the multitude that professed christianity. As I drew near and entered into the midst of the company, I was asked if I enjoyed religion, and belonged to any society: I answered, and made known my condition, hoping to receive such instructions as would relieve my mind, and remove the burden from it. I entered into conversation with several, and found them to have opposite opinions. Some manifested a warm zeal for their cause, and strenuously opposed others; and others were more candid.—At this warring about creeds, and clashing of opinions, I was astonished; for they all pretended to prove their sentiments true by the Bible. I was much disgusted, and was about to turn from the scene in despair; but several gathered around me, who tried to persuade me to embrace their several creeds. Some said this difference of opinion was of minor consequence.

I soon turned from the scene of contention about creeds, and listened to hear some of them give their descriptions of the glory, majesty and beauty of heaven; also the advantage of being a christian. On the other hand some attempted to describe the woes and pains of hell that will be inflicted upon those who disobey the commands of God. This produced much contention among them; some said there was a hell, others said there was none. I was also displeased at this, and was about to turn away and have nothing more to do with religion or its votaries: but being urged by all parties to read the scriptures and satisfy myself—which I resolved to do; but when I thoroughly examined them for myself I found that the mass of the christian part of this company were professing one thing and living by another.

In order to reconcile my mind to this I was cited to learned men to get an explanation of the scriptures. I called on them, and truly they made much exertion to explain the scriptures to my satisfaction, and at the same time to suit their creeds. With their fine speeches, and the rehearsing of popular traditions, and through the means of the modern spiritualizing system, I was in part converted to their opinions.—Therefore, I resolved to embrace some popular doctrine, and float with the current of popularity. I then forsook candid investigation, and commenced to support a party, and abide by the teachings of men. But before I was so deeply involved in party spirit that I could not be prevailed upon to investigate for myself, the scene was changed, and I was rescued: before bigotry and superstition had fastened their serpent fangs upon me, I was aroused to see my situation.

Suddenly there appeared a cloud which hovered over the multitude, having a singular appearance, being accompanied with a terrible noise. The bustle and noise of the multitude was soon hushed, and a profound silence reigned in its stead, whilst every eye looked upon this singular phenomenon with wonder and astonishment. And behold, there appeared a personage in sight that was descending through the ethereal sky, and bending his course towards the field that contained the multitude. I was much astonished at this scene, and wondered with great admiration. All still continued in silence, wondering what this meant.—Some thought that it was an omen of some awful event; and some thought otherwise. This personage soon landed in the midst of the multitude.

I drew near him, to hear from whence he came, and I soon learned that he was from some distant planet, but he refused to give any further information upon the subject. I was then very anxious to watch the actions and movements of this stranger, and hear what he had to say. Some of the christian part of the multitude soon inquired if he believed and enjoyed religion; he answered that he was entirely ignorant of the christian religion; but he manifested a willingness to learn all the particulars of the same.

I was much elated at this, and supposed that he would soon be converted and embrace the christian faith. Some from all parties rushed forward to enter into conversation with him, each hoping to convince him that his system of religion was superior to others. He was, however, dissatisfied with their contentious spirit, and called for their rules or statutes; they soon presented the Bible to him, extolling it as being the best of all books. In it, said they, are the principles of the pure gospel of Christ—the fountain of light and knowledge. The favorable description they gave of it, induced him to peruse it.

Without any prepossessed opinions he read its sacred pages, and was much pleased with the doctrine therein set forth. He read the history of Christ, and the object of his mission, and was much elated. He read the gospel of Christ, and was overwhelmed with joy to think that he had found a doctrine that guarantied unto him his soul's salvation, and warranted to him such precious blessings and gifts. He read that God had organized his church on earth with apostles and prophets, and had promised various spiritual gifts, such as healing the sick, speaking in other tongues, propheeyings, visions, administration of angels, &c., on conditions of obedience.

After he had learned the doctrine of Christ, and the manner the church was organized, and the blessings promised, he resolved that he would go to any length in order to embrace such a religion as this. After he had carefully perused the scriptures, he had no other expectation than that he should find a church organized according to the New Testament pattern, and people enjoying the blessings above mentioned. Indeed, he was conscious in his own mind that those who adv sed him to read the Bible believed all those things, and that they had apostles and prophets in the church, according to the pattern. He immediately solicited some of them in a candid way to give him an introduction to some of their apostles, that he might converse with them on this important subject. The reply was, we have no apostles in the church now-a-days.

The stranger was astonished at this, and looked as though he was greatly disappointed in his anticipations, and his hopes were entirely blasted, and he would sink in despair. However, he recovered himself from the shock, and inquired for prophets and those who enjoyed some of the spiritual gifts. The reply was, we have no prophets, and these gifts are no longer needed. He immediately accused them of acting dishonestly with him: first, they informed him that the Bible gave a description of their doctrines; but when he read and compared it with their doctrines and inquired for apostles and prophets, &c., they denied having any such organization; yet they said they worshiped God according to the scriptures. He declared that they did not believe what they professed, and turned from them much dissatisfied, condemning the whole of the christian religion and its votaries, saying he would have nothing more to do with them. They soon, however, said he was deluded, and warned the multitude to beware of him.

tonishment. And behold, there appeared a personage in sight that was descending through the ethereal sky, and bending his course towards the field that contained the multitude. I was much astonished at this scene, and wondered with great admiration. All still continued in silence, wondering what this meant.—Some thought that it was an omen of some awful event; and some thought otherwise. This personage soon landed in the midst of the multitude.

I drew near him, to hear from whence he came, and I soon learned that he was from some distant planet, but he refused to give any further information upon the subject. I was then very anxious to watch the actions and movements of this stranger, and hear what he had to say. Some of the christian part of the multitude soon inquired if he believed and enjoyed religion; he answered that he was entirely ignorant of the christian religion; but he manifested a willingness to learn all the particulars of the same.

I was much elated at this, and supposed that he would soon be converted and embrace the christian faith. Some from all parties rushed forward to enter into conversation with him, each hoping to convince him that his system of religion was superior to others. He was, however, dissatisfied with their contentious spirit, and called for their rules or statutes; they soon presented the Bible to him, extolling it as being the best of all books. In it, said they, are the principles of the pure gospel of Christ—the fountain of light and knowledge. The favorable description they gave of it, induced him to peruse it.

Without any prepossessed opinions he read its sacred pages, and was much pleased with the doctrine therein set forth. He read the history of Christ, and the object of his mission, and was much elated. He read the gospel of Christ, and was overwhelmed with joy to think that he had found a doctrine that guarantied unto him his soul's salvation, and warranted to him such precious blessings and gifts. He read that God had organized his church on earth with apostles and prophets, and had promised various spiritual gifts, such as healing the sick, speaking in other tongues, propheeyings, visions, administration of angels, &c., on conditions of obedience.

After he had learned the doctrine of Christ, and the manner the church was organized, and the blessings promised, he resolved that he would go to any length in order to embrace such a religion as this. After he had carefully perused the scriptures, he had no other expectation than that he should find a church organized according to the New Testament pattern, and people enjoying the blessings above mentioned. Indeed, he was conscious in his own mind that those who adv sed him to read the Bible believed all those things, and that they had apostles and prophets in the church, according to the pattern. He immediately solicited some of them in a candid way to give him an introduction to some of their apostles, that he might converse with them on this important subject. The reply was, we have no apostles in the church now-a-days.

The stranger was astonished at this, and looked as though he was greatly disappointed in his anticipations, and his hopes were entirely blasted, and he would sink in despair. However, he recovered himself from the shock, and inquired for prophets and those who enjoyed some of the spiritual gifts. The reply was, we have no prophets, and these gifts are no longer needed. He immediately accused them of acting dishonestly with him: first, they informed him that the Bible gave a description of their doctrines; but when he read and compared it with their doctrines and inquired for apostles and prophets, &c., they denied having any such organization; yet they said they worshiped God according to the scriptures. He declared that they did not believe what they professed, and turned from them much dissatisfied, condemning the whole of the christian religion and its votaries, saying he would have nothing more to do with them. They soon, however, said he was deluded, and warned the multitude to beware of him.

After carefully watching the actions of the stranger, and hearing what he had to say, and seeing the manner in which he was treated, the eyes of my understanding were opened, and I saw the condition I was in, and also the awful apostacy of the church, or of those who professed the christian religion, and began to contend for the necessity of a continuation of apostles, prophets, &c. I was soon considered a heretic—the finger of scorn was pointed at me, and an uproar was raised among the multitude, and they cried, saying, "have nothing to do with this man, for he is deluded." I immediately, with others who contended for the above mentioned gifts, separated from them, and the dream closed, and I awoke—

A BELIEVER IN THE SCRIPTURES.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

DEAR BRO.:—It appears that the Lord has set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, according to the prophecy of Isaiah, and is beginning to restore judges as at the first, and counsellors as at the beginning. Isa. i. 26, 27. "And I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counselors as at the beginning; afterwards thou shalt be called the city of righteousness, the faithful city. Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness." Or, in other words, every thing that can be shaken will be taken out of the way, that the kingdom which cannot be shaken may remain.

Some may be ready to ask the question, how were Israel's judges at the first? The answer is, they had a Moses and his counselors; they also had seventy elders, which constituted the executive department in their ecclesiastical government. This restitution thus far has taken place. Christ compared the kingdom of heaven to a net cast into the sea, which gathered of every kind, both good and bad. It is necessary that this gathering should take place, in order to obtain a sufficient number of tried and chosen ones to organize the kingdom. The principle of choosing is the same now as it was when Moses said to the children of Israel: "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."—See also Book of Doctrine and Covenants, sec. v. p. 2. "Behold here is wisdom; let every man choose for himself until I come."

The reader by this time may be ready to ask, has the Lord promised to send a man like unto Moses to prepare the bride for his coming? God has promised that Zion shall travail and bring forth her children in the last days, and that she shall have a leader. See Isaiah lxvi. 7. "Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child." Compare this with Malachi iii. 1. "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts." Thus the Lord has promised a man child to lead Zion—a messenger to prepare the way before him, that the bride may make herself ready for the marriage supper.

Moses placed the shepherd, the stone of Israel, in the tribe of Joseph, and Paul informs us that our Lord sprang out of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. The kingdom of heaven will go out to meet the bridegroom at his coming, and no doubt they will have Malachi's messenger to lead them, with their judges restored as at the first, and their counselors as at the beginning.

N. ANWAY.

Landsdown, U. C., Jan. 1st, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—Presuming that you have had a happy christmas, I will wish you and the saints a happy new year; assuring you and the saints that it is well with us, considering the disadvantageous circumstances under which we have labored. When I reached this country my health was very poor, having been troubled with a severe pain in the head for several months previous to leaving home. And since my arrival it was thought it would terminate in inflammation on the brain; but through the

After carefully watching the actions of the stranger, and hearing what he had to say, and seeing the manner in which he was treated, the eyes of my understanding were opened, and I saw the condition I was in, and also the awful apostacy of the church, or of those who professed the christian religion, and began to contend for the necessity of a continuation of apostles, prophets, &c. I was soon considered a heretic—the finger of scorn was pointed at me, and an uproar was raised among the multitude, and they cried, saying, "have nothing to do with this man, for he is deluded." I immediately, with others who contended for the above mentioned gifts, separated from them, and the dream closed, and I awoke—

A BELIEVER IN THE SCRIPTURES.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

DEAR BRO.:—It appears that the Lord has set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, according to the prophecy of Isaiah, and is beginning to restore judges as at the first, and counsellors as at the beginning. Isa. i. 26, 27. "And I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counselors as at the beginning; afterwards thou shalt be called the city of righteousness, the faithful city. Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness." Or, in other words, every thing that can be shaken will be taken out of the way, that the kingdom which cannot be shaken may remain.

Some may be ready to ask the question, how were Israel's judges at the first? The answer is, they had a Moses and his counselors; they also had seventy elders, which constituted the executive department in their ecclesiastical government. This restitution thus far has taken place. Christ compared the kingdom of heaven to a net cast into the sea, which gathered of every kind, both good and bad. It is necessary that this gathering should take place, in order to obtain a sufficient number of tried and chosen ones to organize the kingdom. The principle of choosing is the same now as it was when Moses said to the children of Israel "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."—See also Book of Doctrine and Covenants, sec. v. p. 2. "Behold here is wisdom; let every man choose for himself until I come."

The reader by this time may be ready to ask, has the Lord promised to send a man like unto Moses to prepare the bride for his coming? God has promised that Zion shall travail and bring forth her children in the last days, and that she shall have a leader. See Isaiah lxvi. 7. "Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child." Compare this with Malachi iii. 1. "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts." Thus the Lord has promised a man child to lead Zion—a messenger to prepare the way before him, that the bride may make herself ready for the marriage supper.

Moses placed the shepherd, the stone of Israel, in the tribe of Joseph, and Paul informs us that our Lord sprang out of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. The kingdom of heaven will go out to meet the bridegroom at his coming, and no doubt they will have Malachi's messenger to lead them, with their judges restored as at the first, and their counselors as at the beginning.

N. ANWAY.

Landsdown, U. C., Jan. 1st, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—Presuming that you have had a happy christmas, I will wish you and the saints a happy new year; assuring you and the saints that it is well with us, considering the disadvantageous circumstances under which we have labored. When I reached this country my health was very poor, having been troubled with a severe pain in the head for several months previous to leaving home. And since my arrival it was thought it would terminate in inflammation on the brain; but through the goodness of God I am now better. Bro. Wright left this place four weeks since for York State, designing to return in two weeks; but we suppose he is hindered by the ice.

Bro. Savage came to me last Tuesday. I had just commenced a two days meeting. At the close we baptized four persons. Bro. Savage is a giant. He has been unavoidably detained by sickness and poverty until the present time. We are preparing to go to Gananoque to-morrow, where we hope to meet Bro. Wright. We expect to leave in a few days for Bellville. Truth is upward and onward in this place. We have labored under every disadvantage that men possibly could. When Bro. Wright commenced preaching here he was received in almost every place with coldness, (a few honorable exceptions.) But, firm to his purpose, he met all the falsehood that the Devil had in this part of his magazine, and in spite of prejudice, falsehood, &c., he succeeded in establishing truth on its own basis to the conviction of many and the conversion of several honest souls. And I will here say that you may set me down as a false prophet if our mission does not in the sequel bring up to Zion some as good saints as can be found among the Gentile nations.

Bro. Savage has made his arrangements for his mission on this planet to terminate with his life. He is in the work all over, as the saying is. Bro. Wright is in the same fix. And as for myself, I have proposed to Savage to black his boots, if he will allow me to travel with him and hear him preach. They are twenty-five or thirty years ahead of me in preaching. The section of country from Gananoque up above Toronto and back of it into the interior is where I was shown some eighteen years ago that I should there preach the gospel, little dreaming at the time that it was to be called Mormonism.

I recollect in my vision of meeting several priests, who were very angry. One of them wore a black coat, and it appeared to me that he was as black inside as out, which caused me to marvel. But after I embraced the gospel, and received the gift of discernment, I knew what it meant. And if I shall actually experience half of what I saw in my vision, I have yet to see sights. Bro. Wright will recollect my vision. This same Rev. gent is preaching in my road, at least where I expect to be in a few months. Z. H. GURLEY.

For the Gospel Herald.

MR. J. VAN DUSEN,—DEAR SIR:—I took from the office a small paper containing your revelations, and as the brethren are therein referred to me for testimony to back up your assertions, I give my testimony to the honest in heart, not because your wild dreaming is worthy of the notice of any man of sense, but I can say that I have in my possession the letter that you refer to, and in it is all and more folly and lies than the Herald pretends.

You there say that Hickey is dead, and that Strang soon will be—a word of wisdom to the church. If God was going to give a revelation to the church he would not speak through such a poor miserable covenant breaker as Mr. Increase Van Dusen. I was ordered out of the house of Mr. Van Dusen for telling him that he was possessed of the Devil. He only hates Bro. G. J. Adams because his righteousness excels his own. And this is a principle forever true, that bad people hate those whom they have tried to injure. May God reward the evil doers, and the accuser of our faithful brethren soon be cast down.

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

☞ The Rabbi Athiel Cohen has arrived in the colony for the purpose of obtaining subscriptions in behalf of the building of a temple in Jerusalem, on the site where the second temple formerly stood.—Glascow Scottish Free Press.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Hiram Thompson,	$1,00	to Vol.	V	No. 16
Ebenezer Niles,	2,00	"	"	38
Nancy Tibbitts,	1,00	"	"	13
Franklin Bevier,	2,00	"	"	17

goodness of God I am now better. Bro. Wright left this place four weeks since for York State, designing to return in two weeks; but we suppose he is hindered by the ice.

Bro. Savage came to me last Tuesday. I had just commenced a two days meeting. At the close we baptized four persons. Bro. Savage is a giant. He has been unavoidably detained by sickness and poverty until the present time. We are preparing to go to Gananoque to-morrow, where we hope to meet Bro. Wright. We expect to leave in a few days for Bellville. Truth is upward and onward in this place. We have labored under every disadvantage that men possibly could. When Bro. Wright commenced preaching here he was received in almost every place with coldness, (a few honorable exceptions.) But, firm to his purpose, he met all the falsehood that the Devil had in this part of his magazine, and in spite of prejudice, falsehood, &c., he succeeded in establishing truth on its own basis to the conviction of many and the conversion of several honest souls. And I will here say that you may set me down as a false prophet if our mission does not in the sequel bring up to Zion some as good saints as can be found among the Gentile nations.

Bro. Savage has made his arrangements for his mission on this planet to terminate with his life. He is in the work all over, as the saying is. Bro. Wright is in the same fix. And as for myself, I have proposed to Savage to black his boots, if he will allow me to travel with him and hear him preach. They are twenty-five or thirty years ahead of me in preaching. The section of country from Gananoque up above Toronto and back of it into the interior is where I was shown some eighteen years ago that I should there preach the gospel, little dreaming at the time that it was to be called Mormonism.

I recollect in my vision of meeting several priests, who were very angry. One of them wore a black coat, and it appeared to me that he was as black inside as out, which caused me to marvel. But after I embraced the gospel, and received the gift of discernment, I knew what it meant. And if I shall actually experience half of what I saw in my vision, I have yet to see sights. Bro. Wright will recollect my vision. This same Rev. gent is preaching in my road, at least where I expect to be in a few months. Z. H. GURLEY.

For the Gospel Herald.

MR. J. VAN DUSEN,—DEAR SIR:—I took from the office a small paper containing your revelations, and as the brethren are therein referred to me for testimony to back up your assertions, I give my testimony to the honest in heart, not because your wild dreaming is worthy of the notice of any man of sense, but I can say that I have in my possession the letter that you refer to, and in it is all and more folly and lies than the Herald pretends.

You there say that Hickey is dead, and that Strang soon will be—a word of wisdom to the church. If God was going to give a revelation to the church he would not speak through such a poor miserable covenant breaker as Mr. Increase Van Dusen. I was ordered out of the house of Mr. Van Dusen for telling him that he was possessed of the Devil. He only hates Bro. G. J. Adams because his righteousness excels his own. And this is a principle forever true, that bad people hate those whom they have tried to injure. May God reward the evil doers, and the accuser of our faithful brethren soon be cast down.

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

☞ The Rabbi Athiel Cohen has arrived in the colony for the purpose of obtaining subscriptions in behalf of the building of a temple in Jerusalem, on the site where the second temple formerly stood.—Glascow Scottish Free Press.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Hiram Thompson,	$1,00	to	Vol. V	No. 16
Ebenezer Niles,	2,00	"	"	38
Nancy Tibbitts,	1,00	"	"	13
Franklin Bevier,	2,00	"	"	17

PINS.

How many occasions of instruction do we daily omit, or pervert to the worst purposes! How seldom are we aware that every atom of the universe is a text, and every article in our household a homily! Few out of the immense female population of these realms but in some way are beholden to pins; and yet how few, how very few, derive any advantage from them, beyond a temporary concinnity of garments, the support of an apron, or the adhesion of a neckerchief; they stick them in at morning, and pull them out at night, daily, for years, without enlargement of intellect, or melioration of morals. Yet there is not a pin in a tailor's arm, but might teach the wise of the world a lesson.

Let us divide it into matter and form, and we shall perceive that it is the form alone that constitutes it a pin. Time was when it slumbered in the chaos of brazen metal. Time was, too, when it was molten in the furnace, when the solid brass became as water, and rushed from its ore with a glowing rapidity. When this took place we know not; what strange mutations the metals may have undergone we cannot conjecture. It may have shone on the breast of Achilles, or ejected the spirit of Hector. Who knows but it may have partaken of the sacredness of Solomon's lavers, or have gleamed destruction in the mirror of Archimeds? From form, then, is derived disgrace or dignity of which the poor massive matter is but an involuntary recipient.

Just like this pin is man. Once he was, while yet he was not, even in the earth, from whence the spirit which pervades all nature, and contains in itself the forms and living principles of all things summoned him to life and consciousness. How various his subsequent fates! how high his exaltation! how sacred his offices! how brilliant his genius! how terrible his valor! yet still the poor human animal is the same clod of earth, or the same mass of bullion, that is sown by the seeds that float in the atmosphere of circumstance, and stamped by the dies of education and example.

See him in the decline, in the super civilization of social life. He is sunk to a pin. His sole solidity is brazen impudence. His outside mercurial glitter, a counterfeit polish, as deleterious as it is attractive; composed of changeable fashions, that glide away like quicksilver, and like quicksilver are excellent to denote the changes of the season.

Consider the head of a pin. Does it not resemble those royal pensonages which the English have been in the habit of importing from foreign parts to govern them? For, observe, it is no part of the pin, but superinduced upon it, a mere exotic, a naturalized alien. It is a common remark upon a person of moderate intellects, that he has a head, and so has a pin; but, I believe, it is to our national rather then our individual heads that this is meant to be applied; for what similarity can there exist between the silliest head that grows between a pair of shoulders and an adventitious nob, owing its elevation wholly to the caprice or convenience of a pin maker? But if the public head be intended, the analogy is strong enough for a commentator on the Apocalypse. A foreign prince, by the wisdom of a British parliament, became united to the headless trunk of the nation; becomes part of us by force of time and adhesion.

But if the head be thus dignified, shall the point want respect, without which the head were no head, and the shaft of no value, though, in relation to these noble members, it is but as the tail? Is it not the operative artificer, the pioneer to clear the way, the herald to anounce, the warrior to subdue opposition? How aptly does this little javelin typify the frame of human society! What the head of a pin would be without its point, and the point without the head, that were the laborer without the ruler, or the ruler without the laborer.

There is one more resemblance I would fain suppress, did not truth call for its statement. That pin may long glitter in the orderly rank of the paper, or repose in the soft security of the cushion; it may fix itself on the bosom of beauty, or support the cumbrous honors of her train; but an end is predestined to its glories. It shall one day be broken, lost, trampled under foot, and forgotten; its slender length, which now is as straight as the arrow of Cupid, shall be as crooked as his bow, and shall share the fate of fallen kings and exploded patriots —Ex. paper.

PINS.

How many occasions of instruction do we daily omit, or pervert to the worst purposes! How seldom are we aware that every atom of the universe is a text, and every article in our household a homily! Few out of the immense female population of these realms but in some way are beholden to pins: and yet how few, how very few, derive any advantage from them, beyond a temporary concinnity of garments, the support of an apron, or the adhesion of a neckerchief; they stick them in at morning, and pull them out at night, daily, for years, without enlargement of intellect, or melioration of morals. Yet there is not a pin in a tailor's arm, but might teach the wise of the world a lesson.

Let us divide it into matter and form, and we shall perceive that it is the form alone that constitutes it a pin. Time was when it slumbered in the chaos of brazen metal. Time was, too, when it was molten in the furnace, when the solid brass became as water, and rushed from its ore with a glowing rapidity. When this took place we know not; what strange mutations the metals may have undergone we cannot conjecture. It may have shone on the breast of Achilles, or ejected the spirit of Hector. Who knows but it may have partaken of the sacredness of Solomon's lavers, or have gleamed destruction in the mirror of Archimeds? From form, then, is derived disgrace or dignity of which the poor massive matter is but an involuntary recipient.

Just like this pin is man. Once he was, while yet he was not, even in the earth, from whence the spirit which pervades all nature, and contains in itself the forms and living principles of all things summoned him to life and consciousness. How various his subsequent fates! how high his exaltation! how sacred his offices! how brilliant his genius! how terrible his valor! yet still the poor human animal is the same clod of earth, or the same mass of bullion, that is sown by the seeds that float in the atmosphere of circumstance, and stamped by the dies of education and example.

See him in the decline, in the super civilization of social life. He is sunk to a pin. His sole solidity is brazen impudence. His outside mercurial glitter, a counterfeit polish, as deleterious as it is attractive; composed of changeable fashions, that glide away like quicksilver, and like quicksilver are excellent to denote the changes of the season.

Consider the head of a pin. Does it not resemble those royal pensonages which the English have been in the habit of importing from foreign parts to govern them? For, observe, it is no part of the pin, but superinduced upon it, a mere exotic, a naturalized alien. It is a common remark upon a person of moderate intellects, that he has a head, and so has a pin; but, I believe, it is to our national rather then our individual heads that this is meant to be applied; for what similarity can there exist between the silliest head that grows between a pair of shoulders and an adventitious nob, owing its elevation wholly to the caprice or convenience of a pin maker? But if the public head be intended the analogy is strong enough for a commentator on the Apocalypse. A foreign prince, by the wisdom of a British parliament, became united to the headless trunk of the nation; becomes part of us by force of time and adhesion.

But if the head be thus dignified, shall the point want respect, without which the head were no head, and the shaft of no value, though, in relation to these noble members, it is but as the tail? Is it not the operative artificer, the pioneer to clear the way, the herald to anounce, the warrior to subdue opposition? How aptly does this little javelin typify the frame of human society! What the head of a pin would be without its point, and the point without the head, that were the laborer without the ruler, or the ruler without the laborer.

There is one more resemblance I would fain suppress, did not truth call for its statement. That pin may long glitter in the orderly rank of the paper, or repose in the soft security of the cushion; it may fix itself on the bosom of beauty, or support the cumbrous honors of her train; but an end is predestined to its glories. It shall one day be broken, lost, trampled under foot, and forgotten; its slender length, which now is as straight as the arrow of Cupid, shall be as crooked as his bow, and shall share the fate of fallen kings and exploded patriots. —Ex. paper.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 46.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, JAN. 31, 1850. [WHOLE No. 162.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON BAPTISM.

If baptism is a necessary ordinance for the remission of sins, why did Paul thank God that he baptized no more of the Corinthians but Crispus, Gaius, and the household of Stephanas?

Answer: he thanked God that he baptized no others at Corinth because they had disputations among them, and were divided, one saying he was of Paul, another that he was of Apollos, lest they should say that he baptized in his own name. "I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius; lest any should say that I baptized in my own name." 1 Cor. i. 14, 15.

Again, why did he say that he was not sent to baptize, but to preach the gospel?

Aswer: because he was the great apostle to the Gentiles, and it was more particularly his business to go before and introduce the gospel, and his companions generally done the baptizing. This we believe to be the only reason why he made this expression: for if he had considered baptism a non-essential thing, why did he practice it on any occasion?

If God had intended that all that believed should be baptized, why did John the Baptist say, at the time he was baptizing, that Christ should increase, but that he must decrease?

Answer: he had no allusion to the ordinance of baptism, or that any of the institutions of heaven, as though they should decrease, or be done away. But he alluded to himself, and the death that should come upon him; which would deprive him of the privilege of baptizing. Thus he ceased baptizing, or decreased; therefore, John said: "He [Christ] that cometh from above, is above all: he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth: he that cometh from heaven is above all."

Indeed, it is inconsistent for any one to suppose that John intended to convey the idea that water baptism was to be done away, and superseded by the baptism of the Holy Ghost: for Christ and the apostles were engaged in baptizing at the time John made this expression: "After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized. And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there; and they came, and were baptized:" "And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold, the same baptizeth and all men come to him." John, iii. 22, 26. "Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

When Christ said, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned," did he not have a reference to a spiritual baptism only?

Answer: No! because John the Baptist said, that Christ was the one to baptize with the Holy Ghost. And Jesus said unto his disciples: "Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The disciples here are in the second person, being spoken to; and according to the above they were to baptize in all nations; consequently it was a water baptism. But Christ was to baptize with the Holy Ghost.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 15.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, JAN. 31, 1850. [WHOLE No. 162.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON BAPTISM.

If baptism is a necessary ordinance for the remission of sins, why did Paul thank God that he baptized no more of the Corinthians but Crispus, Gaius, and the household of Stephanas?

Answer: he thanked God that he baptized no others at Corinth because they had disputations among them, and were divided, one saying he was of Paul, another that he was of Apollos, lest they should say that he baptized in his own name. "I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius; lest any should say that I baptized in my own name." 1 Cor. i. 14, 15.

Again, why did he say that he was not sent to baptize, but to preach the gospel?

Aswer: because he was the great apostle to the Gentiles, and it was more particularly his business to go before and introduce the gospel, and his companions generally done the baptizing. This we believe to be the only reason why he made this expression: for if he had considered baptism a non-essential thing, why did he practice it on any occasion?

If God had intended that all that believed should be baptized, why did John the Baptist say, at the time he was baptizing, that Christ should increase, but that he must decrease?

Answer: he had no allusion to the ordinance of baptism, or that any of the institutions of heaven, as though they should decrease, or be done away. But he alluded to himself, and the death that should come upon him; which would deprive him of the privilege of baptizing. Thus he ceased baptizing, or decreased; therefore, John said: "He [Christ] that cometh from above, is above all: he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth: he that cometh from heaven is above all."

Indeed, it is inconsistent for any one to suppose that John intended to convey the idea that water baptism was to be done away, and superseded by the baptism of the Holy Ghost: for Christ and the apostles were engaged in baptizing at the time John made this expression: "After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized. And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there; and they came, and were baptized:" "And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold, the same baptizeth and all men come to him." John, iii. 22, 26. "Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

When Christ said, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned," did he not have a reference to a spiritual baptism only?

Answer: No! because John the Baptist said, that Christ was the one to baptize with the Holy Ghost. And Jesus said unto his disciples: "Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The disciples here are in the second person, being spoken to; and according to the above they were to baptize in all nations; consequently it was a water baptism. But Christ was to baptize with the Holy Ghost.

Have we any reason to believe that the apostles were baptized in water?

Answer: we have; for Christ said: "And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." Matt. x. 38. The apostles were worthy of him; therefore they must have taken up their cross and followed him, and of course patterned after his example. After that he said unto them: "Verily I say unto you, that ye who have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones," &c. Matt. xix. 28. Christ here most unquestionally had an allusion to a regeneration of water: for it is said that the Holy Ghost was not yet given. Jesus said: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth: it is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send him unto you." John xvi. 7. Thus we discover. that the receiving of the Comforter was placed in the future. Therefore, when Christ said you that have followed me in the regenation, &c., he certainly alluded to baptism, or being born of the water. Again it is inconsistent for us to suppose that the apostle taught baptism as being necessary for the remission of sins, and at the same time had never been baptized themselves.

Did not the apostle say: "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind;" consequently, it makes no difference whether or not a man is baptized by immersion, or sprinkled, or not baptized at all, providing he is sincere and fully persuaded in his own mind?

Answer: the apostle here had no allusion to baptism, or sprinkling; but was speaking of esteeming one day above another, and the eating of herbs. (See Rom. xiv.) As respects the mode of baptism—Paul says: "Therefore we are buried with him [Christ] by baptism into death." In order to bury a man in water he must be covered, or immersed. "But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." Rom. vi. 17. The precise form of doctrine that the apostles delivered to the ancient saints, was, that there is no scriptual grounds for believing that sprinkling is an institution of heaven, that will answer in the place of baptism by immersion.

However, there are several passages of scripture that are often applied as proof to support such an ordinance. We will here notice some of the most prominent of them. Isaiah describing things that were in the future, said: "So shall he sprinkle many nations." This, according to the testimony of the prophet, is to be fulfilled at the time of the restoration of the House of Israel, when Jerusalem shall be repaired, Zion built: and when her watchmen shall see eye to eye. And no one that understands the prophecies will pretend to say that Zion is yet built in fulfillment of Isaiah's prediction; and that her watchmen see eye to eye, as yet. Therefore, it is presumption to attempt to fulfill this work of sprinkling, before the set time is come. Again, God is personated as being the one to perform this work, and not a set of men who are acting without knowledge, and authority. See Isa. iii.

Again, Ezekiel, prophesying of the restoration of the children of Israel, back upon their own lands, and that they never should be dispersed again, says: "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you," &c. (See Ezek. xxxvi.) Any man who undertakes to fulfill this prediction, assumes a prerogative to do that which belongs to none but God; for in the above quotation the personal pronoun I, personates God, and not a set of uninspired preachers. This is a work for God to do, and not man. Furthermore, the children of Israel were the ones to be sprinkled, and not Gentile sinners: also, it was not to be done until Israel is gathered, which is yet to take place. We know that the Jews, under the ceremonial law, were commanded to sprinkle with blood, and also with water; but according to Paul, this law was abolished at the time of the personal appearing of Christ. Indeed, we know of nothing in the New Testament to justify

Have we any reason to believe that the apostles were baptized in water?

Answer: we have; for Christ said: "And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." Matt. x. 38. The apostles were worthy of him; therefore they must have taken up their cross and followed him, and of course patterned after his example. After that he said unto them: "Verily I say unto you, that ye who have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones," &c. Matt. xix. 28. Christ here most unquestionally had an allusion to a regeneration of water: for it is said that the Holy Ghost was not yet given. Jesus said: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth: it is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send him unto you." John xvi. 7. Thus we discover, that the receiving of the Comforter was placed in the future. Therefore, when Christ said you that have followed me in the regenation, &c., he certainly alluded to baptism, or being born of the water. Again it is inconsistent for us to suppose that the apostle taught baptism as being necessary for the remission of sins, and at the same time had never been baptized themselves.

Did not the apostle say: "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind;" consequently, it makes no difference whether or not a man is baptized by immersion, or sprinkled, or not baptized at all, providing he is sincere and fully persuaded in his own mind?

Answer: the apostle here had no allusion to baptism, or sprinkling; but was speaking of esteeming one day above another, and the eating of herbs. (See Rom. xiv.) As respects the mode of baptism—Paul says: "Therefore we are buried with him [Christ] by baptism into death." In order to bury a man in water he must be covered, or immersed. "But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." Rom. vi. 17. The precise form of doctrine that the apostles delivered to the ancient saints, was, that there is no scriptual grounds for believing that sprinkling is an institution of heaven, that will answer in the place of baptism by immersion.

However, there are several passages of scripture that are often applied as proof to support such an ordinance. We will here notice some of the most prominent of them. Isaiah describing things that were in the future, said: "So shall he sprinkle many nations." This, according to the testimony of the prophet, is to be fulfilled at the time of the restoration of the House of Israel, when Jerusalem shall be repaired, Zion built: and when her watchmen shall see eye to eye. And no one that understands the prophecies will pretend to say that Zion is yet built in fulfillment of Isaiah's prediction; and that her watchmen see eye to eye, as yet. Therefore, it is presumption to attempt to fulfill this work of sprinkling, before the set time is come. Again, God is personated as being the one to perform this work and not a set of men who are acting without knowledge, and authority. See Isa. iii.

Again, Ezekiel, prophesying of the restoration of the children of Israel, back upon their own lands, and that they never should be dispersed again, says: "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you," &c. (See Ezek. xxxvi. Any man who undertakes to fulfill this prediction, assumes a prerogative to do that which belongs to none but God; for in the above quotation the personal pronoun I, personates God, and not a set of uninspired preachers. This is a work for God to do, and not man. Furthermore, the children of Israel were the ones to be sprinkled, and not Gentile sinners: also, it was not to be done until Israel is gathered, which is yet to take place. We know that the Jews, under the ceremonial law, were commanded to sprinkle with blood, and also with water; but according to Paul, this law was abolished at the time of the personal appearing of Christ. Indeed, we know of nothing in the New Testament to justify sprinkling instead of baptism. It is said, that Christ came up out of the water, and that Philip and the Eunuch went down into the water, when baptized.

THE FAITH ONCE DELIVERED TO THE SAINTS RESTORED.

As soon as the Book of Mormon was translated, the Lord sent his holy angel with the holy priesthood, which was conferred upon men; thus fulfilling the saying of John: "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, &c." The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was soon organized according to the New Testament pattern—with apostles, elders, &c. This was done on the sixth day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty.

The saints immediately began to contend for the faith once delivered to the ancients; and as they were engaged in prayer to God, and exercising faith in him, the heavenly messengers often ministered unto them. The Lord poured out his Spirit in copious effusions: some saw heavenly visions, others prophesied, and the sick have often been healed by faith in the name of Jesus—for surely the religion that was once enjoyed by the ancient saints is restored.

Notwithstanding the powerful opposition that has been exerted against us, the work has prospered. Men of courage have embraced it, and have been willing to lay down their own lives in the cause of God.

It has been preached in most of the States, and also in Texas, the Canadas, England, Scotland, and Ireland, with success. And in the course of its progress it has gathered in many thousands, who are now rejoicing in the hope of a glorious resurrection, and reign with Christ.

Thus the Lord has commenced his great work in fulfillment of the prophecies, and we trust that it will roll on till all nations shall hear the sound, and the way is prepared for the second coming of Christ.

Poverty not Crime.—Gov. Fish, in his inaugural message, says that out of 746 persons confined on Blackwell's Island at one time during the past year upon the charge of vagrancy, 220 were there from the effect of "poverty, sickness, or destitution." Out of the whole number, 746, he remarks, "only three were lawfully imprisoned!"

INFLUENCE OF SINGING ON THE HEALTH OF CHILDREN.

One of the prejudices most obstinately maintained against teaching children to sing, arises from an opinion frequently broached that singing, if practiced at a tender age, may have a baneful influence on the health, and occasion pulmonary affections. It is not long since this idea prevailed in Germany also; but the most minute investigations, made by government of parents, have proved it to be quite erroneous. From the many thousand instances of contrary results, the German people have learnt the utter fallacy of this notion, and have not only ceased to dread singing as being injurious to health, but go so far as to consider it one of the most efficacious means, not only for refining the ear, for developing the voice, but also for giving strength and vigor to all the physical organs it calls in action.

Nothing is better calculated than the practice of singing to produce the power of free and lengthened respiration. Childhood is the fittest period to receive to its fullest extent all the advantages resulting from this branch of instruction. All the organs of the voice are then soft and flexible, and susceptible of the slightest impression. The lungs expand with unobstructed ease; the muscles and nerves connected with the throat and chest yield readily to the action of respiration; the ear receives and conveys sound with facility, and ideas communicated at that early epoch of life are not easily effaced.

THUS IS LIFE.

If we die to-day, the sun will shine as brightly and the birds sing as sweetly to-morrow. Business will not be suspended for a moment, and the great mass will not bestow a thought to our memories. "Is he dead!" will be the solemn inquiry of a few, as they pass to their pleasure or their work. But no one will miss us, except our immediate connexions; and even they, in a short time, will forget us, and laugh as merrily as when we sat beside them.

Thus shall we all, now in active life, pass away. Our children crowd close behind us, and they will soon be gone. In a few years not a living being can say, "I remember him." We lived in another age and did business with those who have long since slumbered in the tomb. This is life. How rapidly it passes. O, blessed are they who are held in everlasting remembrance.

NIGHT.

Night is beautiful itself, but still more beautiful in associations. It is not linked, as day is, with our cares and our toils, the business and bitterness of life. The sunshine brings with it action; we rise in the morning, and our task is before us; and night comes, and with it rest. If we leave sleep, and ask not for dreamy forgetfulness, our waking is in solitude and our employment is thought. Imagination has thrown her glories around the midnight; the orbs of heaven, the silence, the shadows, are steeped in poetry. Even in the heart of a crowded city, where the moonlight falls but upon the pavement and roof, the heart would be softened, and mind elevated, amid the loveliness of night's deepest and stillest hours.

sprinkling instead of baptism. It is said, that Christ came up out of the water, and that Philip and the Eunuch went down into the water, when baptized.

THE FAITH ONCE DELIVERED TO THE SAINTS RESTORED.

As soon as the Book of Mormon was translated, the Lord sent his holy angel with the holy priesthood, which was conferred upon men: thus fulfilling the saying of John: "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, &c." The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was soon organized according to the New Testament pattern—with apostles, elders, &c. This was done on the sixth day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty.

The saints immediately began to contend for the faith once delivered to the ancients; and as they were engaged in prayer to God, and exercising faith in him, the heavenly messengers often ministered unto them. The Lord poured out his Spirit in copious effusions: some saw heavenly visions, others prophesied, and the sick have often been healed by faith in the name of Jesus—for surely the religion that was once enjoyed by the ancient saints is restored.

Notwithstanding the powerful opposition that has been exerted against us, the work has prospered. Men of courage have embraced it, and have been willing to lay down their own lives in the cause of God.

It has been preached in most of the States, and also in Texas, the Canadas, England, Scotland, and Ireland, with success. And in the course of its progress it has gathered in many thousands, who are now rejoicing in the hope of a glorious resurrection, and reign with Christ.

Thus the Lord has commenced his great work in fulfillment of the prophecies, and we trust that it will roll on till all nations shall hear the sound, and the way is prepared for the second coming of Christ.

Poverty not Crime.—Gov. Fish, in his inaugural message, says that out of 746 persons confined on Blackwell's Island at one time during the past year upon the charge of vagrancy, 220 were there from the effect of "poverty, sickness, or destitution." Out of the whole number, 746, he remarks, "only three were lawfully imprisoned!"

INFLUENCE OF SINGING ON THE HEALTH OF CHILDREN.

One of the prejudices most obstinately maintained against teaching children to sing, arises from an opinion frequently broached that singing, if practiced at a tender age, may have a banefel influence on the health, and occasion pulmonary affections. It is not long since this idea prevailed in Germany also; but the most minute investigations, made by government of parents, have proved it to be quite erroneous. From the many thousand instances of contrary results, the German people have learnt the utter fallacy of this notion, and have not only ceased to dread singing as being injurious to health, but go so far as to consider it one of the most efficacious means, not only for refining the ear, for developing the voice, but also for giving strength and vigor to all the physical organs it calls in action.

Nothing is better calculated than the practice of singing to produce the power of free and lengthened respiration. Childhood is the fittest period to receive to its fullest extent all the advantages resulting from this branch of instruction. All the organs of the voice are then soft and flexible, and susceptible of the slightest impression. The lungs expand with unobstructed ease; the muscles and nerves connected with the throat and chest yield readily to the action of respiration; the ear receives and conveys sound with facility, and ideas communicated at that early epoch of life are not easily effaced.

THUS IS LIFE.

If we die to-day, the sun will shine as brightly and the birds sing as sweetly to-morrow. Business will not be suspended for a moment, and the great mass will not bestow a thought to our memories. "Is he dead?" will be the solemn inquiry of a few, as they pass to their pleasure or their work. But no one will miss us, except our immediate connexions; and even they, in a short time, will forget us, and laugh as merrily as when we sat beside them.

Thus shall we all, now in active life, pass away. Our children crowd close behind us, and they will soon be gone. In a few years not a living being can say, "I remember him." We lived in another age and did business with those who have long since slumbered in the tomb. This is life. How rapidly it passes. O, blessed are they who are held in everlasting remembrance.

NIGHT.

Night is beautiful itself, but still more beautiful in associations. It is not linked, as day is, with our cares and our toils, the business and bitterness of life. The sunshine brings with it action; we rise in the morning, and our task is before us; and night comes, and with it rest. If we leave sleep, and ask not for dreamy forgetfulness, our waking is in solitude and our employment is thought. Imagination has thrown her glories around the midnight; the orbs of heaven, the silence, the shadows, are steeped in poetry. Even in the heart of a crowded city, where the moonlight falls but upon the pavement and roof, the heart would be softened, and mind elevated, amid the loveliness of night's deepest and stillest hours.

Prattsburg, Steuben Co., N. Y., Jan. 5th, 1850.

BROTHER COOPER:—I am inclined to give you and the saints some accounts, incidents and thoughts connected with the ministry and mission appointed me by the Conference at Voree in August last. Leaving Voree Oct. 23d, with Bro. Gurley, we took passage on the propeller Alleghany, and preached on board once on lake Erie, being nearly the only smooth water we saw on the trip. At Buffalo Bro. Gurley left me and went into Canada. I have since received a letter from him at Landsdown. From Buffalo I went direct towards Steuben, stopping two days at Varysburg, Wyoming Co., and preached on Sunday, the Methodists giving me their appointment. I mention this as an uncommon instance of liberality.

On my way through to this place I found some saints whose thoughts are towards Voree and the Island. I called on Bro. Weaver, brother-in-law to Lyman Wight, who, with many others, is standing still to see the salvation of God. Since arriving in this place I have preached in the towns of Howard, Avoca, Wheeler, Cohocton and Prattsburg regularly, and I find but little difficulty in making men believe or assent to the truth, but to obey is another work. I have been frequently told I came in a wrong name—"if I want to be religious I ought to join a respectable church." Oh Lord! save me from respectability, for this requires too much hypocrisy, if Protestant ministers possess that quality; for they think nothing of telling lies about us, after making a display about truth, "and many love to have it so."

The vail and covering that is cast over all nations seems to be of several thicknesses in some localities. For instance, some of the pious sort tell me we ought to make a renunciation of Odd Fellowship a test of membership, (and here is a church that does so;) thus making unbelief in Odd Fellowship instead of the faith of the gospel a test of their religion. Oh, sublime! Why do not they become perfect under such droppings? The more candid readily admit that the Bible and consistency are on our side. So you see the foundation of judgment is laid in their case. Out of their own mouths will they be condemned.

There are some in this place worthy of the appellation given to the ancient pharisees; for they act alike, very pious, very precise in their outward appearance, with solemn exterior, great reverence for the Bible, but when I open it and read that the first principles or rudiments of the gospel are faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, they first doubt the reading, (till shown,) then the meaning till its very plainness shames them to an acknowledgment of the truth, and then fall back upon their former experience and goodness to ease their conscience and ward off the force of the word. But, to follow them up, put the question, are you better than Cornelius? of course they answer, no. Then why not do as Cornelius did?

They then take the same ground that they blame the common sinner for taking; that is, we do not know who are the true teachers sent of God, thus confessing their sandy foundation. But is this the form of doctrine taught by Christ and his Apostles? Oh, yes. Then comes the answer, "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God;" for how can they preach, except they be sent. Then comes a cloud over the face, that batrays the hypocrite. And the tongue, like a ready writer, records his shame. The secret is out. This is Mormonism. In few words, belonging to a sect not "respectable." Oh, truth! why hast thou always been in bad company, with "publicans, harlots and common people?" Why hast thou not decked thyself in costly robes and rich attire, and not went naked? and so went in good company, rather than follow the "poor, persecuted, outcasts, offscouring of all things?"—Truth, in her quiet way, answers, my company are thus treated on my account; before they made my acquaintance they were respectable.

There is in this place a certain Baptist preacher, taking himself to be smart in preaching,

Prattsburg, Steuben Co., N. Y., }
Jan. 5th, 1850. }

BROTHER COOPER:—I am inclined to give you and the saints some accounts, incidents and thoughts connected with the ministry and mission appointed me by the Conference at Voree in August last. Leaving Voree Oct. 23d, with Bro. Gurley, we took passage on the propeller Alleghany, and preached on board once on lake Erie, being nearly the only smooth water we saw on the trip. At Buffalo Bro. Gurley left me and went into Canada. I have since received a letter from him at Landsdown. From Buffalo I went direct towards Steuben, stopping two days at Varysburg, Wyoming Co., and preached on Sunday, the Methodists giving me their appointment. I mention this as an uncommon instance of liberality.

On my way through to this place I found some saints whose thoughts are towards Voree and the Island. I called on Bro. Weaver, brother-in-law to Lyman Wight, who, with many others, is standing still to see the salvation of God. Since arriving in this place I have preached in the towns of Howard, Avoca, Wheeler, Cohocton and Prattsburg regularly, and I find but little difficulty in making men believe or assent to the truth, but to obey is another work. I have been frequently told I came in a wrong name—"if I want to be religious I ought to join a respectable church." Oh Lord! save me from respectability, for this requires too much hypocrisy, if Protestant ministers possess that quality; for they think nothing of telling lies about us, after making a display about truth, "and many love to have it so."

The vail and covering that is cast over all nations seems to be of several thicknesses in some localities. For instance, some of the pious sort tell me we ought to make a renunciation of Odd Fellowship a test of membership, (and here is a church that does so;) thus making unbelief in Odd Fellowship instead of the faith of the gospel a test of their religion. Oh, sublime! Why do not they become perfect under such droppings? The more candid readily admit that the Bible and consistency are on our side. So you see the foundation of judgment is laid in their case. Out of their own mouths will they be condemned.

There are some in this place worthy of the appellation given to the ancient pharisees: for they act alike, very pious, very precise in their outward appearance, with solemn exterior, great reverence for the Bible, but when I open it and read that the first principles or rudiments of the gospel are faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, they first doubt the reading, (till shown,) then the meaning till its very plainness shames them to an acknowledgment of the truth, and then fall back upon their former experience and goodness to ease their conscience and ward off the force of the word. But, to follow them up, put the question, are you better than Cornelius? of course they answer, no. Then why not do as Cornelius did?

They then take the same ground that they blame the common sinner for taking; that is, we do not know who are the true teachers sent of God, thus confessing their sandy foundation. But is this the form of doctrine taught by Christ and his Apostles? Oh, yes. Then comes the answer, "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God;" for how can they preach, except they be sent. Then comes a cloud over the face, that batrays the hypocrite. And the tongue, like a ready writer, records his shame. The secret is out. This is Mormonism. In few words, belonging to a sect not "respectable." Oh, truth! why hast thou always been in bad company, with "publicans, harlots and common people?" Why hast thou not decked thyself in costly robes and rich attire, and not went naked? and so went in good company, rather than follow the "poor, persecuted, outcasts, offscouring of all things?"—Truth, in her quiet way, answers, my company are thus treated on my account; before they made my acquaintance they were respectable.

There is in this place a certain Baptist preacher, taking himself to be smart in preaching, who accuses us with being the false prophets and preachers referred to, and those who go after us even to hear he compared to sheep thieves. And some believing he could prove what he affirmed, I sent him the following note, which is also intended for all Baptist preachers in the United States :—

Prattsburg, Dec. 29th, 1849.

ELDER SMITH,—DEAR SIR :—I understand that at your last meeting at Lyons you charged the Latter Day Saints (commonly called Mormons) of teaching false doctrine—of being the false teachers referred to by Christ and the Apostles. Now, sir, I am a teacher of that order, and as such by this call upon you to meet me on equal grounds and discuss the question, who are false teachers, Latter Day Saints or Baptists, using the word of God as the standard, and the congregation as judges? If you have light, show it to us. If you shrink from investigation, let shame (if no higher quality) close your mouth from speaking evil of that you know not.

If you have sufficient confidence in your own faith to risk a comparison with the faith of the gospel, take the affirmative of the following question: Is the Baptist church the church of Christ? I will take the negative; or, if this does not suit you, I will affirm that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (called Mormons) is the church of the living God.—Will you negative this in fair discussion? You may appoint suitable time and place, or I will do so at your pleasure. If neither of these questions suit you, I will accede to one of your proposing, provided the ground of validity of either church is covered by it. But if you decline altogether, let shame, if nothing else, close your mouth from slandering those you dare not meet. I await your reply. Respectfully yours, J. W. BRIGGS.

In answer to the above he wished some person to inform me he had not time, but showed himself either above or below the sense of shame, but adheres to his former wickedness. There is quite a general anxiety to hear in these parts, but the enemy has sown tares. I preached on the subject of the priesthood lately to a large congregation, connecting it from Abel's acceptable sacrifice down to the last writer of the New Testament, showing what priesthoods the Bible recognized; then inquired what priesthood Protestants claimed, where they obtained it, &c. One gentleman, a well informed man, rose and said, to his mind (and he thought it must appear so to others) that all the Protestant priesthood or pretensions to authority were scattered to the four winds.—There is some good seed sown, and if it is not caught away and is duly watered I think will bring forth fruit. My love to all the saints. Yours in the faith of the Son of God,

J. W. BRIGGS.

DANCING.

Dancing was originally instituted of God as a part of religious worship. Singing, feasting, instrumental music, and dancing, were all used in praising God for giving his people blessings, delivery and triumph over their enemies.—Various heathen nations used them in a similar manner in worshiping false gods. All these modes of worship existed in their time in the Jewish church; that is, among the Israelites. But they held no feast till the slaying of the first born of Egypt, nor danced till they passed through the Red Sea, and beheld the destruction of the Egyptians.

In the Apostolic church such as were of the seed of Abraham kept the passover until that nation was rejected. The only feast which was established in the church was the last supper. They also sung. But musical instruments and the dance were never used among them, because they were never delivered from their enemies. But the heathen nations among whom the gospel was preached, all had similar practices in their worship. And it seems that one of the earliest controversies in that church grew out of one of these practices. The practice was to feast upon the sacrifice. The early converts, if they sat at the tables of any of their friends, were liable to eat with them of the meats offered in sacrifice. If they bought meat who accuses us with being the false prophets and preachers referred to, and those who go after us even to hear he compared to sheep thieves. And some believing he could prove what he affirmed, I sent him the following note, which is also intended for all Baptist preachers in the United States:—

Prattsburg, Dec. 29th, 1849.

ELDER SMITH,—DEAR SIR:—I understand that at your last meeting at Lyons you charged the Latter Day Saints (commonly called Mormons) of teaching false doctrine—of being the false teachers referred to by Christ and the Apostles. Now, sir, I am a teacher of that order, and as such by this call upon you to meet me on equal grounds and discuss the question, who are false teachers, Latter Day Saints or Baptists, using the word of God as the standard, and the congregation as judges? If you have light, show it to us. If you shrink from investigation, let shame (if no higher quality) close your mouth from speaking evil of that you know not.

If you have sufficient confidence in your own faith to risk a comparison with the faith of the gospel, take the affirmative of the following question: Is the Baptist church the church of Christ? I will take the negative; or, if this does not suit you, I will affirm that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (called Mormons) is the church of the living God.—Will you negative this in fair discussion? You may appoint suitable time and place, or I will do so at your pleasure. If neither of these questions suit you, I will accede to one of your proposing, provided the ground of validity of either church is covered by it. But if you decline altogether, let shame, if nothing else, close your mouth from slandering those you dare not meet. I await your reply. Respectfully yours, J. W. BRIGGS.

In answer to the above he wished some person to inform me he had not time, but showed himself either above or below the sense of shame, but adheres to his former wickedness. There is quite a general anxiety to hear in these parts, but the enemy has sown tares. I preached on the subject of the priesthood lately to a large congregation, connecting it from Abel's acceptable sacrifice down to the last writer of the New Testament, showing what priesthoods the Bible recognized; then inquired what priesthood Protestants claimed, where they obtained it, &c. One gentleman, a well informed man, rose and said, to his mind (and he thought it must appear so to others) that all the Protestant priesthood or pretensions to authority were scattered to the four winds.—There is some good seed sown, and if it is not caught away and is duly watered I think will bring forth fruit. My love to all the saints. Yours in the faith of the Son of God,

J. W. BRIGGS.

DANCING.

Dancing was originally instituted of God as a part of religious worship. Singing, feasting, instrumental music, and dancing, were all used in praising God for giving his people blessings, delivery and triumph over their enemies.—Various heathen nations used them in a similar manner in worshiping false gods. All these modes of worship existed in their time in the Jewish church; that is, among the Israelites. But they held no feast till the slaying of the first born of Egypt, nor danced till they passed through the Red Sea, and beheld the destruction of the Egyptians.

In the Apostolic church such as were of the seed of Abraham kept the passover until that nation was rejected. The only feast which was established in the church was the last supper. They also sung. But musical instruments and the dance were never used among them, because they were never delivered from their enemies. But the heathen nations among whom the gospel was preached, all had similar practices in their worship. And it seems that one of the earliest controversies in that church grew out of one of these practices. The practice was to feast upon the sacrifice. The early converts, if they sat at the tables of any of their friends, were liable to eat with them of the meats offered in sacrifice. If they bought meat in the shambles, it might be a part of a sacrifice offered to a false god.

Paul's opinion seems to have been that they should not go to the Temple and eat in respect to the idol; but if they found meat set before them, or offered for sale in the shambles, or meat market, they were to eat it, asking no qestions for conscience sake. That is, they were not to have any respect to whether the meat had been offered in sacrifice or not. Still Paul was very particular to enjoin, that if through any ones weakness, he was injured by thus eating, they that were strong should bear his infirmity by abstaining.

But at a later period, when the church became numerous among the Gentile nations, a difficulty was found for want of exhilarating amusements. Those who were overtasked in the work of their ministry sought contemplative retirement and solitude as their greatest boon. But to many this was not a boon, but a penance. In their restless inquietude they strayed off to heathen Temples, instead of betaking themselves to the more laborious work of establishing God's kingdom; and therefore they came short, and never had anything to dance for. Whereas, had they done all to God, and been content to bide their time, they doubtless would have obtained deliverance from all their enemies, and praised God, not only in singing and feasting, but also with musical instruments and with the dance.

Forgetting the law of God, and endeavoring to establish their own ways; having no dance appointed in their service, and fearful of joining the heathen dance, they devised a kind of intermediate place where they danced and had music, but not to any God. God was not in their feasts, and in the dance they were not joyful to the Lord. The consequence of this has been a canting opposition to all pleasures on the part of some, and a disposition on the part of others to expect more joy out of their religious duties than in them. Religion, instead of being the science of happiness, became the prolific system of fear, penance and suffering. Not a few of the pious are shocked with the very name of a dance, and think there is damnation in the music of a fiddle. I for one confess I do not like to give the Devil all the best music, and the most joyous festivity. But he that dances should dance to the Lord, and he that makes music on stringed instruments should praise God therein.

Consider that in olden time among God's people there were no amusements of a public nature, but such as were part of their worship. That it is part of God's order of dealing to centre all pleasure, all happiness in obedience to him. In proportion to our departure from this is the danger of quite forgetting him. If we dance it should be for joy. I do not remember that the saints ever danced while they were in bondage. While the Jews were in Babylon they would not even sing, because in a strange land, and subject to a heathen king.

In some respects they were worse off than we are, perhaps. But on the whole I am not sure that they were. Though a conquered people, some of them were among the principal officers of the empire. But we sing, feast and make music with stringed instruments.—Should we add dancing also? I hardly know by what act we could express our further joy when God "delivers us from all our enemies." If we familiarize ourselves to dancing merely as an amusement, not in respect to God, but to ourselves, it would be difficult for us to afterwards realize that we were praising God in the dance. We should be more likely to afterwards dance merely for our own amusement.

La Harpe, Ill., Jan. 7th, 1850.

DEAR BRO. PRINDLE:—It is with pleasure that I now commence writing, in order to convey to you a few of my thoughts relative to matters and things. Hence I would say that I am still in the land of strangers and foreigners from God and the true church, which he has bought with his own blood; the true church, which is the body of Jesus Christ, and members in particular; it being the only church on earth which fills the pattern, seeing it is built upon the prophets and apostles, Jesus in the shambles, it might be a part of a sacrifice offered to a false god.

Paul's opinion seems to have been that they should not go to the Temple and eat in respect to the idol: but if they found meat set before them, or offered for sale in the shambles, or meat market, they were to eat it, asking no qestions for conscience sake. That is, they were not to have any respect to whether the meat had been offered in sacrifice or not. Still Paul was very particular to enjoin, that if through any ones weakness, he was injured by thus eating, they that were strong should bear his infirmity by abstaining.

But at a later period, when the church became numerous among the Gentile nations, a difficulty was found for want of exhilarating amusements. Those who were overtasked in the work of their ministry sought contemplative retirement and solitude as their greatest boon. But to many this was not a boon, but a penance. In their restless inquietude they strayed off to heathen Temples, instead of betaking themselves to the more laborious work of establishing God's kingdom; and therefore they came short, and never had anything to dance for. Whereas, had they done all to God, and been content to bide their time, they doubtless would have obtained deliverance from all their enemies, and praised God, not only in singing and feasting, but also with musical instruments and with the dance.

Forgetting the law of God, and endeavoring to establish their own ways; having no dance appointed in their service, and fearful of joining the heathen dance, they devised a kind of intermediate place where they danced and had music, but not to any God. God was not in their feasts, and in the dance they were not joyful to the Lord. The consequence of this has been a canting opposition to all pleasures on the part of some, and a disposition on the part of others to expect more joy out of their religious duties than in them. Religion, instead of being the science of happiness, became the prolific system of fear, penance and suffering. Not a few of the pious are shocked with the very name of a dance, and think there is damnation in the music of a fiddle. I for one confess I do not like to give the Devil all the best music, and the most joyous festivity. But he that dances should dance to the Lord, and he that makes music on stringed instruments should praise God therein.

Consider that in olden time, among God's people there were no amusements of a public nature, but such as were part of their worship. That it is part of God's order of dealing to centre all pleasure, all happiness in obedience to him. In proportion to our departure from this is the danger of quite forgetting him. If we dance it should be for joy. I do not remember that the saints ever danced while they were in bondage. While the Jews were in Babylon they would not even sing, because in a strange land, and subject to a heathen king.

In some respects they were worse off than we are, perhaps. But on the whole I am not sure that they were. Though a conquered people, some of them were among the principal officers of the empire. But we sing, feast and make music with stringed instruments.—Should we add dancing also? I hardly know by what act we could express our further joy when God "delivers us from all our enemies." If we familiarize ourselves to dancing merely as an amusement, not in respect to God, but to ourselves, it would be difficult for us to afterwards realize that we were praising God in the dance. We should be more likely to afterwards dance merely for our own amusement

---

La Harpe, Ill., Jan. 7th, 1850.

Dear Bro. Prindle:—It is with pleasure that I now commence writing, in order to convey to you a few of my thoughts relative to matters and things. Hence I would say that I am still in the land of strangers and foreigners from God and the true church, which he has bought with his own blood; the true church, which is the body of Jesus Christ, and members in particular; it being the only church on earth which fills the pattern, seeing it is built upon the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. This indeed is the holy church to which we enjoy the glorious privilege of belonging. If we persevere in well doing we shall enjoy every grace, every privilege, every aid necessary to constitute us able to secure a place in our Savior's kingdom, when his reign is one in all the earth.—I have received the Gospel Herald, a welcome messenger indeed, for this reason, it brings TWO D... All letters ...id tidings of great joy.

... morals of the people are at a very low ebb, if they have indeed any system of conduct worthy the name of moral. Yes, vice abounds to a fearful extent, to wit: swearing, drunkenness and gambling, with perhaps every other species of crime is practiced here to an alarming degree. Yet, notwithstanding vice thus abounds, there are some who are professors of their different kinds of fashionable religion who seem to frown at the popular vices of the vicious, yet they themselves have a thirst for wealth and the honors of this world as insatiate as the grave, whereunto they are in haste. How vain, how futile their religion! In the aggregate enough to damn. In reference to the kingdom of God, enough to keep them and all who are under their influence out of the kingdom.

Yes, all their preaching and praying have a direct tendency to mislead mankind, and thus keep them out of the kingdom of the heavenly Father. Thus are they truly the blind leaders of the blind, and they shall all fall into the ditch together. There are those that will not enter into the kingdom themselves, nor suffer those that would enter to enter therein. Yes, brother, may I not add and say that this people are the children of the night, and not of the day; they will not come to the light that their deeds might be reproved? Are they not judicially blind by reason of their rejecting the fulness of the everlasting gospel, even as the Jews were blinded by way of rejecting Christ and his gospel?—And now is it not very evident that the holy God who spared the rebellious Jews, but inflicted upon them a just punishment for their crimes, will also visit this most sinful race of beings and inflict a just and full chastisement for all their sins? Yes, verily, their condemnation lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not.

My desire is great in reference to my return to Voree, the garden of peace. Yes, my desire is to return, if health permit, in the spring, if not sooner; for I am well assured that the fish can live in its native element, and no where else. HENRY REYNOLDS.

FATHER.

Father is a word with me, wonderously influential, nor can I think of it without mingled reverence and filial affection. "As a father pitieth his children," says David, and we feel the pity he describes. "Hear, ye children the instruction of a father," says Solomon—and we acknowledge the authority with reverence. "I will arise and go to my father," said the poor prodigal—and his words thrill through the heart. "My father! my father! the chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof," cried Elisha, when Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven; and the exclamation arrests our very souls. Few who have felt the kindly, correcting, and fostering influence of a father, but must feel, at the name, somewhat in the way that I have described. And yet the greatest utility of a father, lies in what we may call "the preventive service"—letting the son have his own way, not his own will.

NEVER SATISFIED.

There are some children in the world that nothing exactly suits. Their food is over-done or under-done—their clothes are too large or too small—their school is too strict or too disorderly—the weather is too hot or too cold, too wet or too dry, and so it is all the day long and all the year round. They are never suited. We have seen such children. They remind us of cows that are turned into a field where the clover is up to their eyes, and after trampling all over it, and filling their maws with the rich food, they turn their staring eyes towards the next field, as if they would like to serve that in the same way.

So the discontented looks this way and that way in search of some fancied good, while the real cause of his discontent is within. Let him break up his idle habits and go to his books or to his play with a determination to make the best of every thing, and there will be some sunshine in the thickest fog, and a streak of light in the darkest cloud.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Samuel Blair,	$1,00	to Vol.	IV	No. 39
Judah Ware,	2,00	to Vol.	IV	No. 52
Roberson Wright,	2,00	to Vol.	V	No. 38
John W. Grierson,	2,00	"	"	38
William Barker,	2,00	"	"	26
Betsey Pratt,	2,00	"	"	26
David Bennett,	2,00	"	"	38

Christ being the chief corner stone. This indeed is the holy church to which we enjoy the glorious privilege of belonging. If we persevere in well doing we shall enjoy every grace, every privilege, every aid necessary to constitute us able to secure a place in our Savior's kingdom, when his reign is one in all the earth.—I have received the Gospel Herald, a welcome messenger indeed, for this reason, it brings Two " All letters ld tidings of great joy.

The morals of the people are at a very low ebb, if they have indeed any system of conduct worthy the name of moral. Yes, vice abounds to a fearful extent, to wit: swearing, drunkenness and gambling, with perhaps every other species of crime is practiced here to an alarming degree. Yet, notwithstanding vice thus abounds, there are some who are professors of their different kinds of fashionable religion who seem to frown at the popular vices of the vicious, yet they themselves have a thirst for wealth and the honors of this world as insatiate as the grave, whereunto they are in haste. How vain, how futile their religion! In the aggregate enough to damn. In reference to the kingdom of God, enough to keep them and all who are under their influence out of the kingdom

Yes, all their preaching and praying have a direct tendency to mislead mankind, and thus keep them out of the kingdom of the heavenly Father. Thus are they truly the blind leaders of the blind, and they shall all fall into the ditch together. There are these that will not enter into the kingdom themselves, nor suffer those that would enter to enter therein. Yes, brother, may I not add and say that this people are the children of the night, and not of the day; they will not come to the light that their deeds might be reproved? Are they not judicially blind by reason of their rejecting the fulness of the everlasting gospel, even as the Jews were blinded by way of rejecting Christ and his gospel?—And now is it not very evident that the holy God who spared the rebellious Jews, but inflicted upon them a just punishment for their crimes, will also visit this most sinful race of beings and inflict a just and full chastisement for all their sins? Yes, verily, their condemnation lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not.

My desire is great in reference to my return to Voree, the garden of peace. Yes, my desire is to return, if health permit, in the spring, if not sooner; for I am well assured that the fish can live in its native element, and no where else. HENRY REYNOLDS.

FATHER.

Father is a word with me, wonderously influential, nor can I think of it without mingled reverence and filial affection. "As a father pitieth his children," says David, and we feel the pity he describes. "Hear, ye children the instruction of a father," says Solomon—and we acknowledge the authority with reverence. "I will arise and go to my father," said the poor prodigal—and his words thrill through the heart. "My father! my father! the chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof," cried Elisha, when Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven; and the exclamation arrests our very souls. Few who have felt the kindly, correcting, and fostering influence of a father, but must feel, at the name, somewhat in the way that I have described. And yet the greatest utility of a father, lies in what we may call "the preventive service"—letting the son have his own way, not his own will.

NEVER SATISFIED.

There are some children in the world that nothing exactly suits. Their food is over-done or under-done—their clothes are too large or too small—their school is too strict or too disorderly—the weather is too hot or too cold, too wet or too dry, and so it is all the day long and all the year round. They are never suited. We have seen such children. They remind us of cows that are turned into a field where the clover is up to their eyes, and after trampling all over it, and filling their maws with the rich food, they turn their staring eyes towards the next field, as if they would like to serve that in the same way.

So the discontented looks this way and that way in search of some fancied good, while the real cause of his discontent is within. Let him break up his idle habits and go to his books or to his play with a determination to make the best of every thing, and there will be some sunshine in the thickest fog, and a streak of light in the darkest cloud.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Samuel Blair,	$1,00	to Vol.	IV	No. 39
Judah Ware,	2,00	to Vol.	IV	No. 52
Roberson Wright,	2,00	to Vol.	V	No. 38
John W. Grierson,	2,00	"	"	38
William Barker,	2,00	"	"	26
Betsey Pratt,	2,00	"	"	26
David Bennett,	2,00	"	"	38

THE PLANETARY SYSTEM.

Sir J. Herschell has lately expressed his opinion, that it is impossible any longer to attempt the explanation of the movements of all the heavenly bodies by simple attraction, as understood in the Newtonian theory—these comets, with their tails perversely turned from the sun, deranging sadly our systematic views. Nor are there, writes Humboldt, any constant relations between the distances of the planets from the central body round which they revolve, and their absolute magnitudes, densities, times of rotation, eccentricities and inclinations of orbit and of axis. We find Mars, though more distant from the sun than either the earth or Venus, inferior to them in magnitude; Saturn is less than Jupiter, and yet much larger than Uranus. The zone of the telescopic planets, which are so inconsiderable in point of volume, viewed in the series of distances commencing from the sun, comes next to Jupiter, the greatest in size of all the planetary bodies. Remarkable as is the small density of all the colossal planets which are farthest from the sun, yet neither in this respect can we recognize any regular succession.—Uranus appears to be denser than Saturn, and although the inner group of planets differ but little from each other in this particular, we find both Venus and Mars less dense than the earth, which is situated between them. The time of rotation increases, on the whole, with increasing solar distance, but yet it is greater in Mars than in the earth, and in Saturn than in Jupiter.

After other remarks of the same character, he adds—"The planetary system, in its relation of absolute magnitude, relative position of the axis, density, time of rotation, and different degrees of eccentricity of the orbits, has, in our apprehension, nothing more of natural necessity than the relative distribution of land and water on the surface of the globe, the configuration of continents, or the elevation of mountain chains. No general law, in these respects, is discoverble either in the regions of space or the irregularities of the crust of the earth."

ADVICE ON SELF-CULTURE.

We cannot, nor ought we to endeavor to confine ourselves to the association of those individuals who compose our domestic circle. To become like others we must mingle with our fellow beings, and if our own association is of our choice, our assimilation will be the more rapid. The pliability of the young mind is like that of a young tree, which takes and retains whatever form it is pressed into; therefore it is of great consequence not to let it shoot up crooked, but to train it gently in the proper direction. Example often has had a great influence where the temper is not so pliable as the other parts of the character, and proves sometimes to be the most powerful stimulus. Evils are seldom presented to us in their true magnitude all at once, but we are led step by step into sin, until at last we imagine ourselves too far past recovery, and are overwhelmed with despair, for I am sorry to say that bad examples have more power to lead and rule over our unstable minds than precepts.—The choice of company is the more important, because company of some sort must be had. Solitude is both unnatural and unfavorable to youth. His health, temper, and manners are ruined by it. The selecting of company may have its difficulties, especially to those who cannot command opportunities, yet to join in any company without hesitation or thought, would be to subject ourselves to hazards of no trifling nature. Sometimes the depravity of a companion is seen at the first glance, and like the rattle of the snake it puts the unwary on their guard, but it is only sometimes so.

As it is difficult to drop an acquaintance when once fairly made, be cautious not to hook yourself too firmly, before you are sure that the connection is safe. Never lull suspicion asleep; convince yourself if you can, and if not, withdraw immediately. Much of society must necessarily be common-place. This, although it produces no good, does no harm except in regard to the time wasted. The term good company has various acceptations, but in reality that only is good company from which mental improvement must be derived. A word or two may not be needless to guide you in a proper proportioning of your time. Time is too valuable to be uselessly squandered away, and the claims of solitude for a considerable share are imperative. Divide your opportunities so as to allow each avocation or duty its proper proportion, but ever keep in view your main object, self-improvement. Never be above owning your ignorance, or too proud to receive the advice of others, for the ardor of youth often needs the checks of riper years.

EDUCATOR.

LIVE FOR SOMETHING.

Thousands of men breathe, move and live—pass off the stage of life, and are heard of no more. Why? They did not a particle of good in this world; and none were blessed by them; none could point to them as the instruments of their redemption; not a line they wrote, not a word they spoke could be recalled; and so they perished, their light went out in darkness, and they were not remembered more than the insects of yesterday. Will you thus live and die, Oh! man immortal? Live for something. Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storms of time can never destroy. Write your name by kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of the thousands you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotton. No! your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind, as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as brightly on the earth as the stars of heaven.

THE UTILITY OF SNOW.

Snow answers many valuable purposes in the economy of nature. Accumulated upon high regions it serves to feed, by its gradual melting, streams of running water, which a sudden increase of water, in the form of rain would convert into destructive torrents or standing pools, and in many countries tempers the burning heats of summer, by cooling the breezes which pass over it. In severer climates, on the contrary, it serves as a defence against the rigors of winter, by the protection which it affords to vegetation against the frost, and the shelter which it gives to animals, who bury themselves under the snow. Even in more temperate climates, vegetation suffers from an open winter; and it has been found that Alpine plants perished in the mild winter of England from want of their usual snowy covering.

GOLD.

It is the god of the world. Only whisper the word, and its worshipers fall down on their knees; breathe it in the valley, and it is heard at the mountain tops. Tell where it can be found, and millions rush to the spot faster than they would go to heaven.

SHADOWS OF BOSTON LIFE.—A man was arrested in Boston a few days ago for stealing wood. He had a wife and four children in the extreme of destitution, not a stick of wood nor a morsel of food in the house, and no shoes to the children's feet. The prosecution was abandoned, and a sum of money raised to supply their present necessities. This is one of the unseen miseries of a great city.

THE PLANETARY SYSTEM.

Sir J. Herschell has lately expressed his opinion, that it is impossible any longer to attempt the explanation of the movements of all the heavenly bodies by simple attraction, as understood in the Newtonian theory—these comets, with their tails perversely turned from the sun, deranging sadly our systematic views. Nor are there, writes Humboldt, any constant relations between the distances of the planets from the central body round which they revolve, and their absolute magnitudes, densities, times of rotation, eccentricities and inclinations of orbit and of axis. We find Mars, though more distant from the sun than either the earth or Venus, inferior to them in magnitude; Saturn is less than Jupiter, and yet much larger than Uranus. The zone of the telescopic planets, which are so inconsiderable in point of volume, viewed in the series of distances commencing from the sun, comes next to Jupiter, the greatest in size of all the planetary bodies. Remarkable as is the small density of all the colossal planets which are farthest from the sun, yet neither in this respect can we recognize any regular succession.—Uranus appears to be denser than Saturn, and although the inner group of planets differ but little from each other in this particular, we find both Venus and Mars less dense than the earth, which is situated between them. The time of rotation increases, on the whole, with increasing solar distance, but yet it is greater in Mars than in the earth, and in Saturn than in Jupiter.

After other remarks of the same character, he adds—"The planetary system, in its relation of absolute magnitude, relative position of the axis, density, time of rotation, and different degrees of eccentricity of the orbits, has, in our apprehension, nothing more of natural necessity than the relative distribution of land and water on the surface of the globe, the configuration of continents, or the elevation of mountain chains. No general law, in these respects, is discoverble either in the regions of space or the irregularities of the crust of the earth."

ADVICE ON SELF-CULTURE.

We cannot, nor ought we to endeavor to confine ourselves to the association of those individuals who compose our domestic circle. To become like others we must mingle with our fellow beings, and if our own association is of our choice, our assimilation will be the more rapid. The pliability of the young mind is like that of a young tree, which takes and retains whatever form it is pressed into; therefore it is of great consequence not to let it shoot up crooked, but to train it gently in the proper direction. Example often has had a great influence where the temper is not so pliable as the other parts of the character, and proves sometimes to be the most powerful stimulus. Evils are seldom presented to us in their true magnitude all at once, but we are led step by step into sin, until at last we imagine ourselves too far past recovery, and are overwhelmed with despair, for I am sorry to say that bad examples have more power to lead and rule over our unstable minds than precepts.—The choice of company is the more important, because company of some sort must be had. Solitude is both unnatural and unfavorable to youth. His health, temper, and manners are ruined by it. The selecting of company may have its difficulties, especially to those who cannot command opportunities, yet to join in any company without hesitation or thought, would be to subject ourselves to hazards of no trifling nature. Sometimes the depravity of a companion is seen at the first glance, and like the rattle of the snake it puts the unwary on their guard, but it is only sometimes so.

As it is difficult to drop an acquaintance when once fairly made, be cautious not to hook yourself too firmly, before you are sure that the connection is safe. Never lull suspicion asleep; convince yourself if you can, and if not, withdraw immediately. Much of society must necessarily be common-place. This, although it produces no good, does no harm except in regard to the time wasted. The term good company has various acceptations, but in reality that only is good company from which mental improvement must be derived. A word or two may not be needless to guide you in a proper proportioning of your time. Time is too valuable to be uselessly squandered away, and the claims of solitude for a considerable share are imperative. Divide your opportunities so as to allow each avocation or duty its proper proportion, but ever keep in view your main object, self-improvement. Never be above owning your ignorance, or too proud to receive the advice of others, for the ardor of youth often needs the checks of riper years. EDUCATOR.

LIVE FOR SOMETHING.

Thousands of men breathe, move and live—pass off the stage of life, and are heard of no more. Why? They did not a particle of good in this world; and none were blessed by them; none could point to them as the instruments of their redemption; not a line they wrote, not a word they spoke could be recalled; and so they perished, their light went out in darkness, and they were not remembered more than the insects of yesterday. Will you thus live and die, Oh! man immortal? Live for something. Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storms of time can never destroy. Write your name by kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of the thousands you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotton. No! your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind, as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as brightly on the earth as the stars of heaven.

THE UTILITY OF SNOW.

Snow answers many valuable purposes in the economy of nature. Accumulated upon high regions it serves to feed, by its gradual melting, streams of running water, which a sudden increase of water, in the form of rain would convert into destructive torrents or standing pools, and in many countries tempers the burning heats of summer, by cooling the breezes which pass over it. In severer climates, on the contrary, it serves as a defence against the rigors of winter, by the protection which it affords to vegetation against the frost, and the shelter which it gives to animals, who bury themselves under the snow. Even in more temperate climates, vegetation suffers from an open winter; and it has been found that Alpine plants perished in the mild winter of England from want of their usual snowy covering.

GOLD.

It is the god of the world. Only whisper the word, and its worshipers fall down on their knees; breathe it in the valley, and it is heard at the mountain tops. Tell where it can be found, and millions rush to the spot faster than they would go to heaven.

SHADOWS OF BOSTON LIFE.—A man was arrested in Boston a few days ago for stealing wood. He had a wife and four children in the extreme of destitution, not a stick of wood nor a morsel of food in the house, and no shoes to the children's feet. The prosecution was abandoned, and a sum of money raised to supply their present necessities. This is one of the unseen miseries of a great city.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 47.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. FEB. 7, 1850. [WHOLE No. 163.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ Mr. Himes, of the "Advent Herald," has of late been giving his readers an opprobrious article on the "Rise and progress of Mormonism," credited to the "Herald of the Future Age." Notwithstanding the Adventists, as a sect, have known by experience what it is to be belied and slandered, yet their champion (if all the rest have) has not yet learned to observe the golden rule: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Instead of taking up Mormonism—a system which has as yet baffled the wisdom of the nineteenth century—and candidly investigating its principles and doctrines, he resorts to the mean and despicable course of giving publicity to the lies and slanders of those who do not know anything about it.

This article was probably written some five years ago, and is now put into circulation as a kind of a rebut to the efficient labors of Elders Adams and Graham in the city of Boston. But such an attempt is just like blowing against the wind. In order to successfully oppose any system it is necessary to understand its claims, evidences, principles and doctrines. Opposers who do not, simply exhibit their own folly, and none but dupes and lickspittles credit them. We have nothing to fear from such calumny as has lately been circulated by the "Advent Herald." Its conductor, however, has manifested that if he does not make lies, he at least loves to spread them.

The writer of the article has shown himself an ignoramus, by attemptiug to expose a system of which he is most grossly ignorant. As the gospel preached by Christ and his Apostles is the same as preached by the "Mormons," he is equally ignorant of that, as is evident from the following extract:—

"I have heard a very fair discourse from one of their Nauvoo Elders, on Eph. iv 7-12, in which no Mormonism could be detected until near the end. 'You must be,' said he, 'baptized for the remission of your sins; but your immersion will do you no good unless it is administered by an apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor or teacher. No church is a true church unless it has these inspired officers; and no church but ours (the Mormon, without mentioning the name) is in possession of them.'"

Astonishing!! Who administered baptism in the primitive church? Was it apostles, prophets, pastors and teachers, or Reverends, Right Reverends, D. D.'s, &c.? As they held to the "Mormon" ideas, that in order to make baptism valid it must be administered by the proper officers; (Acts xix.;) that "there is but one Lord, one faith and one baptism;" and that "we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness," they evidently are not the religious progenitors of the Rev. D.'s of the present day. "When Christ ascended upon high" "he gave some apostles, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." What did he give them for? Ans. "For the perfecting of the saints, FOR THE WORK OF THE MINISTRY, for the edifying of the body of Christ." For how long?

Ans. "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children tossed to and

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 17.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, FEB. 7, 1850. [WHOLE No. 163.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ Mr. Himes, of the "Advent Herald," has of late been giving his readers an opprobrious article on the "Rise and progress of Mormonism," credited to the "Herald of the Future Age." Notwithstanding the Adventists, as a sect, have known by experience what it is to be belied and slandered, yet their champion if all the rest have) has not yet learned to observe the golden rule: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Instead of taking up Mormonism—a system which has as yet baffled the wisdom of the nineteenth century—and candidly investigating its principles and doctrines, he resorts to the mean and despicable course of giving publicity to the lies and slanders of those who do not know anything about it.

This article was probably written some five years ago, and is now put into circulation as a kind of a rebut to the efficient labors of Elders Adams and Graham in the city of Boston. But such an attempt is just like blowing against the wind. In order to successfully oppose any system it is necessary to understand its claims, evidences, principles and doctrines. Opposers who do not, simply exhibit their own folly, and none but dupes and lickspittles credit them. We have nothing to fear from such calumny as has lately been circulated by the "Advent Herald." Its conductor, however, has manifested that if he does not make lies, he at least loves to spread them.

The writer of the article has shown himself an ignoramus, by attempting to expose a system of which he is most grossly ignorant. As the gospel preached by Christ and his Apostles is the same as preached by the "Mormons," he is equally ignorant of that, as is evident from the following extract:—

"I have heard a very fair discourse from one of their Nauvoo Elders, on Eph. iv 7-12, in which no Mormonism could be detected until near the end. 'You must be,' said he, 'baptized for the remission of your sins; but your immersion will do you no good unless it is administered by an apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor or teacher. No church is a true church unless it has these inspired officers; and no church but ours (the Mormon, without mentioning the name) is in possession of them.'"

Astonishing!! Who administered baptism in the primitive church? Was it apostles, prophets, pastors and teachers, or Reverends, Right Reverends, D. D.'s, &c.? As they held to the "Mormon" ideas, that in order to make baptism valid it must be administered by the proper officers; (Acts xix.;) that "there is but one Lord, one faith and one baptism;" and that "we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness," they evidently are not the religious progenitors of the Rev. D.'s of the present day. "When Christ ascended upon high" "he gave some apostles, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." What did he give them for? Ans. "For the perfecting of the saints, FOR THE WORK OF THE MINISTRY, for the edifying of the body of Christ." For how long?

Ans. "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Eph. iv. 11, 12, 13, 14.

Are they no longer needed? Have all come to the unity of the faith? Are all perfected? Or has God changed the order of his church, given different officers for the work of the ministry? If so, where is the history of it?

It is not necessary to follow this miserable paltroon any farther. His article, like a common prostitute, carries the marks of infamy on its face.

Pittsburgh, C. W., Jan. 10th, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—In my last I mentioned that Bro. Savage and myself had baptized four at the close of a two days' meeting. Since then we have been constantly preaching, up to the 8th inst. Last Monday and Tuesday we baptized eight more, making twelve in all. Who, with those baptized by Bro. Wright, will number nineteen or twenty. Among these are some young men of good talent, both natural and acquired. One of them we ordained an Elder. They were raised in Lower Canada, speak French fluently, and will be the men to preach there, when the way opens. This we have done on ground opened by Bro. Wright. We have done preaching enough in this place to convert a nation. I was purposing to leave some two or three weeks ago, but it seemed as though a thousand little circumstances prevented. But, thank God, the cloud is broke, victory is declared in favor of truth, and many precious immortal spirits who were shrouded in darkness when Bro. Wright first came to this place, are now by the power of God, through the word preached, disinthralled from the same, and rejoicing in the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Bro. Savage is one of the great men of the latter days. When he came to me I was alone, Bro. Wright having been called by revelation to go into New York State. And when he put side and shoulder to the wheel with me God gave us the victory. I think there will be about as many more added before the work stops. Day before yesterday we left Leeds for this place. About midway we met Bro. Wright, who received us in due form. And let me tell the world that the wild woods of Canada could not prevent us from rejoicing together. Rain coming on, we concluded to stop over night with a friend, whose cabin was near. Here we spent our time agreeably. Bro. Savage preached to a congregation who gathered through the storm to hear the word.

Here it was decided that Bro. Savage should go to Parnel's settlement, back of Kingston, Bro. Wright to Leeds and complete the organization of the branch, and poor me to this hard place, Gananoque and the front towards Kingston. I am to have a young man by the name of Linnel to travel with me. Bro. Savage was anxious to go that settlement before we left Leeds, but I prevailed on him to accompany me, promising to accompany him in a few weeks. But they spoiled my fun. We are calculating to journey upward as circumstances may favor us. Bro. Savage is anxious to get into the Indian woods among the Indians, and on his old Methodist stamping ground. God speed him.

The calls for preaching are numerous, but times are hard, which makes it severer on those who are preaching for hire and divining for money. May the Lord pity them. We learned from Bro. P. Wright that his journey to the States was just in time. He found one of the Seventies, a young man, lecturing on psychology; that is, mesmerism in a doubled and twisted refined manner. He straightened him and he promised to reform and quit it altogether. He found many worthy brethren scattered like sheep without a shepherd. He ordained Bro. Silsburg a High Priest, and appointed him to preside over the Black River country.—There he preached several times, and strengthened the brethren. From there he went to Wells' Island, where a branch of eleven members was organized. He gave a course of lectures, baptized three, and left many believing, making the branch fourteen in all, with Bro.

fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Eph. iv. 11, 12. 13. 14.

Are they no longer needed? Have all come to the unity of the faith? Are all perfected? Or has God changed the order of his church, given different officers for the work of the ministry? If so, where is the history of it?

It is not necessary to follow this miserable paltroon any farther. His article, like a common prostitute, carries the marks of infamy on its face.

Pittsburgh, C. W., Jan. 10th, 1850.

Bro. Cooper:—In my last I mentioned that Bro. Savage and myself had baptized four at the close of a two days' meeting. Since then we have been constantly preaching, up to the 8th inst. Last Monday and Tuesday we baptized eight more, making twelve in all. Who, with those baptized by Bro. Wright, will number nineteen or twenty. Among these are some young men of good talent, both natural and acquired. One of them we ordained an Elder. They were raised in Lower Canada, speak French fluently, and will be the men to preach there, when the way opens. This we have done on ground opened by Bro. Wright. We have done preaching enough in this place to convert a nation. I was purposing to leave some two or three weeks ago, but it seemed as though a thousand little circumstances prevented. But, thank God, the cloud is broke, victory is declared in favor of truth, and many precious immortal spirits who were shrouded in darkness when Bro. Wright first came to this place, are now by the power of God, through the word preached, disinthralled from the same, and rejoicing in the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Bro. Savage is one of the great men of the latter days. When he came to me I was alone, Bro. Wright having been called by revelation to go into New York State. And when he put side and shoulder to the wheel with me God gave us the victory. I think there will be about as many more added before the work stops. Day before yesterday we left Leeds for this place. About midway we met Bro. Wright, who received us in due form. And let me tell the world that the wild woods of Canada could not prevent us from rejoicing together. Rain coming on, we concluded to stop over night with a friend, whose cabin was near. Here we spent our time agreeably. Bro. Savage preached to a congregation who gathered through the storm to hear the word.

Here it was decided that Bro. Savage should go to Parnel's settlement, back of Kingston Bro. Wright to Leeds and complete the organization of the branch, and poor me to this hard place, Gananoque and the front towards Kingston. I am to have a young man by the name of Linnel to travel with me. Bro. Savage was anxious to go that settlement before we left Leeds, but I prevailed on him to accompany me, promising to accompany him in a few weeks. But they spoiled my fun. We are calculating to journey upward as circumstances may favor us. Bro. Savage is anxious to get into the Indian woods among the Indians, and on his old Methodist stamping ground. God speed him.

The calls for preaching are numerous, but times are hard, which makes it severer on those who are preaching for hire and divining for money. May the Lord pity them. We learned from Bro. P. Wright that his journey to the States was just in time. He found one of the Seventies, a young man, lecturing on psychology: that is, mesmerism in a doubled and twisted refined manner. He straightened him, and he promised to reform and quit it altogether. He found many worthy brethren scattered like sheep without a shepherd. He ordained Bro. Silsburg a High Priest, and appointed him to preside over the Black River country.—There he preached several times, and strengthened the brethren. From there he went to Wells' Island, where a branch of eleven members was organized. He gave a course of lectures, baptized three, and left many believing, making the branch fourteen in all, with Bro.

Charles Kinnal, a worthy brother, at their head as President of the branch. Bro. Wright thinks about one hundred souls will leave there for Beaver in the spring.

The brethren in this place, though young, are old enough to dream of Beaver. Are you going to Beaver in the spring? is the inquiry of many of them. The calls for preaching on the other side of the river are many, very many. Bro. Wright would have stayed, had not his mission been to this place. We have had a hard time in this place. But, thank God, if we do no more we are richly paid for our trouble. One of the prophets, speaking in reference to these times, says, a man shall be more precious than fine gold. Farewell.

ZENOS H. GURLEY.

BEAVER ISLANDS.

This group of Islands (ten in number) is situated in the Northern part of Lake Michigan. Big Beaver, about equal to two townships. Little Beaver, Garden and High Islands, each about equal to one township, the remainder of the group are of a smaller size. Big Beaver lies in the centre of the group. At the northeast corner and about four miles from the usual track of the Chicago Steamboats is the best harbor on the lakes—consisting of a broad, deep bay putting up into the Island some two miles. The channel between the reefs at the entrance of the bay is three-fourths of a mile in width. Inside of that is a strait ninety rods wide, between headlands connecting the outer with the inner harbor. The inner harbor is about three-fourths of a mile by one mile; is perfectly land locked, so that in the severest storms its waters are scarcely disturbed, and has usually from six to eighteen fathoms water; and thus making good anchorage and a harbor of the largest class, easy of access and perfectly safe in all winds at all seasons.

The west coast of the Island consists of a range of steep broken hills, covered with a very heavy growih of valuable timber. The entire east coast is in like manner bordered by an almost impassable barrier of pine, cedar and ash as well as some hemlock. The Island is well watered by means of six Lakes inclosed within, and by numerous springs and brooks. These lakes vafy in size from forty to six hundred acres, have generally deep pure water and clean sand beaches. In their waters are found abundance of trout and other fish. These lakes are from fifteen to thirty-five feet above the surface of Lake Michigan; the outlets making excellent water power, the centre of the Island perhaps thirty-five thousand acres is covered with a heavy growth of Sugar Maple, and birch with the fir tree interspersed, as well as much valuable timber of other kinds, the soil is a deep dark porus loom, quick to produce vegetation of all kinds.

Fishing is the most extensive business heretofore engaged in.—The fisheries extend north fifty miles, south forty, and east and west the width of Lake Michigan. It is on these Islands that the Latter Day Saints, or the peace party of the Mormon people in pursuance of a professed revelation from God, given to Mr. James J. Strang, the successor of Joseph Smith, to the prophetic office, have commenced a settlement and invite all industrious Law abiding people of their faith to come and possess an inheritance forever, without money and without price, asserting that God has given them the right of soil, on which to establish the Kingdom of God, or the fifth universal Empire that is to subdue all nations and stand forever.

This people claim no fellowship with the Salt Lake Mormons or any of their high handed wickedness, but expect to conquer all by love and rendering good for evil.—Boston Guide.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 23d, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:— It is reported here that J. E. Page and several of the apostates have become Brewsterites. Generally it is not credited, but I see no reason to doubt it. Like sucking colts, lost in a highway, they, having lost sight of their dam, follow after whatever whinners, mare or horse, but soon turn and chase the other way with equal violence. Their Brewsterism will not last long enough to get well organized, and Page will not stir out of Voree to preach it unless he gets his money secured before he starts. Page has written to Piladelphia for money, but thongh they like to hear him speak evil of dignities, his $30 will never get up to 30 cents.

A PROPHECY.

Hertz Ben Pinchas, a learned writer in the Jewish Chronicle, predicts that in less than a century a Jew will be President of the French Republic, that in half a century America will be ruled by a son of Abraham, and that in less than a quarter of a century the Lord Mayor of London will worship at the synagogue.

(Concluded from page 279.)

with the people of God, having respect to the recompense. Were it not that we look for a full recompense for every sacrifice we here make, and every pain we now endure, and more by far in the reward promised at the end of this race we are now running, we undoubtedly should abandon it altogether.

It is the prize then which we are laboring for. We acknowledge it. We hold out no other inducement, when we call for reinforcements. When we call for volunteers we do not mock them with other mens' words and promises not applicable to our case. The promises which God has made to us as a people in this our day and generation, are all we claim. The work which he has appointed for us to do is our business, which we may not neglect, and hope to inherit the promise The dominion will soon be given to the saints, and they shall inherit the earth with Christ himself. Is not the promise a sufficient inducement to those who love his appearing to more than compensate for all the momentary sacrifice we can make? After thus counting the cost, who will accept the invitation? Come, and labor with us, and be a sharer of the sufferings necessary to prepare the way of the Lord, and you, with us, shall also be partakers of the joy.

J. S. COMSTOCK.

Charles Kinnal, a worthy brother, at their head as President of the branch. Bro. Wright thinks about one hundred souls will leave there for Beaver in the spring.

The brethren in this place, though young, are old enough to dream of Beaver. Are you going to Beaver in the spring? is the inquiry of many of them. The calls for preaching on the other side of the river are many, very many. Bro. Wright would have stayed, had not his mission been to this place. We have had a hard time in this place. But, thank God, if we do no more we are richly paid for our trouble. One of the prophets, speaking in reference to these times, says, a man shall be more precious than fine gold. Farewell.

ZENOS H. GURLEY.

BEAVER ISLANDS.

This group of Islands (ten in number) is situated in the Northern part of Lake Michigan. Big Beaver, about equal to two townships. Little Beaver, Garden and High Islands, each about equal to one township, the remainder of the group are of a smaller size. Big Beaver lies in the centre of the group. At the northeast corner and about four miles from the usual track of the Chicago Steamboats is the best harbor on the lakes—consisting of a broad, deep bay putting up into the Island some two miles. The channel between the reefs at the entrance of the bay is three-fourths of a mile in width. Inside of that is a strait ninety rods wide, between headlands connecting the outer with the inner harbor. The inner harbor is about three-fourths of a mile by one mile; is perfectly land locked, so that in the severest storms its waters are scarcely disturbed, and has usually from six to eighteen fathoms water; and thus making good anchorage and a harbor of the largest class, easy of access and perfectly safe in all winds at all seasons.

The west coast of the Island consists of a range of steep broken hills, covered with a very heavy growth of valuable timber. The entire east coast is in like manner bordered by an almost impassable barrier of pine, cedar and ash as well as some hemlock. The Island is well watered by means of six Lakes inclosed within, and by numerous springs and brooks. These lakes vary in size from forty to six hundred acres, have generally deep pure water and clean sand beaches. In their waters are found abundance of trout and other fish. These lakes are from fifteen to thirty-five feet above the surface of Lake Michigan; the outlets making excellent water power, the centre of the Island perhaps thirty-five thousand acres is covered with a heavy growth of Sugar Maple, and birch with the fir tree interspersed, as well as much valuable timber of other kinds, the soil is a deep dark porus loom, quick to produce vegetation of all kinds.

Fishing is the most extensive business heretofore engaged in.—The fisheries extend north fifty miles, south forty, and east and west the width of Lake Michigan. It is on these Islands that the Latter Day Saints, or the peace party of the Mormon people in pursuance of a professed revelation from God, given to Mr. James J. Strang, the successor of Joseph Smith, to the prophetic office, have commenced a settlement and invite all industrious Law abiding people of their faith to come and possess an inheritance forever, without money and without price, asserting that God has given them the right of soil, on which to establish the Kingdom of God, or the fifth universal Empire that is to subdue all nations and stand forever.

This people claim no fellowship with the Salt Lake Mormons or any of their high handed wickedness, but expect to conquer all by love and rendering good for evil.—Boston Guide.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 23d, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:— It is reported here that J. E. Page and several of the apostates have become Brewsterites. Generally it is not credited, but I see no reason to doubt it. Like sucking colts, lost in a highway, they, having lost sight of their dam, follow after whatever whinners, mare or horse, but soon turn and chase the other way with equal violence. Their Brewsterism will not last long enough to get well organized, and Page will not stir out of Voree to preach it unless he gets his money secured before he starts. Page has written to Piladelphia for money, but thongh they like to hear him speak evil of dignities, his $30 will never get up to 30 cents.

A PROPHECY.

Hertz Ben Pinchas, a learned writer in the Jewish Chronicle, predicts that in less than a century a Jew will be President of the French Republic, that in half a century America will be ruled by a son of Abraham, and that in less than a quarter of a century the Lord Mayor of London will worship at the synagogue.

(Concluded from page 279.)

with the people of God, having respect to the recompense. Were it not that we look for a full recompense for every sacrifice we here make, and every pain we now endure, and more by far in the reward promised at the end of this race we are now running, we undoubtedly should abandon it altogether.

It is the prize then which we are laboring for. We acknowledge it. We hold out no other inducement, when we call for reinforcements. When we call for volunteers we do not mock them with other mens' words and promises not applicable to our case. The promises which God has made to us as a people in this our day and generation, are all we claim. The work which he has appointed for us to do is our business, which we may not neglect, and hope to inherit the promise The dominion will soon be given to the saints, and they shall inherit the earth with Christ himself. Is not the promise a sufficient inducement to those who love his appearing to more than compensate for all the momentary sacrifice we can make? After thus counting the cost, who will accept the invitation? Come, and labor with us, and be a sharer of the sufferings necessary to prepare the way of the Lord, and you, with us, shall also be partakers of the joy.

J. S. COMSTOCK.

A HINT ON THE SUBJECT OF GATHERING.

Has not God called upon his saints to gather? If he has, every reasonable person will admit that he must have appointed a place for that purpose, and also revealed to them where that place should be, else they could not obey the command. Now it follows, of course, that since all must admit the time was to come about according to Christ's own words, when he would gather his saints in the last days That the time and place must be clearly revealed either in time past, present or to come, there is no dodging from so plain a conclusion. If in the Old or New Testament it be revealed, then why not the learned divines of the sectarian world find it out? Do they hardly dream on the subject?

They imagine, to be sure, that the tares are first to be bound in bundles for the burning; for even a child can read this much without a teacher. But who among all the sects understands the truth in relation to this matter? They may sing all is well, and so could ancient Babylon the very evening while reveling in sensual pleasures, neither fearing nor knowing the impending danger until suddenly a revelation was given in their midst; and what was it? Did it reveal a way of escape? No—no such revelation to the wicked. They probably did not believe in revelations in their day; and when it was given, although it frightened them, notwithstanding all their pride and courage, yet the king trembled at the sight of a man's hand on the wall. And after the revelation was given in writing, who among the Babylonians could read it? None of their wise men, soothsayers or magicians. And yet all were forced to acknowledge it a revelation from God, or above man at least, and above any in their order to understand. For none of the wicked shall understand, as it is written—but the wise.

And who are they? Why they are those who did and do now believe that there is a God in heaven who revealeth secrets; and also believe that the wise men, the soothsayers, &c., of this age, though assuming much to themselves by way of expounding written revelations of long standing, yet cannot bear the investigation of a new one, their priesthood not being sufficient to understand it. But to the point. 1st. The time when to gather the saints, is the inquiry. Who can tell? seeing destruction is to come suddenly upon the wicked, even as a thief in the night, and none of them shall escape? But it is said, upon mount Zion and Jerusalem there shall be deliverance, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call. But I would ask our Bible commentators, when shall the time be, if there is to be no more revelations from God?

This is the point for them to solve. For if they miss the mark here, all is gone with them, as much as it would have been with Lot if he had not believed in angel visits in his day, and revelations too. In behalf of the people I feel to demand it of them. Is not the salvation of my friends at risk? Will not that philanthropy which I owe to mankind justify me in making this demand imperative? so much so that they either give a plain answer to this question or acknowledge themselves not capable of giving an honest, sincere inquirer for salvation the needful information? For one of two things is certain, and I call upon those mens' reason for an answer to the question, viz.: Either show me the time of the gathering of the saints, and the place where, or else admit of other revelations beside what you find in your Bible, the Old and New Testament. Either admission before the public generally may perhaps lessen that high responsibility which you have taken upon yourselves to be the shepherds of mankind. I ask it in modesty, in behalf of the people. Some may suppose that this is too pointed a question.

But let us see. Can that be too pointed a question which calls for a reasonable settlement upon a matter now agitating community to that degree that hundreds upon hundreds of families who were recently reposing in supposed security, with all the comforts of life around them, feel now called and warned to

A HINT ON THE SUBJECT OF GATHERING.

Has not God called upon his saints to gather? If he has, every reasonable person will admit that he must have appointed a place for that purpose, and also revealed to them where that place should be, else they could not obey the command. Now it follows, of course, that since all must admit the time was to come about according to Christ's own words, when he would gather his saints in the last days That the time and place must be clearly revealed either in time past, present or to come, there is no dodging from so plain a conclusion. If in the Old or New Testament it be revealed, then why not the learned divines of the sectarian world find it out? Do they hardly dream on the subject?

They imagine, to be sure, that the tares are first to be bound in bundles for the burning; for even a child can read this much without a teacher. But who among all the sects understands the truth in relation to this matter? They may sing all is well, and so could ancient Babylon the very evening while reveling in sensual pleasures, neither fearing nor knowing the impending danger until suddenly a revelation was given in their midst; and what was it? Did it reveal a way of escape? No—no such revelation to the wicked. They probably did not believe in revelations in their day; and when it was given, although it frightened them, notwithstanding all their pride and courage, yet the king trembled at the sight of a man's hand on the wall. And after the revelation was given in writing, who among the Babylonians could read it? None of their wise men, soothsayers or magicians. And yet all were forced to acknowledge it a revelation from God, or above man at least, and above any in their order to understand. For none of the wicked shall understand, as it is written—but the wise.

And who are they? Why they are those who did and do now believe that there is a God in heaven who revealeth secrets; and also believe that the wise men, the soothsayers, &c., of this age, though assuming much to themselves by way of expounding written revelations of long standing, yet cannot bear the investigation of a new one, their priesthood not being sufficient to understand it. But to the point. 1st. The time when to gather the saints, is the inquiry. Who can tell? seeing destruction is to come suddenly upon the wicked, even as a thief in the night, and none of them shall escape? But it is said, upon mount Zion and Jerusalem there shall be deliverance, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call. But I would ask our Bible commentators, when shall the time be, if there is to be no more revelations from God?

This is the point for them to solve. For if they miss the mark here, all is gone with them, as much as it would have been with Lot if he had not believed in angel visits in his day, and revelations too. In behalf of the people I feel to demand it of them. Is not the salvation of my friends at risk? Will not that philanthropy which I owe to mankind justify me in making this demand imperative? so much so that they either give a plain answer to this question or acknowledge themselves not capable of giving an honest, sincere inquirer for salvation the needful information? For one of two things is certain, and I call upon those mens' reason for an answer to the question, viz.: Either show me the time of the gathering of the saints, and the place where, or else admit of other revelations beside what you find in your Bible, the Old and New Testament. Either admission before the public generally may perhaps lessen that high responsibility which you have taken upon yourselves to be the shepherds of mankind. I ask it in modesty, in behalf of the people. Some may suppose that this is too pointed a question.

But let us see. Can that be too pointed a question which calls for a reasonable settlement upon a matter now agitating community to that degree that hundreds upon hundreds of families who were recently reposing in supposed security, with all the comforts of life around them, feel now called and warned to flee to the appointed place of safety, declaring that desolations are determined upon the wicked, and soon, very soon, desolations will follow? For the warning is gone forth, and many have heeded it; and it still sounds before the public; and much suffering is still being endured in consequence of this gathering of the people.

And has nothing followed worthy of notice in all this? Has not the hand of God been seen within the walls of the wicked? Are the rulers, the judges and the priests all in so deep a sleep as not to discover upon their sectarian walls already written in large capitals, mene, mene? And in reference to the work of binding the tares, it has been remarked by modern clergymen that Millerism could not be true in reference to his time of burning given, because the tares were not bound in bundles yet. Perhaps quite all of them are not. But one thing is certain without the spirit of prophecy, even that mankind generally through the enlightened world present a picture so much resembling the figure that I should not dare to say, without better authority, that the work is not nearly accomplished already.

But three places of gathering only are mentioned in the Bible where deliverance is promised to the saints in the last days, that I have yet seen or heard of. And as I am inquiring in behalf of the people as one already warned, tell us ye Methodists, tell us ye Baptists, ye Presbyterians, Universalists and all or any one of the number who can, from the first even from Roman Catholics down to the last end of that vine, Protestantism, tell us when shall we find deliverance there? Do you not tell us Jerusalem is yet a heap of ruins? Who shall build it up and make it a place of safety—a place of deliverance for God's people?

Mount Zion also in the last days with her towers and bulwarks, can you tell us much about it that we can rely upon as God's truth? Are you preparing those places of refuge against the burning day? Or have you got some place that God has not yet mentioned, where you hope to flee with your flocks? For you cannot be ignorant, if you believe your Bible, that the inhabitants of the earth are to be burned and few men left, as recorded in Isaiah xxiv., and elsewhere in both Old and New Testaments. Do you not allow and even know that we are living in the last days. Certainly it would be quite unpopular to deny it, as well as unwise.

Well, then, what saith the word? It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established on the top of the mountains; and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it. Isa. ii. This, no doubt, to most of the people is yet supposed to be future, and remains soon to be fulfilled. Yes, very soon; for we are in the last days, and it shall come to pass then in these days. Can you tell to us, the people, how this thing is to be accomplished, and how commenced, and when?—This is your business as watchmen and as shepherds, to guide the flock in doing God's work. Or else, like honest men, confess you are not teachers of salvation, and have no right to ask pay for such services, either of God or the people. However strange this may appear, it is, notwithstanding, reasonable to every candid mind. Yet the pay for such services sinks into nothing before the greater consideration of the loss of soul and body, or even temporal salvation of the body or bodies of men, which fire may consume, or the sword, or plague, or famine destroy, in consequence of being deceived. For it is evident that all nations will soon be interested in this matter: "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

When? Why, in the last days. In what manner shall all nations flow unto it—unto this mountain of the Lord's house? The 3d verse tells us how, viz.: Many shall go and say, come, and let us go up. This is the plain way, just as any reasonable man would now understand it, if the house was already established and the invitation given out. But because it is not done yet, who shall say it never will be? And inasmuch as it is a prediction of a work of God to be accomplished in the last days, it will as-flee to the appointed place of safety, declaring that desolations are determined upon the wicked, and soon, very soon, desolations will follow? For the warning is gone forth, and many have heeded it; and it still sounds before the public; and much suffering is still being endured in consequence of this gathering of the people.

And has nothing followed worthy of notice in all this? Has not the hand of God been seen within the walls of the wicked? Are the rulers, the judges and the priests all in so deep a sleep as not to discover upon their sectarian walls already written in large capitals, mene, mene? And in reference to the work of binding the tares, it has been remarked by modern clergymen that Millerism could not be true in reference to his time of burning given, because the tares were not bound in bundles yet. Perhaps quite all of them are not. But one thing is certain without the spirit of prophecy, even that mankind generally through the enlightened world present a picture so much resembling the figure that I should not dare to say, without better authority, that the work is not nearly accomplished already.

But three places of gathering only are mentioned in the Bible where deliverance is promised to the saints in the last days, that I have yet seen or heard of. And as I am inquiring in behalf of the people as one already warned, tell us ye Methodists, tell us ye Baptists, ye Presbyterians, Universalists and all or any one of the number who can, from the first even from Roman Catholics down to the last end of that vine, Protestantism, tell us when shall we find deliverance there? Do you not tell us Jerusalem is yet a heap of ruins? Who shall build it up and make it a place of safety—a place of deliverance for God's people?

Mount Zion also in the last days with her towers and bulwarks, can you tell us much about it that we can rely upon as God's truth? Are you preparing those places of refuge against the burning day? Or have you got some place that God has not yet mentioned, where you hope to flee with your flocks? For you cannot be ignorant, if you believe your Bible, that the inhabitants of the earth are to be burned and few men left, as recorded in Isaiah xxiv., and elsewhere in both Old and New Testaments. Do you not allow and even know that we are living in the last days. Certainly it would be quite unpopular to deny it, as well as unwise.

Well, then, what saith the word? It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established on the top of the mountains; and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it. Isa. ii. This, no doubt, to most of the people is yet supposed to be future, and remains soon to be fulfilled. Yes, very soon; for we are in the last days, and it shall come to pass then in these days. Can you tell to us, the people, how this thing is to be accomplished, and how commenced, and when?—This is your business as watchmen and as shepherds, to guide the flock in doing God's work. Or else, like honest men, confess you are not teachers of salvation, and have no right to ask pay for such services, either of God or the people. However strange this may appear, it is, notwithstanding, reasonable to every candid mind. Yet the pay for such services sinks into nothing before the greater consideration of the loss of soul and body, or even temporal salvation of the body or bodies of men, which fire may consume, or the sword, or plague, or famine destroy, in consequence of being deceived. For it is evident that all nations will soon be interested in this matter: "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

When? Why, in the last days. In what manner shall all nations flow unto it—unto this mountain of the Lord's house? The 3d verse tells us how, viz.: Many shall go and say, come, and let us go up. This is the plain way, just as any reasonable man would now understand it, if the house was already established and the invitation given out. But because it is not done yet, who shall say it never will be? And inasmuch as it is a prediction of a work of God to be accomplished in the last days, it will assuredly be done. And reason would say, and faith would say, what revelation confirms true that if darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people of this generation, so that none understand the work of God, or how to do it, that God will commission as he has in former dispensations some man to order and establish it.

Then we may expect from that day forth the work will proceed and prevail, until it shall call up the attention of all nations to behold and admire, and even leave their distant homes to visit it; and that too for the purpose of being taught his law; that law which had not before been given. It shall proceed out of Zion, not from Sinai, nor Jerusalem. Not Moses' law perhaps, for that dispensation is past, we all admit. And when the gospel was ushered in, the angels of God united their voices, while the holy choir sang of glory and peace. But will any worthy man allow that all the substance of that anthem has yet been realized upon the earth? The preparation the Jews had so long been making for their king and deliverer they even denied unto him. That temple he called his Father's house, they made a den of thieves.

It appears that their law of consecration was changed to theft, through their idolatry. The house they polluted, the king they rejected; and from that period desolations were predicted, with the scattering of the whole Jewish nation among all the nations of the earth. So that to date back to the first advent of Christ for a fulfillment of this prophecy would be false, as is plain to be seen in the 4th verse. "Nation shall not rise up against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Now will any pretend that such a time has been witnessed on the earth since the days of Christ? Certainly nations have not ceased to war, to say nothing of peace among the brutes, which is as plainly foretold in the same verse.

It appears that the prophet saw down beyond what any of us have yet realized upon the earth, and if he could rejoice in the anticipation of that glorious event, to him so far distant, how much more ought it to interest us who are living in the very dawn of that eventful day—that glorious day to all the saints—that day of the saints' triumph over the wicked. It appears as though the glory of that event so filled the prophet's mind, that he gave the wicked but a passing notice. The Lord shall rebuke thee.

There is one more idea in connection with the gathering of the saints which it would be well to consider. In this age of spiritualizing the scriptures, many have lost most all interest in reading them, so many interpretations are made upon the same thing. Hence I would say, that to gather God's people means just the reverse of scattering them. They were literally scattered from their own land among the nations of the earth, and they must also be gathered back to the same promised possessions. Nothing can be plainer or more conclusive, and yet many, very many in our day, deny this doctrine, and at the same time claim to be teachers sent to preach the Bible, calling it preaching the gospel Whereas it is neither gospel nor Bible, but fiction; and belongs to infidelity, or modern "newfangled" religion.

The point being very clear that God's ancient covenant people, the Jews, must and will assuredly soon be gathered home, it remains only to show what is to become of the Gentiles, or what we have to do in the premises. For none will deny but that the fullness of the Gentiles is nearly come in. This being the case, I know of no further promise for the Gentiles than the general invitation which is given in this last call, the gathering call of both Jews and Gentiles into one fold. And all the remnant among us have to do, is, to prepare the way for the Jews return, that we may in Abraham be blessed.

The Jews used to build temples of worship, where the name of God might be recorded.—And the Gentiles having trodden them under foot so long, must now, as a little remuneration, help them to return. And the way is preparing. And the priests, the Gentile priests, are Wondering what these Mormon temples are surredly be done. And reason would say, and faith would say, what revelation confirms true that if darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people of this generation, so that none understand the work of God, or how to do it, that God will commission as he has in former dispensations some man to order and establish it.

Then we may expect from that day forth the work will proceed and prevail, until it shall call up the attention of all nations to behold and admire, and even leave their distant homes to visit it; and that too for the purpose of being taught his law; that law which had not before been given. It shall proceed out of Zion, not from Sinai, nor Jerusalem. Not Moses' law perhaps, for that dispensation is past, we all admit. And when the gospel was ushered in, the angels of God united their voices, while the holy choir sang of glory and peace. But will any worthy man allow that all the substance of that anthem has yet been realized upon the earth? The preparation the Jews had so long been making for their king and deliverer they even denied unto him. That temple he called his Father's house, they made a den of thieves.

It appears that their law of consecration was changed to theft, through their idolatry. The house they polluted, the king they rejected: and from that period desolations were predicted, with the scattering of the whole Jewish nation among all the nations of the earth. So that to date back to the first advent of Christ for a fulfillment of this prophecy would be false, as is plain to be seen in the 4th verse. "Nation shall not rise up against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Now will any pretend that such a time has been witnessed on the earth since the days of Christ? Certainly nations have not ceased to war, to say nothing of peace among the brutes, which is as plainly foretold in the same verse.

It appears that the prophet saw down beyond what any of us have yet realized upon the earth, and if he could rejoice in the anticipation of that glorious event, to him so far distant, how much more ought it to interest us who are living in the very dawn of that eventful day—that glorious day to all the saints—that day of the saints' triumph over the wicked. It appears as though the glory of that event so filled the prophet's mind, that he gave the wicked but a passing notice. The Lord shall rebuke thee.

There is one more idea in connection with the gathering of the saints which it would be well to consider. In this age of spiritualizing the scriptures, many have lost most all interest in reading them, so many interpretations are made upon the same thing. Hence I would say, that to gather God's people means just the reverse of scattering them. They were literally scattered from their own land among the nations of the earth, and they must also be gathered back to the same promised possessions. Nothing can be plainer or more conclusive, and yet many, very many in our day, deny this doctrine, and at the same time claim to be teachers sent to preach the Bible, calling it preaching the gospel. Whereas it is neither gospel nor Bible, but fiction; and belongs to infidelity, or modern "newfangled" religion.

The point being very clear that God's ancient covenant people, the Jews, must and will assuredly soon be gathered home, it remains only to show what is to become of the Gentiles, or what we have to do in the premises. For none will deny but that the fullness of the Gentiles is nearly come in. This being the case, I know of no further promise for the Gentiles than the general invitation which is given in this last call, the gathering call of both Jews and Gentiles into one fold. And all the remnant among us have to do, is, to prepare the way for the Jews return, that we may in Abraham be blessed.

The Jews used to build temples of worship where the name of God might be recorded.—And the Gentiles having trodden them under foot so long, must now, as a little remuneration, help them to return. And the way is preparing. And the priests, the Gentile priests, are Wondering what these Mormon temples are reared for. Have they forgot, or have they not yet learned, that they must help to gather Israel home? Did they never believe God's word, which says that even upon the shoulders of the Gentiles shall they be carried or brought back home? Let not any vainly imagine of mere spiritual shoulders; for then we might have to make spiritual dromedaries, and also camels and mules, and litters, and chariots, and swift beasts, which certainly would require a prophet and more too to accomplish so great a work. So that, by this system of modern spiritualizing, we are involved in worse difficulties than before we commenced.

Again, what do the Mormons mean to do? Why, I answer, that which God now commands to be done. And now I say, who among all the pious, devotional men and women among the Gentiles will help? We call for help, not for hinderance. And whoso will help let him do it quickly, lest God do his own work by his almighty power and outstretched arm.—Now he offers reward, even eternal life. If you obey not, it will be death. The destroyer of the Gentiles will soon be on his way.—He will be like a lion among the flocks of sheep. Help, then, in this work, if you would help yourselves, and help mankind; for it is God's work, and his peoples', and herein is salvation. Come up to the help of God against the mighty. It is now worthy, and will soon command the attention of kings and queens of the earth as nursing fathers and mothers. For the glory and wealth of the nations shall soon be brought to beautify the Zion of God, and render the place of his feet glorious; and the king himself will soon be seen in his beauty, and all his saints with him.

In addition to what I have written, I would just add one other idea, headed with the old M. adage, viz:—

"We want no cowards in our bands,
That will their colors fly;
We call for valiant hearted men,
Who are not afraid to die."

Lest some should be induced to engage in this great and glorious enterprise without properly counting the cost—lest some who are now well off as to worldly circumstances, and disposed to do what good they can in helping forward the work of this dispensation—I say lest any such, by undertaking too much for their faith to endure, by this gathering call, or too speedy an adherence to it, I would just notify of the many or at least some of the sore trials which many of us at present endure—have already endured, and, for ought I know, must still endure. But how long we may have still to endure is left to God. For, said Christ, which of you undertaketh to build a tower sitteth not down first and counteth the cost? Lest after undertaking he back out and expose himself to ridicule and shame, and suffer the loss of time and labor, &c.

All this should be well considered. And furthermore if the prize at the end of the race is not deemed sufficient to compensate for all the sacrifice, no wise man should offer it. But it appears some who gather with the saints are soon disappointed and leave. What is the matter? Oh! some complain of one thing and some of another. Some doubt the whole work. Some distrust the management of the leaders, with some of their teachings, &c. Some cannot endure the poverty. Some do not like the Order. And some are even wicked, or believed to be so at least by these, and they are still in the church. And who can say we are not all in trouble; yes, a great deal worse trials than many of us ever dreamed of before we came here. Just as it was with Israel under Moses. We would gladly, if we dare do so, return again to Babylon, where was more plenty, and a greater variety of temporal comforts.

Our present joy also is not increased, but decreased. And were it not for the knowledge of God's will which we have learned, we would all go quickly back and do our own wills, as we were, and as those we left may still be doing. We would gladly join their company, and seek with them the pleasures of the world again, and suffer the bonds of Babylon's religions. But we choose rather to suffer affliction reared for. Have they forgot, or have they not yet learned, that they must help to gather Israel home? Did they never believe God's word, which says that even upon the shoulders of the Gentiles shall they be carried or brought back home? Let not any vainly imagine of mere spiritual shoulders; for then we might have to make spiritual dromedaries, and also camels and mules, and litters, and chariots, and swift beasts, which certainly would require a prophet and more too to accomplish so great a work. So that, by this system of modern spiritualizing, we are involved in worse difficulties than before we commenced.

(Continued on page 275.)

Again, what do the Mormons mean to do? Why, I answer, that which God now commands to be done. And now I say, who among all the pious, devotional men and women among the Gentiles will help? We call for help, not for hinderance. And whoso will help let him do it quickly, lest God do his own work by his almighty power and outstretched arm.—Now he offers reward, even eternal life. If you obey not, it will be death. The destroyer of the Gentiles will soon be on his way.—He will be like a lion among the flocks of sheep. Help, then, in this work, if you would help yourselves, and help mankind; for it is God's work, and his peoples', and herein is salvation. Come up to the help of God against the mighty. It is now worthy, and will soon command the attention of kings and queens of the earth as nursing fathers and mothers. For the glory and wealth of the nations shall soon be brought to beautify the Zion of God, and render the place of his feet glorious; and the king himself will soon be seen in his beauty, and all his saints with him.

In addition to what I have written, I would just add one other idea, headed with the old M. adage, viz:—

"We want no cowards in our bands,
That will their colors fly:
We call for valiant hearted men,
Who are not afraid to die."

Lest some should be induced to engage in this great and glorious enterprise without properly counting the cost—lest some who are now well off as to worldly circumstances, and disposed to do what good they can in helping forward the work of this dispensation—I say lest any such, by undertaking too much for their faith to endure, by this gathering call, or too speedy an adherence to it, I would just notify of the many or at least some of the sore trials which many of us at present endure—have already endured, and, for ought I know must still endure. But how long we may have still to endure is left to God. For, said Christ, which of you undertaketh to build a tower sitteth not down first and counteth the cost? Lest after undertaking he back out and expose himself to ridicule and shame, and suffer the loss of time and labor, &c.

All this should be well considered. And furthermore if the prize at the end of the race is not deemed sufficient to compensate for all the sacrifice, no wise man should offer it. But it appears some who gather with the saints are soon disappointed and leave. What is the matter? Oh! some complain of one thing and some of another. Some doubt the whole work. Some distrust the management of the leaders with some of their teachings, &c. Some cannot endure the poverty. Some do not like the Order. And some are even wicked, or believed to be so at least by these, and they are still in the church. And who can say we are not all in trouble; yes, a great deal worse trials than many of us ever dreamed of before we came here. Just as it was with Israel under Moses. We would gladly, if we dare do so, return again to Babylon, where was more plenty, and a greater variety of temporal comforts.

Our present joy also is not increased, but decreased. And were it not for the knowledge of God's will which we have learned, we would all go quickly back and do our own wills, as we were, and as those we left may still be doing. We would gladly join their company, and seek with them the pleasures of the world again, and suffer the bonds of Babylon's religions. But we choose rather to suffer affliction

(Continued on page 275.

BIG BEAVER, OR CITY OF JAMES.

BY H. P. BROWN.

Let me go to Big Beaver, in Michigan Lake;
Let me have my dear friends and my relatives take,
My wife and my children and brethren also,
To keep God's commandments, O there let me go.

There's the place for the saints to gather unto,
To build God a city—there's enough for to do,
To prepare for his coming and endowments also,
In the city of James, O there let me go.

Let me go to the Island, the place of the free,
There is peace and a plenty, as well as Voree:
To the saints who are faithful God his cov'nant will show,
Give endowments of power, O there let me go.

He has promised to bless all the faithful and true;
He has promised the same in Kirtland, Nauvoo;
But the saints were not faithful, O be thou not so
In the city of James, O there let me go.

God has said, keep the Order of Enoch so wise;
I'll the honest and faithful with my spirit baptize:
Show you visions to come, past and present also;
Give the kingdom of God, O there let me go.

Let me go to the home of the brave and the free,
Where the saints love their brothers in James and Voree;
There the kingdom and order of it he will show
To the faithful in God, O there let me go.

There the ten tribes will come from the land in the north,
And the knowledge of God will fill the whole earth,
And the mountains of ice and the mountains of snow
Will flow down at their presence, O there let me go.

There the fruit trees will blossom at all times a year,
And the saints will rejoice and dry up their tears:
When Christ doth appear all the saints will him know,
And shout, here's our king, O there let me go.

Now we'll love one another, and ever be one;
Rear the kingdom of God as bright as the sun;
Spread the truths of the Savior, that all men may know
That God has a kingdom, O there let me go.

SENSIBEITY.

It has always been observed that the most elevated and exalted characters have been those who, together with strength of intellect and power of capacity, have possessed an ardor of spirit and glowing sentiment which has led them on to great and glorious deeds; and it must be perfectly obvious to every one who contemplates human nature with impartiality, that man is a being who necessarily depends in a very great measure upon external objects, and that the human species must be capable of enjoyment and exertion in proportion to the power of the impression these are enabled to make on the feelings. What is, in fact, the very essence of enjoyment but an agreeable perception of impressions made upon the senses, bodily or mental? Thus it were easy to refute the sophistry of those who, having absorbed their feelings in abstruse speculations or benumbed them by solitude and inactivity, have been desirous of depreciating enjoyments which they are no longer capable of relishing and denouncing pleasures which their pursuits have rendered unattainable: but false philosophy is not the only enemy to pure pleasures; they meet with still more powerful opposition from that tyrant to which all the world is disposed to pay such implicit obedience—fashion. From an affectation of superior wisdom, or perhaps through envy of pleasures which their souls, debased by criminal indulgence, could no longer enjoy, some have pronounced it a proof of ill-breeding to melt in sympathy at a tale of distress, to shed a tear for the misery of others, or give way at all to any of the natural expressions of tenderness. The crowd, to save themselves the fatigue of thinking and to avoid the discredit of being singular, take up their opinions with the customs of the day, and easily pass from the extreme of false and absurd delicacy to that of affected insensibility; and now it seems to be the fashion to assume an air of indifference upon the most interesting occasions; every appearance of tenderness and sympathy is ridiculed; those natural expressions of sensibility which gives the first charm to beauty and the highest polish to youth are disguised, and nature is abolished to introduce a kind of stoicism of which the father of the sect might be ashamed.

ONE THING AT A TIME.—Step among your neighbors, reader, and see whether those among them who have got along smoothly, and accumulated property and gained a good name, have not been men who bent themselves to one single branch of business—who brought all their powers to bear upon one point, and built on one foundation. It must be so.

Go out in the spring, when the sun is yet far distant, and you can scarcely feel the influence of his beams, scattered as they are over the wide face of creation; but collect those beams to a focus, and they kindle up a flame in an instant. So the man who squanders his talents and his strength on many things, will fail to make an impression with either: but let him draw them to a point—let him strike at a single object, and it will yield before him

☞ There is one thing that may be seen wherever you go. It is vanity. This noble quality displays itself everywhere. Even the chimney-sweep sings out with an air, and glories in his power of lungs. It would operate to dampen the ambition of the vain, if they would bear in mind that every person loves himself best, and will not really rejoice that he is overtopped or eclipsed by another. It is not worth your while, therefore, to lie about others and underrate them for the sake of appearing better or greater than they are. Put your potato on the point of your fork and peel it in quietness.—Nobody cares whether you chew the esculent or swallow it whole. Ex. Paper.

ENEMIES.

Have you enemies? Go straight and mind them not. If they block up your path, walk round them, and do your duty regardless of their spite. A man who has got no enemies is seldom good for anything—he is made of that kind of material which is so easily worked, that every one has his hand in it. A sterling character, one who thinks for himself, and speaks what he thinks, is always sure to have enemies. They are necessary to him as fresh air; they keep him alive and active. A celebrated character, who was surrounded by enemies used to remark: "They are sparks which if you do not blow, will go out of themselves." Let this be your feeling, while endeavoring to live down the scandal of those who are bitter against you. If you stop to dispute, you do but as they desire, and open the way for more abuse. Let the poor fellows talk—there will be a re-action, if you perform your duty, and hundreds who were once alienated from you, will flock to you and acknowledge their error.

☞ It is merit, and not title, which gives importance. It is usefulness, and not grandeur, which makes the world happy.

BIG BEAVER, OR CITY OF JAMES.

BY H. P. BROWN.

Let me go to Big Beaver, in Michigan Lake;
Let me have my dear friends and my relatives take.
My wife and my children and brethren also,
To keep God's commandments, O there let me go.

There's the place for the saints to gather unto,
To build God a city—there's enough for to do,
To prepare for his coming and endowments also,
In the city of James, O there let me go.

Let me go to the Island, the place of the free,
There is peace and a plenty, as well as Voree:
To the saints who are faithful God his cov'nant will show,
Give endowments of power, O there let me go.

He has promised to bless all the faithful and true;
He has promised the same in Kirtland, Nauvoo;
But the saints were not faithful, O be thou not so
In the city of James, O there let me go.

God has said, keep the Order of Enoch so wise;
I'll the honest and faithful with my spirit baptize:
Show you visions to come, past and present also;
Give the kingdom of God, O there let me go.

Let me go to the home of the brave and the free,
Where the saints love their brothers in James and Voree;
There the kingdom and order of it he will show
To the faithful in God, O there let me go.

There the ten tribes will come from the land in the north,
And the knowledge of God will fill the whole earth,
And the mountains of ice and the mountains of snow
Will flow down at their presence, O there let me go.

There the fruit trees will blossom at all times a year,
And the saints will rejoice and dry up their tears:
When Christ doth appear all the saints will him know,
And shout, here's our king, O there let me go.

Now we'll love one another, and ever be one;
Rear the kingdom of God as bright as the sun;
Spread the truths of the Savior, that all men may know
That God has a kingdom, O there let me go.

SENSIBLITY.

It has always been observed that the most elevated and exalted characters have been those who, together with strength of intellect and power of capacity, have possessed an ardor of spirit and glowing sentiment which has led them on to great and glorious deeds; and it must be perfectly obvious to every one who contemplates human nature with impartiality, that man is a being who necessarily depends in a very great measure upon external objects, and that the human species must be capable of enjoyment and exertion in proportion to the power of the impression these are enabled to make on the feelings. What is, in fact, the very essence of enjoyment but an agreeable perception of impressions made upon the senses, bodily or mental? Thus it were easy to refute the sophistry of those who, having absorbed their feelings in abstruse speculations or benumbed them by solitude and inactivity, have been desirous of depreciating enjoyments which they are no longer capable of relishing and denouncing pleasures which their pursuits have rendered unattainable: but false philosophy is not the only enemy to pure pleasures; they meet with still more powerful opposition from that tyrant to which all the world is disposed to pay such implicit obedience—fashion. From an affectation of superior wisdom, or perhaps through envy of pleasures which their souls, debased by criminal indulgence, could no longer enjoy, some have pronounced it a proof of ill-breeding to melt in sympathy at a tale of distress, to shed a tear for the misery of others, or give way at all to any of the natural expressions of tenderness. The crowd, to save themselves the fatigue of thinking and to avoid the discredit of being singular, take up their opinions with the customs of the day, and easily pass from the extreme of false and absurd delicacy to that of affected insensibility; and now it seems to be the fashion to assume an air of indifference upon the most interesting occasions; every appearance of tenderness and sympathy is ridiculed; these natural expressions of sensibility which gives the first charm to beauty and the highest polish to youth are disguised, and nature is abolished to introduce a kind of stoicism of which the father of the sect might be ashamed.

ONE THING AT A TIME.—Step among your neighbors, reader, and see whether those among them who have got along smoothly, and accumulated property and gained a good name, have not been men who bent themselves to one single branch of business—who brought all their powers to bear upon one point, and built on one foundation. It must be so.

Go out in the spring, when the sun is yet far distant, and you can scarcely feel the influence of his beams, scattered as they are over the wide face of creation; but collect those beams to a focus, and they kindle up a flame in an instant. So the man who squanders his talents and his strength on many things, will fail to make an impression with either: but let him draw them to a point—let him strike at a single object, and it will yield before him

☞ There is one thing that may be seen wherever you go. It is vanity. This noble quality displays itself everywhere. Even the chimney-sweep sings out with an air, and glories in his power of lungs. It would operate to dampen the ambition of the vain, if they would bear in mind that every person loves himself best, and will not really rejoice that he is overtopped or eclipsed by another. It is not worth your while, therefore, to lie about others and underrate them for the sake of appearing better or greater than they are. Put your potato on the point of your fork and peel it in quietness.—Nobody cares whether you chew the esculent or swallow it whole. Ex. Paper.

ENEMIES.

Have you enemies? Go straight and mind them not. If they block up your path, walk round them, and do your duty regardless of their spite. A man who has got no enemies is seldom good for anything—he is made of that kind of material which is so easily worked, that every one has his hand in it. A sterling character, one who thinks for himself, and speaks what he thinks, is always sure to have enemies. They are necessary to him as fresh air; they keep him alive and active. A celebrated character, who was surrounded by enemies used to remark: "They are sparks which if you do not blow, will go out of themselves." Let this be your feeling, while endeavoring to live down the scandal of those who are bitter against you. If you stop to dispute, you do but as they desire, and open the way for more abuse. Let the poor fellows talk—there will be a re-action, if you perform your duty, and hundreds who were once alienated from you, will flock to you and acknowledge their error.

☞ It is merit, and not title, which gives importance. It is usefulness, and not grandeur, which makes the world happy.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 48.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, FEB. 14, 1850. [WHOLE No. 164.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Porter, Wis., Jan. 3d, 1850.

"I am for peace: but when I speak, they are for war." Ps. cxx. 7.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Thinking you would like to hear from me respecting my mission in the latter part of last summer to Canada West, I have thought proper to inform you through the proper organ of the "pillar and ground of the truth." I left Lewiston, York State, on the 18th day of August for Toronto, where I took the stage for Newcastle District, where I arrived on the morning of the 19th at Bro. R. Norton's at three o'clock, having traveled all night in company with a young Elder whom I took with me. We were "without purse or scrip," and among strangers. We, however, went that afternoon, it being Sunday, to a Methodist meeting, and their preacher did not come, and they finding out that we were preachers, invited us to preach. I accepted the invitation, and preached from 1st Cor. ii. 5: "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

I showed them from these words that the people of this generation would not have their wisdom by the power of God, and all of their religious faith stood in the wisdom of men, or D. D.'s, Commentators, &c. And although I was for "peace, yet they were for war." Accordingly they declared war against me, hoisting the banner of Protestantism, and unfurling its folds, let them float in the breeze of ephemeral falsehood, slander and lies, blown by their clergy until a volley of God's eternal truth was fired at their flag staff, (Discipline,) discharged by the power of the spirit, which "swept away the refuge of lies," flag staff (or Disipline,) killing the standard bearer, and making the banner lick the dust. Then confusion reigned in their midst.

Although there was an attempt made to rally the scattered officers, (Priests,) and commence the attack with fixed bayonets, and drive me from the fortification of truth, or from the country, yet every attempt was a failure. The "soldiers of the cross" finding their officers all fled beyond the bounds of time and space, tried to organize themselves for another mode of warfare, viz.: By firing rotten or base kinds of eggs at me while I was preaching. But finding that the common people heard me gladly, and that I was gaining a good many friends of that part of community, that have not got so much Pharisaical piety, they dare not make an assault. So having cleared the field, men and women of honesty and integrity, began to come out and be baptized for the remission of their sins, and I soon organized a branch consisting of sixteen, with Nelson Bowers presiding Elder, and Joseph Lear and Normon Allen counselors, Bro. Allen Clerk, Bro. Newton Teacher. Bro. Bowers is a good hearted fellow, and means to go to the Island in the spring or fall, where his Bro. Nicholas Bowers resides, accompanied by his brother James, whom we baptized.

N. B. The branch is called the "Newcastle Branch." I must give you the account of a public discussion which I had with a Millerite Jew, by the name of James MacIntosh. It was the common talk that if I whipped him in a discussion they need not look for another in that part of Canada. He came to my meeting, not far from Bomanville, and while I was

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 43.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, FEB. 14, 1850. [WHOLE No. 164.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Porter, Wis., Jan. 3d, 1850.

"I am for peace: but when I speak, they are for war." Ps. cxx. 7.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Thinking you would like to hear from me respecting my mission in the latter part of last summer to Canada West, I have thought proper to inform you through the proper organ of the "pillar and ground of the truth." I left Lewiston, York State, on the 18th day of August for Toronto, where I took the stage for Newcastle District, where I arrived on the morning of the 19th at Bro. R. Norton's at three o'clock, having traveled all night in company with a young Elder whom I took with me. We were "without purse or scrip," and among strangers. We, however, went that afternoon, it being Sunday, to a Methodist meeting, and their preacher did not come, and they finding out that we were preachers, invited us to preach. I accepted the invitation, and preached from 1st Cor. ii. 5: "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

I showed them from these words that the people of this generation would not have their wisdom by the power of God, and all of their religious faith stood in the wisdom of men, or D. D.'s, Commentators, &c. And although I was for "peace, yet they were for war." Accordingly they declared war against me, hoisting the banner of Protestantism, and unfurling its folds, let them float in the breeze of ephemeral falsehood, slander and lies, blown by their clergy until a volley of God's eternal truth was fired at their flag staff, (Discipline,) discharged by the power of the spirit, which "swept away the refuge of lies," flag staff (or Disipline,) killing the standard bearer, and making the banner lick the dust. Then confusion reigned in their midst.

Although there was an attempt made to rally the scattered officers, (Priests,) and commence the attack with fixed bayonets, and drive me from the fortification of truth, or from the country, yet every attempt was a failure. The "soldiers of the cross" finding their officers all fled beyond the bounds of time and space, tried to organize themselves for another mode of warfare, viz.: By firing rotten or base kinds of eggs at me while I was preaching. But finding that the common people heard me gladly, and that I was gaining a good many friends of that part of community, that have not got so much Pharisaical piety, they dare not make an assault. So having cleared the field, men and women of honesty and integrity, began to come out and be baptized for the remission of their sins, and I soon organized a branch consisting of sixteen, with Nelson Bowers presiding Elder, and Joseph Lear and Normon Allen counselors, Bro. Allen Clerk, Bro. Newton Teacher. Bro. Bowers is a good hearted fellow, and means to go to the Island in the spring or fall, where his Bro. Nicholas Bowers resides, accompanied by his brother James, whom we baptized.

N. B. The branch is called the "Newcastle Branch." I must give you the account of a public discussion which I had with a Millerite Jew, by the name of James MacIntosh. It was the common talk that if I whipped him in a discussion they need not look for another in that part of Canada. He came to my meeting, not far from Bomanville, and while I was preaching I took occasion to say I differed some from the Millerite friends in respect to the time of the coming of the Savior, and said the Jews would return home to Palestine and build up Jerusalem posterior to his coming. He arose and challenged me to defend that position, showing that while I was for "peace he was for war." I accepted the challenge, to come off on the following Monday evening, six miles from there, in the village of Orono.—Monday evening came, and found us both there with more people than could possibly get into the house. We chose each a moderator, and they chose a third to keep order, and decide the question. He chose one of his converts, who was studying to be a priest. I chose a good old anti-sectarian, and they two chose a man that hated us equally, I think alike. We were to speak only three hours, that being as long as I could get him to agree to. Three times round, and only 20 minutes each. He opened the meeting by singing and prayer. I closed by the same. The resolution discussed was as follows:—

Resolved, That the Jews, the covenant seed of Abraham, will return to the land of Palestine before the coming of Jesus Christ in glory. Affirmative, H. P. Brown. Negative, J. MacIntosh. I spoke, of course, first, and took the position first, that from the morn of creation until Christ came, or the meridian of time, it was justly called former days; and from the time Christ came, or meridian of time, until he comes in glory, the last days, or latter days. Also showing that the third, or as some writers have it, the fourth temple was built before the meridian of time, and stood until A. D. 70, when it was destroyed by the Romans.

Secondly, that in the last days God would make a covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah, in the which he will take away their sins; and showed that it was not the covenant made 1800 years ago, for Israel is in a state of sin and unbelief. And, thirdly, showed that some, a part, not all, but some of the natural branches were broken off because of unbelief; and that the Gentiles were graffed in because of their faith, and by it they stood until they ceased to bring forth fruit, or continue in his goodness, and then they would be broken off, and they, the part or some, if they continue not in unbelief, will be graffed in again, and for this purpose God would call for his fishers and hunters, and would plead with his people like as he pleaded with our fathers, and cause them to pass under the rod, and bring them into the bond of the covenant, &c., &c., too numerous to mention.

The decision was called for, and the judges rendered it in my favor, although his constituent plead hard to give him the victory. But truth is mighty, and will prevail. This man is author of a work called the "Bible Standard," and was sent to Scotland to preach up the end of the world, and has vanquished all his opponents before. He never run against Mormonism before, and it was like handling edge tools in the dark. I must tell an incident that occurred in the discussion. When Mr. MacIntosh was speaking, he said, Mr. Brown had told us that God would send for his fishers, &c. I suppose he wants us to understand that they are the Mormons. I wonder who the hunters are! Said I, the Millerites. No, they are not, said he, while peals of laughter outside and in almost caused the old house to shake. I am your brother,

H. P. BROWN.

O, CONSISTENCY! THOU ART A JEWEL

When I was among the Gentiles I often heard them extol religion as the principal thing worth possessing—calling it the one thing needful, as though but one thing were needful; and that one thing afforded an enjoyment present with its possesor which the possession of 10,000 worlds like this could not equal.—This was a wonder! A wonderful enjoyment! And such a practice being quite universal among the most zealous, it should be expected that many, very many, would be induced to try the experiment. For men love happiness. It is our being's end and aim.

And who would be so foolish as to live in pain, when he can have pleasure at so cheap

preaching I took occasion to say I differed some from the Millerite friends in respect to the time of the coming of the Savior, and said the Jews would return home to Palestine and build up Jerusalem posterior to his coming. He arose and challenged me to defend that position, showing that while I was for "peace he was for war." I accepted the challenge, to come off on the following Monday evening, six miles from there, in the village of Orono.—Monday evening came, and found us both there with more people than could possibly get into the house. We chose each a moderator, and they chose a third to keep order, and decide the question. He chose one of his converts, who was studying to be a priest. I chose a good old anti-sectarian, and they two chose a man that hated us equally, I think alike. We were to speak only three hours, that being as long as I could get him to agree to. Three times round, and only 20 minutes each. He opened the meeting by singing and prayer. I closed by the same. The resolution discussed was as follows:—

Resolved, That the Jews, the covenant seed of Abraham, will return to the land of Palestine before the coming of Jesus Christ in glory. Affirmative, H. P. Brown. Negative, J. MacIntosh. I spoke, of course, first, and took the position first, that from the morn of creation until Christ came, or the meridian of time, it was justly called former days; and from the time Christ came, or meridian of time, until he comes in glory, the last days, or latter days. Also showing that the third, or as some writers have it, the fourth temple was built before the meridian of time, and stood until A. D. 70, when it was destroyed by the Romans.

Secondly, that in the last days God would make a covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah, in the which he will take away their sins; and showed that it was not the covenant made 1800 years ago, for Israel is in a state of sin and unbelief. And, thirdly, showed that some, a part, not all, but some of the natural branches were broken off because of unbelief; and that the Gentiles were graffed in because of their faith, and by it they stood until they ceased to bring forth fruit, or continue in his goodness, and then they would be broken off, and they, the part or some, if they continue not in unbelief, will be graffed in again, and for this purpose God would call for his fishers and hunters, and would plead with his people like as he pleaded with our fathers, and cause them to pass under the rod, and bring them into the bond of the covenant, &c., &c., too numerous to mention.

The decision was called for, and the judges rendered it in my favor, although his constituent plead hard to give him the victory. But truth is mighty, and will prevail. This man is author of a work called the "Bible Standard," and was sent to Scotland to preach up the end of the world, and has vanquished all his opponents before. He never run against Mormonism before, and it was like handling edge tools in the dark. I must tell an incident that occurred in the discussion. When Mr. MacIntosh was speaking, he said, Mr. Brown had told us that God would send for his fishers, &c. I suppose he wants us to understand that they are the Mormons. I wonder who the hunters are? Said I, the Millerites. No, they are not, said he, while peals of laughter outside and in almost caused the old house to shake. I am your brother,

H. P. BROWN.

O, CONSISTENCY! THOU ART A JEWEL

When I was among the Gentiles I often heard them extol religion as the principal thing worth possessing—calling it the one thing needful, as though but one thing were needful; and that one thing afforded an enjoyment present with its possesor which the possession of 10,000 worlds like this could not equal.—This was a wonder! A wonderful enjoyment! And such a practice being quite universal among the most zealous, it should be expected that many, very many, would be induced to try the experiment. For men love happiness. It is our being's end and aim.

And who would be so foolish as to live in pain, when he can have pleasure at so cheap rate? Only get religion! And who would discredit the testimony of all our best men and women? Why not prove it by getting religion? and then we shall know of the truth. We shall then be enabled to test the modern testimony, that ten thousand worlds like this cannot equal it. Well, to be anywhere near consistent with the credit we give to this testimony, or the honor we pay to them who bear it, we are very unwise not to follow their counsel and be happy also--extremely happy—ten thousand times happier than any king or monarch ever was or can be without this religion. Then you with us can cry and shout, glory! with misery all around.

Yes, only get religion! This don't-care spirit that shuts out or banishes from the mind and heart everything but self-enjoyment, and then you will be happy---try it and see--if the half was ever told. But be sure to keep with your own party, or with them that cry peace, peace, or your quiet will be disturbed, and you may be waked up to misery and pain. For wretchedness and wo are wide-spread around, and relieve it you cannot. Therefore turn a deaf ear and be happy still. For happiness is our being's end and aim; and he that is not happy has no true religion. By this you may know the christians. If any come to your assembly and bring not this doctrine, give him no quarters--treat him ungentlemanly, sing him down, or shout him down, or hustle him out.

If he is a stranger, treat him inhumanly, lest you be a partaker of his evil deeds. Be sure to give him nothing to eat, for judgment is given to the saints to execute, and Christ set us an example when he made a scourge; and we must not suffer our prayer meetings to be molested. It destroys our happiness. We must all speak the same thing, even peace and self-enjoyment. This is the religion of the day, and this is right, they say. For it reads in the good Book, great peace have they that love thy law. O, yes! I know it does. And the rest part of the verse says, that nothing shall by any means offend them. But it does not say great peace have they who love self-enjoyment, but those who love God's law have undisturbed peace, a lively active tranquility of mind in doing good, in seeking to relieve the wants of the poor and needy, to bind up the broken hearted, &c.

But he that turns away his ear from hearing law, even his prayer is an abomination. He also that shuts his ear to the cry of the needy, shall cry himself and not be heard. Who in this age will get this kind of religion? Who will enlist to walk in this good old way, which prophets, apostles and Jesus Christ has trod, laying aside present enjoyment? Who will choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God rather than enjoy the pleasure of sin or self-enjoyment for a season, and have respect to the recompense of reward at the end of the race?

MATRIMONIAL JARS.

If people would but consider how possible it is to inflict pain and perpetrate wrong without any positive intention of doing either, but merely from circumstances arising from inadvertence, want of sympathy, or an incapability of mutual comprehension, how much acrimony might be spared! Half the quarrels that embitter wedded life, half the separations that spring from them, are produced by the parties misunderstanding each other's peculiarities and not studying and making allowances for them. Hence, unintentional omissions of attention are viewed as intended slights, and such are resented. These indications of injury to the unconscious offender, who in turn widens the breach of affection by some display of petulence or interference, which frequently irritates the first wound inflicted, until it becomes incurable. In this manner often arises the final separation of persons who might, had they accurately examined each other's heart and disposition, have lived happily.—Ex. Paper.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 29th, 1850.

Bro. Flagg,—Dear Sir:—I think the saints and public of Baltimore have had Bro. James long enough for the present, and as we have commenced a good work in this city, I feel assured that Bro. James could effect considerable if he could come on to Philadelphia. Considerable interest is awakened on the subject of the gospel. Our meetings are larger than they have been since I commenced preaching here. Now, Bro. Flagg, if you can bring Bro. James on with you, so that he can preach next Sunday, I would like it much.—Do try and fetch him along. Depend upon it, he could accomplish a good deal at the present. Two will be baptized this week, and I have a prospect of baptizing one or two in Southwark. My congregation was not small, Bro. Leeche's was very large, and Bro. Jackson, I believe, had a house full of Germans. All things go well.—I see naught but triumph for the people of God. Truly yours,

THOMAS BRAIDWOOD.

Causes of Illness.—I tell you honestly what I think is the complicated maladies of the human race; it is the gormandizing, and stuffing, and stimulating their organs (the digestive) to an excess, thereby producing nervous disorders and irritations. The state of their minds is another grand cause; the fidgetting and discontenting yourselves about what cannot be helped; passions of all kinds—malignant passions pressing upon the mind, disturb the cerebral action, and do much harm.—Abernethy.

rate? Only get religion! And who would discredit the testimony of all our best men and women? Why not prove it by getting religion? and then we shall know of the truth. We shall then be enabled to test the modern testimony, that ten thousand worlds like this cannot equal it. Well, to be anywhere near consistent with the credit we give to this testimony, or the honor we pay to them who bear it, we are very unwise not to follow their counsel and be happy also--extremely happy—ten thousand times happier than any king or monarch ever was or can be without this religion. Then you with us can cry and shout, glory! with misery all around.

Yes, only get religion! This don't-care spirit that shuts out or banishes from the mind and heart everything but self-enjoyment, and then you will be happy---try it and see--if the half was ever told. But be sure to keep with your own party, or with them that cry peace, peace, or your quiet will be disturbed, and you may be waked up to misery and pain. For wretchedness and wo are wide-spread around, and relieve it you cannot. Therefore turn a deaf ear and be happy still. For happiness is our being's end and aim; and he that is not happy has no true religion. By this you may know the christians. If any come to your assembly and bring not this doctrine, give him no quarters--treat him ungentlemanly, sing him down, or shout him down, or hustle him out.

If he is a stranger, treat him inhumanly, lest you be a partaker of his evil deeds. Be sure to give him nothing to eat, for judgment is given to the saints to execute, and Christ set us an example when he made a scourge; and we must not suffer our prayer meetings to be molested. It destroys our happiness. We must all speak the same thing, even peace and self-enjoyment. This is the religion of the day, and this is right, they say. For it reads in the good Book, great peace have they that love thy law. O, yes! I know it does. And the rest part of the verse says, that nothing shall by any means offend them. But it does not say great peace have they who love self-enjoyment, but those who love God's law have undisturbed peace, a lively active tranquility of mind in doing good, in seeking to relieve the wants of the poor and needy, to bind up the broken hearted, &c.

But he that turns away his ear from hearing law, even his prayer is an abomination. He also that shuts his ear to the cry of the needy, shall cry himself and not be heard. Who in this age will get this kind of religion? Who will enlist to walk in this good old way, which prophets, apostles and Jesus Christ has trod, laying aside present enjoyment? Who will choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God rather than enjoy the pleasure of sin or self-enjoyment for a season, and have respect to the recompense of reward at the end of the race?

MATRIMONIAL JARS.

If people would but consider how possible it is to inflict pain and perpetrate wrong without any positive intention of doing either, but merely from circumstances arising from inadvertence, want of sympathy, or an incapability of mutual comprehension, how much acrimony might be spared! Half the quarrels that embitter wedded life, half the separations that spring from them, are produced by the parties misunderstanding each other's peculiarities and not studying and making allowances for them. Hence, unintentional omissions of attention are viewed as intended slights, and such are resented. These indications of injury to the unconscious offender, who in turn widens the breach of affection by some display of petulence or interference, which frequently irritates the first wound inflicted, until it becomes incurable. In this manner often arises the final separation of persons who might, had they accurately examined each other's heart and disposition, have lived happily.—Ex. Paper.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 28th, 1850.

Bro. Flagg,—Dear Sir:—I think the saints and public of Baltimore have had Bro. James long enough for the present, and as we have commenced a good work in this city, I feel assured that Bro. James could effect considerable if he could come on to Philadelphia. Considerable interest is awakened on the subject of the gospel. Our meetings are larger than they have been since I commenced preaching here. Now, Bro. Flagg, if you can bring Bro. James on with you, so that he can preach next Sunday, I would like it much.—Do try and fetch him along. Depend upon it, he could accomplish a good deal at the present. Two will be baptized this week, and I have a prospect of baptizing one or two in Southwark. My congregation was not small, Bro. Leeche's was very large, and Bro. Jackson, I believe, had a house full of Germans. All things go well.—I see naught but triumph for the people of God. Truly yours,

THOMAS BRAIDWOOD.

Causes of Illness.—I tell you honestly what I think is the complicated maladies of the human race; it is the gormandizing, and stuffing, and stimulating their organs (the digestive) to an excess, thereby producing nervous disorders and irritations. The state of their minds is another grand cause; the fidgetting and discontenting yourselves about what cannot be helped; passions of all kinds—malignant passions pressing upon the mind, disturb the cerebral action, and do much harm.—Abernethy.

Potosi, Wis., Jan. 2d, 1850.

C. J. DOUGLASS,—DEAR SIR AND BRO.:—Though personally unknown to you, I venture to address, by this endearing title, one who appears to be imbued with the same hopes and aspiration as thrills my bosom. The great, the divine idea—the salvation of man temporally and spiritually—has been with me, for years, the one great idea---the only one thing worthy my deep reflection and my choicest efforts.---Early in life I was given to see the hypocrisy, irreligion and corruption of the sectarianism of the so called christian churches.

I have heard such truth and virtue enforced in precepts, and, on the other hand, beheld such falsehood, vice and tyranny in examples exhibited by these teachers, that, at times, I have found myself mentally inquiring, "Can there be a God?" These false priests---these blind guides---with an affected sanctified grimace, raise their devout hands, and profess to marvel at the "spread of infidelity!" Can there be ranker infidelity than is found in the practices of these trading, traffikcing, money changing men of God---these disciples of a Babel church?

There is no harmony between the teachings of God and the present TEMPORAL state of christiandom. 'Tis a system replete with evil. Tyranny, oppression, poverty, envy, malice and every species of uncharitableness pervades it universally. Every man is the antagonist of his fellow; and, so must remain and continue so long as the present framework of society is allowed to exist. The masses---the millions---are sunk in poverty and destitution by the remorseless hand of capital. The poor cry aloud for bread, and the proud of the earth, with hearts of stone, pass them by unheeded.

Shall this forever be? Amid this mass of widespread confusion and corruption, is there none whose souls bear the stamp of divine purity sufficient to call them forth as the champions of the oppressed of God's people? Yes, as certain as God slumbers not in heaven, the deliverers shall arise, a mighty host, whose progress against the powers of evil shall be all-conquering and invincible. The time is not yet, but that day shall surely come. The world has now had eighteen hundred years of preaching and praying, yet there is more crime, sin and misery than ever. The tree shall be known by its fruit.

I hold man never can make any appreciable advance towards the divine nature, until his temporal condition is placed in harmony with that nature. The neglect of this condition in the divine economy, as appertains to man in this life, is the one thing which has rendered orthodox christianity a failure. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. This is the mockery the sects practice daily. The nature and extent of this mockery before God can only be truly realized by placing in imagination, for one moment, the angels of heaven in the same situation—in the same practices as these praying sectaries—just imagine the angels and hosts of seraphs engaged in trading, trafficking, huckstering, lying, cheating and overreaching, as these sectarians are. Why, the bare idea seems blasphemy.

Then what hypocrisy, what mockery in them to cry, "Lord, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." No, no; the spiritual department of God's church is grand, magnificent, sublime; and the TEMPORAL department, to be in holy harmony, must be vast, beautiful and glorious in its conditions and dimensions. It must present before the eye of heaven a scene bearing no more resemblance to this present state of society and its arrangements than the flame of a flickering lamp bears likeness to the effulgence of the midday sun.

Having observed an article from your pen in the Gospel Herald of Dec. 13th, and having, as you invited, deeply reflected upon the truths therein developed, I imbibed an irresistible impulse to address you. Brother, I esteem that communication as embodying a true reflex of your mind, and I assure you it is perfectly in unison with my views. It came upon me like a voice breathing hope to the weary in the wilderness. You speak in that of the "mystery of COMBINATION"---the principles, the rationale. The law of divine combination

Potosi, Wis., Jan. 2d, 1859.

C. J. DOUGLASS,—DEAR SIR AND BRO.:—Though personally unknown to you, I venture to address, by this endearing title, one who appears to be imbued with the same hopes and aspiration as thrills my bosom. The great, the divine idea---the salvation of man temporally and spiritually---has been with me, for years, the one great idea---the only one thing worthy my deep reflection and my choicest efforts.---Early in life I was given to see the hypocrisy, irreligion and corruption of the sectarianism of the so called christian churches.

I have heard such truth and virtue enforced in precepts, and, on the other hand, beheld such falsehood, vice and tyranny in examples exhibited by these teachers, that, at times, I have found myself mentally inquiring, "Can there be a God?" These false priests---these blind guides---with an affected sanctified grimace, raise their devout hands, and profess to marvel at the "spread of infidelity!" Can there be ranker infidelity than is found in the practices of these trading, trafficking, money changing men of God---these disciples of a Babel church?

There is no harmony between the teachings of God and the present TEMPORAL state of christiandom. 'Tis a system replete with evil. Tyranny, oppression, poverty, envy, malice and every species of uncharitableness pervades it universally. Every man is the antagonist of his fellow; and, so must remain and continue so long as the present framework of society is allowed to exist. The masses---the millions---are sunk in poverty and destitution by the remorseless hand of capital. The poor cry aloud for bread, and the proud of the earth, with hearts of stone, pass them by unheeded.

Shall this forever be? Amid this mass of widespread confusion and corruption, is there none whose souls bear the stamp of divine purity sufficient to call them forth as the champions of the oppressed of God's people? Yes, as certain as God slumbers not in heaven, the deliverers shall arise, a mighty host, whose progress against the powers of evil shall be all-conquering and invincible. The time is not yet, but that day shall surely come. The world has now had eighteen hundred years of preaching and praying, yet there is more crime, sin and misery than ever. The tree shall be known by its fruit.

I hold man never can make any appreciable advance towards the divine nature, until his temporal condition is placed in harmony with that nature. The neglect of this condition in the divine economy, as appertains to man in this life, is the one thing which has rendered orthodox christianity a failure. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. This is the mockery the sects practice daily. The nature and extent of this mockery before God can only be truly realized by placing in imagination, for one moment, the angels of heaven in the same situation—in the same practices as these praying sectaries---just imagine the angels and hosts of seraphs engaged in trading, trafficking, huckstering, lying, cheating and overreaching, as these sectarians are. Why, the bare idea seems blasphemy.

Then what hypocrisy, what mockery in them to cry, "Lord, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." No, no; the spiritual department of God's church is grand, magnificent, sublime; and the TEMPORAL department, to be in holy harmony, must be vast, beautiful and glorious in its conditions and dimensions. It must present before the eye of heaven a scene bearing no more resemblance to this present state of society and its arrangements than the flame of a flickering lamp bears likeness to the effulgence of the midday sun.

Having observed an article from your pen in the Gospel Herald of Dec. 13th, and having, as you invited, deeply reflected upon the truths therein developed, I imbibed an irresistible impulse to address you. Brother, I esteem that communication as embodying a true reflex of your mind, and I assure you it is perfectly in unison with my views. It came upon me like a voice breathing hope to the weary in the wilderness. You speak in that of the "mystery of COMBINATION"---the principles, the rationale. The law of divine combination is indeed a puzzle---an inexplicable mystery indeed. Fourerites, Owenites, etc., etc., have been trying for years to solve that great problem. Defeat and utter dissolution has overtaken every attempt, up to this moment.

What is the cause of this universal failure? Many of these experiments have had plenty of capital and highly cultitivated intellect to make the most of that capital; a good selection of clever mechanics, artizans and agriculturists. Yet they have all failed. The leaders---the choice minds directing these movements---are now confounded and bewildered at these, to them, astounding results. Everything that money, ingenuity, intellect and cultivated industry could do, has been brought to bear to render these experiments successful. But defeat, defeat, utter and absolute, has overtaken them all. Why is this?

As an experiment, as the means of making certain discoveries appertaining to the final upbuilding of the true temporal state of God's chosen people, I allied myself for twelve months to one of these communities. The characteristics of this one is a strict counterpart of all others; 'twas one eternal scene of bickering, discord, and anarchy. This continued until the presence of each became unbearable to his fellow; then they sundered. Ah, Brother, I saw much there to reflect upon, to derive hope from for God's people. Suffice it, I made that great discovery---the cause of failure. And I now boldly and unhesitatingly declare before man and heaven, that no philosophy can build up a pure temporal state of society which fails to recognize and acknowledge God, the Father, as guide and counselor in the whole undertaking; that there is a law of God fixed and implanted from the beginning in the very constitution of the universe which precludes, utterly and forever, the unbeliever from building up the true temporal state; that this state the Almighty architect designed from eternity as the heritage of his children, and but them can receive enlightenment to the understanding of its arrangements and celestial conditions—none but them be endued with power to achieve its glorious completion.

Men of all conditions and beliefs are, even now, impressed with a presentiment that some great change is about to take place; all, alike, the wicked as well as the righteous, feel an inward warning of the approach of some great event, as yet hidden behind the misty veil of the future. Why this universal presentiment? Why! lo! 'tis the spirit of God moving silently over the souls of men, awakening them to a faint perception of the coming millenium of the universal jubilee of God's people. You advert to the efficacy and influence of organized secrecy. Your ideas hereupon are perfectly correct. Where is the necessity, the policy or wisdom of unfolding yourselves to the vicious? Nay, what right have we to betray God's cause by unguarded and imprudent prattling?

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

Hunt's Hollow, N. Y., Jan. 14th, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—I am happy of the opportunity to send you two dollars more for the Herald, to be sent to David Bennett, Hunt's Hollow, Livingston Co., N. Y. I am now in the neighborhood where Bro. Wm. Marks first embraced the faith. There are a few old Hunkers here, who have entertained me for six days past first rate. I preached yesterday at Nathaniel Olney's, where I now am. His house is ever open, and ever has been, for the Elders of the Latter Day Saints.

There are many in these parts who are looking on for something tangible to take place before they make any move pro or con, right or left. The most of them know that Mormonism is true, but are at a loss to know where the head is. There are a few lines in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that bother the old Hunkers as bad as the words, "these signs shall follow them that believe," do the sectarians.—They are these: "Until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead"—"none else shall be appointed unto this gift, except it be through him"---"another will I plant in his stead."---These lines are too plain to not mean something is indeed a puzzle---an inexplicable mystery indeed. Fourerites, Owenites, etc., etc., have been trying for years to solve that great problem. Defeat and utter dissolution has overtaken every attempt, up to this moment.

What is the cause of this universal failure? Many of these experiments have had plenty of capital and highly cultitivated intellect to make the most of that capital; a good selection of clever mechanics, artizans and agriculturists. Yet they have all failed. The leaders---the choice minds directing these movements---are now confounded and bewildered at these, to them, astounding results. Everything that money, ingenuity, intellect and cultivated industry could do, has been brought to bear to render these experiments successful. But defeat, defeat, utter and absolute, has overtaken them all. Why is this?

As an experiment, as the means of making certain discoveries appertaining to the final upbuilding of the true temporal state of God's chosen people, I allied myself for twelve months to one of these communities. The characteristics of this one is a strict counterpart of all others; 'twas one eternal scene of bickering, discord, and anarchy. This continued until the presence of each became unbearable to his fellow; then they sundered. Ah, Brother, I saw much there to reflect upon, to derive hope from for God's people. Suffice it, I made that great discovery---the cause of failure. And I now boldly and unhesitatingly declare before man and heaven, that no philosophy can build up a pure temporal state of society which fails to recognize and acknowledge God, the Father, as guide and counselor in the whole undertaking; that there is a law of God fixed and implanted from the beginning in the very constitution of the universe which precludes, utterly and forever, the unbeliever from building up the true temporal state; that this state the Almighty architect designed from eternity as the heritage of his children, and but them can receive enlightenment to the understanding of its arrangements and celestial conditions---none but them be endued with power to achieve its glorious completion.

Men of all conditions and beliefs are, even now, impressed with a presentiment that some great change is about to take place; all, alike, the wicked as well as the righteous, feel an inward warning of the approach of some great event, as yet hidden behind the misty veil of the future. Why this universal presentiment? Why! lo! 'tis the spirit of God moving silently over the souls of men, awakening them to a faint perception of the coming millenium of the universal jubilee of God's people. You advert to the efficacy and influence of organized secrecy. Your ideas hereupon are perfectly correct. Where is the necessity, the policy or wisdom of unfolding yourselves to the vicious? Nay, what right have we to betray God's cause by unguarded and imprudent prattling?

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

Hunt's Hollow, N. Y., Jan. 14th, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—I am happy of the opportunity to send you two dollars more for the Herald, to be sent to David Bennett Hunt's Hollow, Livingston Co., N. Y. I am now in the neighborhood where Bro. Wm. Marks first embraced the faith. There are a few old Hunkers here, who have entertained me for six days past first rate. I preached yesterday at Nathaniel Olney's, where I now am. His house is ever open, and ever has been, for the Elders of the Latter Day Saints.

There are many in these parts who are looking on for something tangible to take place before they make any move pro or con, right or left. The most of them know that Mormonism is true, but are at a loss to know where the head is. There are a few lines in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that bother the old Hunkers as bad as the words, "these signs shall follow them that believe," do the sectarians.—They are these: "Until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead"—"none else shall be appointed unto this gift, except it be through him"---"another will I plant in his stead."---These lines are too plain to not mean something tangible. I think my visit here will not be in vain; for as weak as I am they acknowledge that I have told them something new.

You may tell John E. for me that I am well, and hope he and his are; and that all the letters he writes to put down James J. Strang, serve to build him up; and that the pseudoes can do nothing against us, but for us. Many ask why it is that so many great men leave the church. I answer, because of their agency. For the same cause Lucifer fell from heaven. Why did he not keep his happy state? Was it not because of his aspiring spirit? It has always been so, and I suppose always will, that if a man flatters himself that he can hinder the the Lord's prophet from doing what God has commanded him to do, he always jams his own toes and falls. A man with half an eye can see it, and a man with no eyes at all may know it, if he is acquainted with the history of this church.

I am in my element when I am proclaiming Bro. Strang's claims to the prophetic office, and the gospel and plan of salvation. I care nothing for opposition. It slides off like water from the back of a goose. It does not move me in the least. I long to see James and George, and also many more. My impediment causes me sometimes great embarrassment, but I lean on the promises of the Lord. I am sometimes threatened hard, but if I fall I shall fall in a good cause. I expect to leave here in a few days for Steuben Co., where I expect to find Bro. J. W. Briggs. I hope he will have some cheering news for me, for I hear nothing from Voree or Beaver. Pray for me, that I may never faint till I obtain my crown and kingdom. You have my daily prayers that you may gain a celestial crown in the heavenly world.

EBENEZER PAGE.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 24th, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—Last evening I heard Henry Slicer, the famous Methodist preacher, some years Chaplain to the United States Senate, speak on temperance. He is much celebrated for talent, none of which I could discover, either in his discourse or personal appearance. I should take him to be a voluptuous man, and a demagogue. He takes high rank as a political stump orator. But I cannot imagine that he would be enduced at all, except that as a popular preacher he has a peculiar influence, such as politicians are willing to purchase on any terms. In his last evening's discourse I saw nothing of even the tact necessary for a popular preacher, even among ranters. But as temperance is a subject which involves little of mystery in its hell fires, doubtless the field was not suitable to bring forward his crops.

Babbitt is at Washington trying to puff up Deseret into consequence, but without much prospect of success. His only hope is in the fact that slavery exists in Deseret, and in some possible but improbable compromise of that exciting question, it may possibly receive a momentary consideration sufficient to get him his three dollars a day.

The Elders in the east, as far as I am in correspondence with them, are generally greatly prospered in their ministry. Those in New York (except the city) and in Canada I have scarcely heard from. But those with whom I am in correspondence will bring up one thousand emigrants within the next season, if nothing unlooked for happens to prevent.

"When the cat's away
The kittens play."—Old Saw.

It should read,

"When the cat's away
The vermin play."

John E. Page is a brave man. Those who were with him in Missouri will doubtless all agree as to that. You have often heard him tell of the phrenologist in Boston, who said he "should be a GENERAL, or a preacher." Accordingly when he got to New York he mixed the two ideas together, by saying in his sermon that "Jesus Christ was a going to have a fisty-cuff fight with this generation." Probably expecting the Lord Jesus to be Field Marshal, or General-in-Chief, he intends to get a place in his "fisty-cuff fight" as a Brigadier General at least, by showing himself brave tangible. I think my visit here will not be in vain; for as weak as I am they acknowledge that I have told them something new.

You may tell John E. for me that I am well, and hope he and his are; and that all the letters he writes to put down James J. Strang, serve to build him up; and that the pseudoes can do nothing against us, but for us. Many ask why it is that so many great men leave the church. I answer, because of their agency. For the same cause Lucifer fell from heaven. Why did he not keep his happy state? Was it not because of his aspiring spirit? It has always been so, and I suppose always will, that if a man flatters himself that he can hinder the the Lord's prophet from doing what God has commanded him to do, he always jams his own toes and falls. A man with half an eye can see it, and a man with no eyes at all may know it, if he is acquainted with the history of this church.

I am in my element when I am proclaiming Bro. Strang's claims to the prophetic office, and the gospel and plan of salvation. I care nothing for opposition. It slides off like water from the back of a goose. It does not move me in the least. I long to see James and George, and also many more. My impediment causes me sometimes great embarrassment, but I lean on the promises of the Lord. I am sometimes threatened hard, but if I fall I shall fall in a good cause. I expect to leave here in a few days for Steuben Co., where I expect to find Bro. J. W. Briggs. I hope he will have some cheering news for me, for I hear nothing from Voree or Beaver. Pray for me, that I may never faint till I obtain my crown and kingdom. You have my daily prayers that you may gain a celestial crown in the heavenly world.

EBENEZER PAGE.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 24th, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—Last evening I heard Henry Slicer, the famous Methodist preacher, some years Chaplain to the United States Senate, speak on temperance. He is much celebrated for talent, none of which I could discover, either in his discourse or personal appearance. I should take him to be a voluptuous man, and a demagogue. He takes high rank as a political stump orator. But I cannot imagine that he would be enduced at all, except that as a popular preacher he has a peculiar influence, such as politicians are willing to purchase on any terms. In his last evening's discourse I saw nothing of even the tact necessary for a popular preacher, even among ranters. But as temperance is a subject which involves little of mystery in its hell fires, doubtless the field was not suitable to bring forward his crops.

Babbitt is at Washington trying to puff up Deseret into consequence, but without much prospect of success. His only hope is in the fact that slavery exists in Deseret, and in some possible but improbable compromise of that exciting question, it may possibly receive a momentary consideration sufficient to get him his three dollars a day.

The Elders in the east, as far as I am in correspondence with them, are generally greatly prospered in their ministry. Those in New York (except the city) and in Canada I have scarcely heard from. But those with whom I am in correspondence will bring up one thousand emigrants within the next season, if nothing unlooked for happens to prevent.

"When the cat's away
The kittens play."—Old Saw.

It should read,

"When the cat's away
The vermin play."

John E. Page is a brave man. Those who were with him in Missouri will doubtless all agree as to that. You have often heard him tell of the phrenologist in Boston, who said he "should be a GENERAL, or a preacher." Accordingly when he got to New York he mixed the two ideas together, by saying in his sermon that "Jesus Christ was a going to have a fisty-cuff fight with this generation." Probably expecting the Lord Jesus to be Field Marshal, or General-in-Chief, he intends to get a place in his "fisty-cuff fight" as a Brigadier General at least, by showing himself brave enough to preach down all that he has ever preached up.

Brewster's apostacy dates back earlier than Page's apostolic mission. To preach up Brewster he must assume that his whole ministry has been in rebellion against God. After the faithfulness with which he has labored in building up Satan's kingdom for a dozen years, he must be eminently qualified just now to purify the kingdom of God. Truly his course looks to me like the boy who, quarreling with his play-fellows, went to the henroost and picked up what he found at the bottom and chewed it, to spit in their faces. If Page can afford to rake up all the musses he has started, for the pleasure of telling who helped him, I am perfectly content that he should fatten on it. I was never in any one of them.

How did he puff and blow when McLellin took his present position; denying, as he now does, baptism for the dead, the authority of the priesthood, and the existence of the true church for many years past. How many times has he asserted that "if preaching to, and the baptism of, the dead were not true, the Bible was an imposition, and the religion it reveals a bitter mockery. The ablest works that he has ever published were on the authority of the priesthood, which he now denies. A series of revelations by which he professes to have been guided during his whole ministry, have all been false; but he has now just found the truth in a return to sectarianism. We have no right to be surprised at these things. Having departed from the faith, he has lost sight of the divine light. With no light but that of sectarians, he can only preach their doctrine. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

PREJUDICE.

Let a man of talents rise up in your midst, in your own neighborhood, and who, among his acquaintance appreciates his worth? Let his genius be of the first order, and it will not be seen or appreciated at home. The faint notes of praise that fall upon his ear, come from strangers abroad—perhaps over the water, while by his own neighbors he is looked upon as a very common man. It is seldom that a man of talents remains in the place of his birth; and for this reason: He is so completely surrounded by prejudice and envy, that he cannot act out himself. Do what he may, there will be those ready to disapprove or condemn. His work may meet with peculiar favor at a distance, but they are not read by his acquaintance—and he is condemned without a hearing. Some one has thus illustrated this idea: "Did you ever scratch the head of a piece of timber, a little elevated from the ground, with a pin? Though scarcely heard at one end, it was distinctly heard at the other.—Just so it is with any merit, excellent or good work. It will be sooner heard of and applauded and rewarded on the other side of the globe, than by your immediate acquaintances."

This is correct. We once knew an apprentice who was in the habit of writing articles for his master's paper, that were so well received that his master collected them with others and published them in a book. He supposed they were written by some experienced hand. At the same time when he heard that his apprentice was in the habit of writing, he ridiculed the idea, and one day when he was offended at something, he sent his little daughter to tell him, "he had better go to writing compositon." We knew a young man to write an article for a paper published in his own town, which was rejected and sent back. The same article was sent to an editor more than three hundred miles distant, who printed it and paid for it—deeming it an excellent piece, as indeed it was. The same editor who rejected this article, was in the constant habit of copying this same young man's thoughts from other papers, some of which he highly commended—without, of course, knowing the author. So much for the prejudice of one's own townsmen.

Let no young man be disheartened by the conduct of his neighbors. If they have talents they will shine forth, despite the remarks of prejudice or envy. Cease not your efforts, because in your first attempts you meet with sneers and opposition. There is not a man of talents and genius living, who has not in a greater or less degree experienced the ill treatment, harsh criticism of malice or prejudice. You cannot escape. Fear not the attacks of others.—Of course, you may have written badly, bunglingly, foolishly at times—and who has not—and these paragraphs may be often quoted to your injury. No matter—do your duty, without fear, and you will finally pass through the ordeal a wiser, better, and happier man.—Boston Olive Branch.

WHAT HAS HE BEEN?

What is that to you? It is of no consequence if he has been one of the most abandoned of men. He is not so now. We care not what evil a man has done, provided he has heartily repented and now strives to live an upright and consistent life. Instead of looking back a dozen or twenty years, to know what a person is, you should inquire, "What is he now? What is his present character?" If you find that his reformation is sincere, and that he laments his past errors, take him by the hand and bid him good speed in his noble pursuit. We are not a friend to those who would rake up past sins and vices, to condemn one who is resolved to be upright and virtuous. Many a person is driven back to the paths of vice, who might have been an ornament to society, but for the disposition too common among men, to rake up and drag to the light, long-forgotten iniquities. We always admired the reply of a daughter to her father, who was asked respecting a young man of her acquaintance, "Do you know where he comes from?" "No," replied the girl, "I do not know where he comes from, but I know where he is going, and I wish to go with him." That is right. If we see a person on the right track, exerting a good influence, it is sufficient, without inquiring what has been his character heretofore. If he has reformed, what more can we desire? and what benefit will it be to uncover and expose to the light, deeds of which he is heartily ashamed, and of which he has repented in dust and ashes.

enough to preach down all that he has ever preached up.

Brewster's apostacy dates back earlier than Page's apostolic mission. To preach up Brewster he must assume that his whole ministry has been in rebellion against God. After the faithfulness with which he has labored in building up Satan's kingdom for a dozen years, he must be eminently qualified just now to purify the kingdom of God. Truly his course looks to me like the boy who, quarreling with his play-fellows, went to the henroost and picked up what he found at the bottom and chewed it, to spit in their faces. If Page can afford to rake up all the musses he has started, for the pleasure of telling who helped him, I am perfectly content that he should fatten on it. I was never in any one of them.

How did he puff and blow when McLellin took his present position; denying, as he now does, baptism for the dead, the authority of the priesthood, and the existence of the true church for many years past. How many times has he asserted that "if preaching to, and the baptism of, the dead were not true, the Bible was an imposition, and the religion it reveals a bitter mockery. The ablest works that he has ever published were on the authority of the priesthood, which he now denies. A series of revelations by which he professes to have been guided during his whole ministry, have all been false; but he has now just found the truth in a return to sectarianism. We have no right to be surprised at these things. Having departed from the faith, he has lost sight of the divine light. With no light but that of sectarians, he can only preach their doctrine. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

PREJUDICE.

Let a man of talents rise up in your midst, in your own neighborhood, and who, among his acquaintance appreciates his worth? Let his genius be of the first order, and it will not be seen or appreciated at home. The faint notes of praise that fall upon his ear, come from strangers abroad—perhaps over the water, while by his own neighbors he is looked upon as a very common man. It is seldom that a man of talents remains in the place of his birth; and for this reason: He is so completely surrounded by prejudice and envy, that he cannot act out himself. Do what he may, there will be those ready to disapprove or condemn. His work may meet with peculiar favor at a distance, but they are not read by his acquaintance—and he is condemned without a hearing. Some one has thus illustrated this idea: "Did you ever scratch the head of a piece of timber, a little elevated from the ground, with a pin? Though scarcely heard at one end, it was distinctly heard at the other.—Just so it is with any merit, excellent or good work. It will be sooner heard of and applauded and rewarded on the other side of the globe, than by your immediate acquaintances."

This is correct. We once knew an apprentice who was in the habit of writing articles for his master's paper, that were so well received that his master collected them with others and published them in a book. He supposed they were written by some experienced hand. At the same time when he heard that his apprentice was in the habit of writing, he ridiculed the idea, and one day when he was offended at something, he sent his little daughter to tell him, "he had better go to writing compositon." We knew a young man to write an article for a paper published in his own town, which was rejected and sent back. The same article was sent to an editor more than three hundred miles distant, who printed it and paid for it—deeming it an excellent piece, as indeed it was. The same editor who rejected this article, was in the constant habit of copying this same young man's thoughts from other papers, some of which he highly commended—without, of course, knowing the author. So much for the prejudice of one's own townsmen.

Let no young man be disheartened by the conduct of his neighbors. If they have talents they will shine forth, despite the remarks of prejudice or envy. Cease not your efforts, because in your first attempts you meet with sneers and opposition. There is not a man of talents and genius living, who has not in a greater or less degree experienced the ill treatment, harsh criticism of malice or prejudice. You cannot escape. Fear not the attacks of others.—Of course, you may have written badly, bunglingly, foolishly at times—and who has not—and these paragraphs may be often quoted to your injury. No matter—do your duty, without fear, and you will finally pass through the ordeal a wiser, better, and happier man.—Boston Olive Branch.

WHAT HAS HE BEEN?

What is that to you? It is of no consequence if he has been one of the most abandoned of men. He is not so now. We care not what evil a man has done, provided he has heartily repented and now strives to live an upright and consistent life. Instead of looking back a dozen or twenty years, to know what a person is, you should inquire, "What is he now? What is his present character?" If you find that his reformation is sincere, and that he laments his past errors, take him by the hand and bid him good speed in his noble pursuit. We are not a friend to those who would rake up past sins and vices, to condemn one who is resolved to be upright and virtuous. Many a person is driven back to the paths of vice, who might have been an ornament to society, but for the disposition too common among men, to rake up and drag to the light, long-forgotten iniquities. We always admired the reply of a daughter to her father, who was asked respecting a young man of her acquaintance, "Do you know where he comes from?" "No," replied the girl, "I do not know where he comes from, but I know where he is going, and I wish to go with him." That is right. If we see a person on the right track, exerting a good influence, it is sufficient, without inquiring what has been his character heretofore. If he has reformed, what more can we desire? and what benefit will it be to uncover and expose to the light, deeds of which he is heartily ashamed, and of which he has repented in dust and ashes.

THE STATE OF DESERET.

A few years since, the people of Hancock county, Illinois; not more than 35,000 or 40,000 in number, were engaged in a civil war, in which a part expelled the rest from the country. The successful party received, doubtless, some aid from places out of the county, but the parties were about equal in nnmber in the county, and therefore the number of the expelled could not have exceeded 20,000.

Of these quite the majority scattered out into various parts of the country; great numbers returning to the several places from which they had originally gone. A considerable number went to Texas, and are settled on the Piedernailes river. Another large company went up to Voree in Wisconsin. Others went to the lead mines and to various towns on the Mississippi.

The arrangements for starting out the great Western expedition only contemplated 25 companies of 100 families each; and it is notorious that more than half these companies never started. If they had all started it would have only made some 11,000 or 12,000 persons. But as a majority of them failed, a fair estimate is that from 5000 to 5500 persons made up the grand Mormon army when it left Nauvoo in 1846. More than half of these stopped at Council Bluffs and various places in that vicinity in western Iowa. This leaves only a minority of 5500 persons at most who have gone into the valley of the Salt Lake and organized the State of Deseret.

It will doubtless be said that they may have received additions since. But it is a well known fact, that they have not had preachers out during the last four years, to gather up converts as formerly. The few preachers who have been through the country gathering up converts, have gathered them to Voree, Wisconsin, and Beaver Island in Michigan. Very few have gone to the Western camp.—But in the same time many have scattered off and are now found in all the upper counties of Missouri. The evidence justifies the opinion that they have rather diminished than increased in numbers.

Well, this little company, a minority of 5000 and probably about 2000 in all have settled in the valley of the Salt Lake and organized the State of Deseret. Their agents, Almon Babbitt and Dr. Bumbyzel, come on as Representatives in Congress with a certified copy of the Constitution, and stopping at New York astonish the world with the announcement that they have organized a State with a population of fifty thousand inhabitants.

But this was striking rather high. Doubts began to be expressed in various quarters. It was evident there would be an investigation. Suddenly one of the Washington papers drops them down, on the authority of Almon Babbitt, to 20,000. By some hocus pocus his credentials have also been transformed, so that instead of a Representative of a State, he is there only as the Delegate of a Territory.—Certain Senators appear also to have taken Deseret under their peculiar protection just now, as California is knocking for admission into the Union with a Constitution forbidding slavery.

A single fact is a key to all this. DESERET CONTAINS A FEW SLAVES. Their Constitution does not forbid Slavery. The number of free and slave States being precisely equal, and California ready to come in and destroy that balance; with New Mexico, Oregon and Minesota all free, preparing to follow and render the preponderance of slave power hereafter hopeless: the propagandists of the Calhoun school are looking around for the means of staying the course of events and making a corresponding number of slave States.

California must be kept back tifl a new slave State can be carved out of Texas. New Mexico must be shorn of more than half her territory and population to keep her back until Deseret can be nursed up into a slave State to come in with her. In the mean time we shall see some new maneuver to get up two more slave States to come in against Oregon and Minesota. We have not the slightest objection to the extending of the jurisdiction of some territorial government over that region. But it is a curious fact that this little nursery of slavery in the mountains, is to be dignified with a government when such territories as California, New Mexico, and until this year Oregon have been denied it. Why do we not have a government for the vast free Territory from Missouri to the Rocky Mountains, with a population of probably 10,000, as well as the little settlement near the Salt Lake, where 2000 people are endeavoring to establish slavery over a Territory larger than the six New England States?—Plymouth (Mass.) Memorial.

HAPPINESS.

Happiness does not so much consist in having much to enjoy, as in the faculty to enjoy life. He who cannot be happy without taking great pains, will always find his pains greater than his happiness. It is a beautiful thought of Addison's that one man often takes more pleasure in the contemplation of a fine estate, than another in possession. The former derives much pleasure from the estate, without being burthened with the care of possession; the latter burdend with the care of possession derives little pleasure from the estate. The one finds an estate in the beauties, the other finds no beauties in the estate. The, possession of enjoyment is better that the enjoyment of possession.

FOR WHAT IS A MOTHER RESPONSIBLE?—She is responsible for the principles which her children entertain in early life. For her it is to say whether those who go forth from her fireside shall be imbued with sentiments of virtue, truth, honor, honesty, temperance, industry, benevolence, morality, or those of a contrary character, vice, fraud, drunkenness, idleness, covetousness. These will be found to be of the most natural growth—but on her is involved the daily, hourly task of weeding her little garden, of eradicating those odious productions, and planting the human heart with the lilly, the rose and the amaranth, that fadeless flower, the emblem of truth.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 11th, 1850.

JAMES J. STRANG:—God sustain and bless thee. You think I have not written as often as I should. Well God forgive me, and so must you. The work here is going ahead in great power. Several hundred went away last Sunday that could not obtain seats.—The excitement is getting very high. Samuel Graham has gone to the State of New York. I have over twenty invitations to preach in the surrounding country. We are making thousands of friends. Had you not better go to Washington soon? If you can, get Bro. Bennett or Elder Leech to preach in Baltimore, and then come on here. Hundreds will go to the Island from here in the spring. You may expect to hear more from me soon. We will take a thousand from this region in the spring, if I stay here. God bless you all. Yours in love and truth,

G. J. ADAMS.

ELDER G. J. ADAMS.—We beg pardon! "PRESIDENT G. J. ADAMS," for such we understand is the present title he holds among the "saints," being one of the three Presidents of the Peace Party, or Strangite Mormons, now located at Voree and Beaver Islands.—Well, as we were about to say, the "Elder is among us in all his glory," declaring to the people of this good city what he calls the "dispensation of the fullness of times." We dropped in to see the Elder on Sunday last, he was going it with a rush; hundreds tried in vain to get seats in Washington Hall, to hear his great Lecture on the setting up of the "Kingdom of God," or the fifth universal Empire of the earth. His lecture was original. Yes! it was rich, rare and spicy; he seems a great favorite. The Elder preaches three times next Sunday.—Boston Advertiser.

THE STATE OF DESERET.

A few years since, the people of Hancock county, Illinois, not more than 35,000 or 40,000 in number, were engaged in a civil war, in which a part expelled the rest from the country. The successful party received, doubtless, some aid from places out of the county, but the parties were about equal in nnmber in the county, and therefore the number of the expelled could not have exceeded 20,000.

Of these quite the majority scattered out into various parts of the country; great numbers returning to the several places from which they had originally gone. A considerable number went to Texas, and are settled on the Piedernailes river. Another large company went up to Voree in Wisconsin. Others went to the lead mines and to various towns on the Mississippi.

The arrangements for starting out the great Western expedition only contemplated 25 companies of 100 families each; and it is notorious that more than half these companies never started. If they had all started it would have only made some 11,000 or 12,000 persons. But as a majority of them failed, a fair estimate is that from 5000 to 5500 persons made up the grand Mormon army when it left Nauvoo in 1846. More than half of these stopped at Council Bluffs and various places in that vicinity in western Iowa. This leaves only a minority of 5500 persons at most who have gone into the valley of the Salt Lake and organized the State of Deseret.

It will doubtless be said that they may have received additions since. But it is a well known fact, that they have not had preachers out during the last four years, to gather up converts as formerly. The few preachers who have been through the country gathering up converts, have gathered them to Voree, Wisconsin, and Beaver Island in Michigan. Very few have gone to the Western camp.—But in the same time many have scattered off and are now found in all the upper counties of Missouri. The evidence justifies the opinion that they have rather diminished than increased in numbers.

Well, this little company, a minority of 5000 and probably about 2000 in all have settled in the valley of the Salt Lake and organized the State of Deseret. Their agents, Almon Babbitt and Dr. Bumbyzel, come on as Representatives in Congress with a certified copy of the Constitution, and stopping at New York astonish the world with the announcement that they have organized a State with a population of fifty thousand inhabitants.

But this was striking rather high. Doubts began to be expressed in various quarters. It was evident there would be an investigation. Suddenly one of the Washington papers drops them down, on the authority of Almon Babbitt, to 20,000. By some hocus pocus his credentials have also been transformed, so that instead of a Representative of a State, he is there only as the Delegate of a Territory.—Certain Senators appear also to have taken Deseret under their peculiar protection just now, as California is knocking for admission into the Union with a Constitution forbidding slavery.

A single fact is a key to all this. DESERET CONTAINS A FEW SLAVES. Their Constitution does not forbid Slavery. The number of free and slave States being precisely equal, and California ready to come in and destroy that balance; with New Mexico, Oregon and Minesota all free, preparing to follow and render the preponderance of slave power hereafter hopeless; the propagandists of the Calhoun school are looking around for the means of staying the course of events and making a corresponding number of slave States.

California must be kept back till a new slave State can be carved out of Texas. New Mexico must be shorn of more than half her territory and population to keep her back until Deseret can be nursed up into a slave State to come in with her. In the mean time we shall see some new maneuver to get up two more slave States to come in against Oregon and Minesota. We have not the slightest objection to the extending of the jurisdiction of some territorial government over that region. But it is a curious fact that this little nursery of slavery in the mountains, is to be dignified with a government when such territories as California, New Mexico, and until this year Oregon have been denied it. Why do we not have a government for the vast free Territory from Missouri to the Rocky Mountains, with a population of probably 10,000, as well as the little settlement near the Salt Lake, where 2000 people are endeavoring to establish slavery over a Territory larger than the six New England States!—Plymouth (Mass.) Memorial.

HAPPINESS.

Happiness does not so much consist in having much to enjoy, as in the faculty to enjoy life. He who cannot be happy without taking great pains, will always find his pains greater than his happiness. It is a beautiful thought of Addison's that one man often takes more pleasure in the contemplation of a fine estate, than another in possession. The former derives much pleasure from the estate, without being burthened with the care of possession; the latter burdend with the care of possession derives little pleasure from the estate. The one finds an estate in the beauties, the other finds no beauties in the estate. The possession of enjoyment is better that the enjoyment of possession.

FOR WHAT IS A MOTHER RESPONSIBLE?—She is responsible for the principles which her children entertain in early life. For her it is to say whether those who go forth from her fireside shall be imbued with sentiments of virtue, truth, honor, honesty, temperance, industry, benevolence, morality, or those of a contrary character: vice, fraud, drunkenness, idleness, covetousness. These will be found to be of the most natural growth—but on her is involved the daily hourly task of weeding her little garden, of eradicating those odious productions, and planting the human heart with the lilly, the rose and the amaranth, that fadeless flower, the emblem of truth.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 11th, 1850.

JAMES J. STRANG:—God sustain and bless thee. You think I have not written as often as I should. Well God forgive me, and so must you. The work here is going ahead in great power. Several hundred went away last Sunday that could not obtain seats.—The excitement is getting very high. Samuel Graham has gone to the State of New York. I have over twenty invitations to preach in the surrounding country. We are making thousands of friends Had you not better go to Washington soon? If you can, get Bro Bennett or Elder Leech to preach in Baltimore, and then come on here Hundreds will go to the Island from here in the spring. You may expect to hear more from me soon. We will take a thousand from this region in the spring, if I stay here. God bless you all. Yours in love and truth,

G. J. ADAMS.

ELDER G. J. ADAMS.—We beg pardon! "PRESIDENT G. J. ADAMS," for such we understand is the present title he holds among the "saints," being one of the three Presidents of the Peace Party, or Strangite Mormons, now located at Voree and Beaver Islands.—Well, as we were about to say, the "Elder is among us in all his glory," declaring to the people of this good city what he calls the "dispensation of the fullness of times." We dropped in to see the Elder on Sunday last, he was going it with a rush; hundreds tried in vain to get seats in Washington Hall, to hear his great Lecture on the setting up of the "Kingdom of God," or the fifth universal Empire of the earth. His lecture was original. Yes! it was rich, rare and spicy; he seems a great favorite. The Elder preaches three times next Sunday.—Boston Advertiser.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 49.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, FEB. 21, 1850. [WHOLE No. 165.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Correspondence of the Old Colony (Mass.) Memorial.

INTERESTING DESCRIPTION OF THE NEW MORMON PARADISE AT BEAVER, MICHIGAN.

The colony at Beaver is in a most prosperous condition. It numbers at present about 1000 persons, quite the larger portion of whom went up last summer. They are all doing well. The fishing business there is very extensive, and uncommonly profitable. Last summer it employed some 1500 men and 500 boats, but there is ample room for five times that number. Heretofore the fishing has been done principally by men from Detroit, Cleveland, and Rochester, but must inevitably rapidly pass into the hands of the saints now settling there. The business of furnishing wood to steamboats will be larger. They have never been able to supply the demand. Wood choppers are getting 5s. per cord through the winter, and are not able to cut half what the purchasers wish to buy. There is not the slightest doubt that 30,000 cords a year can be sold there to the steamboats, and an indefinite amount to the market in Chicago, at prices highly profitable.

But it is as an agricultural colony that the advantages of the place can be realized. The entire group of the Beaver Islands presents a surface of 100,000 acres of fine arable land, suitable for the production of all the grains, fruits, and other agricultural productions common in the Northern States. Cultivation has been carried on to such an extent as to prove that both soil and climate are very favorable. Indians have raised corn there for a hundred years past, and never lost a crop by frost. But the whites have raised potatoes and other vegetables in great abundance, and a few fields of grain, all of which have yielded well.

Wild fruit is abundant, and in great variety. The strawberries and rasberries ripened, a second crop, in November last. Cranberries are produced in such abundance as to be sent to market in large quantities.

The forests are not only valuable for wood, but there are valuable pineries in the Islands, and a large steam saw mill has been erected by the Messrs. Smith & Prince, from Pittsburgh, and Greig from New Brighton, Pa., where lumber will be made extensively. Several streams are found on Big Beaver, sufficiently large to justify the erection of machinery, and the harbor is every way equal to that of Boston. Mr. Cheeseman has built a fine schooner there, and three are owned there. There are six trading houses, and arrangements are making to open ten or twelve more. Two boat yards are now in operation where much boat and ship building will be done next year. Another saw mill, propelled by water, will be ready to run by spring, and a grist mill by harvest. There are two wharves, for the landing of steamboats, and two are being put in this winter: one of them by Mr. M. Aldrich. All the steamboats, amounting to three a day, stop among the islands for wood, fresh fish, ice, milk, &c., and Beaver is the only place where they can get all these things. The wood can be furnished them cheaper than at the Manitous; the milk cheaper than at Makcinac; the ice and fish as cheap as at the other places. Various other

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 19.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, FEB. 21, 1850. [WHOLE No. 165.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Correspondence of the Old Colony (Mass.) Memorial.

INTERESTING DESCRIPTION OF THE NEW MORMON PARADISE AT BEAVER, MICHIGAN.

The colony at Beaver is in a most prosperous condition. It numbers at present about 1000 persons, quite the larger portion of whom went up last summer. They are all doing well. The fishing business there is very extensive, and uncommonly profitable. Last summer it employed some 1500 men and 500 boats, but there is ample room for five times that number. Heretofore the fishing has been done principally by men from Detroit, Cleveland, and Rochester, but must inevitably rapidly pass into the hands of the saints now settling there. The business of furnishing wood to steamboats will be larger. They have never been able to supply the demand. Wood choppers are getting 5s. per cord through the winter, and are not able to cut half what the purchasers wish to buy. There is not the slightest doubt that 30,000 cords a year can be sold there to the steamboats, and an indefinite amount to the market in Chicago, at prices highly profitable.

But it is as an agricultural colony that the advantages of the place can be realized. The entire group of the Beaver Islands presents a surface of 100,000 acres of fine arable land, suitable for the production of all the grains, fruits, and other agricultural productions common in the Northern States. Cultivation has been carried on to such an extent as to prove that both soil and climate are very favorable. Indians have raised corn there for a hundred years past, and never lost a crop by frost. But the whites have raised potatoes and other vegetables in great abundance, and a few fields of grain, all of which have yielded well.

Wild fruit is abundant, and in great variety. The strawberries and rasberries ripened, a second crop, in November last. Cranberries are produced in such abundance as to be sent to market in large quantities.

The forests are not only valuable for wood, but there are valuable pineries in the Islands, and a large steam saw mill has been erected by the Messrs. Smith & Prince, from Pittsburgh, and Greig from New Brighton, Pa., where lumber will be made extensively. Several streams are found on Big Beaver, sufficiently large to justify the erection of machinery, and the harbor is every way equal to that of Boston. Mr. Cheeseman has built a fine schooner there, and three are owned there. There are six trading houses, and arrangements are making to open ten or twelve more. Two boat yards are now in operation where much boat and ship building will be done next year. Another saw mill, propelled by water, will be ready to run by spring, and a grist mill by harvest. There are two wharves, for the landing of steamboats, and two are being put in this winter: one of them by Mr. M. Aldrich. All the steamboats, amounting to three a day, stop among the islands for wood, fresh fish, ice, milk, &c., and Beaver is the only place where they can get all these things. The wood can be furnished them cheaper than at the Manitous; the milk cheaper than at Makcinac; the ice and fish as cheap as at the other places. Various other supplies which the other places do not afford at all can be had there, and the harbor is the best on the Lakes.

Beaver is the centre of the great fisheries. Their trade has heretofore been carried on at Mackinac, and employ ten or twelve small schooners, and supports thirty trading houses. It commenced there because of the protection of the fort when the country was filled with hostile Indians. But the present course of events will in a short time transfer it entirely to Beaver, both from the superiority of the harbor, the proximity of the location and the convenience of agricultural supplies, which at Mackinac are limited to the productions of 200 or 300 acres of poor land.

There are a few fishermen and one or two old traders there. But aside from them the settlement is made up entirely of the saints. We have now some fifty Elders preaching in all the country from Portland, Maine, to the city of Washington. These will all return in the spring and summer, taking with them such as can go up. I feel confident that 2000 will go up next summer, and will be sufficient to extend settlements to the other Islands.

For myself I intend to go upon Garden Island, where there is 1000 acres already improved, and make it into a community farm. This island contains from 12,000 to 20,000 acres, and is of a very superior quality. The 1000 acres already cleared will make a good beginning, and we will soon get the whole into an excellent farm. It is only one mile from Big Beaver, and only three miles sail from the harbor of one island to the harbor of the other. I hope to take with me some two hundred people to begin with, and to add from time to time till we cover the entire island.

High Island, is a little larger, and four miles from Big Beaver, or three miles sail from harbor to harbor. That has no improvements, but its pineries are very valuable, and the soil is good. It has a beautiful little lake within it, and has a beautiful harbor, where steamboats lay against the bank without wharves, the water being 10 feet deep only 18 feet from shore, and 50 feet in the width of a boat. The fishing stations are principally on small islands of from 40 to 300 acres lying around the larger Islands. We are in hopes to push over on the Fox Islands early in the spring, before any body else gets there, and to buy out the establishment on the Manitous soon.

On these Islands there are no poor. Land is distributed to all according to their wants. All the necessary measures will be taken to make the titles inalienable, so that none shall ever become landless. By this means, however poor any one may become, a few years of industry will make him well off. There can be no permanent poor.

In supplying steamboats in one direction we are 200 miles from all competition, and in the other 450. Hence we can supply steward's stores to a great extent; and the necessity of providing themselves with these things will insure the stopping of boats on all occasions. The nearest settlement of others than the saints, and a few small tribes of Indians, is Mackinac, 50 miles off, and that is the nearest port that there will be at any time, on the main line of travel, or in any direction for many years to come. This distance will secure us from the danger of collision with unbelieving and persecuting neighbors. The nearest land is separated from us by 14 miles of water. As we intend to settle the whole of the Islands entirely by the saints, I have the fullest confidence that we shall not again be driven out. I do not think it will be attempted, or that it could succeed if it were. The scenery is very rich, and on many accounts it is a most desirable place to live in. S. T. J.

DOMESTIC SERVICE—HOW TO GET HELP.

For the consolation of those who cannot afford to keep servants, I would say, there is something in this matter of being waited on, which is not always duly considered. It is commonly thought a mark of dignity, to receive from others those daily services, which wealth and station exact from their dependents. There is some truth in this; but not the whole truth. Our horses are waited on about as carefully as Queen Victoria. Nothing is usually neglected which we suppose needful to their comfort. But this is no badge of honor: it is a mark of helplessness. So it is with young children. No one in the ordinary circumstances of life, hesitates about waiting upon them: not as a mark of honor; but because they cannot help supplies which the other places do not afford at all can be had there, and the harbor is the best on the Lakes.

Beaver is the centre of the great fisheries. Their trade has heretofore been carried on at Mackinac, and employ ten or twelve small schooners, and supports thirty trading houses. It commenced there because of the protection of the fort when the country was filled with hostile Indians. But the present course of events will in a short time transfer it entirely to Beaver, both from the superiority of the harbor, the proximity of the location and the convenience of agricultural supplies, which at Mackinac are limited to the productions of 200 or 300 acres of poor land.

There are a few fishermen and one or two old traders there. But aside from them the settlement is made up entirely of the saints. We have now some fifty Elders preaching in all the country from Portland, Maine, to the city of Washington. These will all return in the spring and summer, taking with them such as can go up. I feel confident that 2000 will go up next summer, and will be sufficient to extend settlements to the other Islands.

For myself I intend to go upon Garden Island, where there is 1000 acres already improved, and make it into a community farm. This island contains from 12,000 to 20,000 acres, and is of a very superior quality. The 1000 acres already cleared will make a good beginning, and we will soon get the whole into an excellent farm. It is only one mile from Big Beaver, and only three miles sail from the harbor of one island to the harbor of the other. I hope to take with me some two hundred people to begin with, and to add from time to time till we cover the entire island.

High Island, is a little larger, and four miles from Big Beaver, or three miles sail from harbor to harbor. That has no improvements, but its pineries are very valuable, and the soil is good. It has a beautiful little lake within it, and has a beautiful harbor, where steamboats lay against the bank without wharves, the water being 10 feet deep only 18 feet from shore, and 50 feet in the width of a boat. The fishing stations are principally on small islands of from 40 to 300 acres lying around the larger Islands. We are in hopes to push on on the Fox Islands early in the spring, before any body else gets there, and to buy out the establishment on the Manitous soon.

On these Islands there are no poor. Land is distributed to all according to their wants. All the necessary measures will be taken to make the titles inalienable, so that none shall ever become landless. By this means, however poor any one may become, a few years of industry will make him well off. There can be no permanent poor.

In supplying steamboats in one direction we are 200 miles from all competition, and in the other 450. Hence we can supply steward's stores to a great extent; and the necessity of providing themselves with these things will insure the stopping of boats on all occasions. The nearest settlement of others than the saints, and a few small tribes of Indians, is Mackinac, 50 miles off, and that is the nearest port that there will be at any time, on the main line of travel, or in any direction for many years to come. This distance will secure us from the danger of collision with unbelieving and persecuting neighbors. The nearest land is separated from us by 14 miles of water. As we intend to settle the whole of the Islands entirely by the saints, I have the fullest confidence that we shall not again be driven out. I do not think it will be attempted, or that it could succeed if it were. The scenery is very rich, and on many accounts it is a most desirable place to live in. S. T. J.

DOMESTIC SERVICE—HOW TO GET HELP.

For the consolation of those who cannot afford to keep servants I would say, there is something in this matter of being waited on which is not always duly considered. It is commonly thought a mark of dignity, to receive from others those daily services, which wealth and station exact from their dependents. There is some truth in this; but not the whole truth. Our horses are waited on about as carefully as Queen Victoria. Nothing is usually neglected which we suppose needful to their comfort. But this is no badge of honor; it is a mark of helplessness. So it is with young children. No one in the ordinary circumstances of life, hesitates about waiting upon them: not as a mark of honor; but because they cannot help themselves.

There is another point about servants, especially slaves or otherwise bound—they must be waited on too. Many a master or mistress, is as heavily taxed in looking after and providing for servants, as they are in serving. The advantage to the dependent is often greater than to the master or employer. The work of the one may be more dignified than that of the other; but it is work notwithstanding.

In relation to dignity however, we ought "not to judge according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." There is more real worthiness in contributing to the welfare of our fellow men, than in holding the sinecure of a Prince consort. It is exactly as we are taught by the highest wisdom: "Whomsoever will be great among you, let him be the servant of all." Yes: it is better to do good to others, in a menial office, than to be clothed with an outward dignity which relieves no want, and contributes to no real interest of mankind. What dignity has the world ever seen equal to that of him, "though Lord of all," who became servant of all, and "went about doing good," as a chief mark of his divine mission?

The relation of master and servant is often a very beneficial one; and is perhaps indispensible to the highest welfare of the human family; but there are many cases, where families, and those not in the lowest circumstances, would find themselves better off without menial help than with it. Children, in the ordinary condition of life, if not at all, should be employed as early as possible in some way of real usefulness; and in many cases their services in the common labors of a household, should be substituted for those of menials to the advantage of parents and children too. The habit of doing good ought to be formed as soon as possible. It should be one of the earliest lessons of the young, that they have been sent into the world, not to rule, or enjoy at the expense of others, but to contribute to the general welfare. How much better in many respects, that a girl of 16, for example, should be engaged in some work of the household than to spend her time in idleness, attempting to kill it perhaps by some useless amusement or more foolish reading!

I know families that ought to dismiss their servants for the sake of their children; as a step necessary to their preservation from future misery of the present life I mean—to say nothing of the high considerations which the case involves. The world will never be cured of its wonted disorders, while children are made masters and mistresses before they have learned to serve. A few may be wanted for some places of show, who can do nothing contentedly and gracefully: but only a small number of this sort is really needful.

The fact that the helpless are served, as such, leads to a suggestion in regard to independence—a thing much coveted and little understood amongst men. One of its best forms is to have few wants for the supply of which we are obliged to rely upon others. As Cicero has remarked, "Men little understand how great a revenue is parsimony," so they are little aware what freedom there is in not requiring the assistance of our fellow creatures. Who of truly noble mind would not clean his own boots, rather than be so dependent upon popular favor as to feel obliged to make himself a slave to the caprices of the multitude in order to secure their suffrages? Who would not rather serve himself virtuously than bow down to others in base vicious practices? What a price do men often pay in public life for the slight advantage of being able to maintain a troop of dependents with other mere signs of respectability? Serve we must—this is a law of our present being: whom, or how, we may, to some extent, choose for ourselves.

As to labor, it has been pronounced a curse of sin; and so it is: but there is a still greater curse in not submitting to it. To eat bread in the sweat of the brow, literally, though with some it may be absolutely requisite in order to health, is with many a physical necessity. The blood seems to require the almost daily sifting out of watery particles by the free perspiration of vigorous exercise. A man will often pay handsomly for services of less value than he could readily obtain with an axe or saw, a spade or a hoe.

I can readily understand how idle this must all sound to the ears of many: but I am not ashamed to say it, at the risk of any reflection that may follow. There are great realities in this sham shadowed world of ours; and some will feel thankful to hear of it.—There is sunshine as well as moonshine, and since the most prefer the latter, they will not quarrel with those who chiefly value the former. Even of this there will be enough to spare for some ages yet.—Correspondent of the Newark Daily.

CRIME IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

The Chief of Police states that the number of persons arrested for assaults and bad conduct, during the year ending October 31st, 1849, was 10,291; and, allowing that the city has 450,000 inhabitants, we have, during the year, one such arrest for about every forty-four inhabitants. During the same period, there were no less than 21,621 persons lodged for the night in the city station houses—21,621 miserable outcasts, debased by vice or suffering from want, and, having no shelter, seeking the degrading hospitality of the police! This shows that, during the year, the proportion of one out of every twenty-one of the inhabitants has been houseless for a night. It is officially stated that during the year 1848, there were 14,188, and the corresponding period of 1849 there were 14,274 persons arrested, being an increase of 86 over 1848.

CURIOUS SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY.

It has long been known, and any one may test the fact, that when a drop of water is placed upon a piece of iron, red or white hot, and the hotter the better, instead of being instantly converted into vapor, it draws itself up into a globular shape, and is not even boiled by the intense heat. It occurred to a French philosopher, that this fact might explain certain phenomena, of men being able to handle or walk upon intensely hot substances, and upon making the experiment, he found that he could put his hands in melted iron, or walk over it barefoot, with ease. Any person can do this when the skin is moist, the only caution necessary being not to move the hand or other part in contact with the incandescent metal too quickly. The experiment must be done deliberately, with the iron or other metal at a white heat, or if melted, still better. This fact accounts very simply for some astonishing miracles which it has hitherto required no little faith to believe.

WALWORTH COUNTY, Town of Hudson, ss. } In Justice's Court.

To AZARIAH PARRISH:—You are hereby notified that a writ of attachment has been issued against you, and your property attached to satisfy the demand of Jirah B. Wheelan, amounting to seventy dollars. Now, unless you shall appear before William P. Lyon, a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, at his office in said town on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1850, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property sold to pay the debt. Dated this 20th day of February, A. D. 1850.

JIRAH B. WHEELAN.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

H. P. Brown,	$1,00 to Vol. IV	No. 14
John A. Williams,	1,00 to Vol. V	No. 12
Jeremiah Jenks,	2,00 to Vol. V	No. 47
James Waldrum,	2,00 to Vol. V	No. 47

themselves.

There is another point about servants, especially slaves or otherwise bound—they must be waited on too. Many a master or mistress, is as heavily taxed in looking after and providing for servants, as they are in serving. The advantage to the dependent is often greater than to the master or employer. The work of the one may be more dignified than that of the other; but it is work notwithstanding.

In relation to dignity however, we ought "not to judge according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." There is more real worthiness in contributing to the welfare of our fellow men, than in holding the sinecure of a Prince consort. It is exactly as we are taught by the highest wisdom: "Whomsoever will be great among you, let him be the servant of all." Yes: it is better to do good to others, in a menial office, than to be clothed with an outward dignity which relieves no want, and contributes to no real interest of mankind. What dignity has the world ever seen equal to that of him, "though Lord of all," who became servant of all, and "went about doing good," as a chief mark of his divine mission?

The relation of master and servant is often a very beneficial one; and is perhaps indispensible to the highest welfare of the human family; but there are many cases, where families, and those not in the lowest circumstances, would find themselves better off without menial help than with it. Children, in the ordinary condition of life, if not at all, should be employed as early as possible in some way of real usefulness; and in many cases their services in the common labors of a household, should be substituted for those of menials to the advantage of parents and children too. The habit of doing good ought to be formed as soon as possible. It should be one of the earliest lessons of the young, that they have been sent into the world, not to rule, or enjoy at the expense of others, but to contribute to the general welfare. How much better in many respects, that a girl of 16, for example, should be engaged in some work of the household than to spend her time in idleness, attempting to kill it perhaps by some useless amusement or more foolish reading!

I know families that ought to dismiss their servants for the sake of their children; as a step necessary to their preservation from future misery of the present life I mean—to say nothing of the high considerations which the case involves. The world will never be cured of its wonted disorders, while children are made masters and mistresses before they have learned to serve. A few may be wanted for some places of show, who can do nothing contentedly and gracefully: but only a small number of this sort is really needful.

The fact that the helpless are served, as such, leads to a suggestion in regard to independence—a thing much coveted and little understood amongst men. One of its best forms is to have few wants for the supply of which we are obliged to rely upon others. As Cicero has remarked, "Men little understand how great a revenue is parsimony," so they are little aware what freedom there is in not requiring the assistance of our fellow creatures. Who of truly noble mind would not clean his own boots, rather than be so dependent upon popular favor as to feel obliged to make himself a slave to the prices of the multitude in order to secure their suffrages? Who would not rather serve himself virtuously than bow down to others in base vicious practices? What a price do men often pay in public life for the slight advantage of being able to maintain a troop of dependents with other mere signs of respectability? Serve we must —this is a law of our present being: whom, or how, we may, to some extent, choose for ourselves.

As to labor, it has been pronounced a curse of sin; and so it is: but there is a still greater curse in not submitting to it. To eat bread by the sweat of the brow, literally, though with some it may be absolutely requisite in order to health, is with many a physical necessity. The blood seems to require the almost daily sifting out of watery particles by the free perspiration of vigorous exercise. A man will often pay handsomly for services of less value than he could readily obtain with an axe or saw, a spade or a hoe.

I can readily understand how idle this must all sound to the ears of many: but I am not ashamed to say it, at the risk of any reflection that may follow. There are great realities in this sham shadowed world of ours; and some will feel thankful to hear of it.—There is sunshine as well as moonshine, and since the most prefer the latter, they will not quarrel with those who chiefly value the former. Even of this there will be enough to spare for some ages yet.—Correspondent of the Newark Daily.

CRIME IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

The Chief of Police states that the number of persons arrested for assaults and bad conduct, during the year ending October 31st, 1849, was 10,291; and, allowing that the city has 450,000 inhabitants, we have, during the year, one such arrest for about every forty-four inhabitants. During the same period, there were no less than 21,621 persons lodged for the night in the city station houses—21,621 miserable outcasts, debased by vice or suffering from want, and, having no shelter, seeking the degrading hospitality of the police! This shows that, during the year, the proportion of one out of every twenty-one of the inhabitants has been houseless for a night. It is officially stated that during the year 1848, there were 14,188, and the corresponding period of 1849 there were 14,274 persons arrested, being an increase of 86 over 1848.

CURIOUS SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY.

It has long been known, and any one may test the fact, that when a drop of water is placed upon a piece of iron, red or white hot, and the hotter the better, instead of being instantly converted into vapor, it draws itself up into a globular shape, and is not even boiled by the intense heat. It occurred to a French philosopher, that this fact might explain certain phenomena, of men being able to handle or walk upon intensely hot substances, and upon making the experiment, he found that he could put his hands in melted iron, or walk over it barefoot, with ease. Any person can do this when the skin is moist, the only caution necessary being not to move the hand or other part in contact with the incandescent metal too quickly. The experiment must be done deliberately, with the iron or other metal at a white heat, or if melted, still better. This fact accounts very simply for some astonishing miracles which it has hitherto required no little faith to believe.

Walworth County, Town of Hudson, ss. } In Justice's Court.

To Azariah Parrish:—You are hereby notified that a writ of attachment has been issued against you, and your property attached to satisfy the demand of Jirah B. Wheelan, amounting to seventy dollars. Now, unless you shall appear before William P. Lyon, a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, at his office in said town on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1850, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property sold to pay the debt. Dated this 20th day of February, A. D. 1850.

JIRAH B. WHEELAN.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

H. P. Brown,	$1,00 to Vol. IV No. 1
John A. Williams.	1,00 to Vol. V No. 12
Jeremiah Jenks,	2,00 to Vol. V No. 47
James Waldrum.	2,00 to Vol. V No. 47

POSTSCRIPT OF A LETTER TO PRES. STRANG.

J. C. Brewster is leading off many to believe that the Book of Mormon is the fullness of the gospel, and standard for the Jew and Gentile also, and for the confounding of all false doctrine. As you court discussion with all sects, I hope you will not pass this by unnoticed, but take him up, prove his positions wrong by fair argument, remembering that truth will triumph over error. Let not the little stripling boy gain victory over Joseph's successor, except in truth. He solicits controversy in the spirit of meekness and great courage. MARY J. STILES.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 30th, 1850.

MRS. M. J. STILES:—Yours of the 15th inst. came to hand this evening, and as the postscript is entirely of a public nature, and evidently intended to be used as capital in a public way, I answer promptly, and in a way that those for whom it is designed will have the full benefit of it.

First of all, then, you write to me, from my home, while I am on a hurried journey, and two thousand miles travel from home, to propose to me to discuss something (I don't know what) with somebody in that vicinity. It must be a very strange haste that cannot wait till my return to make that proposition. I am here laboring incessantly, and employing a faithful clerk constantly, without being able to keep up with my duties, and could not even learn what you propose to have me discuss with Mr. Brewster before I shall be on my way back.—If any one had intended to have such a discussion, the proposition would have come either before I left home or after my return. Making it under the circumstances shows that the design is merely to seek an occasion to accuse me of refusing to discuss. That design will signally fail.

But how am I to know that J. C. Brewster solicits controversy? True, Mrs. Stiles tells me so. But who am I to believe? Mr. Brewster himself, or a woman, who, I doubt not, has neither seen him or heard of him except by common rumor? I once had the pleasure of a correspondence with Mr. James Colin Brewster, and I learned from him a very different state of facts from what you represent. In addition to that Mr. Brewster has for nearly three years past had in his hands a challenge signed by myself and one John E. Page, then a member of the church, to all our opponents, and extensively published, and he has never responded to it. If he wished to hold a discussion he is quite as likely to be aware of that fact as you are, and fully able to inform me of it.

But there is another reason why I cannot take the assurance in your letter. There is duplicity in your writing. You tell me in the beginning that he "is leading off many." Leading them off from what? No man can understand you otherwise than that he is leading them off from the truth. Yet before you get through it leaks out very plainly that you think he is leading them to the truth. Frankness would have answered your purpose every way as well. It needs no maneuvering to get me into a discussion, when I can find an opponent.

Moreover I can never submit to any such rule of discussion as you propose. A pretty idea it is that after he has been before the public some twelve years without offering one iota of evidence that his positions are true, I am now called on to show them false. Most certainly truth will prevail. If he has got any truth, why don't he thrust it forward to the struggle, instead of keeping it hid up at home waiting for error to come and burrow it out?

You can, perhaps, tell what you mean by saying, "let not a little stripling boy gain a victory over Joseph's successor," &c. I cannot. I am doubtless more of a stripling than he, though not quite so much of a boy, perhaps: and if I was born a few years first, then he was in the church some twelve years before me. If twelve years seigniority in the faith leaves him a stripling, what would I be but for the gift that is in me by prophecy and the laying on of hands, by which I have advanced step by step to my present standing?

But in your attempt to state positions upon which to raise a question for debate, every word is marked with an ill concealed captiousness. You state three positions. 1st. That the Book of Mormon is the fullness of the gospel. 2d. That it is the standard for Jew and Gentile. 3d. That it is for the confounding of

POSTSCRIPT OF A LETTER TO PRES. STRANG.

J. C. Brewster is leading off many to believe that the Book of Mormon is the fullness of the gospel, and standard for the Jew and Gentile also, and for the confounding of all false doctrine. As you court discussion with all sects, I hope you will not pass this by unnoticed, but take him up, prove his positions wrong by fair argument, remembering that truth will triumph over error. Let not the little stripling boy gain victory over Joseph's successor, except in truth. He solicits controversy in the spirit of meekness and great courage. MARY J. STILES.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 30th, 1850.

MRS. M. J. STILES:—Yours of the 15th inst. came to hand this evening, and as the postscript is entirely of a public nature, and evidently intended to be used as capital in a public way, I answer promptly, and in a way that those for whom it is designed will have the full benefit of it.

First of all, then, you write to me, from my home, while I am on a hurried journey, and two thousand miles travel from home, to propose to me to discuss something (I don't know what) with somebody in that vicinity. It must be a very strange haste that cannot wait till my return to make that proposition. I am here laboring incessantly, and employing a faithful clerk constantly, without being able to keep up with my duties, and could not even learn what you propose to have me discuss with Mr. Brewster before I shall be on my way back.—If any one had intended to have such a discussion, the proposition would have come either before I left home or after my return. Making it under the circumstances shows that the design is merely to seek an occasion to accuse me of refusing to discuss. That design will signally fail.

But how am I to know that J. C. Brewster solicits controversy? True, Mrs. Stiles tells me so. But who am I to believe? Mr. Brewster himself, or a woman, who, I doubt not, has neither seen him or heard of him except by common rumor? I once had the pleasure of a correspondence with Mr. James Colin Brewster, and I learned from him a very different state of facts from what you represent. In addition to that Mr. Brewster has for nearly three years past had in his hands a challenge signed by myself and one John E. Page, then a member of the church, to all our opponents, and extensively published, and he has never responded to it. If he wished to hold a discussion he is quite as likely to be aware of that fact as you are, and fully able to inform me of it.

But there is another reason why I cannot take the assurance in your letter. There is duplicity in your writing. You tell me in the beginning that he "is leading off many." Leading them off from what? No man can understand you otherwise than that he is leading them off from the truth. Yet before you get through it leaks out very plainly that you think he is leading them to the truth. Frankness would have answered your purpose every way as well. It needs no maneuvering to get me into a discussion, when I can find an opponent.

Moreover I can never submit to any such rule of discussion as you propose. A pretty idea it is that after he has been before the public some twelve years without offering one iota of evidence that his positions are true, I am now called on to show them false. Most certainly truth will prevail. If he has got any truth, why don't he thrust it forward to the struggle, instead of keeping it hid up at home waiting for error to come and burrow it out?

You can, perhaps, tell what you mean by saying, "let not a little stripling boy gain a victory over Joseph's successor," &c. I cannot. I am doubtless more of a stripling than he, though not quite so much of a boy, perhaps: and if I was born a few years first, then he was in the church some twelve years before me. If twelve years seigniority in the faith leaves him a stripling, what would I be but for the gift that is in me by prophecy and the laying on of hands, by which I have advanced step by step to my present standing?

But in your attempt to state positions upon which to raise a question for debate, every word is marked with an ill concealed captiousness. You state three positions. 1st. That the Book of Mormon is the fullness of the gospel. 2d. That it is the standard for Jew and Gentile. 3d. That it is for the confounding of all false doctrine.

Now, if the Book of Mormon is the fullness of the gospel, are the Old and New Testaments the fullness of the gospel? Is the book of Doctrine and Covenants any part of the fullness of the gospel? When you say it is the fullness of the gospel, do you mean that it contains the true gospel in conjunction with the other books named, or that it alone is the fullness of the gospel?

When you (or Mr. Brewster) say the Book of Mormon is the standard for Jew and Gentile, do you mean it alone is standard, and the Bible and book of Doctrine and Covenants is not standard? Or do you mean that it in conjunction with the rest of the sacred oracles is the standard? Do you mean to be understood that the church of the living God is no longer "the pillar and ground of the truth?" (1st Tim. iii. 15;) and that we are not any longer to adhere to the traditions we have received from the Apostles?

And when God joins the stick of Ephraim and the stick of Judah into one stick in the hands of his prophet, do you mean to be understood that the stick of Judah is to be put there merely as waste paper, and the stick of Ephraim alone to be of authority? And by the assertion that the Book of Mormon is for the confounding of all false doctrine, do you mean to be understood that it alone is for that use? that neither the rest of the sacred scriptures nor a faithful ministry are for that purpose?

By the way, I should wish to know, before entering into a discussion on such propositions, how much you mean by the Book of Mormon? Do you limit your idea to the translated book, as published? or do you intend to include all the book, translated and untranslated? And if you mean only the translated, do you also leave out so much of that book as asserts that a prophet of the tribe of Judah shall translate a subsequent part, and that that shall be for the confounding of false doctrine?

Unless you can find some more definite and less ambiguous language in which to state Mr. Brewster's propositions, you can readily see that these questions must all be answered before it would be possible to make an issue. If after they are settled there is yet any difference between me and the Brewsterites on these points, then I can only say Brewsterism is a greater folly than I ever thought it was. I was aware that their darkness was great, but did not know nor suspect that it was so great as to see no truth; nothing standard; no means of confounding false doctrine but the Book of Mormon alone. Nor did I ever suspect them of the folly of asserting that the Book of Mormon contained all that was necessary, and yet the other books of inspired scripture were unnecessary. And if they do not make one or other of these assertions, what do they claim for the Book of Mormon more than the church has ever claimed?

Permit me to add that I have one unvarying rule in regard to entering into discussions, which, for the convenience of all, I will here put on record. I always debate with the opponents of the truth, when they either assume positions sufficiently plausible to be likely to deceive; or when their positions, whatever they be, are supported by a respectable degree of talent, character or influence; or when they are at least partially successful in making converts to their errors. I am not aware that either of these facts exist in Brewsterism, or its advocates. But I am willing to assume that they do. Whenever or wherever I meet them I am ready to dispose of every pretension they can set up as the church of God in half the time that it will occupy any of them to tell what Brewsterism consists in, so effectually that every man who believes in the prophet Joseph shall be ashamed of having given their pretensions a serious thought.

It is well known to every person who has lived in Voree, that no person has ever offered himself there as a religious teacher but I have given him an opportunity of being heard. And we have the testimony of your quondam champion of Brewsterism that I have silenced every opponent without leaving him an inch of all false doctrine.

Now, if the Book of Mormon is the fullness of the gospel, are the Old and New Testaments the fullness of the gospel? Is the book of Doctrine and Covenants any part of the fullness of the gospel? When you say it is the fullness of the gospel, do you mean that it contains the true gospel in conjunction with the other books named, or that it alone is the fullness of the gospel?

When you (or Mr. Brewster) say the Book of Mormon is the standard for Jew and Gentile, do you mean it alone is standard, and the Bible and book of Doctrine and Covenants is not standard? Or do you mean that it in conjunction with the rest of the sacred oracles is the standard? Do you mean to be understood that the church of the living God is no longer "the pillar and ground of the truth?" (1st Tim. iii. 15;) and that we are not any longer to adhere to the traditions we have received from the Apostles?

And when God joins the stick of Ephraim and the stick of Judah into one stick in the hands of his prophet, do you mean to be understood that the stick of Judah is to be put there merely as waste paper, and the stick of Ephraim alone to be of authority? And by the assertion that the Book of Mormon is for the confounding of all false doctrine, do you mean to be understood that it alone is for that use? that neither the rest of the sacred scriptures nor a faithful ministry are for that purpose?

By the way, I should wish to know, before entering into a discussion on such propositions, how much you mean by the Book of Mormon? Do you limit your idea to the translated book, as published? or do you intend to include all the book, translated and untranslated? And if you mean only the translated, do you also leave out so much of that book as asserts that a prophet of the tribe of Judah shall translate a subsequent part, and that that shall be for the confounding of false doctrine?

Unless you can find some more definite and less ambiguous language in which to state Mr. Brewster's propositions, you can readily see that these questions must all be answered before it would be possible to make an issue. If after they are settled there is yet any difference between me and the Brewsterites on these points, then I can only say Brewsterism is a greater folly than I ever thought it was. I was aware that their darkness was great, but did not know nor suspect that it was so great as to see no truth; nothing standard; no means of confounding false doctrine but the Book of Mormon alone. Nor did I ever suspect them of the folly of asserting that the Book of Mormon contained all that was necessary, and yet the other books of inspired scripture were unnecessary. And if they do not make one or other of these assertions, what do they claim for the Book of Mormon more than the church has ever claimed?

Permit me to add that I have one unvarying rule in regard to entering into discussions, which, for the convenience of all, I will here put on record. I always debate with the opponents of the truth, when they either assume positions sufficiently plausible to be likely to deceive; or when their positions, whatever they be, are supported by a respectable degree of talent, character or influence; or when they are at least partially successful in making converts to their errors. I am not aware that either of these facts exist in Brewsterism, or its advocates. But I am willing to assume that they do. Whenever or wherever I meet them I am ready to dispose of every pretension they can set up as the church of God in half the time that it will occupy any of them to tell what Brewsterism consists in, so effectually that every man who believes in the prophet Joseph shall be ashamed of having given their pretensions a serious thought.

It is well known to every person who has lived in Voree, that no person has ever offered himself there as a religious teacher but I have given him an opportunity of being heard. And we have the testimony of your quondam champion of Brewsterism that I have silenced every opponent without leaving him an inch of ground to stand on. To that place I shall ever return, like Rob. Roy to his native hills.

You represent that Brewsterism is making converts. It is not so. I doubt there being one person in Wisconsin who has any faith in it. The only bond of union among those called Brewsterites is opposition to the church.—There is no unity of faith among them. And, what is more, there is no means of producing it. Neither is there any stability of faith among them. But they are driven about by every wind of doctrine. Each one is like a runaway boy, who, too restless or too wicked to submit to parental control, first runs from his father's house, and in turn from every house where he seeks a home, constantly becoming more and more roving, till he can scarcely be found a week in the same house; or like a girl of lascivious habits, who seeks a lover in every new face, and whose affections, like an old glove, will fit any hand. They have followed in the wake of each aspirant who has raised his head barely above water, not because there was any agreement between their several faiths, but because each such made a common centre of opposition.

In one fact, however, there has been an entire likeness, though but little agreement. And that is, they have all gone backwards. All have denied parts of the revelations in the book of Doctrine and Covenants. All have denied more or less of the power of the priesthood, except their own, which they both adhere to and magnify. All have denied the authority of the church. Not merely have they denied the authority of the true church, but the authority of any church; making even that which they call the church a mere cipher, which they may treat with contempt as often as its decisions are not pleasing to them. And all have departed from some very important principles of doctrine, generally going back to mere sectarian ground.

Worst of all, they all contradict the very things which they say God has revealed to them; all I mean who ever pretended to revelations, from J. E. Page down. Since last July he has changed his position at least eight times. Does any one suppose he has changed his opinion as often? He believes no more in Brewsterism than in Methodism. And would just as soon preach the latter, if it brought him a better opportunity of spite on the church.—If any deluded victim should follow him off, it would be but to run the same eccentric course which the pseudoes have been marking out for years, forever seeking an abiding place and never finding it, following every upstart and none long.

I shall make no apology for having written this letter in a style which I never use to a woman. I have not for a single moment mistaken the tool for the workman; but, having looked constantly beyond the instrument to the hand which held it, have, in my mind, constantly addressed myself to J. E. Page. It is no new thing for him to flinch from the responsibility of directly avowing that which he chooses to advocate. When he and I had thrown down our gauntlet against the world and had it picked up by a Roman Catholic, he proposed to enter the lists in the name of a woman or a boy, so that if we happened to have the worst of it the shame would not fall on us. Conscious of my ability to justify the truth, I would not do it. Consequently his name was dropped, and I took up the discussion alone. On this occasion he is more fortunate. He can put forward a woman to bear the defeat if his position fails, and step in to claim the victory if it succeeds.

But as to a discussion, if it is wanted in writing for publication, there is not the slightest probability that I shall ever bestow another moment's time upon it. I cannot waste my time on a precious apostate party, which, after a separate existence of thirteen years or more, numbers perhaps fifty or one hundred persons in its nominal ranks, and remains to be yet licked into shape.

I have, however, just consulted Mr. Charles J. Douglass, a clever boy of sixteen, and he has consented that if Mr. Page, Mr. Brewster, or any other Brewsterite leader, will take up ground to stand on. To that place I shall ever return, like Rob. Roy to his native hills.

You represent that Brewsterism is making converts. It is not so. I doubt there being one person in Wisconsin who has any faith in it. The only bond of union among those called Brewsterites is opposition to the church.—There is no unity of faith among them. And, what is more, there is no means of producing it. Neither is there any stability of faith among them. But they are driven about by every wind of doctrine. Each one is like a runaway boy, who, too restless or too wicked to submit to parental control, first runs from his father's house, and in turn from every house where he seeks a home, constantly becoming more and more roving, till he can scarcely be found a week in the same house; or like a girl of lascivious habits, who seeks a lover in every new face, and whose affections, like an old glove, will fit any hand. They have followed in the wake of each aspirant who has raised his head barely above water, not because there was any agreement between their several faiths, but because each such made a common centre of opposition.

In one fact, however, there has been an entire likeness, though but little agreement. And that is, they have all gone backwards. All have denied parts of the revelations in the book of Doctrine and Covenants. All have denied more or less of the power of the priesthood, except their own, which they both adhere to and magnify. All have denied the authority of the church. Not merely have they denied the authority of the true church, but the authority of any church; making even that which they call the church a mere cipher, which they may treat with contempt as often as its decisions are not pleasing to them. And all have departed from some very important principles of doctrine, generally going back to mere sectarian ground.

Worst of all, they all contradict the very things which they say God has revealed to them; all I mean who ever pretended to revelations, from J. E. Page down. Since last July he has changed his position at least eight times. Does any one suppose he has changed his opinion as often? He believes no more in Brewsterism than in Methodism. And would just as soon preach the latter, if it brought him a better opportunity of spite on the church. If any deluded victim should follow him off, it would be but to run the same eccentric course which the pseudoes have been marking out for years, forever seeking an abiding place and never finding it, following every upstart and none long.

I shall make no apology for having written this letter in a style which I never use to a woman. I have not for a single moment mistaken the tool for the workman; but, having looked constantly beyond the instrument to the hand which held it, have, in my mind, constantly addressed myself to J. E. Page. It is no new thing for him to flinch from the responsibility of directly avowing that which he chooses to advocate. When he and I had thrown down our gauntlet against the world and had it picked up by a Roman Catholic, he proposed to enter the lists in the name of a woman or a boy, so that if we happened to have the worst of it the shame would not fall on us. Conscious of my ability to justify the truth, I would not do it. Consequently his name was dropped, and I took up the discussion alone. On this occasion he is more fortunate. He can put forward a woman to bear the defeat if his position fails, and step in to claim the victory if it succeeds.

But as to a discussion, if it is wanted in writing for publication, there is not the slightest probability that I shall ever bestow another moment's time upon it. I cannot waste my time on a precious apostate party, which, after a separate existence of thirteen years or more, numbers perhaps fifty or one hundred persons in its nominal ranks, and remains to be yet licked into shape.

I have, however, just consulted Mr. Charles J. Douglass, a clever boy of sixteen, and he has consented that if Mr. Page, Mr. Brewster, or any other Brewsterite leader, will take up that cause, he will enter into a discussion in defence of the church of God. I therefore offer him as the champion of the church, and wish it to be distinctly understood that if he is defeated we consider the cause defeated, and acknowledge that any cause which cannot be maintained against Brewsterism by a stripling of sixteen is not fit to be defended.

Charlie wishes me to say further, that if Mr. Page is to be his opponent, it will not be necessary for him to wait for him. The ablest works from the pen of Mr. Page being in defence of the prophetic authority of the successor of Joseph, and in opposition to all such interlopers as J. C. Brewster, Mr. Page may busy himself for some time to come in answering his own arguments. After he has disposed of that matter to his full satisfaction, inasmuch as Mr. Page has often asserted that he knew by revelation of God that Mr. Strang was a prophet, and the true successor of Joseph in the Presidency of the church of the living God, Mr. Donglass wishes Mr. Page to answer him without equivocation or evasion, whether he lied at the several times when he gave that testimony, or lies now when he contradicts it. If Mr. Douglass is not quite old enough for a debate now, he doubtless will be by the time Page gets through these preliminaries.

Mr. Douglass would like to know further when, where and by what acts Mr. Brewster became a Prophet, a Translator, &c., and under what particular law he holds the office. As Mr. Brewster has never seen fit to make known these facts, it is perhaps necessary to remind him that if he keeps his light under a bushel we cannot see it shine.

No, Mrs. Stiles, there is no difference between pseudoism and sectarianism, except that pseudoism is a little the most persecuting and revengeful. Both are in Babylon, and wish to stay there. Both deny the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Both reject the key of knowledge and the unity of the faith. Both struggle blindly and continually on some one transient question. Neither can look at the temple of all truth. Neither can brook the idea of additional knowledge, or eventual perfection. Neither hopes to be a Son of God.—Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

TO THE SAINTS AND ELDERS ABROAD.

Our subscription list is not very large, and there being many who have not paid their subscription, it is with the utmost difficulty that we obtain money to keep up the press and other necessary expenses. In fact we have had to borrow money to furnish the office with paper. How long shall these things remain so? Until the saints take an interest in the kingdom of God, subscribe for the Herald, and pay in advance. We do not wish those who have subscribed and paid in advance to apply these remarks to themselves, as they are intended only for those who have not.

There are many Elders sending for the paper and no subscription money. They may be obliged to use the money to go from place to place, or to come home. This should not be. The brethren should think that if the Elders spend their time in carrying the gospel to them that they are in duty bound to feed and help them to support their families, as well as to suppose that the saints here can support themselves and the families of the Elders and keep up the paper. If the brethren throughout the United States would live as we do they would be able to pay for their paper. And if they would send the money that they spend at the groceries, and what they pay for tea, coffee and tobacco, they would accomplish two things, viz.: keep the will of God, and help to build up Zion.

There are brethren who take the common newspapers of the day, and forget to take or pay for the Herald. Will you patronize your enemies in preference to those who are laboring day and night to build up the cause of God? If the saints valued eternal life as much as they do the gold of California, Zion would flourish, and the saints would rejoice in the knowledge of the Lord; for the Lord would reveal unto them the mysteries of his kingdom, and would make them a kingdom of priests, and that day of rest so long looked for would be ushered in, and Jesus would come and dwell with his saints.

We would also say to the Elders and saints in Canada, that we cannot send papers there unless the money is paid in advance; for we have to pay the postage on them to the line, which costs us the sum of seventy-eight cents on each subscriber's paper for a year. By occasionally sending a paper a short time longer than it is paid for, in the expectation of a remittance, we have nearly paid out as much money for our Canada subscribers as we have received from them. This should not be, especially in our present circumstances. We hope all our subscribers will be more punctual in future.

that cause, he will enter into a discussion in defence of the church of God. I therefore offer him as the champion of the church, and wish it to be distinctly understood that if he is defeated we consider the cause defeated, and acknowledge that any cause which cannot be maintained against Brewsterism by a stripling of sixteen is not fit to be defended.

Charlie wishes me to say further, that if Mr. Page is to be his opponent, it will not be necessary for him to wait for him. The ablest works from the pen of Mr. Page being in defence of the prophetic authority of the successor of Joseph, and in opposition to all such interlopers as J. C. Brewster, Mr. Page may busy himself for some time to come in answering his own arguments. After he has disposed of that matter to his full satisfaction, inasmuch as Mr. Page has often asserted that he knew by revelation of God that Mr. Strang was a prophet, and the true successor of Joseph in the Presidency of the church of the living God, Mr. Donglass wishes Mr. Page to answer him without equivocation or evasion, whether he lied at the several times when he gave that testimony, or lies now when he contradicts it. If Mr. Douglass is not quite old enough for a debate now, he doubtless will be by the time Page gets through these preliminaries.

Mr. Douglass would like to know further when, where and by what acts Mr. Brewster became a Prophet, a Translator, &c., and under what particular law he holds the office. As Mr. Brewster has never seen fit to make known these facts, it is perhaps necessary to remind him that if he keeps his light under a bushel we cannot see it shine.

No. Mrs. Stiles, there is no difference between pseudoism and sectarianism, except that pseudoism is a little the most persecuting and revengeful. Both are in Babylon, and wish to stay there. Both deny the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Both reject the key of knowledge and the unity of the faith. Both struggle blindly and continually on some one transient question. Neither can look at the temple of all truth. Neither can brook the idea of additional knowledge, or eventual perfection. Neither hopes to be a Son of God.—Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

TO THE SAINTS AND ELDERS ABROAD.

Our subscription list is not very large, and there being many who have not paid their subscription, it is with the utmost difficulty that we obtain money to keep up the press and other necessary expenses. In fact we have had to borrow money to furnish the office with paper. How long shall these things remain so? Until the saints take an interest in the kingdom of God, subscribe for the Herald, and pay in advance. We do not wish those who have subscribed and paid in advance to apply these remarks to themselves, as they are intended only for those who have not.

There are many Elders sending for the paper and no subscription money. They may be obliged to use the money to go from place to place, or to come home. This should not be. The brethren should think that if the Elders spend their time in carrying the gospel to them that they are in duty bound to feed and help them to support their families, as well as to suppose that the saints here can support themselves and the families of the Elders and keep up the paper. If the brethren throughout the United States would live as we do they would be able to pay for their paper. And if they would send the money that they spend at the groceries, and what they pay for tea, coffee and tobacco, they would accomplish two things, viz.: keep the will of God, and help to build up Zion.

There are brethren who take the common newspapers of the day, and forget to take or pay for the Herald. Will you patronize your enemies in preference to those who are laboring day and night to build up the cause of God? If the saints valued eternal life as much as they do the gold of California, Zion would flourish, and the saints would rejoice in the knowledge of the Lord; for the Lord would reveal unto them the mysteries of his kingdom, and would make them a kingdom of priests, and that day of rest so long looked for would be ushered in, and Jesus would come and dwell with his saints.

We would also say to the Elders and saints in Canada, that we cannot send papers there unless the money is paid in advance; for we have to pay the postage on them to the line, which costs us the sum of seventy-eight cents on each subscriber's paper for a year. By occasionally sending a paper a short time longer than it is paid for, in the expectation of a remittance, we have nearly paid out as much money for our Canada subscribers as we have received from them. This should not be, especially in our present circumstances. We hope all our subscribers will be more punctual in future.

POETRY.

Some go to church for the walk;
Some go there to laugh and talk;
Some go there to see a friend;
Some go there their time to spend.

Some go there for observation;
Some go there for speculation;
Some go there to dose and nod;
But few go there to worship God.

E. D. M.

WAGES.

While the owner of blocks of dwellings and lofty warehouses is annually becoming richer without exerting a muscle or a faculty, by the silent increase in the price of his property; and while the reflux of the golden tide which for so many years set toward Europe, is augmenting the price of almost every necessary, the market value of human industry depreciates instead of advancing. In fourteen years rents have gone up fifty per cent; but wages are lower now than they were in 1835–6. How is this? Why has labor been left at the foot of the ladder, while property has been traveling up two steps at a time? Is this process to go on? Are food and shelter to continue growing dearer and dearer, while the remuneration of the mechanic and working-man remains unchanged? It would seem so, indeed, if we are to judge of the future by the past. And if the price of labor is thus to remain at a stand-still, while all that wealth controls is acquiring an added value every year, the consequence must be that our money kings and our toiling millions will at last occupy the same relative positions as the aristocracy and the "lower classes" of the old world.

The journeymen mechanics of this city, in full employment, probably do not earn, upon an average, more than $8 a week, and laboring men without a trade, not more than $3. How can a family be supported out of such pittances? The mechanic cannot hire a decent habitation for less than $100 a year. He cannot clothe himself, his wife, and, say two children, for less than $100 more, and $200 will barely provide them with food and fuel. Here, then, his entire wages are absorbed. Not a dollar for medicine or doctors' bills, or amusement, or to lay up as a provision for old age. And mind, he must have full employment from year's end to year's end, and never be sick, in order to live in this miserable fashion. Is this a fitting life for an intelligent citizen of this great and glorious country, so rich in natural resources, and capable of maintining in comfort and abundance twenty times its present population? What must the American mechanic think after looking around him and observing the countless interests connected with his labor; seeing how legislation is influenced by their products; how commerce rides the sea and sweeps over the land through his agency; how the comforts of the rich are enlarged by what he creates, and how much of the whole framework of society rests upon the stalwart shoulders of his class; what must he think we say, when he turns from the contemplation of his work to its meagre reward. Every blow struck by his hammer is a blow for his country, and every drop of his sweat is of more value than a globule of gold; and yet his compensation, if enough to keep him above actual want, is too small to answer any other drafts than those of imperious necessity. Leisure for his own improvement, and the means of educating his children, are, in most cases, out of the question. We refer now to the married journeyman mechanic. And if his pittance is inadequate, what must be the privations of the laborer and his family, with their three or four dollars per week.

The time has arrived when something must de done. The working classes feel it. They know that as the population of our large cities increases the necessaries of life must become dearer and dearer, and if wges are not to rise with food and rent, they must starve.—Combinations; trade unions; a thorough organization to fix their own price upon their own labor, instead of having it fixed for them by the money power—these are the only available means of escaping that condition of absolute dependence to which they are now tending. There is a peaceable, silent, but irresistible method by which labor, in the position it now occupies in this country, can exact justice from the employing classes. If the opportunity is allowed to pass, the time may come when the object cannot be so quietly achieved.—N. Y. Daily Times.

USEFUL HINTS.

If you feel ill toward any person, go at once and do them a favor, and your ill feelings will vanish at once. Try it.

If you harbor malice toward any human being, you cherish a worm in your heart that in time will eat out all its goodness.

While you are meditating revenge for a real or fancied injury, the devil is meditating another cord around your soul.

If you wish to be respected by every one, respect yourself, and treat every body respectfully, and your wishes will be realized.

If you wish to be truly polite, exhibit real kindness in the kindest manner—do this, and you will pass at par in any society without studying the rules of etiquette.

If you wish to cure a scolding wife, never fail to laugh with all your might, until she ceases—then kiss her.

If you wish to be happy, keep away from California—keep yourself usefully employed—live temperate in all things, and cultivate kind feelings toward all people, and your wish will be obtained.

If you wish for care, perplexity and misery, be selfish in all things—this is the shortest road to troubles.—Ex. paper.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

A family is society in miniature; home is its location; woman its presiding spirit; whatever destroys its primary features, must disturb the tranquility of its joys, introduce evil into its atmosphere of good; inflict miseries, not only on her, but on all its members; and affect the whole community, of which it forms a portion. The fountains of happiness thus rendered impure, send forth turbid waters to lay waste the land. Thus intimately is the family relation connected with the progress of society.

A Solemn Thought.—"No man liveth to himself." This is impossible. His light must radiate, his example must tell, his conversation must operate, his power must be felt; no man, whatever his situation, or his apparent insignificance, can "live to himself." He must do good or harm; prove either a blessing or a curse.—Daily Times.

A Seven-Rounded Latter.—The scaling-ladder which the christian soldier must use, has seven rounds—hearing, believing, loving, doing, suffering, striving, conquering. When the battle becomes triumph, then we need the ladder no more.—Ex. paper.

POETRY.

Some go to church for the walk;
Some go there to laugh and talk;
Some go there to see a friend;
Some go there their time to spend.

Some go there for observation;
Some go there for speculation;
Some go there to doze and nod;
But few go there to worship God.

E. D. M.

WAGES.

While the owner of blocks of dwellings and lofty warehouses is annually becoming richer without exerting a muscle or a faculty, by the silent increase in the price of his property; and while the reflux of the golden tide which for so many years set toward Europe, is augmenting the price of almost every necessary, the market value of human industry depreciates instead of advancing. In fourteen years rents have gone up fifty per cent; but wages are lower now than they were in 1835–6. How is this? Why has labor been left at the foot of the ladder, while property has been traveling up two steps at a time? Is this process to go on? Are food and shelter to continue growing dearer and dearer, while the remuneration of the mechanic and working-man remains unchanged? It would seem so, indeed, if we are to judge of the future by the past. And if the price of labor is thus to remain at a stand-still, while all that wealth controls is acquiring an added value every year, the consequence must be that our money kings and our toiling millions will at last occupy the same relative positions as the aristocracy and the "lower classes" of the old world.

The journeymen mechanics of this city, in full employment, probably do not earn, upon an average, more than $8 a week, and laboring men without a trade, not more than $3. How can a family be supported out of such pittances? The mechanic cannot hire a decent habitation for less than $100 a year. He cannot clothe himself, his wife, and, say two children, for less than $100 more, and $200 will barely provide them with food and fuel. Here, then, his entire wages are absorbed. Not a dollar for medicine or doctors' bills, or amusement, or to lay up as a provision for old age. And mind, he must have full employment from year's end to year's end, and never be sick, in order to live in this miserable fashion. Is this a fitting life for an intelligent citizen of this great and glorious country, so rich in natural resources, and capable of maintining in comfort and abundance twenty times its present population? What must the American mechanic think after looking around him and observing the countless interests connected with his labor; seeing how legislation is influenced by their products; how commerce rides the sea and sweeps over the land through his agency; how the comforts of the rich are enlarged by what he creates, and how much of the whole framework of society rests upon the stalwart shoulders of his class; what must he think we say, when he turns from the contemplation of his work to its meagre reward. Every blow struck by his hammer is a blow for his country, and every drop of his sweat is of more value than a globule of gold; and yet his compensation, if enough to keep him above actual want, is too small to answer any other drafts than those of imperious necessity. Leisure for his own improvement, and the means of educating his children, are, in most cases, out of the question. We refer now to the married journeyman mechanic. And if his pittance is inadequate, what must be the privations of the laborer and his family, with their three or four dollars per week.

The time has arrived when something must de done. The working classes feel it. They know that as the population of our large cities increases the necessaries of life must become dearer and dearer, and if wages are not to rise with food and rent, they must starve.—Combinations; trade unions; a thorough organization to fix their own price upon their own labor, instead of having it fixed for them by the money power—these are the only available means of escaping that condition of absolute dependence to which they are now tending. There is a peaceable, silent, but irresistible method by which labor, in the position it now occupies in this country, can exact justice from the employing classes. If the opportunity is allowed to pass, the time may come when the object cannot be so quietly achieved.—N. Y. Daily Times.

USEFUL HINTS.

If you feel ill toward any person, go at once and do them a favor and your ill feelings will vanish at once. Try it.

If you harbor malice toward any human being, you cherish a worm in your heart that in time will eat out all its goodness.

While you are meditating revenge for a real or fancied injury, the devil is meditating another cord around your soul.

If you wish to be respected by every one, respect yourself, and treat every body respectfully, and your wishes will be realized.

If you wish to be truly polite, exhibit real kindness in the kindest manner—do this, and you will pass at par in any society without studying the rules of etiquette.

If you wish to cure a scolding wife, never fail to laugh with all your might, until she ceases—then kiss her.

If you wish to be happy, keep away from California—keep yourself usefully employed—live temperate in all things, and cultivate kind feelings toward all people, and your wish will be obtained.

If you wish for care, perplexity and misery, be selfish in all things—this is the shortest road to troubles.—Ex. paper.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

A family is society in miniature; home is its location; woman its presiding spirit; whatever destroys its primary features, must disturb the trauquility of its joys, introduce evil into its atmosphere of good; inflict miseries, not only on her, but on all its members, and affect the whole community, of which it forms a portion. The fountains of happiness thus rendered impure, send forth turbid waters to lay waste the land. Thus intimately is the family relation connected with the progress of society.

A Solemn Thought.—"No man liveth to himself." This is impossible. His light must radiate, his example must tell, his conversation must operate, his power must be felt; no man, whatever his situation, or his apparent insignificance, can "live to himself." He must do good or harm; prove either a blessing or a curse.—Daily Times.

A Seven-Rounded Latter.—The scaling-ladder which the christian soldier must use has seven rounds—hearing, believing, loving, doing, suffering, striving, conquering. When the battle becomes triumph, then we need the ladder no more.—Ex. paper.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 50.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. FEB. 28, 1850. [WHOLE No. 166.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS;

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 31st, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—Some time since I read an article in the Herald, which, though in the main sound, contained a very great error in the interpretatation of this scripture: "No prophecy of scripture is of any private interpretation." 2d Peter i. 20. The writer interprets the word 'private' as synonymous with 'secret,' which is not the case. Had Peter intended to express that sense he would have used the word secret, and thus expressed his idea, instead of leaving it to be guessed out. The word private does not mean secret. We call that private property which belongs to individuals, public which belongs to the State, town, church or some municipality.

Those are private men who are engaged in their business, public who are doing official duty as public officers. An act of Legislature concerning the public at large is always spoken of as a public act, but an act to change a name, grant a divorce, or charter a private company, is denominated a private act. When a lawyer or judge expresses an opinion on a legal or judicial question in his private conversation, we speak of it as his private opinion; but if the lawyer, on the consultation of a client, or the judge in deciding the cause expresses one, we speak of it as his professional, official or public opinion.

All law is made by public authority, and not by the authority of mere private persons; and so all law is interpreted by public authority, rather than by that of mere private persons. And because the law was made by the Legislature, a public body elected for that purpose, it is interpreted by judges, also public officers, appointed to be its public interpreters.

Peter most aptly expresses this truth concerning the law of God in saying that "no prophecy of scripture is of any private interpretation," 2d Peter, i. 20, and in the next verse gives the reason for it, because the prophecies themselves were given by public authority. "For the prophecy came not by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Who are these holy men of God? The prophets of old, whom God placed in authority above people, princes and kings. And they spake not by private authority; not by the will of man; not as individuals who consider their opinions as good as any other person's merely; but they spoke by public authority; by the will of God, as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, which spirit they had in them as one of the gifts of their calling; not merely for their own edification, but for the office work of their ministry; given to them by prophecy and the putting on of hands.

These prophecies being thus given by public authority were the subjects of interpretation by the public authority established in the same government. That is, they were the subjects of public or authorized interpretation. Jesus Christ, Peter, Paul and others were appointed, and qualified of God by the gift that was given them for the work of their several ministries, to interpret them. But rebellious Jews then, as sectarians and rebellious saints now wrested them from their true interpretation, to their own destruction.

All laws are written to be understood, and to be understood by all who are subjected to

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 50.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, FEB. 28, 1850. [WHOLE No. 166.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 31st, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—Some time since I read an article in the Herald, which, though in the main sound, contained a very great error in the interpretatation of this scripture: "No prophecy of scripture is of any private interpretation." 2d Peter i. 20. The writer interprets the word 'private' as synonymous with 'secret,' which is not the case. Had Peter intended to express that sense he would have used the word secret, and thus expressed his idea, instead of leaving it to be guessed out. The word private does not mean secret. We call that private property which belongs to individuals, public which belongs to the State, town, church or some municipality.

Those are private men who are engaged in their business, public who are doing official duty as public officers. An act of Legislature concerning the public at large is always spoken of as a public act, but an act to change a name, grant a divorce, or charter a private company, is denominated a private act. When a lawyer or judge expresses an opinion on a legal or judicial question in his private conversation, we speak of it as his private opinion; but if the lawyer, on the consultation of a client, or the judge in deciding the cause expresses one, we speak of it as his professional, official or public opinion.

All law is made by public authority, and not by the authority of mere private persons; and so all law is interpreted by public authority, rather than by that of mere private persons. And because the law was made by the Legislature, a public body elected for that purpose, it is interpreted by judges, also public officers, appointed to be its public interpreters.

Peter most aptly expresses this truth concerning the law of God in saying that "no prophecy of scripture is of any private interpretation," 2d Peter, i. 20, and in the next verse gives the reason for it, because the prophecies themselves were given by public authority. "For the prophecy came not by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Who are these holy men of God? The prophets of old, whom God placed in authority above people, princes and kings. And they spake not by private authority; not by the will of man; not as individuals who consider their opinions as good as any other person's merely; but they spoke by public authority; by the will of God, as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, which spirit they had in them as one of the gifts of their calling; not merely for their own edification, but for the office work of their ministry; given to them by prophecy and the putting on of hands.

These prophecies being thus given by public authority were the subjects of interpretation by the public authority established in the same government. That is, they were the subjects of public or authorized interpretation. Jesus Christ, Peter, Paul and others were appointed, and qualified of God by the gift that was given them for the work of their several ministries, to interpret them. But rebellious Jews then, as sectarians and rebellious saints now wrested them from their true interpretation, to their own destruction.

All laws are written to be understood, and to be understood by all who are subjected to them. But all experience has shown that language is so imperfect that it fails to express ideas with perfect certainty, and that every law is differently construed by different persons. Consequently questions are continually arising concerning private rights, depending upon the intent and meaning of public laws. Each party giving his private interpretation, prepares to litigate with those who are of a different opinion, and therefore claim opposing rights. But as law is not of private interpretation, they bring it to the decision of a magistrate, a public officer, who gives a public interpretation ; that is, an interpretation by authority of the law, and thus decides the right. And though some private citizen of equal talent and learning with the public officer, or even of greater, should give a different interpretation, no good citizen thinks of saying that the interpretation of Mr. Strong, given in his private capacity, is as good as that of Judge Whiton, embodied in his decision as a Judge. They obey the mandate of Judge Whiton as a public interpreter and administrator of the law, whatever one or many of the private citizens may say to the contrary. "The children of this world" have learned that that which is spoken by authority is interpreted by authority.

Well did Christ say, "They are wiser than the children of light," for they, poor souls, often think that their private interpretations are better than all the wisdom that God has placed in the church. They will tell us with great gravity that they will not believe anything as doctrine, or do anything as duty, unless we can give them a satisfactory reason for it. But though they have no respect for the PRIESTHOOD which GOD has placed in the CHURCH, they have an abundance of it for the officers whom the people have placed in the State. For if a Gentile constable summonses them as jurors, or appraisers, they do not answer him that they are not satisfied of the duty and necessity of doing so, and therefore will not go. So if the Judge charges them that the true intent and meaning of the law is thus and thus, they do not answer him that they understand it otherwise, and will not regard his charge and decisions unless he shows satisfactory reasons to them.

But they respect the authority of an official decision above a thousand private interpretions. How strange that all their respect should be reserved for Gentile authority, which God has not set up, and will destroy. This conduct is the more inexcusable for the reason that the officers of the State have no special gift bestowed on them for the work of their offices, but are selected, and with very little wisdom too, in reference to the qualifications they already possess. Whereas the ministers of God's law are selected in the wisdom of God, to be the keepers, interpreters and administrators of his law, and have gifts given them from God expressly for the office work of their ministry.—1st Tim. iv. 14. 2d Tim. i. 6. Luke xxiv. 49.

Those who associate with the household of faith, and forsake not the assembling of themselves together, cannot fail of an enlightened understanding of the law of God. Leaving those who have been cast out to be unto them as heathen men, they avoid the corrupting influence of evil communications. Having themselves the gift of God's spirit, and having shepherds, teachers and ministers appointed of God, upon whom he has bestowed more abundantly of the same spirit, for the direction of all, they seldom find themselves in the wrong way; and as often as they begin to deviate from the road in which God would have them walk, they are curbed by a gentle and unchafing hand to ways of truth. Like the members of a well regulated family, all looking to the father as the common head, and the mother as his chief assistant; or a peaceable and prosperous nation, where litigation, turmoil and rebellion are unknown, every man honoring the sovereign and respecting the judges, and therefore never at a loss for his duty. Such a community never wrangle about the interpretation of the law.

But those who keep company with traitors, and discuss constitutional rights and legal interpretations with rebels, or, lifted up in pride, think they are just as able to dictate the affairs of State as the public officers who have them them. But all experience has shown that language is so imperfect that it fails to express ideas with perfect certainty, and that every law is differently construed by different persons. Consequently questions are continually arising concerning private rights, depending upon the intent and meaning of public laws. Each party giving his private interpretation, prepares to litigate with those who are of a different opinion, and therefore claim opposing rights. But as law is not of private interpretation, they bring it to the decision of a magistrate, a public officer, who gives a public interpretation; that is, an interpretation by authority of the law, and thus decides the right. And though some private citizen of equal talent and learning with the public officer, or even of greater, should give a different interpretation, no good citizen thinks of saying that the interpretation of Mr. Strong, given in his private capacity, is as good as that of Judge Whiton, embodied in his decision as a Judge. They obey the mandate of Judge Whiton as a public interpreter and administrator of the law, whatever one or many of the private citizens may say to the contrary. "The children of this world" have learned that that which is spoken by authority is interpreted by authority.

Well did Christ say, "They are wiser than the children of light," for they, poor souls, often think that their private interpretations are better than all the wisdom that God has placed in the church. They will tell us with great gravity that they will not believe anything as doctrine, or do anything as duty, unless we can give them a satisfactory reason for it. But though they have no respect for the PRIESTHOOD which GOD has placed in the CHURCH, they have an abundance of it for the officers whom the people have placed in the State. For if a Gentile constable summonses them as jurors, or appraisers, they do not answer him that they are not satisfied of the duty and necessity of doing so, and therefore will not go. So if the Judge charges them that the true intent and meaning of the law is thus and thus, they do not answer him that they understand it otherwise, and will not regard his charge and decisions unless he shows satisfactory reasons to them.

But they respect the authority of an official decision above a thousand private interpretions. How strange that all their respect should be reserved for Gentile authority, which God has not set up, and will destroy. This conduct is the more inexcusable for the reason that the officers of the State have no special gift bestowed on them for the work of their offices, but are selected, and with very little wisdom too, in reference to the qualifications they already possess. Whereas the ministers of God's law are selected in the wisdom of God, to be the keepers, interpreters and administrators of his law, and have gifts given them from God expressly for the office work of their ministry.—1st Tim. iv. 14. 2d Tim. i. 6. Luke xxiv. 49.

Those who associate with the household of faith, and forsake not the assembling of themselves together, cannot fail of an enlightened understanding of the law of God. Leaving those who have been cast out to be unto them as heathen men, they avoid the corrupting influence of evil communications. Having themselves the gift of God's spirit, and having shepherds, teachers and ministers appointed of God, upon whom he has bestowed more abundantly of the same spirit, for the direction of all, they seldom find themselves in the wrong way: and as often as they begin to deviate from the road in which God would have them walk, they are curbed by a gentle and unchafing hand to ways of truth. Like the members of a well regulated family, all looking to the father as the common head, and the mother as his chief assistant; or a peaceable and prosperous nation, where litigation, turmoil and rebellion are unknown, every man honoring the sovereign and respecting the judges, and therefore never at a loss for his duty. Such a community never wrangle about the interpretation of the law.

But those who keep company with traitors, and discuss constitutional rights and legal interpretations with rebels, or, lifted up in pride, think they are just as able to dictate the affairs of State as the public officers who have them in charge, are forever involving themselves in strife, frequently in disgrace and punishment. If by any means they obtain influence over large communities, they bring commotions, rebellions and all the miseries of internal strife and civil war; not unfrequently ending their career in banishment or blood; and sometimes causing most desirable privileges to be taken away from provinces and nations, as the only means of preserving stable government.

So, too, those who forsake the assembly of the saints to keep company with heathens, sectarians and the enemies of the church, and discuss constitutional questions with traitors, rebels, heady, high minded men and apostates, instead of looking to God's ministers, bring upon themselves all the curses written in the book of God's law, and upon all who are so miserable as to follow them everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

I know the hackneyed objection to this rule, "that it reduces a man to a child, or a cypher." But I believe that in the State no man is yet reduced to a child or a cypher, by the fact that he cannot set up his private interpretation of the law as an excuse for rebelling against Judges, & disobeying the mandates of officers. It seems to leave every man the privilege of exercising his judgment freely, and bring into exercise the most excellent talent. But it cures man of the pride of opinion that makes himself the standard of all wisdom. It teaches man that the base things of this world, which God has chosen, he has exalted above those that men honor, and that the gifts of his spirit, which he gives to all his saints for their edification, and more abundantly to those he has chosen to hold the keys of his kingdom, for the work of their ministry, are to be preferred above all natural talent and scholastic learning. It most effectually cures us of man-worship, by showing us that no man's real and lasting greatness is his own; that it is the grace of God bestowed upon him for the work whereunto God has chosen him.
Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 13th, 1850.

MR. FRANCIS COOPER,—DEAR BRO.:—Knowing that accounts of the prosperity of the work of the last days are always gladly received by the saints, and that communications from the traveling Elders help to make the "Herald" more interesting to its readers, I feel it my duty to address a few lines containing a short account of matters and things in the city. The work of God progresses here, and the saints are more united than they have ever been since I have been in Philadelphia. Two places for preaching in English, and one in German. Our prayer meetings are better attended than they ever have been before. Last week I baptized four. One gentleman and his lady, who have been married but a few weeks; and as they have begun to run a race in the church of God, may God bless them; for they have commenced two of the best works ever begun on earth, viz., to get married, and get into the kingdom of God. Let others do likewise.

A few days ago I was in New York. I attended a prayer meeting, where were some of my old friends, with whom I have spent some happy days, "a long time ago." The spirit of God was poured out, and we rejoiced together. All things are right in that quarter. God bless them.

By the by, President Adams called here a few days ago, and gave us a good stirring up, and passed on to Baltimore. From all quarters we hear the most flattering accounts of the work, while the Gentiles are suffering most cruelly from wrecks of packet ships, blowing up of steamboats, exploding of boilers in factories, riots after riots, fire after fire, murder succeeds murder in rapid succession, and nought but disorganization, ruin and death seems to flourish in the Devil's dominions. My soul rejoices in the work of the last days, and in the happy anticipation of meeting with all the saints in those places of gathering appointed by God, where we may keep his laws and live in principles of truth and chastity. Quite a number will start from this place early in the spring for Beaver Island. Yours for the kingdom of God, in charge, are forever involving themselves in strife, frequently in disgrace and punishment. If by any means they obtain influence over large communities, they bring commotions, rebellions and all the miseries of internal strife and civil war: not unfrequently ending their career in banishment or blood; and sometimes causing most desirable privileges to be taken away from provinces and nations, as the only means of preserving stable government.
THOS. W. BRAIDWOOD.

So, too, those who forsake the assembly of the saints to keep company with heathens, sectarians and the enemies of the church, and discuss constitutional questions with traitors, rebels, heady, high minded men and apostates, instead of looking to God's ministers, bring upon themselves all the curses written in the book of God's law, and upon all who are so miserable as to follow them everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

I know the hackneyed objection to this rule, "that it reduces a man to a child, or a cypher." But I believe that in the State no man is yet reduced to a child or a cypher, by the fact that he cannot set up his private interpretation of the law as an excuse for rebelling against Judges, & disobeying the mandates of officers. It seems to leave every man the privilege of exercising his judgment freely, and bring into exercise the most excellent talent. But it cures man of the pride of opinion that makes himself the standard of all wisdom. It teaches man that the base things of this world, which God has chosen, he has exalted above those that men honor, and that the gifts of his spirit, which he gives to all his saints for their edification, and more abundantly to those he has chosen to hold the keys of his kingdom, for the work of their ministry, are to be preferred above all natural talent and scholastic learning. It most effectually cures us of man-worship, by showing us that no man's real and lasting greatness is his own; that it is the grace of God bestowed upon him for the work whereunto God has chosen him. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 13th, 1850.

MR. FRANCIS COOPER,—DEAR BRO.:—Knowing that accounts of the prosperity of the work of the last days are always gladly received by the saints, and that communications from the traveling Elders help to make the "Herald" more interesting to its readers, I feel it my duty to address a few lines containing a short account of matters and things in the city. The work of God progresses here, and the saints are more united than they have ever been since I have been in Philadelphia. Two places for preaching in English, and one in German. Our prayer meetings are better attended than they ever have been before. Last week I baptized four. One gentleman and his lady, who have been married but a few weeks; and as they have begun to run a race in the church of God, may God bless them; for they have commenced two of the best works ever begun on earth, viz., to get married, and get into the kingdom of God. Let others do likewise.

A few days ago I was in New York. I attended a prayer meeting, where were some of my old friends, with whom I have spent some happy days, "a long time ago." The spirit of God was poured out, and we rejoiced together. All things are right in that quarter. God bless them.

By the by, President Adams called here a few days ago, and gave us a good stirring up, and passed on to Baltimore. From all quarters we hear the most flattering accounts of the work, while the Gentiles are suffering most cruelly from wrecks of packet ships, blowing up of steamboats, exploding of boilers in factories, riots after riots, fire after fire, murder succeeds murder in rapid succession, and nought but disorganization, ruin and death seems to flourish in the Devil's dominions. My soul rejoices in the work of the last days, and in the happy anticipation of meeting with all the saints in those places of gathering appointed by God, where we may keep his laws and live in principles of truth and chastity. Quite a number will start from this place early in the spring for Beaver Island. Yours for the kingdom of God,

THOS. W. BRAIDWOOD.

☞ The following extract we take from the "Olive Branch," the Brewsterite organ, for the purpose of making some remarks thereon. This we think is our privilege; for when its editor first asked us to exchange—speaking of it in the similitude of a son—he said: "It will be our greatest care to teach him truth and righteousness, and if in your presence he behaves with any impropriety, correct him; and if he is unmannerly and quarrelsome, or tells any untruths, flog him."

We do not know how much care has been taken to teach him "truth and righteousness," but one thing we do know, that "he" has shown himself rather unmannerly of late in telling "untruths" about us on the credit of a "Burlington Correspondent." Notwithstanding all this we have no disposition to "flog him," because we do not believe in flogging other people's children when they are not under our especial care. We believe the law makes parents and guardians responsible for the acts of children. Therefore we notify the "parents" of the "Olive Branch" that their little "son," besides telling fibs about us, is wickedly perverting the word of God, as we shall presently show. We would not, however, wish them to understand that we do this because "he" has done us any particular injury in so doing, or because we are afraid he will, but simply for the good of the "child."

"JOSEPH SMITH'S SUCCESSOR.

"At the present time there are so many who claim the 'authority' to preside over the church, by virtue of an appointment from Joseph, that we have concluded to give our views on the subject.

"When the church was first organized on the 6th of April, 1830, Joseph Smith was chosen or elected to preside over that body of people, and he continued to hold that office, with the consent of the church, until his death.—During the whole period, [upwards of fourteen years,] he was acknowledged by the whole church, with some trifling exceptions, to be the highest officer in that organization. He was the First President of the whole church. In the book of Doctrine and Covenants we find a 'revelation given to Joseph Smith, Jr., April 6th, 1830.' 'Behold, there shall be a record kept among you, and in it thou shalt be called a Seer, a Translator, a Prophet, an Apostle of Jesus Christ, an Elder of the church, through the will of God, and the grace of your Lord Jesus Christ.' See sec. xlvi. p. 1.

"This, let the reader observe, was the office to which Joseph was appointed on the day on which the church was first organized, and this is the office which is claimed by those who aspire to become Joseph's successors. In section xiv. par. 1 and 2, we find the following: 'O hearken, ye Elders of my church, and give an ear to the words which I shall speak unto you, for verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him that I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is no other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations, until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily, I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead, and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you that ye may not be deceived; that you may know that they are not of me.'

"All who believe this to be true must admit that no one could ever become Joseph's successor without being appointed to the same office and gifts by Joseph himself. This is a fact which all the different parties of the church are willing to admit; they are all agreed upon this one point. But if we inquire who received this appointment, we shall find that it is claimed by a great number of individuals, some of whom have succeeded in gathering a numerous company of followers; but by far the greatest number are left to advocate their claims alone, without the least success. The office

☞ The following extract we take from the "Olive Branch," the Brewsterite organ, for the purpose of making some remarks thereon. This we think is our privilege; for when its editor first asked us to exchange—speaking of it in the similitude of a son—he said: "It will be our greatest care to teach him truth and righteousness, and if in your presence he behaves with any impropriety, correct him; and if he is unmannerly and quarrelsome, or tells any untruths, flog him."

We do not know how much care has been taken to teach him "truth and righteousness," but one thing we do know, that "he" has shown himself rather unmannerly of late in telling "untruths" about us on the credit of a "Burlington Correspondent." Notwithstanding all this we have no disposition to "flog him," because we do not believe in flogging other people's children when they are not under our especial care. We believe the law makes parents and guardians responsible for the acts of children. Therefore we notify the "parents" of the "Olive Branch" that their little "son," besides telling fibs about us, is wickedly perverting the word of God, as we shall presently show. We would not, however, wish them to understand that we do this because "he" has done us any particular injury in so doing, or because we are afraid he will, but simply for the good of the "child."

"JOSEPH SMITH'S SUCCESSOR.

"At the present time there are so many who claim the 'authority' to preside over the church, by virtue of an appointment from Joseph, that we have concluded to give our views on the subject.

"When the church was first organized on the 6th of April, 1830, Joseph Smith was chosen or elected to preside over that body of people, and he continued to hold that office, with the consent of the church, until his death.—During the whole period, [upwards of fourteen years,] he was acknowledged by the whole church, with some trifling exceptions, to be the highest officer in that organization. He was the First President of the whole church. In the book of Doctrine and Covenants we find a 'revelation given to Joseph Smith, Jr., April 6th, 1830.' 'Behold, there shall be a record kept among you, and in it thou shalt be called a Seer, a Translator, a Prophet, an Apostle of Jesus Christ, an Elder of the church, through the will of God, and the grace of your Lord Jesus Christ.' See sec. xlvi. p. 1.

"This, let the reader observe, was the office to which Joseph was appointed on the day on which the church was first organized, and this is the office which is claimed by those who aspire to become Joseph's successors. In section xiv. par. 1 and 2, we find the following: 'O hearken, ye Elders of my church, and give an ear to the words which I shall speak unto you, for verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him that I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is no other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations, until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily, I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead, and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you that ye may not be deceived; that you may know that they are not of me.'

"All who believe this to be true must admit that no one could ever become Joseph's successor without being appointed to the same office and gifts by Joseph himself. This is a fact which all the different parties of the church are willing to admit; they are all agreed upon this one point. But if we inquire who received this appointment, we shall find that it is claimed by a great number of individuals, some of whom have succeeded in gathering a numerous company of followers; but by far the greatest number are left to advocate their claims alone, without the least success. The office that Joseph held could only be conferred upon ONE; the revelation says, he should only have power to appoint another. Will any of our readers say that Joseph had power to appoint two or more to the same gift and office, unless they were appointed to act togèther as a council, and not as individuals? No; they will all agree that but one could be legally appointed to that office. Hence, it is plain, that of all who claim that place, only one can be entitled to it, by legal authority; and if we can ascertain who this one is, it will prove all others destitute of any authority.

"We will now inquire who was legally appointed to be Joseph's successor, and we find the answer in the revelation of January 19th, 1841, par. 29, [book of Doctrine and Covenants,] 3d edition: 'And again, verily I say unto you, let my servant William be appointed, ordained and anointed as a counselor unto my servant Joseph, in the room of my servant Hyrum, that my servant Hyrum may take the office of priesthood and patriarch, which was appointed unto him by his father, by blessing and also by right; that from henceforth he shall hold the keys of the patriarchal blessings upon the heads of all my people; that whoever he blesses shall be blessed, and whoever he curses shall be cursed; that whatsoever he shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever he shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven; and from this time forth I appoint unto him that he may be a Prophet, and a Seer, and a Revelator, unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph.'"

☞ The foregoing is one of the most barefaced perversions that we have ever seen. It puts us in mind of an illiterate skeptic, who undertook to prove from the Bible that "there is no God," by quoting the last clause of the first sentence of the xiv. Psalm. The difference between the two is this: one quotes the fore part of a sentence and the other the last, both omitting the qualifying members. That the knavery or ignorance of Mr. Brewster may be perfectly apparent, we here insert the whole sentence:—

"And again, verily I say unto you, let my servant William be appointed, ordained, and anointed, as a counselor unto my servant Joseph, in the room of my servant Hyrum; that my servant Hyrum may take the office of priesthood and patriarch, which was appointed unto him by his father, by blessing and also by right, that from henceforth he shall hold the keys of the patriarchal blessings upon the heads of all my people, that whoever he blesses shall be blessed, and whoever he curseth shall be cursed: that whatsoever he shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever he shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven; and from this time forth, I appoint unto him that he may be a prophet and a seer and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph, that he may act in concert also with my servant Joseph, and that he shall receive counsel from my servant Joseph, who shall show unto him the keys whereby he may ask and receive, and be crowned with the same blessing, and glory, and honor, and priesthood, and gifts of the priesthood, that once were put upon him that was my servant Oliver Cowdery; that my servant Hyrum may bear record of the things which I shall show unto him, that his name may be had in honorable remembrance from generation to generation, forever and ever."—D. & C. sec ciii. p. 29.

This quotation plainly shows that Hyrum, as "a prophet and a seer and a revelator," was crowned with the "same PRIESTHOOD and GIFTS of the priesthood" that once were placed upon Oliver Cowdery; consequently he stood in the same relation to the church that Oliver did when standing in his office, to "act in concert" with Joseph as Oliver had done before. This conclusion is inevitable. Mr. Brewster might with the same propriety undertake to prove that Oliver was successor to Joseph, as to undertake to prove that Hyrum was; for they both held the "SAME priesthood and GIFTS of the priesthood."

On the day the church was organized Joseph was called by revelation of God "a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ,"

that Joseph held could only be conferred upon one: the revelation says, he should only have power to appoint another. Will any of our readers say that Joseph had power to appoint two or more to the same gift and office, unless they were appointed to act together as a council, and not as individuals? No; they will all agree that but one could be legally appointed to that office. Hence, it is plain, that of all who claim that place, only one can be entitled to it, by legal authority; and if we can ascertain who this one is, it will prove all others destitute of any authority.

"We will now inquire who was legally appointed to be Joseph's successor, and we find the answer in the revelation of January 19th, 1841, par. 29, [book of Doctrine and Covenants,] 3d edition: 'And again, verily I say unto you, let my servant William be appointed, ordained and anointed as a counselor unto my servant Joseph, in the room of my servant Hyrum, that my servant Hyrum may take the office of priesthood and patriarch, which was appointed unto him by his father, by blessing and also by right; that from henceforth he shall hold the keys of the patriarchal blessings upon the heads of all my people; that whoever he blesses shall be blessed, and whoever he curses shall be cursed; that whatsoever he shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever he shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven; and from this time forth I appoint unto him that he may be a Prophet, and a Seer, and a Revelator, unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph.'"

☞ The foregoing is one of the most barefaced perversions that we have ever seen. It puts us in mind of an illiterate skeptic, who undertook to prove from the Bible that "there is no God," by quoting the last clause of the first sentence of the xiv. Psalm. The difference between the two is this: one quotes the fore part of a sentence and the other the last, both omitting the qualifying members. That the knavery or ignorance of Mr. Brewster may be perfectly apparent, we here insert the whole sentence:—

"And again, verily I say unto you, let my servant William be appointed, ordained, and anointed, as a counselor unto my servant Joseph, in the room of my servant Hyrum; that my servant Hyrum may take the office of priesthood and patriarch, which was appointed unto him by his father, by blessing and also by right, that from henceforth he shall hold the keys of the patriarchal blessings upon the heads of all my people, that whoever he blesses shall be blessed, and whoever he curseth shall be cursed: that whatsoever he shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever he shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven: and from this time forth, I appoint unto him that he may be a prophet and a seer and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph, that he may act in concert also with my servant Joseph, and that he shall receive counsel from my servant Joseph, who shall show unto him the keys whereby he may ask and receive, and be crowned with the same blessing, and glory, and honor, and priesthood, and gifts of the priesthood, that once were put upon him that was my servant Oliver Cowdery; that my servant Hyrum may bear record of the things which I shall show unto him, that his name may be had in honorable remembrance from generation to generation, forever and ever."—D. & C. sec ciii. p. 29.

This quotation plainly shows that Hyrum, as "a prophet and a seer and a revelator," was crowned with the "same PRIESTHOOD and GIFTS of the priesthood" that once were placed upon Oliver Cowdery; consequently he stood in the same relation to the church that Oliver did when standing in his office, to "act in concert" with Joseph as Oliver had done before. This conclusion is inevitable. Mr. Brewster might with the same propriety undertake to prove that Oliver was successor to Joseph, as to undertake to prove that Hyrum was; for they both held the "SAME priesthood and GIFTS of the priesthood."

On the day the church was organized Joseph was called by revelation of God "a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ," to receive commandments and revelations for the church; the church being commanded to "give heed unto all his words and commandments," as he received them, as if from the Lord's own mouth. D. & C. sec. xlvi. p. 1, 2. From the li. sec. it is evident that Oliver, though a revelator, was not appointed unto this gift; for the Lord, speaking to Oliver, says:—

"But, behold, verily, verily I say unto thee, no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church, excepting my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses; and thou shalt be obedient unto the things which I shall give unto him, even as Aaron, to declare faithfully the commandments and revelations, with power and authority unto the church. And if thou art led at any time by the Comforter to speak or teach, or at all times by the way of commandment unto the church, thou mayest do it. But thou shalt not write by way of commandment, but by wisdom. And thou shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church; for I have given him the keys of the mysteries, and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead. And now, behold I say unto you, that you shall go unto the Lamanites, and preach my gospel unto them; and inasmuch as they receive thy teachings, thou shalt cause my church to be established among them, and thou shalt have revelations, but write them not by way of commandment." D. & C. sec. li. p. 1, 2.

It is also evident that Hyrum was not appointed to "receive commandments and revelations," neither to hold the "keys of the mysteries and the revelations which are sealed," because he was never appointed to that calling, but to the "same priesthood and gifts of the priesthood" that were before placed upon Oliver. In a revelation given Feb., 1831, the Lord said:—

"And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments: and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate, and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2.

From this we learn two important points concerning the successorship: 1st. That whoever is appointed to "receive commandments and revelations" for the church in the place of Joseph shall be appointed to this gift through him. 2d. That he shall come in at the gate, (or be appointed,) and be ordained as God told Joseph before. "Now what did God tell Joseph before about ordinations?" Why, he told him and Oliver, about four months previous, that he had sent unto them Peter, James and John, (angels,) by whom he ordained them and confirmed them Apostles and especial witnesses of his name, and committed unto them the keys of his kingdom, and a dispensation of the gospel for the last times. D. & C. sec. l. p. 3.

Having found that the lawful successor of Joseph was to be appointed through him, and ordained by angels, we may ask, in all candor, who among all that profess to be Joseph's successors claim to have been so appointed and ordained? As James J. Strang is the only man that ever claimed this office according to the law, he is the true and legal successor. Joseph, nine days before his death, appointed him by revelation of God to lead the flock, and said: "God shall reveal to thee his will concerning them." And the same hour that Joseph was murdered in Carthage jail an angel of the Lord came unto him and anointed and ordained him to this high and holy calling.— to receive commandments and revelations for the church; the church being commanded to "give heed unto all his words and commandments," as he received them, as if from the Lord's own mouth. D. & C. sec. xlvi. p. 1, 2. From the li. sec. it is evident that Oliver, though a revelator, was not appointed unto this gift; for the Lord, speaking to Oliver, says:—

"But, behold, verily, verily I say unto thee, no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church, excepting my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses; and thou shalt be obedient unto the things which I shall give unto him, even as Aaron, to declare faithfully the commandments and revelations, with power and authority unto the church. And if thou art led at any time by the Comforter to speak or teach, or at all times by the way of commandment unto the church, thou mayest do it. But thou shalt not write by way of commandment, but by wisdom. And thou shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church; for I have given him the keys of the mysteries, and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead. And now, behold I say unto you, that you shall go unto the Lamanites, and preach my gospel unto them; and inasmuch as they receive thy teachings, thou shalt cause my church to be established among them, and thou shalt have revelations, but write them not by way of commandment." D. & C. sec. li. p. 1, 2.

It is also evident that Hyrum was not appointed to "receive commandments and revelations," neither to hold the "keys of the mysteries and the revelations which are sealed," because he was never appointed to that calling, but to the "same priesthood and gifts of the priesthood" that were before placed upon Oliver. In a revelation given Feb., 1831, the Lord said:—

"And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if he be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments: and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate, and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2.

From this we learn two important points concerning the successorship: 1st. That whoever is appointed to "receive commandments and revelations" for the church in the place of Joseph shall be appointed to this gift through him. 2d. That he shall come in at the gate (or be appointed,) and be ordained as God told Joseph before. "Now what did God tell Joseph before about ordinations?" Why, he told him and Oliver, about four months previous, that he had sent unto them Peter, James and John, (angels,) by whom he ordained them and confirmed them Apostles and especial witnesses of his name, and committed unto them the keys of his kingdom, and a dispensation of the gospel for the last times. D. & C. sec. i. p. 3.

Having found that the lawful successor of Joseph was to be appointed through him, and ordained by angels, we may ask, in all candor, who among all that profess to be Joseph's successors claim to have been so appointed and ordained? As James J. Strang is the only man that ever claimed this office according to the law, he is the true and legal successor. Joseph, nine days before his death, appointed him by revelation of God to lead the flock, and said: "God shall reveal to thee his will concerning them." And the same hour that Joseph was murdered in Carthage jail an angel of the Lord came unto him and anointed and ordained him to this high and holy calling.—

Thus was the law fulfilled to the very letter.

But lest Mr. Brewster or others of the same class might say that we are deceived in this matter by the "arch cunning of a lawyer," we close by giving the following testimonies from the writings of that celebrated "mathematical and logical reasoner," Mr. John E. Page, now defender of the Brewsterite faith:—

"DEAR SAINTS:—Do you not know that if the word of the Lord has utterly failed in the case of the appointment of Joseph's successor, Mormonism is dead and damned long ago?"—Gospel Herald, Vol. III. No. 24, page 106.

"Who on earth, then, presents an indisputable 'appointment' and 'ordination' in the form that fills the letter of the word of God on this all important point to a minutia? Ans. JAMES J. STRANG, and no other man."—Ib. Vol. III. No. 17, page 68.

"It is as bright a laurel as hangs on the temples of Joseph's character as a prophet, that the word of the Lord through Joseph has been fulfilled in this case; that the Lord did, nine days before Joseph was 'taken,' reveal to him James J. Strang as being the man to take Joseph's place on earth in his (Joseph's) stead. This fact, all circumstances considered in which Joseph was 'taken,' ought to convince every mobocrat in Missouri and Illinois that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and that James J. Strang is his successor. Emma Smith, the prophet's widow, has told me and many others that the remarks that stand at the head of the letter of appointment to James J. Strang transpired in her hearing while Joseph held the letter in his hand which he received from Strang, dated the 24th of May, 1844."—Ib. Vol. III. No. 22, page 92.

"As for President Strang, he carries with him, in all his deportment and proceedings, all that evidence of his divine calling that President Joseph Smith ever did." "The Lord of heaven never did, does not now, nor never will know the Church of Latter Day Saints to exist, in a legal point of light, without such a President at its head as President Strang is in point of office and calling."—Zion's Reveille, Vol. II. No. 6, page 21.

"Yea, dear brother, I say yea in the name of all that is good and sacred, that James J. Strang is the man; fear not, and come up and help us, in the name of the Lord, and all will be right."—Ib. Vol. II. No. 14, page 58.

"Remember, beloved brethren, that when you are harangued by bigoted usurpers and speculating apostates, (who abide not in the plain word of the Lord relative to the prophet Joseph Smith and the 'appointment' of his successor,) that in the 'Reveille' (already out among you) there is amply sufficient presented to fully satisfy the most critical and delicate mind; those that read, and still say that Joseph was a prophet, and yet cannot see that James J. Strang is the only man at present that presents the necessary evidence according to the word of the Lord through Joseph of his appointment, could not see or believe though one should rise from the dead and preach to them with the voice of an archangel. Do not forget our remarks. JOHN E. PAGE."—Ib. Vol. II. No. 14, page 66.

☞ A small boy went into the navy yard, at Philadelphia, a short time since, to pick up some chips. A certain captain passing at that moment, bravely wrested the basket from the boy, thundering curses in his ears. The boy looked at him with something like disdain, exclaiming, "keep it, sir—keep it—'tis the 'only prize you ever took.'"—Ex. paper.

SCRAPS.

Do what you ought, and let what will come of it.

Whenever you see a small waist, think how much health is wasted.

Ridicule is a weak weapon, when leveled at a strong mind.

Decision and promptitude, even though sometimes a man may err for want of due deliberation, will, in the long run, more often conduct to success, than a slow judgment that comes too late.

Let a man do his best, and the world may do its worst.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

John Macauley,	$1,00 to Vol. V. No. 12
William Thomas,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 42
Ralph Otis,	1,00 to Vol. IV. No. 30

Thus was the law fulfilled to the very letter.

But lest Mr. Brewster or others of the same class might say that we are deceived in this matter by the "arch cunning of a lawyer," we close by giving the following testimonies from the writings of that celebrated "mathematical and logical reasoner," Mr. John E. Page, now defender of the Brewsterite faith:—

"DEAR SAINTS:—Do you not know that if the word of the Lord has utterly failed in the case of the appointment of Joseph's successor, Mormonism is dead and damned long ago?"—Gospel Herald. Vol. III. No 24, page 106.

"Who on earth, then, presents an indisputable 'appointment' and 'ordination' in the form that fills the letter of the word of God on this all important point to a minutia? Ans. JAMES J. STRANG, and no other man."—Ib. Vol. III. No. 17, page 68.

"It is as bright a laurel as hangs on the temples of Joseph's character as a prophet, that the word of the Lord through Joseph has been fulfilled in this case: that the Lord did, nine days before Joseph was 'taken,' reveal to him James J. Strang as being the man to take Joseph's place on earth in his (Joseph's) stead. This fact, all circumstances considered in which Joseph was 'taken,' ought to convince every saint in Missouri and Illinois that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and that James J. Strang is his successor. Emma Smith, the prophet's widow, has told me and many others that the remarks that stand at the head of the letter of appointment to James J. Strang transpired in her hearing while Joseph held the letter in his hand which he received from Strang, dated the 24th of May, 1844."—Ib. Vol. III. No. 22, page 92.

"As for President Strang, he carries with him, in all his deportment and proceedings, all that evidence of his divine calling that President Joseph Smith ever did." "The Lord of heaven never did, does not now, nor never will know the Church of Latter Day Saints to exist, in a legal point of light, without such a president at its head as President Strang is in point of office and calling."—Zion's Reveille, Vol. II. No. 6, page 21.

"Yea, dear brother, I say yea in the name of all that is good and sacred, that James J. Strang is the man; fear not, and come up and help us, in the name of the Lord, and all will be right."—Ib. Vol. II. No. 14, page 58.

"Remember, beloved brethren, that when you are harangued by bigoted usurpers and speculating apostates, (who abide not in the plain word of the Lord relative to the prophet Joseph Smith and the 'appointment' of his successor,) that in the 'Reveille' (already out among you) there is amply sufficient presented to fully satisfy the most critical and delicate mind; those that read, and still say that Joseph was a prophet, and yet cannot see that James J. Strang is the only man at present that presents the necessary evidence according to the word of the Lord through Joseph of his appointment, could not see or believe though one should rise from the dead and preach to them with the voice of an archangel. Do not forget our remarks. JOHN E. PAGE."—Ib. Vol. II. No. 14, page 66.

☞ A small boy went into the navy yard, at Philadelphia, a short time since, to pick up some chips. A certain captain passing at that moment, bravely wrested the basket from the boy, thundering curses in his ears. The boy looked at him with something like disdain, exclaiming, "keep it, sir—keep it—'tis the 'only prize you ever took.'"—Ex. paper.

SCRAPS.

Do what you ought, and let what will come of it.

Whenever you see a small waist, think how much health is wasted.

Ridicule is a weak weapon, when leveled at a strong mind.

Decision and promptitude, even though sometimes a man may err for want of due deliberation, will, in the long run, more often conduct to success, than a slow judgment that comes too late.

Let a man do his best, and the world may do its worst.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

John Macauley,	$1,00 to Vol. V. No. 12
William Thomas.	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 42
Ralph Otis.	1,00 to Vol. IV. No. 30

FOREIGN WORDS AND PHRASES.

The use of foreign words always seems to imply one of two things, that the writer wishes to display his knowledge of the language from which he borrows, or that he is ignorant of the corresponding words in English; in the former case, it is pedantry, in the latter, ignorance, and in both cases is a departure from true simplicity and elegance. A few examples will illustrate our meaning, and show the folly and the danger of the barbarous practice.

An excellent periodical, in a critical notice of Whittier's poems, says, "The physique of the book is charming." To the mere American, this conveys the idea, that as a medicine the book is agreeable. The reviewer probably means that the mechanical execution of the book is charming, but it may be doubted whether this is a correct use of the French word.

Examples to this useless intrusion of foreign words abound most in novels and the light literature of the day. A novel before us has such expressions as these: "They have just escaped from Paris, where they had been for some years among the detentus," (detained.)

"If it is religion that does all that for her, it is a religion of which I can form no idea; cele me passe." Here the French is a mere paraphrase of the English words that are italicized, and how will the foreign words help the reader to any thing new,—but the vanity of the writer?

"She has surrounded herself with vases of flowers, to give her apartment unair de fete," (a festive appearance)

In such books, a medley or mixture is a melange: a fray is nothing short of a melee, and the select are not the chosen but the elite.—Disputants do not suffer entirely but toto cola, and they never begin again, but de novo, or as some goslings prefer to say, ab ovo.

And yet these are called English sentences! We hesitate not to say that no teacher ought for a moment to countenance such words by reading them, and any one who would stoop to imitate them is unfaithful to his trust. If he already can write pure English he needs no such ornaments; and if he cannot write English correctly, nothing will more effectually prevent his doing so, than the use of foreign words or foreign idioms.

But our newspapers have caught the disease, and some who know too little of English language and nothing of any other, allow themselves to use foreign expressions, and often times commit egregious blunders, without the salutary pain of knowing it. Perhaps no foreign word is so frequently spelled wrong as naivete a word of three syllables meaning artlessness, ingenuousness. The common error is to spell it naivelte. Then the word posy has been superseded almost entirely by the French bouquet, or as nine-tenths of our editors spell it, boquet. As this spelling misleads the speaker, we recommend to the pedants to spell the word boo-quet, before it is too late.

The most common items of news are interlarded with such barbarisms. Thus the president is never going to Washington, but he is en route for the city. No remark can now be made by the way, or in passing, but it must be en passant. A rising of this people is no longer a mob or a rebellion, but an emute. Our ancestors did without ennui for centuries, but their sons pretend that no English word expresses the full idea, and even Worcester has been compelled to give the word a place in his great dictionary. The difficulty of pronouncing this word more than balances any shade of meaning that it posseases over listlessness, tediousness, irksomeness, &c., which the best dictionaries have always given as completely synonymous with ennui.

Some years ago a venerable Boston editor discovered that nous verrons was a more expressive phrase than we shall see; and now every village editor, after giving his view of national affairs, gathers himself up in his arm chair, and utters the doubtful prophecy, "nous verrons."

Now all this is exceedingly silly, if not positively injurious to both writers and readers. Our intercourse with thousands of teachers has satisfied us that they are very defective in expressive English, and this they can never acquire while they allow themselves to read inferior authors, or to expect that the use of a few foreign expressions will atone for want of sense, or neglect of style.—Com. School Journal.

THE END OF PRUDENCE.

The great end of prudence is to give cheerfulness to those hours which splendor cannot gild, and acclamation cannot exhilerate—those soft intervals of unbended amusement, in which a man shrinks to his natural dimensions, and throws aside the ornaments of disguises which he feels, in privacy, to be useless encumbrances, and to lose all effect when they become familiar. To be happy at home is the ultimate result of all ambition, and the end to which every enterprise and labor tends, and of which every desire prompts the prosecution. It is, indeed, at home that every man must be known by those who would make a just estimate of his virtue, or felicity; for smiles and embroidery are alike occasional, and the mind is often dressed for show in painted honor and fictitious benevolence.

☞ Society is principally a matter of taste, and a man is best fitted to move in that circle which is most in harmony with his own habits and his own manners; consequently it is a question of good taste whether a man prefers high society to low society. We have often been displeased at hearing a man invidiously pointed out as proud, as sneaking up to great people, and a mean, interested courtier, whose only fault was what might be rather, perhaps, called his misfortune, if not his merit, of having good taste, and a fastidious love of refreshment. Again, we have often been amused at hearing a great deal of indignation expressed by good, honest sort of people at invitations, which they have seemed to consider as being insults instead of donors.

REGULAR OCCUPATION.

The experience of life demonstrates that a regular and systematic business is essential to the health, happiness, contentment, and usefulness of man. Without it, he is uneasy, unsettled, miserable and wretched. His desires have no fixed aim, his ambition no high and noble ends. He is the sport of visionary dreams and idle fancies—a looker on where all are busy, a drone in the hive of industry; a moper in the field of enterprise and labor. If such were the lot of feeble and helpless only, it were less to be deplored; but it is the oftener the doom and curse of those who have the power to do, without the will to act, and who need that quality which makes so many others, but the want of which unmakes them—the quality of vigor and resolution. Business is the grand regulator of life.

☞ There never was a hypocrite so disguised, but yet had some mark or other to be known by.

WALWORTH COUNTY, } In Justice's Court.
Town of Hudson, ss. }

To AZARIAH PARRISH:—You are hereby notified that a writ of attachment has been issued against you, and your property attached to satisfy the demand of Jirah B. Wheelan, amounting to seventy dollars. Now, unless you shall appear before William P. Lyon, a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, at his office in said town on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1850, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property sold to pay the debt. Dated this 20th day of February, A. D. 1850.

JIRAH B. WHEELAN.

FOREIGN WORDS AND PHRASES.

The use of foreign words always seems to imply one of two things, that the writer wishes to display his knowledge of the language from which he borrows, or that he is ignorant of the corresponding words in English; in the former case, it is pedantry, in the latter, ignorance, and in both cases is a departure from true simplicity and elegance. A few examples will illustrate our meaning, and show the folly and the danger of the barbarous practice.

An excellent periodical, in a critical notice of Whittier's poems, says, "The physique of the book is charming." To the mere American, this conveys the idea, that as a medicine the book is agreeable. The reviewer probably means that the mechanical execution of the book is charming, but it may be doubted whether this is a correct use of the French word.

Examples to this useless intrusion of foreign words abound most in novels and the light literature of the day. A novel before us has such expressions as these: "They have just escaped from Paris, where they had been for some years among the detenus," (detained.)

"If it is religion that does all that for her, it is a religion of which I can form no idea; cele me passe." Here the French is a mere paraphrase of the English words that are italicized, and how will the foreign words help the reader to any thing new,—but the vanity of the writer!

"She has surrounded herself with vases of flowers, to give her apartment unair de fete." (a festive appearance)

In such books, a medley or mixture is a melange: a fray is nothing short of a melee, and the select are not the chosen but the elite.—Disputants do not suffer entirely but tete cote, and they never begin again, but de novo, or as some goslings prefer to say, ab ovo.

And yet these are called English sentences! We hesitate not to say that no teacher ought for a moment to countenance such words by reading them, and any one who would stoop to imitate them is unfaithful to his trust. If he already can write pure English he needs no such ornaments; and if he cannot write English correctly, nothing will more effectually prevent his doing so, than the use of foreign words or foreign idioms.

But our newspapers have caught the disease, and some who know too little of English language and nothing of any other, allow themselves to use foreign expressions, and often times commit egregious blunders, without the salutary pain of knowing it. Perhaps no foreign word is so frequently spelled wrong as naivete a word of three syllables meaning artlessness, ingenuousness. The common error is to spell it naivete. Then the word posy has been superseded almost entirely by the French bouquet, or as nine-tenths of our editors spell it, b'quet. As this spelling misleads the speaker, we recommend to the pedants to spell the word bo-quet, before it is too late.

The most common items of news are interlarded with such barbarisms. Thus the president is never going to Washington, but he is en route for the city. No remark can now be made by the way, or in passing, but it must be en passant. A rising of this people is no longer a mob or a rebellion, but an emute. Our ancestors did without ennui for centuries, but their sons pretend that no English word expresses the full idea, and even Worcester has been compelled to give the word a place in his great dictionary. The difficulty of pronouncing this word more than balances any shade of meaning that it possesses over listlessness, tediousness, irksomeness, &c., which the best dictionaries have always given as completely synonymous with ennui.

Some years ago a venerable Boston editor discovered that nous verrons was a more expressive phrase than we shall see; and now every village editor, after giving his view of national affairs, gathers himself up in his arm chair, and utters the doubtful prophecy "nous verrons."

Now all this is exceedingly silly, if not positively injurious to both writers and readers. Our intercourse with thousands of teachers has satisfied us that they are very defective in expressive English, and this they can never acquire while they allow themselves to be inferior authors, or to expect that the use of a few foreign expressions will atone for want of sense, or neglect of style.—Com. Sch. Journal.

THE END OF PRUDENCE.

The great end of prudence is to give cheerfulness to those hours which splendor cannot gild, and acclamation cannot exhilarate—those soft intervals of unbended amusement, in which a man shrinks to his natural dimensions, and throws aside the ornaments of disguises which he feels, in privacy, to be useless encumbrances, and to lose all effect when they become familiar. To be happy at home is the ultimate result of all ambition, and the end to which every enterprise and labor tends, and of which every desire prompts the prosecution. It is, indeed, at home that every man must be known by those who would make a just estimate of his virtue, or felicity; for smiles and embroidery are alike occasional, and the mind is often dressed for show in painted honor and fictitious benevolence.

☞ Society is principally a matter of taste, and a man is best fitted to move in that circle which is most in harmony with his own habits and his own manners; consequently it is a question of good taste whether a man prefers high society to low society. We have often been displeased at hearing a man invidiously pointed out as proud, as sneaking up to great people, and a mean, interested courtier, whose only fault was what might be rather, perhaps, called his misfortune, if not his merit, of having good taste, and a fastidious love of refreshment. Again, we have often been amused at hearing a great deal of indignation expressed by good, honest sort of people at invitations, which they have seemed to consider as being insults instead of donors.

REGULAR OCCUPATION.

The experience of life demonstrates that a regular and systematic business is essential to the health, happiness, contentment, and usefulness of man. Without it, he is uneasy, unsettled, miserable and wretched. His desires have no fixed aim, his ambition no high and noble ends. He is the sport of visionary dreams and idle fancies—a looker on where all are busy, a drone in the hive of industry; a mere per in the field of enterprise and labor. If such were the lot of feeble and helpless only, it were less to be deplored; but it is the oftener the doom and curse of those who have the power to do, without the will to act, and who need that quality which makes so many others, but the want of which unmakes them—the quality of vigor and resolution. Business is the grand regulator of life.

☞ There never was a hypocrite so disguised, but yet had some mark or other to be known by.

WALWORTH COUNTY, Town of Hudson, ss. } In Justice's Court.

TO AZARIAH PARRISH:—You are hereby notified that a writ of attachment has been issued against you, and your property attached to satisfy the demand of Jirah B. Wheelan, amounting to seventy dollars. Now, unless you shall appear before William P. Lyon, a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, at his office in said town on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1850, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property sold to pay the debt. Dated this 20th day of February, A. D. 1850.

JIRAH B. WHEELAN.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 51.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MARCH 7, 1850. [WHOLE No. 167.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

"Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" Isa. xxxiii. 14.

An orthordox priest would answer this question by saying, "the wicked," "the sinner."—This is the popular idea of most of the professing christians of the age in which we live. Since the rise of "the man of sin, who sits in the temple of God, showing that he is God," the people have got so they "will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts they have heaped to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they have turned from the truth, (which is the word, law and commandment of God,) and been turned unto fables."

They even profess great godliness, great piety, large benevolence, charity, and even have a "form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2d Tim. iii. & iv. They even profess to know God, but in works, such as the Apostles had, viz., visions, tongues, prophecy, healing the sick, speaking in tongues, and working of miracles, &c., they deny him. The doctrine of total depravity and endless misery, eternal punishment, with unrelenting and unmitigated torments has sprung from these priests and charitable teachers.

Let one of us ask one of these teachers, "who among us shall dwell with or among the devouring fire?" He will tell us, the "wicked will be turned into hell with all the nations that forget God," and then endeavor to make out that this hell is a place of devouring fire, of eternal punishment, of endless misery, of unmitigated torments to the damned, where they must suffer the vengeance of devouring fire forever and ever. Now let us see how long forever and ever is. Jonah said, when he was in the fish's belly, "I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me: out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest me."

Now how long was he there in hell, when he prayed unto God in hell, and God heard it, and released him from his thraldom? "I went down to the bottom of the mountains, the earth with her bars was about me forever: yet thou hast brought up my life from corruption, O Lord, my God." Jonah ii. "The earth with her bars was about him forever." Jesus, speaking of the time, says, as Jonah was in the belly of the whale three days and three nights, "so shall the son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Math. xii. 40. Now we will ask one of these teachers how long forever is? He answers, "as long as God exists." Consequently forever and ever must be as long again as God exists. But Christ says virtually in regard to the time, that forever in the case of Jonah was "three days and three nights." Well, then, who among us shall dwell with devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

The prophet Isaiah, not being schooled in modern sectarian orthodox theology, was qualified to answer those questions propounded at the head of this article. Instead of the sinner having power to dwell with devouring fire, the prophet says, "He that walketh righteously and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions; that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes; that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shuteth his eyes from seeing evil; he shall dwell on high: his place

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 51.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MARCH 7, 1850. [WHOLE No. 167.

GOSPEL HERALD.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

"Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" Isa. xxxiii. 14.

An orthordox priest would answer this question by saying, "the wicked," "the sinner."—This is the popular idea of most of the professing christians of the age in which we live. Since the rise of "the man of sin, who sits in the temple of God, showing that he is God," the people have got so they "will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts they have heaped to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they have turned from the truth, (which is the word, law and commandment of God,) and been turned unto fables."

They even profess great godliness, great piety, large benevolence, charity, and even have a "form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2d Tim. iii. & iv. They even profess to know God, but in works, such as the Apostles had, viz., visions, tongues, prophecy, healing the sick, speaking in tongues, and working of miracles, &c., they deny him. The doctrine of total depravity and endless misery, eternal punishment, with unrelenting and unmitigated torments has sprung from these priests and charitable teachers.

Let one of us ask one of these teachers, "who among us shall dwell with or among the devouring fire?" He will tell us, the "wicked will be turned into hell with all the nations that forget God," and then endeavor to make out that this hell is a place of devouring fire, of eternal punishment, of endless misery, of unmitigated torments to the damned, where they must suffer the vengeance of devouring fire forever and ever. Now let us see how long forever and ever is. Jonah said, when he was in the fish's belly, "I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me: out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest me."

Now how long was he there in hell, when he prayed unto God in hell, and God heard it, and released him from his thraldom? "I went down to the bottom of the mountains, the earth with her bars was about me forever: yet thou hast brought up my life from corruption, O Lord, my God." Jonah ii. "The earth with her bars was about him forever." Jesus, speaking of the time, says, as Jonah was in the belly of the whale three days and three nights, "so shall the son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Math. xii. 40. Now we will ask one of these teachers how long forever is? He answers, "as long as God exists." Consequently forever and ever must be as long again as God exists. But Christ says virtually in regard to the time, that forever in the case of Jonah was "three days and three nights." Well, then, who among us shall dwell with devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

The prophet Isaiah, not being schooled in modern sectarian orthodox theology, was qualified to answer those questions propounded at the head of this article. Instead of the sinner having power to dwell with devouring fire, the prophet says, "He that walketh righteously and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions; that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes; that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shuteth his eyes from seeing evil; he shall dwell on high: his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks; bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure." Isa. xxxiii. 15, 16. Psalm xv.—Now I am going to bring a sample where the sinner and the righteous had the trial, whereby they and we also might know "who among us can dwell with devouring fire."

In the days of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, he made an image and commanded all in his dominions to worship the same. But certain individuals who were in captivity believed in the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and in his protecting care, refused in plain language to the king's face to worship the image. The king was very angry, and commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated, and also for the strongest men in the army to bind Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego, and cast them into the same. Then these men were bound in their coats, their hosen, and their hats, and their other garments, and were cast into the midst of the burning fiery furnace. Now who among us shall dwell with devouring fire? The wicked sinner or the honest saints? And who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

Let us hear the sequel. "Therefore because the king's commandment was urgent, and the furnace exceeding hot, the flames of the fire slew those men that took up Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego. And these three men, Shadrach Meshach and Abed-nego, fell down bound into the midst of the burning fiery furnace."—What was the result? The king was astonished to see not only the three whom they cast into the fire, but their number was augmented to four, who could dwell with devouring fire without being injured. Therefore we see Isaiah understood the matter when he said, in answer to those questions asked, "He that walketh righteously and speaketh uprightly," &c.

The record, speaking further of the saints of God, "And princes, governors and captains, and the king's counselors, being gathered together, saw these men upon whose bodies the fire had no power, nor was a hair of their head singed, neither were their coats changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them." Daniel iii. 19 to 27. "And what shall I say more? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and Jephthae; of David also, and of Samuel, and of the prophets: Who, through faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouth of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens; women received their dead raised to life again, and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." Heb. xi. 32, 33, 34, 35.

"For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of host, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." Malachi iv. 1, 2, 3.

H. P. BROWN.

SLOW PEOPLE.

People of dull and languid habits trail themselves sluggishly through life, as if some lothsome and agonizing viscous clogged every movement and prevented all refreshing repose.—Their substance is nothing but the slime of indolence, and their contracted snail path is covered with their own pollution. There is no healthy alacrity in them. None of that vivacious energy which indicates either a vigorous body or a forcible mind. They drag themselves tardily to their toil, as if every joint were a socket of torture; and touch the implements of industry as timidly as if they expected their effeminate flesh to adhere to whatever it handled. Work affords them no joy, and duty no delight; they are emasculated of all manly vigor, and have buried their conscience in their

of defence shall be the munitions of rocks; bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure." Isa. xxxiii. 15, 16. Psalm xv.—Now I am going to bring a sample where the sinner and the righteous had the trial, whereby they and we also might know "who among us can dwell with devouring fire."

In the days of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, he made an image and commanded all in his dominions to worship the same. But certain individuals who were in captivity believed in the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and in his protecting care, refused in plain language to the king's face to worship the image. The king was very angry, and commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated, and also for the strongest men in the army to bind Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego, and cast them into the same. Then these men were bound in their coats, their hosen, and their hats, and their other garments, and were cast into the midst of the burning fiery furnace. Now who among us shall dwell with devouring fire? The wicked sinner or the honest saints? And who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

Let us hear the sequel. "Therefore because the king's commandment was urgent, and the furnace exceeding hot, the flames of the fire slew those men that took up Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego. And these three men, Shadrach Meshach and Abed-nego, fell down bound into the midst of the burning fiery furnace."—What was the result? The king was astonished to see not only the three whom they cast into the fire, but their number was augmented to four, who could dwell with devouring fire without being injured. Therefore we see Isaiah understood the matter when he said, in answer to those questions asked, "He that walketh righteously and speaketh uprightly," &c.

The record, speaking further of the saints of God, "And princes, governors and captains, and the king's counselors, being gathered together, saw these men upon whose bodies the fire had no power, nor was a hair of their head singed, neither were their coats changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them." Daniel iii. 19 to 27. "And what shall I say more? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and Jephthae; of David also, and of Samuel, and of the prophets: Who, through faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouth of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens; women received their dead raised to life again, and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." Heb. xi. 32, 33, 34, 35.

"For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of host, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." Malachi iv. 1, 2, 3.

H. P. BROWN.

SLOW PEOPLE.

People of dull and languid habits trail themselves sluggishly through life, as if some lothsome and agonizing viscous clogged every movement and prevented all refreshing repose.—Their substance is nothing but the slime of indolence, and their contracted snail path is covered with their own pollution. There is no healthy alacrity in them. None of that vivacious energy which indicates either a vigorous body or a forcible mind. They drag themselves tardily to their toil, as if every joint were a socket of torture; and touch the implements of industry as timidly as if they expected their effeminate flesh to adhere to whatever it handled. Work affords them no joy, and duty no delight; they are emasculated of all manly vigor, and have buried their conscience in their laziness. They are a part of perpetual somnambulists, walking through their sleep; moving in a constant mystery; looking for their faculties, and forgetting what they are looking for; not able to find their hands; doing everything dreaming, and therefore everything confusedly and incompletely, their work is a dream, their sleep a dream, not repose, not refreshment, a slumberous vision of rest, a dreaming query concerning sleep, too late for everything; taking their passage when the ship has sailed, insuring their property when the house is burnt, locking the door when the goods are stolen—men whose bodies seem to have started in the race of existence before their minds were ready, and who always gaze out vacantly, as if they expected their wits were coming up by the next arrival.

WHAT IS CONGRESS DOING!

Unless the Cholera breaks out in Washington, or some other epidemic, (a blessing, it may be, in disguise,)there is little likelihood of the adjournment of Congress before October. Thus far what they have done may be expressed by that little character found in the aritnmetic, and denominated cipher—thus 0—or translating it into the vernacular, nothing! Since the first Monday of December, Congress has been in session, and here we are in February, and Congress has little to show except discreditable wrangling. The national legisiature never had more important business to transact since the organization of the government; the national legislature never so shamefully wasted time as now.

Let us "look to the Senate," there the longest and windiest speeches about the Austrian minion, and matters of like importance to this nation, with variations on slavery, gasconade on one side and fanatical vituperation on the other, have been the apology for their daily meetings.

In the House a Speaker and a Clerk have been elected, the Sergeant-at-arms and door-keeper allowed to "hold over," and on Friday —will it be believed?—a Chaplain was chosen! The Rev. R. R. Gurley is the gentleman elected to dispense grace to as graceless a set of legislators as ever assembled within the walls of a Capitol. It is to be hoped that Mr. Gurley will improve the occasion, and tell his interesting congregation of sinners, that unless they repent and bring forth the fruits of repentance they will be inevitably damned—politically we mean, of course.

It is time, indeed, that Congress should go to work. The delicate questions to be disposed of, and which keep the public mind in a state of feverish excitement, should be taken up, and calmly, dispassionately considered. Is there no way of laughing, or frowning down the Congressional blusterers? Is it not possible to procure a respectful hearing of Mr Clay's resolutions?—Universe.

PERSEVERE.

The great secret of "getting along in the world" is perseverance. There is no such thing as attaining success without steady, persevering effort. You must work if you would win. That sluggish disposition that holds you back must be conquered; you must summon your best energies and drive ahead with the courage of a brave warrior in battle. Exclude from your vocabulary that detestable word "can't"—it is the sluggard's plea of laziness. When a great and apparently difficult work is to be accomplished, pull off your coat, roll up your sleeves and "walk right into it." Remember, that rocks are worn away by the constant droppings of small particles of water. Never give up—never despair! Perseverance accomplishes wonders. When Columbus was crossing the trackless deep in search of a new and unknown land, after a long and fearful voyage his store of provisions became nearly exhausted, and his men threatened to mutinize unless he would turn the ship's course homeward. He persuaded them to keep on one day more, and before its expiration the joyous news of "land ho!" saluted the ears of the worn-out mariners. The promised land was discovered—PERSEVERANCE triumphed!

Young men, if you would thrive in the world; if you would become useful citizens; if you would be respected by your fellows and secure to yourselves the enjoyments of a contented mind—work, drive ahead, persevere! Instead of lounging about in idleness, contracting bad habits, and fooling away the most precious hours of your life in preparing yourselves to be miserable the remainder of your days, engage in some honorable industrial pursuit—stick to it—persevere.

"There is full enough to do—
Enough for me—enough for you—
Don't be lazy:
Drive at something—keep it driving,
If you would be rich and thriving.

"Stir about, and you will find
Something that will suit your mind—
Don't be lazy:
'Tis a truth that's worth your knowing,
Idleness is always growing.

"Labor—labor and be wise—
Labor for the earth and skies—
Don't be lazy:
Work to bless, restore and save—
Work to triumph o'er the grave."

THE CHURCH LOAFER.

In all the towns and cities we have ever visited, we have discovered a class of bipeds whose distinguished character is comprehended under the term of "church loafers." Your genuine church loafer is rarely under eighteen, and rarely over twenty years of age. These gentry generally assemble in great numbers in front of the church, about half an hour before the commencement of the services, and form a lane, through which all comers have to pass, subject to the critical remarks of these shameless assailants. The church loafer is generally dressed in flashy brass buttons, long soaplocks, and a hat set jauntingly upon the bump of combativeness. Add to these personal attractions a countenance expressive of the "one idea" of assurance and impudence, and you have the church loafer in your mind's eye. After the service is fairly commenced, the fraternity enter, one at a time, at intervals of one minute, and walk the steps and through the gallery, as though animated by a scientific desire to ascertain how much sound can be extracted from the contact of wood and sole leather. Before the service is quite ended, the church loafer leaves his seat, and rushes out to assume his place in the ranks of his brethren, who again marshal themselves into the human line, through which the dismissed congregation are to pass, subject to a variation of the remarks before alluded to.—Ex. paper.

laziness. They are a part of perpetual somnambulists, walking through their sleep; moving in a constant mystery; looking for their faculties, and forgetting what they are looking for: not able to find their hands; doing everything dreaming, and therefore everything confusedly and incompletely, their work is a dream, their sleep a dream, not repose, not refreshment, a slumberous vision of rest, a dreaming query concerning sleep, too late for everything: taking their passage when the ship has sailed, insuring their property when the house is burnt, locking the door when the goods are stolen—men whose bodies seem to have started in the race of existence before their minds were ready, and who always gaze out vacantly, as if they expected their wits were coming up by the next arrival.

WHAT IS CONGRESS DOING?

Unless the Cholera breaks out in Washington, or some other epidemic, (a blessing, it may be, in disguise,)there is little likelihood of the adjournment of Congress before October. Thus far what they have done may be expressed by that little character found in the aritnmetic, and denominated cipher—thus 0—or translating it into the vernacular, nothing! Since the first Monday of December, Congress has been in session, and here we are in February, and Congress has little to show except discreditable wrangling. The national legisiature never had more important business to transact since the organization of the government; the national legislature never so shamefully wasted time as now.

Let us "look to the Senate," there the longest and windiest speeches about the Austrian minion, and matters of like importance to this nation, with variations on slavery, gasconade on one side and fanatical vituperation on the other, have been the apology for their daily meetings.

In the House a Speaker and a Clerk have been elected, the Sergeant-at-arms and door-keeper allowed to "hold over," and on Friday —will it be believed?—a Chaplain was chosen! The Rev. R. R. Gurley is the gentleman elected to dispense grace to as graceless a set of legislators as ever assembled within the walls of a Capitol. It is to be hoped that Mr. Gurley will improve the occasion, and tell his interesting congregation of sinners, that unless they repent and bring forth the fruits of repentance they will be inevitably damned—politically we mean, of course.

It is time, indeed, that Congress should go to work. The delicate questions to be disposed of, and which keep the public mind in a state of feverish excitement, should be taken up, and calmly, dispassionately considered. Is there no way of laughing, or frowning down the Congressional blusterers? Is it not possible to procure a respectful hearing of Mr Clay's resolutions?—Universe.

PERSEVERE.

The great secret of "getting along in the world" is perseverance. There is no such thing as attaining success without steady, persevering effort. You must work if you would win. That sluggish disposition that holds you back must be conquered; you must summon your best energies and drive ahead with the courage of a brave warrior in battle. Exclude from your vocabulary that detesable word "can't"—it is the sluggard's plea of laziness. When a great and apparently difficult work is to be accomplished, pull off your coat, roll up your sleeves and "walk right into it." Remember,that rocks are worn away by the constant droppings of small particles of water. Never give up—never despair! Perseverance accomplishes wonders. When Columbus was crossing the trackless deep in search of a new and unknown land, after a long and fearful voyage his store of provisions became nearly exhausted, and his men threatened to mutinize unless he would turn the ship's course homeward. He persuaded them to keep on one day more, and before its expiration the joyous news of "land ho!" saluted the ears of the worn-out mariners. The promised land was discovered—PERSEVERANCE triumphed!

Young men, if you would thrive in the world; if you would become useful citizens; if you would be respected by your fellows and secure to yourselves the enjoyments of a contented mind—work, drive ahead, persevere! Instead of lounging about in idleness, contracting bad habits, and fooling away the most precious hours of your life in preparing yourselves to be miserable the remainder of your days, engage in some honorable industrial pursuit—stick to it—persevere.

"There is full enough to do—
Enough for me—enough for you—
Don't be lazy:
Drive at something—keep it driving,
If you would be rich and thriving.

"Stir about, and you will find
Something that will suit your mind—
Don't be lazy:
'Tis a truth that's worth your knowing,
Idleness is always growing.

"Labor—labor and be wise—
Labor for the earth and skies—
Don't be lazy:
Work to bless, restore and save—
Work to triumph o'er the grave."

THE CHURCH LOAFER.

In all the towns and cities we have ever visited, we have discovered a class of bipeds whose distinguished character is comprehended under the term of "church loafers." Your genuine church loafer is rarely under eighteen, and rarely over twenty years of age. These gentry generally assemble in great numbers in front of the church, about half an hour before the commencement of the services, and form a lane, through which all comers have to pass, subject to the critical remarks of these shameless assailants. The church loafer is generally dressed in flashy brass buttons, long soaplocks, and a hat set jauntingly upon the bump of combativeness. Add to these personal attractions a countenance expressive of the "one idea" of assurance and impudence, and you have the church loafer in your mind's eye. After the service is fairly commenced, the fraternity enter, one at a time, at intervals of one minute, and walk the steps and through the gallery, as though animated by a scientific desire to ascertain how much sound can be extracted from the contact of wood and sole leather. Before the service is quite ended, the church loafer leaves his seat, and rushes out to assume his place in the ranks of his brethren, who again marshal themselves into the human line, through which the dismissed congregation are to pass, subject to a variation of the remarks before alluded to.—Ex. paper.

HEAVEN.

Where is heaven? Is it a local place? And in what does its joys consist? Is it the expanse of the sky? or is it the region of the blessed? Is it a place, a dominion, a kingdom or country, separated from every jar, every discord, and every pain? If so, who can tell where that place is, and point out to us the sure practical way to get there? Since I have been in this world of wretchedness and want I have always been hearing much about the happiness of another place called heaven.

I have been acquainted with a multitude, professedly bound for that place: some pointing in one direction, and some in another; some very tenacious of some peculiar doctrine, without which none could get there; others of some particular ceremonies to be observed; others have concluded that doctrines and ceremonies are useless, further than the strict observance of a good moral life; some seem to think it necessary to organize in companies, appoint officers, institute ordinances, make laws, and hire some one to take the lead, and point out the way; others equally as well organized, with different doctrines and ceremonies, have also a teacher hired who points another way for heaven, and thus disputes all other companies, claiming to himself the exclusive right of teaching the truth in the matter, and guiding men to heaven.

Amidst these contradictions many have got bewildered, and not willing to allow so many wrong as must necessarily be, if but one way only be the way to heaven, have been driven to this sure alternative, that heaven cannot be a local place, and as God resides there, he consequently has no local residence. But the consequent doctrine growing necessarily out of this conclusion makes God unable to move from one to another place, consequently one place is as much heaven as another. Hence the wide spread notion has arisen that the kingdom of heaven must be in the hearts of the saints. And in support of this idea there may be some apparent plausible deductions drawn from the scriptures, like the following: "Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost?" If any man defile it, him shall God destroy.

Again, "he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." And again, though his throne be fixed on high, yet on earth he has a mansion too, and with the humble and contrite heart is his delight, &c. But notwithstanding all this, and much more that might be said, this truth is clear, that the Savior said, I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go away I will come again, and take you unto myself, that where I am ye may be also. Now it is evident that the Lord is gone away from this place up to where he was before, consequently can move from place to place. And in order to fulfill his word must come to earth again, and receive to himself his chosen people. And their dwelling must be somewhere in some place, and that place will be heaven, or kingdom of God, and none be permitted to enter it but they that do his commandments. Consequently it will be unlike any country or society now upon the earth, and perhaps quite unlike the hearts of most, if not all, professors of religion now living.

Therefore it might not be a safe directory to point the inquiring mind, who might be seeking the kingdom of heaven, to look into the hearts of belivers to find it, neither into his own heart, lest he be deceived. However honest he may be, "he that trusts to his own heart is a fool." No doubt but many who are zealously seeking for heaven in various ways, will find themselves sadly mistaken, should they get there, and altogether unfitted to enjoy it, and would choose rather to go to their own place, that was more congenial to their ideas of heaven and happiness. For instance, God's only son, when he was here, was rebuked for a supposed breach of the law, by those too who claimed to be guides in the way to heaven, and he said, "my Father worketh hitherto, and I work."

Here then was an example of a work done in heaven, and of what God himself was doing. How could such dictators be happy in heaven,

HEAVEN.

Where is heaven? Is it a local place? And in what does its joys consist? Is it the expanse of the sky? or is it the region of the blessed? Is it a place, a dominion, a kingdom or country, separated from every jar, every discord, and every pain? If so, who can tell where that place is, and point out to us the sure practical way to get there? Since I have been in this world of wretchedness and want I have always been hearing much about the happiness of another place called heaven.

I have been acquainted with a multitude, professedly bound for that place: some pointing in one direction, and some in another; some very tenacious of some peculiar doctrine, without which none could get there; others of some particular ceremonies to be observed; others have concluded that doctrines and ceremonies are useless, further than the strict observance of a good moral life; some seem to think it necessary to organize in companies, appoint officers, institute ordinances, make laws, and hire some one to take the lead, and point out the way; others equally as well organized, with different doctrines and ceremonies, have also a teacher hired who points another way for heaven, and thus disputes all other companies, claiming to himself the exclusive right of teaching the truth in the matter, and guiding men to heaven.

Amidst these contradictions many have got bewildered, and not willing to allow so many wrong as must necessarily be, if but one way only be the way to heaven, have been driven to this sure alternative, that heaven cannot be a local place, and as God resides there, he consequently has no local residence. But the consequent doctrine growing necessarily out of this conclusion makes God unable to move from one to another place, consequently one place is as much heaven as another. Hence the wide spread notion has arisen that the kingdom of heaven must be in the hearts of the saints. And in support of this idea there may be some apparent plausible deductions drawn from the scriptures, like the following: "Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost?" If any man defile it, him shall God destroy.

Again, "he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." And again, though his throne be fixed on high, yet on earth he has a mansion too, and with the humble and contrite heart is his delight, &c. But notwithstanding all this, and much more that might be said, this truth is clear, that the Savior said, I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go away I will come again, and take you unto myself, that where I am ye may be also. Now it is evident that the Lord is gone away from this place up to where he was before, consequently can move from place to place. And in order to fulfill his word must come to earth again, and receive to himself his chosen people. And their dwelling must be somewhere in some place, and that place will be heaven, or kingdom of God, and none be permitted to enter it but they that do his commandments. Consequently it will be unlike any country or society now upon the earth, and perhaps quite unlike the hearts of most, if not all, professors of religion now living.

Therefore it might not be a safe directory to point the inquiring mind, who might be seeking the kingdom of heaven, to look into the hearts of belivers to find it, neither into his own heart, lest he be deceived. However honest he may be, "he that trusts to his own heart is a fool." No doubt but many who are zealously seeking for heaven in various ways, will find themselves sadly mistaken, should they get there, and altogether unfitted to enjoy it, and would choose rather to go to their own place, that was more congenial to their ideas of heaven and happiness. For instance, God's only son, when he was here, was rebuked for a supposed breach of the law, by those too who claimed to be guides in the way to heaven, and he said, "my Father worketh hitherto, and I work."

Here then was an example of a work done in heaven, and of what God himself was doing. How could such dictators be happy in heaven, were they to arrive there with that spirit of rule, unacquainted with the employment that constitutes heaven an abode of bliss? What a sad change must be necessary in order to prepare them to receive with joy instructions, and behold constantly practiced that which they ever stood ready to rebuke upon the earth.—The invisible things of God are clearly manifested by the things he has made. So that from a correct observation of the work of creation, and of the redemption by Jesus Christ, we may form some just conceptions both of the character of God and of the happiness of heaven.

We are not to suppose that the character of Christ will be changed when he appears in judgment, after what was manifested by him while he was here upon the earth. But what he was yesterday he is to-day, and will be forever. It is thought by many that when the good man dies he goes immediately to heaven. Perhaps this idea may be correct, according to their views of it. The first description of heaven on record locates the place above the earth, in the open firmament, where the waters are divided from the waters. But Paul speaks of a man's being caught up to the third heaven. And inspiration, I think, makes mention of a place called the heaven of heavens. And some suppose the third heaven is the place from whence the new Jerusalem will descend to the earth when the tabernacle of God shall be with men thereafter forever.

If so, where is the christian philosopher that will contend that heaven is not a local place, and one too that can be moved to some other place, especially when he allows the words of inspiration that declare the heavens shall depart as a scroll when it is rolled together, as well as the earth pass away? But the same inspiration tells us that mount Zion shall never be removed. They that trust in the Lord are as mount Zion, which shall never be removed. So that the sum of the matter seems to rest in this conclusion, viz., that heaven is the place where God not only resides, but presides, and his law is perfectly observed by all the inhabitants of the place. Consequently no ill can happen to any one.

One reason we know so little about heaven is, that so few have returned from that place to give information upon the subject. Another still greater reason is, we are unprepared for much of such intelligence as Jesus Christ, our great High Priest, could have told that generation that were cotemporary with him, and perhaps did tell his disciples many things that were not transmitted to posterity. And even the disciples themselves could not bear as much as he was disposed or ready to say to them. Thus he speaks: I have many things to say to you, but you cannot bear them now. And again: If I have told you earthly things, and you believe not, what if I should tell you of heavenly things?

One said he saw heaven open and angels ascending and descending upon the son of man. Who believed it? Stephen said he saw the heavens open, and Jesus sitting at the right hand of God. Here is good testimony of location, both of heaven and of God. Who disbelieves it? What is testimony good for if it weighs nothing in our minds? Not only was it local, but within sight of an inhabitant of this earth, who was prepared to view it. Angels from heaven used to frequently visit the inhabitants of earth in former days.

But I think it will be observed upon close examination that those individuals who welcomed them were such as were most ready and willing to entertain strangers, and to treat them hospitably, that were thus highly favored of God. Their names are worthy of remembrance, for the example of succeeding generations. And that it is possible for such visits to be yet enjoyed we need only credit the testimony of the Apostle Paul, who said, be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. Hebrews xiii.

J. S. C.

Self-Reliance.—Rely upon your own exertions for a living, and you will not go barefoot, while waiting for dead men's shoes.

were they to arrive there with that spirit of rule, unacquainted with the employment that constitutes heaven an abode of bliss? What a sad change must be necessary in order to prepare them to receive with joy instructions, and behold constantly practiced that which they ever stood ready to rebuke upon the earth.—The invisible things of God are clearly manifested by the things he has made. So that from a correct observation of the work of creation, and of the redemption by Jesus Christ, we may form some just conceptions both of the character of God and of the happiness of heaven.

We are not to suppose that the character of Christ will be changed when he appears in judgment, after what was manifested by him while he was here upon the earth. But what he was yesterday he is to-day, and will be forever. It is thought by many that when the good man dies he goes immediately to heaven. Perhaps this idea may be correct, according to their views of it. The first description of heaven on record locates the place above the earth, in the open firmament, where the waters are divided from the waters. But Paul speaks of a man's being caught up to the third heaven. And inspiration, I think, makes mention of a place called the heaven of heavens. And some suppose the third heaven is the place from whence the new Jerusalem will descend to the earth when the tabernacle of God shall be with men thereafter forever.

If so, where is the christian philosopher that will contend that heaven is not a local place, and one too that can be moved to some other place, especially when he allows the words of inspiration that declare the heavens shall depart as a scroll when it is rolled together, as well as the earth pass away? But the same inspiration tells us that mount Zion shall never be removed. They that trust in the Lord are as mount Zion, which shall never be removed. So that the sum of the matter seems to rest in this conclusion, viz., that heaven is the place where God not only resides, but presides, and his law is perfectly observed by all the inhabitants of the place. Consequently no ill can happen to any one.

One reason we know so little about heaven is, that so few have returned from that place to give information upon the subject. Another still greater reason is, we are unprepared for much of such intelligence as Jesus Christ, our great High Priest, could have told that generation that were cotemporary with him, and perhaps did tell his disciples many things that were not transmitted to posterity. And even the disciples themselves could not bear as much as he was disposed or ready to say to them. Thus he speaks: I have many things to say to you, but you cannot bear them now. And again: If I have told you earthly things, and you believe not, what if I should tell you of heavenly things?

One said he saw heaven open and angels ascending and descending upon the son of man. Who believed it? Stephen said he saw the heavens open, and Jesus sitting at the right hand of God. Here is good testimony of location, both of heaven and of God Who disbelieves it? What is testimony good for if it weighs nothing in our minds? Not only was it local, but within sight of an inhabitant of this earth, who was prepared to view it. Angels from heaven used to frequently visit the inhabitants of earth in former days.

But I think it will be observed upon close examination that those individuals who welcomed them were such as were most ready and willing to entertain strangers, and to treat them hospitably, that were thus highly favored of God. Their names are worthy of remembrance, for the example of succeeding generations. And that it is possible for such visits to be yet enjoyed we need only credit the testimony of the Apostle Paul, who said, be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. Hebrews xiii. J. S. C.

SELF-RELIANCE.—Rely upon your own exertions for a living, and you will not go barefoot, while waiting for dead men's shoes.

For the Gospel Herald.

I WOULDN'T, WOULD YOU?

I wouldn't give much for a parson who preaches
'Gainst vices and follies that life's path bestrew,
Who mires the morals his theory teaches,
In practice performs as all other men do—
I wouldn't give much for such parsons, would you?

I wouldn't give much for church members who wrangle
And sneer at whatever another may do,
With bitterness striving the fair fame to mangle
Of those who may wish other paths to pursue—
I wouldn't give much for such members, would you?

In looking over the world as it is my mind is struck with astonishment. I wonder to behold the inconsistencies that appear on every hand. There is certainly no lack of preachers, doctors and lawyers in the world: all greatly professing to have men's best interest at heart; all striving to ameliorate the condition of man. There is any amount of law, but I think none will deny that there is a great lack of justice. How often do we witness within the sound of the church organ many specimens of suffering humanity. Yes, the day is now when men, clad in the livery of heaven on the Sabbath, are seen during the week practicing the most outlandish frauds upon the common people, and even taxing the scanty pittance of poor widows and fatherless children, whose nerves are strained to their utmost to procure the necessaries of life.

Yes, even these are made to pay lazy, voluptuous priests for telling lies to the people; for even slandering the Redeemer of our race by saying he was not the son of Joseph, and therefore not a legal heir to David's throne, and of course not a lawful king in Israel. Yes, these are the days that the poor man, the laborer, the salt of the earth, has to pay men for teaching a doctrine that necessarily drives every reasonable man to infidelity; and that the heedless unthinking rabble, called the orthodox christians, rule the world, lead by a set of rowdy priests, who do not love the truth nor the light, for they come to neither. If they were teaching the truth I am sure that there would be an agreement in their theories.—The old lady that John saw sitting on the scarlet colored beast is full of names of blasphemy. For I consider the pompous titles, viz., Rev., Right Rev., and very Rev. Fathers in God, as well as a score of others that are very common now, and applied to the thousands of journeymen preachers who would never have undertaken the arduous task of preaching if it had not been for the sake of ill-gotten gain, as blasphemy.

But what most surprises me is, that communities with the New Testament in their possession, and the examples therein contained, in their childhood's catechism, will persist in the course they do, and even reject the teachings of men sent of God, not to tell fantastic lies, but the truth as it is in Jesus Christ, without purse or scrip, coveting no man's gain, nor fearing no man's frown. It seems that the dog loves his vomit, or he would forsake it and follow after it no more. But it appears that men of this age are very much afraid of being deceived by their fellow men. This I can only account for in this way: men have become great liars themselves, and, of course, measure their neighbors' corn in their own bushel. This is not always just, neither is it consistent, as long as we have a standard of weights and measures to go by, (the word of God.) All that compare with the standard should be received, and those that do not should be rejected. And I am still surprised to find very many of the people of God (I mean saints, or would-be-called saints, I suppose,) as distrustful, and some of them even more so, than the Gentiles.—Well I can only account for this as above: they are not sound themselves; for if they were they would extend the helping hand to the cause, now struggling against the world, the flesh and the Devil. Well, the few that are true to the trust committed to them will, in the end, shine as the stars in the eternal world.—But I would not give much for the rest, would you?

JAS. JOHNSON.

Burns, Alleghany Co., N. Y., Feb. 11th, 1850.

FRANCIS COOPER,—DEAR BRO.:—I must say that I never had a greater portion of the spirit

For the Gospel Herald.

I WOULDN'T, WOULD YOU?

I wouldn't give much for a parson who preaches
'Gainst vices and follies that life's path bestrew,
Who mires the morals his theory teaches,
In practice performs as all other men do—
I wouldn't give much for such parsons, would you?

I wouldn't give much for church members who wrangle
And sneer at whatever another may do,
With bitterness striving the fair fame to mangle
Of those who may wish other paths to pursue—
I wouldn't give much for such members, would you?

In looking over the world as it is my mind is struck with astonishment. I wonder to behold the inconsistencies that appear on every hand. There is certainly no lack of preachers, doctors and lawyers in the world: all greatly professing to have men's best interest at heart; all striving to ameliorate the condition of man. There is any amount of law, but I think none will deny that there is a great lack of justice. How often do we witness within the sound of the church organ many specimens of suffering humanity. Yes, the day is now when men, clad in the livery of heaven on the Sabbath, are seen during the week practicing the most outlandish frauds upon the common people, and even taxing the scanty pittance of poor widows and fatherless children, whose nerves are strained to their utmost to procure the necessaries of life.

Yes, even these are made to pay lazy, voluptuous priests for telling lies to the people; for even slandering the Redeemer of our race by saying he was not the son of Joseph, and therefore not a legal heir to David's throne, and of course not a lawful king in Israel. Yes, these are the days that the poor man, the laborer, the salt of the earth, has to pay men for teaching a doctrine that necessarily drives every reasonable man to infidelity; and that the heedless unthinking rabble, called the orthodox christians, rule the world, lead by a set of rowdy priests, who do not love the truth nor the light, for they come to neither. If they were teaching the truth I am sure that there would be an agreement in their theories.—The old lady that John saw sitting on the scarlet colored beast is full of names of blasphemy. For I consider the pompous titles, viz., Rev., Right Rev., and very Rev. Fathers in God, as well as a score of others that are very common now, and applied to the thousands of journeymen preachers who would never have undertaken the arduous task of preaching if it had not been for the sake of ill-gotten gain, as blasphemy.

But what most surprises me is, that communities with the New Testament in their possession, and the examples therein contained, in their childhood's catechism, will persist in the course they do, and even reject the teachings of men sent of God, not to tell fantastic lies, but the truth as it is in Jesus Christ, without purse or scrip, coveting no man's gain, nor fearing no man's frown. It seems that the dog loves his vomit, or he would forsake it and follow after it no more. But it appears that men of this age are very much afraid of being deceived by their fellow men. This I can only account for in this way: men have become great liars themselves, and, of course, measure their neighbors' corn in their own bushel. This is not always just, neither is it consistent, as long as we have a standard of weights and measures to go by, (the word of God.) All that compare with the standard should be received, and those that do not should be rejected. And I am still surprised to find very many of the people of God (I mean saints, or would-be-called saints, I suppose,) as distrustful, and some of them even more so, than the Gentiles.—Well I can only account for this as above: they are not sound themselves; for if they were they would extend the helping hand to the cause, now struggling against the world, the flesh and the Devil. Well, the few that are true to the trust committed to them will, in the end, shine as the stars in the eternal world.—But I would not give much for the rest, would you?

JAS. JOHNSON.

Burns, Alleghany Co., N. Y.,
Feb. 11th, 1850.

FRANCIS COOPER,—DEAR BRO.:—I must say that I never had a greater portion of the spirit of preaching in my life than I now have. The meetings are generally well attended, but prejudice is so thick and hard that nothing but the spirit of God, which is like a two edged sword, can cut through or penetrate it. I have more calls than I can attend to. The Lord has prepared the hearts of the people before me, to receive me at my coming. There has been a famine in these parts, not for bread, but for the word of the Lord; and they have had some good meals since I have been here.

The report has been faithfully circulated here that Strangism was all gone down, to rise no more. Many harps were hung upon the willows, and others have turned to their nets —the cares of this life. But the honest in heart have said to me, "Bro. Page, I thank the Lord that he has sent you here;" whose swimming eyes and melting hearts seem to express praise to God louder than words. They often say to me, "remember me in your prayers, and come and stay with me as long as you please; you are welcome to my house," &c. I think some will sell as soon as possible, and gather with the saints.

I was appointed to go to Massachusetts, but I deem it a hand of the Lord in my coming here at present, to save some who were ready to perish. A few have freely sent for the Gospel Herald, that they may have something to feast upon in my absence; for it and us being co-workers together may be the means of saving some from this would-be wise generation, who are like a young school master, not a thousand miles from this place, who had wound up all the yarn that could be spun by sectarians on the subject of the resurrection. I was introduced to him very politely after I had preached about two hours. I had heard of him before.

He said to me, "I would like to have a talk with you." I said, come over and see me tomorrow. I am now tired by long speaking.—I saw several winking and quite uneasy, as if they had a dreadful itch, and heard several express a desire to hear a debate. I repeated my excuse, and told them I would meet him at any other time. But all was to no purpose. A cry was soon raised, "you dare not, you dare not; you are afraid; a poor excuse is better than none," &c. I then told them all to sit down, and I would hear what the gent had to say.—So he began, and said: "Mr. Page has said that there would be a resurrection of the dead.—Now I want to know which body he calculates to inhabit when he comes forth from the dead? For a man of his age must have had as many as three or four bodies by this time, as it has been well authenticated that a man has a new body every seven years, or every ten at least. Now, sir, do you expect your first, second, third or fourth body, or all of them? I give way for Elder Page to reply."

I then arose to reply, and said, I have scars on my feet and legs made by cuts of an ax when I was ten, eleven, twelve and fourteen years of age. And, according to the logic of my opponent, I made the scars on my second body.—And, by his rule, I have had two since the cuts or scars were made. I have no knowledge of any wounds for fourteen years past. Now, sir, whence came these scars? I, sir, cannot believe your logic. My opponent may live on hog meat twenty-one years, making three times seven, and I do not believe that he would be any more of a hog than he now is. If so, would he have bristles or not? Would he talk or grunt? They gave three loud cheers for the Mormon Elder, and broke up, and willingly went home. I am your servant,

EBENEZER PAGE.

WIVES.

Women should be acquainted that no beauty has any charms but the inward one of the mind; that a gracefulness in their manners is much more engaging than that of their person; and that modesty and meekness are the true and lasting ornaments;—for that she that has these is qualified as she ought to be for the education of children, for an affection for her husband, and submitting to a prudent way of living. These only are the charms that render wives amiable, and give them the best title to our respect.

of preaching in my life than I now have. The meetings are generally well attended, but prejudice is so thick and hard that nothing but the spirit of God, which is like a two edged sword, can cut through or penetrate it. I have more calls than I can attend to. The Lord has prepared the hearts of the people before me, to receive me at my coming. There has been a famine in these parts, not for bread, but for the word of the Lord; and they have had some good meals since I have been here.

The report has been faithfully circulated here that Strangism was all gone down, to rise no more. Many harps were hung upon the willows, and others have turned to their nets —the cares of this life. But the honest in heart have said to me, "Bro. Page, I thank the Lord that he has sent you here;" whose swimming eyes and melting hearts seem to express praise to God louder than words. They often say to me, "remember me in your prayers, and come and stay with me as long as you please; you are welcome to my house," &c. I think some will sell as soon as possible, and gather with the saints.

I was appointed to go to Massachusetts, but I deem it a hand of the Lord in my coming here at present, to save some who were ready to perish. A few have freely sent for the Gospel Herald, that they may have something to feast upon in my absence; for it and us being co-workers together may be the means of saving some from this would-be wise generation, who are like a young school master, not a thousand miles from this place, who had wound up all the yarn that could be spun by sectarians on the subject of the resurrection. I was introduced to him very politely after I had preached about two hours. I had heard of him before.

He said to me, "I would like to have a talk with you." I said, come over and see me tomorrow. I am now tired by long speaking.—I saw several winking and quite uneasy, as if they had a dreadful itch, and heard several express a desire to hear a debate. I repeated my excuse, and told them I would meet him at any other time. But all was to no purpose. A cry was soon raised, "you dare not, you dare not; you are afraid; a poor excuse is better than none," &c. I then told them all to sit down, and I would hear what the gent had to say.—So he began, and said: "Mr. Page has said that there would be a resurrection of the dead.—Now I want to know which body he calculates to inhabit when he comes forth from the dead? For a man of his age must have had as many as three or four bodies by this time, as it has been well authenticated that a man has a new body every seven years, or every ten at least. Now, sir, do you expect your first, second, third or fourth body, or all of them? I give way for Elder Page to reply."

I then arose to reply, and said, I have scars on my feet and legs made by cuts of an ax when I was ten, eleven, twelve and fourteen years of age. And, according to the logic of my opponent, I made the scars on my second body.—And, by his rule, I have had two since the cuts or scars were made. I have no knowledge, of any wounds for fourteen years past. Now, sir, whence came these scars? I, sir, cannot believe your logic. My opponent may live on hog meat twenty-one years, making three times seven, and I do not believe that he would be any more of a hog than he now is. If so, would he have bristles or not? Would he talk or grunt? They gave three loud cheers for the Mormon Elder, and broke up, and willingly went home. I am your servant,

EBENEZER PAGE.

WIVES.

Women should be acquainted that no beauty has any charms but the inward one of the mind; that a gracefulness in their manners is much more engaging than that of their person; and that modesty and meekness are the true and lasting ornaments;—for that she that has these is qualified as she ought to be for the education of children, for an affection for her husband, and submitting to a prudent way of living. These only are the charms that render wives amiable, and give them the best title to our respect.

AN ELDER'S PARTING HYMN.

BY WM. W. SPENCER.

Farewell my faithful bosom friend;
Adieu, a heart-warm fond adieu:
Though from home my steps I bend,
My heart's best wishes are with you.

Though far away my feet shall stray
The gospel tidings to declare,
I'll ne'er forget thee when I pray—
I'll always think of you in prayer.

Oft when the busy day has closed,
I'll go and seek some lonely bower,
While nature's hush'd in calm repose
I'll lift a voice in humble prayer.

O God, preserve my bosom friend
From every danger, fear and care,
And grant to me a safe return,
Will be my constant, fervent prayer.

When in some chapel's stately walls
The list'ning thousands shall attend
To hear the gospel's joyful call,
I'll ne'er forget my bosom friend.

But when the suppliant knee I bend,
And ask the spirit's quick'ning power
To seal the truth as I've proclaimed,
I'll ne'er forget thee in my prayer.

Then fare thee well, my dearest friend,
Once more a heart-warm fond adieu;
Though far from home my steps I bend,
I'll ne'er forget to pray for you.

Be faithful till we meet again,
And oft in fervent pray'r attend,
To ask of God the safe return
To you of your best earthly friend.

KEEP A SECRET.

Anything revealed in confidence should be kept a secret. There is no greater breach of good manners and Christian faith, than to reveal that which has been placed in a secrecy of your own bosom. What if the friend who once trusted you, and told you the secrets of his heart, has become your enemy? You are still bound to keep your word inviolate, and preserve locked in your heart the secrets confidentially made known to you. A man of principle will never betray an enemy. He holds it a Christian duty never to reveal what in good faith was placed in his keeping. While the Albanians were at war with Philip king of Macedon, they intercepted a letter that the King had written to his wife Olympia. It was returned unopened, that it might not be read in public—their laws forbidding them to reveal a secret. Among the Egyptians it was a criminal offence to divulge a secret. A priest, who had been found guilty of this offence, was ordered to leave the country.

Have you a secret reposed in your bosom? Reveal it not for the world. A confiding friend may tell you a hundred things, which, whispered abroad, would bring him into contempt and ridicule, and injure his character through life. No one is so upright that he may not have committed some ungentlemanly act, or some impure offence, which may have been perpetrated years ago, before the individual's character was formed, and before he had a wife and children. Would it not be profanation of the most social duties, in a fit of anger, or out of malice or revenge to divulge a secret like this?

A man's enemies would not care whether it was the fault of his thoughtless youth or his mature years, so long as they could make a handle of it to his injury, and thus effect their purpose. Be careful, then, never, under any consideration whatever, to repeat what has been whispered to you in the confidence of friendship. A betrayer of secrets is fit only for the society of the low and vile.

To Young Men.---Don't rely upon friends. Don't rely upon the good name of your ancestors. Thousands have spent the prime of life in vain hopes of aid from those whom they call friends---and thousands have starved because they had a rich father. Rely only upon the good name which is made by your own exertions, and know that the best friend you can have is unconquerable determination, united with decision of character.

Walworth County, } In Justice's Court.
Town of Hudson, ss. }

To Azariah Parrish:—You are hereby notified that a writ of attachment has been issued against you, and your property attached to satisfy the demand of Jirah B. Wheelan, amounting to seventy dollars. Now, unless you shall appear before William P. Lyon, a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, at his office in said town on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1850, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property sold to pay the debt. Dated this 20th day of February, A. D. 1850.

JIRAH B. WHEELAN.

AN ELDER'S PARTING HYMN.

BY WM. W. SPENCER.

Farewell my faithful bosom friend;
Adieu, a heart-warm fond adieu:
Though from home my steps I bend,
My heart's best wishes are with you.

Though far away my feet shall stray
The gospel tidings to declare,
I'll ne'er forget thee when I pray—
I'll always think of you in prayer.

Oft when the busy day has closed,
I'll go and seek some lonely bower,
While nature's hush'd in calm repose
I'll lift a voice in humble prayer.

O God, preserve my bosom friend
From every danger, fear and care,
And grant to me a safe return,
Will be my constant, fervent prayer.

When in some chapel's stately walls
The list'ning thousands shall attend
To hear the gospel's joyful call,
I'll ne'er forget my bosom friend.

But when the suppliant knee I bend,
And ask the spirit's quick'ning power
To seal the truth as I've proclaimed,
I'll ne'er forget thee in my prayer.

Then fare thee well, my dearest friend,
Once more a heart-warm fond adieu;
Though far from home my steps I bend,
I'll ne'er forget to pray for you.

Be faithful till we meet again,
And oft in fervent pray'r attend,
To ask of God the safe return
To you of your best earthly friend.

KEEP A SECRET.

Anything revealed in confidence should be kept a secret. There is no greater breach of good manners and Christian faith, than to reveal that which has been placed in a secrecy of your own bosom. What if the friend who once trusted you, and told you the secrets of his heart, has become your enemy? You are still bound to keep your word inviolate, and preserve locked in your heart the secrets confidentially made known to you. A man of principle will never betray an enemy. He holds it a Christian duty never to reveal what in good faith was placed in his keeping. While the Albanians were at war with Philip king of Macedon, they intercepted a letter that the King had written to his wife Olympia. It was returned unopened, that it might not be read in public—their laws forbidding them to reveal a secret. Among the Egyptians it was a criminal offence to divulge a secret. A priest, who had been found guilty of this offence, was ordered to leave the country.

Have you a secret reposed in your bosom? Reveal it not for the world. A confiding friend may tell you a hundred things, which, whispered abroad, would bring him into contempt and ridicule, and injure his character through life. No one is so upright that he may not have committed some ungentlemanly act, or some impure offence, which may have been perpetrated years ago, before the individual's character was formed, and before he had a wife and children. Would it not be profanation of the most social duties, in a fit of anger, or out of malice or revenge to divulge a secret like this?

A man's enemies would not care whether it was the fault of his thoughtless youth or his mature years, so long as they could make a handle of it to his injury, and thus effect their purpose. Be careful, then, never, under any consideration whatever, to repeat what has been whispered to you in the confidence of friendship. A betrayer of secrets is fit only for the society of the low and vile.

To Young Men.---Don't rely upon friends. Don't rely upon the good name of your ancestors. Thousands have spent the prime of life in vain hopes of aid from those whom they call friends---and thousands have starved because they had a rich father. Rely only upon the good name which is made by your own exertions, and know that the best friend you can have is unconquerable determination, united with decision of character.

Walworth County, } In Justice's Court.
Town of Hudson, ss. }

To Azariah Parrish:—You are hereby notified that a writ of attachment has been issued against you, and your property attached to satisfy the demand of Jirah B. Wheelan, amounting to seventy dollars. Now, unless you shall appear before William P. Lyon, a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, at his office in said town on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1850, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property sold to pay the debt. Dated this 20th day of February, A. D. 1850. JIRAH B. WHEELAN.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 52.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1850. [WHOLE No. 168.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THEY SAY—.

Well, what if they do? It may not be true. A great many false reports are circulated, and the reputation of many a good man may be sadly sullied by a baseless rumor. Have you any reason to believe that what they say concerning your brother is true? If not, why should you permit your name to be included among the "they" who circulate a scandal?

They say——. Who says? Is any person responsible for the assertion? Such phrases are frequently used to conceal the point of an enemy's poignard, who thus meanly strikes one whom he dare not openly assail. Are you helping the cowardly attack? If "they" means nobody, then regard the rumor as nothing.

They say——. Why do they say so? Is any good purpose secured by the circulation of the report? Will it benefit the person to have it known? or will any interests of society be promoted by whispering it about? If not, you had better employ time and speech to some more worthy purpose.

They say——. To whom do they say it?—To those who have no business with the affair? To those who cannot help it or mend it, or prevent any unpleasant results? That certainly shows a tattling, scandal-loving spirit that ought to be rebuked.

They say——. Well, do they say it to him? Or are they very careful to whisper it in places where he cannot hear, and to persons who are known not to be his friends? Would they dare to say it to him, as well as about him? No one has a right to say that concerning another which he is not ready to speak in his own ear.

They say——. Well, suppose it is true. Are you sorry for it? or do you rejoice that a brother has been discovered erring? O, pity him if he has fallen into sin, and pray for him that he may be forgiven and restored.

If it should be true, do not bruit it abroad to his injury. It will not benefit you, nor him, nor society, to publish his faults. You are as liable to be slandered, or err, as your brother, and as ye would that he should defend, or excuse, or forgive you, do ye even so to him.

Remember thy follies, thy sins, and thy crimes;
How vast is that infinte debt!
Yet mercy hath seven by seventy times
Been swift to forgive and forget!

Watchman and Reflector.

HABIT.

Habits of thought and desire—often produced in us by the operation of ruling circumstances—overbear the natural bent of the mind, and lead us to a course of life, and to innumerable actions, utterly inharmonious with the original tone of the character. It is so, and there is scarcely any man who is not walled in by circumstances in his course; scarcely any tree that, however upright is its original shoot, is not bent by the prevailing wind. Nevertheless, when the mind is left free from the habitual influences—when the passions that have been indulged are not called into play—when the desires that have usurped a sway over us are for a time without either object or opposition, the original character of the mind indulges itself for a brief space like a prisoner allowed a few moments of free air.

SIGNS.—Solomon said, many centuries ago, "Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure and whether it be right."

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 52.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. MARCH 14, 1850. [WHOLE No. 168.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THEY SAY—.

Well, what if they do? It may not be true. A great many false reports are circulated, and the reputation of many a good man may be sadly sullied by a baseless rumor. Have you any reason to believe that what they say concerning your brother is true? If not, why should you permit your name to be included among the "they" who circulate a scandal?

They say——. Who says? Is any person responsible for the assertion? Such phrases are frequently used to conceal the point of an enemy's poignard, who thus meanly strikes one whom he dare not openly assail. Are you helping the cowardly attack? If "they" means nobody, then regard the rumor as nothing.

They say——. Why do they say so? Is any good purpose secured by the circulation of the report? Will it benefit the person to have it known? or will any interests of society be promoted by whispering it about? If not, you had better employ time and speech to some more worthy purpose.

They say——. To whom do they say it?—to those who have no business with the affair? to those who cannot help it or mend it, or prevent any unpleasant results? That certainly shows a tattling, scandal-loving spirit that ought to be rebuked.

They say——. Well, do they say it to him? or are they very careful to whisper it in places where he cannot hear, and to persons who are known not to be his friends? Would they dare to say it to him, as well as about him? No one has a right to say that concerning another which he is not ready to speak in his own ear.

They say——. Well, suppose it is true. Are you sorry for it? or do you rejoice that a brother has been discovered erring? O, pity him if he has fallen into sin, and pray for him that he may be forgiven and restored.

If it should be true, do not bruit it abroad to his injury. It will not benefit you, nor him, nor society, to publish his faults. You are as liable to be slandered, or err, as your brother, and as ye would that he should defend, or excuse, or forgive you, do ye even so to him.

Remember thy follies, thy sins, and thy crimes;
How vast is that infinte debt!
Yet mercy hath seven by seventy times
Been swift to forgive and forget!

Watchman and Reflector.

HABIT.

Habits of thought and desire—often produced in us by the operation of ruling circumstances—overbear the natural bent of the mind, and lead us to a course of life, and to innumerable actions, utterly inharmonious with the original tone of the character. It is so, and there is scarcely any man who is not walled in by circumstances in his course; scarcely any tree that, however upright is its original shoot, is not bent by the prevailing wind. Nevertheless, when the mind is left free from the habitual influences—when the passions that have been indulged are not called into play—when the desires that have usurped a sway over us are for a time without either object or opposition, the original character of the mind indulges itself for a brief space like a prisoner allowed a few moments of free air.

SIGNS.—Solomon said, many centuries ago, "Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure and whether it be right."

For the Gospel Herald.

BRO. COOPER:—Having listened with some interest of late to the different positions taken by the "great champion of Brewsterism," in relation to doctrine, claims for himself and others, I find that the one of the greatest importance is, that the Book of Mormon is the only true standard to govern and direct the saints, as the Bible is perverted, and the book of Doctrine and Covenants, or a part of it, was given when Joseph Smith was in transgression; and that all prophets are liable to transgress, therefore there is no standard that can be relied upon but the Book of Mormon. Consequently one of his strong positions in relation to trying a prophet, and also to show that the people of God are to have no king, is contained in that book. In examining the two last it would be well to carefully examine the words offered as proof and their connections, together with the circumstances that called them forth.

The strongest proof offered by him will be found in the book of Mosiah, chapt. 13, page 214, which says: "Choose you, by the voice of this people, judges. And now if ye have judges, and they do not judge you according to the law which has been given, ye can cause that they may be judged of a higher judge; if your higher judges do not judge righteous judgments, ye shall cause that a small number of your lower judges should be gathered together, and they shall judge your higher judges, ACCORDING TO THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE."

The reasons which caused king Mosiah to recommend choosing judges in preference to a king will be found in his referring to king Noah, who was a wicked and abominable king, as found in the preceding part of the same chapt.; and said, because all men are not just it is not expedient that you should have a king or kings to rule over you. He further said, it would be a hard matter to dethrone such a king, as he had his friends in wickedness to support and defend him, if a rebellion or a disaffection should take place in his realm; and in view of these considerations he recommended them to choose judges.

In reviewing this subject we must not lose sight of the situation the king himself was placed in, in regard to having a successor; rather in regard to the manner he was made king, and also king Noah. Now this king Noah was the son of Zeniff, who went from the land of Zarahemla to the land of Nephi, and was there made king by the voice of the people. See Mosiah, chapt. 5, page 165. But Mosiah was made king over the land of Zarahemla by command of the Lord to his father Benjamin, as will be found in the 1st chapt., and under the 155th page of the Nauvoo edition, 158th of the Palmyra. Here king Benjamin declared to the people, that "the Lord God supported him, and hath COMMANDED me, that I should DECLARE unto you this day, that my son Mosiah is a KING AND A RULER over you."

Here is a public declaration by a prophet and king, who said he was chosen by the people, and was consecrated by his father, and was suffered by the hand of the Lord to be a ruler and a king over this people. We should also bear in mind that these people were descendants from the family of Israel, whose kings were usually appointed by command of the Lord to the prophet, as in the case of Saul and David by Samuel. Therefore in this case Mosiah, on his son's refusal to accept the kingly authority, because they desired of him to go to the Lamanites to preach, inquired of the Lord concerning the matter, who commanded him to let them go. And now having no son on whom to confer the kingdom, (for they all refused it, see chapt. 12,) and no doubt knowing by revelation who to confer the kingdom upon, and foreseeing the great evil that would ultimately overtake the people if they should step aside from the legal way of making a king, and after referring them to Noah and his abominations in the most impressive manner, and in consequence of their refusal, conferred the records and interpreters upon Alma to preserve, then sent among the people to know their will concerning who should be their king, whose voice came that they desired Aaron his son should be their king.

He then sent again to them, stating that him to whom the LEGAL right belonged had refused, and wished them to seriously consider the cause that they were called to consider; for he feared that if another should be appointed that contentions would arise; besides, said he, who knows but what my son, to whom the kingdom doth belong, will return and be angry, and cause contentions, and draw off a part of the people, and cause bloodshed. Now, said he, let us be wise, and consider, for we have no right to destroy my son; neither should we have any right to destroy another who was appointed in his stead; for if his son should re-

For the Gospel Herald.

BRO. COOPER:—Having listened with some interest of late to the different positions taken by the "great champion of Brewsterism," in relation to doctrine, claims for himself and others, I find that the one of the greatest importance is, that the Book of Mormon is the only true standard to govern and direct the saints, as the Bible is perverted, and the book of Doctrine and Covenants, or a part of it, was given when Joseph Smith was in transgression; and that all prophets are liable to transgress, therefore there is no standard that can be relied upon but the Book of Mormon. Consequently one of his strong positions in relation to trying a prophet, and also to show that the people of God are to have no king, is contained in that book. In examining the two last it would be well to carefully examine the words offered as proof and their connections, together with the circumstances that called them forth.

The strongest proof offered by him will be found in the book of Mosiah, chapt. 13, page 214, which says: "Choose you, by the voice of this people, judges. And now if ye have judges, and they do not judge you according to the law which has been given, ye can cause that they may be judged of a higher judge; if your higher judges do not judge righteous judgments, ye shall cause that a small number of your lower judges should be gathered together, and they shall judge your higher judges, ACCORDING TO THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE."

The reasons which caused king Mosiah to recommend choosing judges in preference to a king will be found in his referring to king Noah, who was a wicked and abominable king, as found in the preceding part of the same chapt.; and said, because all men are not just it is not expedient that you should have a king or kings to rule over you. He further said, it would be a hard matter to dethrone such a king, as he had his friends in wickedness to support and defend him, if a rebellion or a disaffection should take place in his realm; and in view of these considerations he recommended them to choose judges.

In reviewing this subject we must not lose sight of the situation the king himself was placed in, in regard to having a successor; rather in regard to the manner he was made king, and also king Noah. Now this king Noah was the son of Zeniff, who went from the land of Zarahemla to the land of Nephi, and was there made king by the voice of the people. See Mosiah, chapt. 5, page 165. But Mosiah was made king over the land of Zarahemla by command of the Lord to his father Benjamin, as will be found in the 1st chapt., and under the 155th page of the Nauvoo edition, 158th of the Palmyra. Here king Benjamin declared to the people, that "the Lord God supported him, and hath COMMANDED me, that I should DECLARE unto you this day, that my son Mosiah is A KING AND A RULER over you."

Here is a public declaration by a prophet and king, who said he was chosen by the people, and was consecrated by his father, and was suffered by the hand of the Lord to be a ruler and a king over this people. We should also bear in mind that these people were descendants from the family of Israel, whose kings were usually appointed by command of the Lord to the prophet, as in the case of Saul and David by Samuel. Therefore in this case Mosiah, on his son's refusal to accept the kingly authority, because they desired of him to go to the Lamanites to preach, inquired of the Lord concerning the matter, who commanded him to let them go. And now having no son on whom to confer the kingdom, (for they all refused it, see chapt. 12,) and no doubt knowing by revelation who to confer the kingdom upon, and foreseeing the great evil that would ultimately overtake the people if they should step aside from the legal way of making a king, and after referring them to Noah and his abominations in the most impressive manner, and in consequence of their refusal, conferred the records and interpreters upon Alma to preserve, then sent among the people to know their will concerning who should be their king, whose voice came that they desired Aaron his son should be their king.

He then sent again to them, stating that him to whom the LEGAL right belonged had refused, and wished them to seriously consider the cause that they were called to consider; for he feared that if another should be appointed that contentions would arise; besides, said he, who knows but what my son, to whom the kingdom doth belong, will return and be angry, and cause contentions, and draw off a part of the people, and cause bloodshed. Now, said he, let us be wise, and consider, for we have no right to destroy my son; neither should we have any right to destroy another who was appointed in his stead; for if his son should return in pride, he would recall his words, and claim the kingdom. And, in view of these things, said, LET US BE WISE, and choose that which will make for peace; for this reason I will be your king the rest of my days.

In view of all these considerations he recommended them to appoint judges, who should judge according to the laws of God; for it would be better to be judged of God, or by such judges, rather than a king not appointed in a legal way, as such judgments were always just, said he, although it is not expedient for you to have a king chosen in this way; yet if you could always have just men, or a man who should be appointed by command of God, it would then be expedient for you to have a king.

He then refers them to king Noah, who was chosen by the voice of the people, (as they would have to choose one in this case,) who was a wicked man, and trampled the laws of God under his feet, as one would be likely to do of their own choosing. And if the common people should choose judges, a majority of them are not as likely to choose that which is wrong as a king who was chosen by the people.—Therefore they should observe and make it a law to do their business of this kind (for there is no other business named) by the voice of the people, and that these judges thus chosen should be under restrictions; that is, if they should not judge according to the laws of the Lord, but according to their own, as in the case of a wicked king, then the lower judges should be judged by the higher, and visa versa with the lower.

Mosiah commanded them to do this, that if the people committed sin it should be answered upon their own heads, as would be the case when the majority of the people choose iniquity; that is, to have judges who should judge according to laws of their own making, instead of God's. But if a king was chosen he might cause the people to sin by making laws; and as they had no means to try him, as he had great authority, it would have to be answered upon his own head by their rising up to dethrone him, which would be a hard thing to do. But, on the other hand, if a majority of the people chose evil, then the swift judgments of God would immediately follow, as was the case with the city of Ammonihah when they rejected Alma and Amulek, and will be with this land when the people reject the plain truth.

Another of his proofs in regard to not having a king will be found in chapt. 11th, page 188–9, in the Nauvoo edition, 203d Palmyra, which speaks expressly of one Alma, who fled from king Noah, because he had burned the prophet Abinadi with faggots, who hid himself near the waters of Mormon, where the people resorted to hear him, and was discovered by the king's servants. See the account in chapt. 9. Then Alma, with those who went to hear him, being warned of God that the armies of king Noah would come upon them took their flocks and their grain and fled into the wilderness, and came to a beautiful land, a land of pure water, where they pitched their tents and made it their place of abode; and in this situation they were desirous that Alma should be their king. He then said unto them, it is not expedient that you should have a king; for thus saith the Lord: Ye shall not esteem one flesh above another. Nevertheless, if it were possible that ye could always have just men to be your kings it would be well for you to have a king. See chapt. 11.

He then referred them to the same king Noah and his priests that Mosiah did his people, they being placed under the same circumstances; and at the same time giving them the same reasons for their not having a king that he did; both agreeing that if they could always have just men appointed of God it would be well for them to have a king. Here then we have the proof with all its bearings, which amounts to one and the same thing; that is, if God should choose their king, or even if the people could be always sure to choose just men, it would in either case be expedient for them to have a king. But as all men are not just, they would be liable to appoint one who would do as did king Noah, and bring them into sin and bondage, in which case they would have no remedy. Therefore it would be better to have judges placed under restrictions, where they could control them, than to have a king that they could not.

Now if it can be shown by John E. Page that the subject has anything to do in any sense with the trying of a prophet, or that it debars God from appointing at any time a king to rule his people, I will then acknowledge myself as ignorant in regard to it as he has been during his ministry as an Apostle and special witness of the Lord to the people for the last twelve or fourteen years, in which time (in the Gospel

(Concluded on page 319.)

turn in pride, he would recall his words, and claim the kingdom. And, in view of these things, said, LET US BE WISE, and choose that which will make for peace; for this reason I will be your king the rest of my days.

In view of all these considerations he recommended them to appoint judges, who should judge according to the laws of God; for it would be better to be judged of God, or by such judges, rather than a king not appointed in a legal way, as such judgments were always just, said he, although it is not expedient for you to have a king chosen in this way; yet if you could always have just men, or a man who should be appointed by command of God, it would then be expedient for you to have a king.

He then refers them to king Noah, who was chosen by the voice of the people, (as they would have to choose one in this case,) who was a wicked man, and trampled the laws of God under his feet, as one would be likely to do of their own choosing. And if the common people should choose judges, a majority of them are not as likely to choose that which is wrong as a king who was chosen by the people.—Therefore they should observe and make it a law to do their business of this kind (for there is no other business named) by the voice of the people, and that these judges thus chosen should be under restrictions; that is, if they should not judge according to the laws of the Lord, but according to their own, as in the case of a wicked king, then the lower judges should be judged by the higher, and visa versa with the lower.

Mosiah commanded them to do this, that if the people committed sin it should be answered upon their own heads, as would be the case when the majority of the people choose iniquity; that is, to have judges who should judge according to laws of their own making, instead of God's. But if a king was chosen he might cause the people to sin by making laws; and as they had no means to try him, as he had great authority, it would have to be answered upon his own head by their rising up to dethrone him, which would be a hard thing to do. But, on the other hand, if a majority of the people chose evil, then the swift judgments of God would immediately follow, as was the case with the city of Ammonihah when they rejected Alma and Amulek, and will be with this land when the people reject the plain truth.

Another of his proofs in regard to not having a king will be found in chapt. 11th, page 188–9, in the Nauvoo edition, 203d Palmyra, which speaks expressly of one Alma, who fled from king Noah, because he had burned the prophet Abinadi with faggots, who hid himself near the waters of Mormon, where the people resorted to hear him, and was discovered by the king's servants. See the account in chapt. 9. Then Alma, with those who went to hear him, being warned of God that the armies of king Noah would come upon them took their flocks and their grain and fled into the wilderness, and came to a beautiful land, a land of pure water, where they pitched their tents and made it their place of abode; and in this situation they were desirous that Alma should be their king. He then said unto them, it is not expedient that you should have a king; for thus saith the Lord: Ye shall not esteem one flesh above another. Nevertheless, if it were possible that ye could always have just men to be your kings it would be well for you to have a king. See chapt. 11.

He then referred them to the same king Noah and his priests that Mosiah did his people, they being placed under the same circumstances; and at the same time giving them the same reasons for their not having a king that he did; both agreeing that if they could always have just men appointed of God it would be well for them to have a king. Here then we have the proof with all its bearings, which amounts to one and the same thing; that is, if God should choose their king, or even if the people could be always sure to choose just men, it would in either case be expedient for them to have a king. But as all men are not just, they would be liable to appoint one who would do as did king Noah, and bring them into sin and bondage, in which case they would have no remedy. Therefore it would be better to have judges placed under restrictions, where they could control them, than to have a king that they could not.

Now if it can be shown by John E. Page that the subject has anything to do in any sense with the trying of a prophet, or that it debars God from appointing at any time a king to rule his people, I will then acknowledge myself as ignorant in regard to it as he has been during his ministry as an Apostle and special witness of the Lord to the people for the last twelve or fourteen years, in which time (in the Gospel (Concluded on page 319.

THE LOCATION OF ZION, OR THE NEW JERUSALEM.

The location of Zion or the New Jerusalem is certainly a subject of importance, and well worth a candid investigation; for it is one that interested the prophets, and much the more it ought to interest every true believer of this remote age of the world: for, according to the prophets, it will be a place of refuge and deliverance for the people of God when destruction comes upon the nations. Again, the Lord not only intends to gather all his people together in the last days, but he intends to prepare places for them to gather to. The city of Zion is said to be one of these places of gathering; therefore it is of all importance that we should know where it will be located or established.

That there will be a city called Zion, or the New Jerusalem, built, beautified, and prepared for the millenium, is evident from all the prophets that have mentioned the work of God of the last days. That there was a Zion established at Jerusalem we do not wish to deny; but that has nothing to do with the one for the millenium. However, because some are unable to separate or distinguish it from the one for the millenium, we will first show the difference between the two, and then proceed to examine the prophets with respect to the place of the location of the latter.

This Zion at Jerusalem was sometimes called the upper city, and it was detached from Jerusalem proper by a wall. Historians say that Jerusalem was founded by Melchisedec, then called Salem. See Heb. vii. 2. Subsequently it was called Jerusalem; but whether or not Zion was founded by Melchisedec is not easy for us to determine: but one thing is certain, it was in existence in the days of David; for when he took Jerusalem from the Jebusites, it is said that he "took a strong hold of Zion: the same is the city of David." 2 Sam. v. 7. Many places in the inspired writings where Zion is mentioned, refer to this Zion at Jerusalem.—Isaiah, speaking of this Zion, says: "For the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem." Isa. xxx. 19.

Now if Isaiah had no idea of any other Zion than the one at Jerusalem, why did he use the preposition at, as though there was another city called by the same name? Indeed, he knew that the Lord would cause to be built another city of Zion, which should be a place of deliverance in the last days, which he saw in the vision established upon this land, [America;] therefore, he used the preposition, "Zion at Jerusalem," to designate the difference between it and the one of the last days upon another land. But, says one, if the ancients knew that God would establish another for the millenium, why did they call the one at Jerusalem by that name? This is a thing that the scriptures in a measure leave in the dark; however, there is a foundation for an opinion, which we will give, whether it is correct or not.

Zion is a very ancient name, and signifies the pure in heart, or the place where the pure in heart dwell; and, according to recent revelation which the Lord has given to his people, there was a Zion established in the days of Enoch, wherein the church of the first-born dwelt: and, perhaps, Paul alludes to this Zion of Enoch when he says: "But ye are come unto Mount Sion, and into the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and the church of the first-born." Heb. xii. 22, 23. The saints of the Antediluvian world, are the only ones that we can with propriety call the church of the first-born; but they and their Zion are in heaven; and Paul calls their Zion the city of God, and them the church of the first-born.

Now it is possible that when Melchisedec, or whoever founded Zion, when arranging the various districts and suburbs of Jerusalem, called that district, or the upper city, which was so beautiful and elevated, "Mount Zion," out of respect to a former Zion, and because of the pureness of the name; the same as many name their children after eminent men, and those whom they in a particular manner respect.—After David it was called "the city of David."

When Jerusalem is rebuilt it is probable that

THE LOCATION OF ZION, OR THE NEW JERUSALEM.

The location of Zion or the New Jerusalem is certainly a subject of importance, and well worth a candid investigation; for it is one that interested the prophets, and much the more it ought to interest every true believer of this remote age of the world: for, according to the prophets, it will be a place of refuge and deliverance for the people of God when destruction comes upon the nations. Again, the Lord not only intends to gather all his people together in the last days, but he intends to prepare places for them to gather to. The city of Zion is said to be one of these places of gathering; therefore it is of all importance that we should know where it will be located or established.

That there will be a city called Zion, or the New Jerusalem, built, beautified, and prepared for the millenium, is evident from all the prophets that have mentioned the work of God of the last days. That there was a Zion established at Jerusalem we do not wish to deny; but that has nothing to do with the one for the millenium. However, because some are unable to separate or distinguish it from the one for the millenium, we will first show the difference between the two, and then proceed to examine the prophets with respect to the place of the location of the latter.

This Zion at Jerusalem was sometimes called the upper city, and it was detached from Jerusalem proper by a wall. Historians say that Jerusalem was founded by Melchisedec, then called Salem. See Heb. vii. 2. Subsequently it was called Jerusalem; but whether or not Zion was founded by Melchisedec is not easy for us to determine: but one thing is certain, it was in existence in the days of David; for when he took Jerusalem from the Jebusites, it is said that he "took a strong hold of Zion: the same is the city of David." 2 Sam. v. 7. Many places in the inspired writings where Zion is mentioned, refer to this Zion at Jerusalem.—Isaiah, speaking of this Zion, says: "For the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem." Isa. xxx. 19.

Now if Isaiah had no idea of any other Zion than the one at Jerusalem, why did he use the preposition at, as though there was another city called by the same name? Indeed, he knew that the Lord would cause to be built another city of Zion, which should be a place of deliverance in the last days, which he saw in the vision established upon this land, [America;] therefore, he used the preposition, "Zion at Jerusalem," to designate the difference between it and the one of the last days upon another land. But, says one, if the ancients knew that God would establish another for the millenium, why did they call the one at Jerusalem by that name? This is a thing that the scriptures in a measure leave in the dark; however, there is a foundation for an opinion, which we will give, whether it is correct or not.

Zion is a very ancient name, and signifies the pure in heart, or the place where the pure in heart dwell; and, according to recent revelation which the Lord has given to his people, there was a Zion established in the days of Enoch, wherein the church of the first-born dwelt: and, perhaps, Paul alludes to this Zion of Enoch when he says: "But ye are come unto Mount Sion, and into the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and the church of the first-born." Heb. xii. 22, 23. The saints of the Antediluvian world, are the only ones that we can with propriety call the church of the first-born; but they and their Zion are in heaven; and Paul calls their Zion the city of God, and them the church of the first-born.

Now it is possible that when Melchisedec, or whoever founded Zion, when arranging the various districts and suburbs of Jerusalem, called that district, or the upper city, which was so beautiful and elevated, "Mount Zion," out of respect to a former Zion, and because of the pureness of the name; the same as many name their children after eminent men, and those whom they in a particular manner respect.—After David it was called "the city of David."

When Jerusalem is rebuilt it is probable that this city of David will also be built again; but not in fulfillment of the predictions of the prophets concerning the establishment of the latter day Zion, or the New Jerusalem, but in fulfillment of prophecy relating to the rebuilding of Jerusalem; for when it is built of course all its districts and suburbs will also be built. But we have said enough upon this part of the subject, and we hope that the reader will be able to designate the difference between the Zion which was at Jerusalem and the one that the Lord shall cause to be built for the saints to gather to, and be a place of refuge and deliverance at the time that God will trouble the nations with his wrath.

This Zion of the last days, we believe, will be located on the land of America; and, indeed, the prophets have said enough to establish this idea. David says: "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King. God is known in her palaces for a refuge." "As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the Lord of hosts, in the city of our God: God will establish it forever."—Psa. xlviii. 2–8. David evidently saw the situation of Zion, which he says is beautiful, at some other place besides Jerusalem, or he would not have said that it was on the sides of the north. Match this saying with what Isaiah says in the xviii. of his prophecy, concerning a land [America] beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, and we learn, first, as Isaiah says, that this is the land where the Lord's ensign of the last days was to be reared, and from whence the embassadors of the Lord are to be sent to all nations, and where "the place of the name of the Lord of hosts, the Mount Zion" shall be established, to which the servants of God or swift messengers to the nations shall bring a present unto the Lord of a people terrible from their beginning.

This proves that Zion is to be located in America. Second, that, according to David, it is to be on the sides of the north; consequently, on North America. David says in another place: "I will not give sleep to my eyes nor slumber to mine eyelids until I find out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob. Lo, we heard of it at Ephrata; we found it in the fields of the wood." "For the Lord hath chosen Zion: he hath desired it for his habitation." Psa. cxxxii. 4–13. It cannot be said in truth that Jerusalem was in the fields of the wood in David's time; therefore, we conclude that he had reference to some other place besides Jerusalem. Indeed, the interior of North America is interspersed with the fields of the woods; or, in other words, fields in the midst of the wilderness. Isaiah says: "Zion is a wilderness, Jerusalem a desolation."

We have before proved the Book of Mormon to be true; therefore, whatever it says upon this subject we consider as valid testimony.—Moroni, writing the words of Ether, says, page 550: "Behold, Ether saw the days of Christ, and he spake concerning a New Jerusalem upon this land; and he spake also concerning the house of Israel, and the Jerusalem from whence Lehi should come; after it be destroyed, it should be built up again a holy city unto the Lord; wherefore it could not be a New Jerusalem, for it had been in a time of old, but it should be built up again and become a holy city of the Lord: and should be built up unto the house of Israel; and that a new Jerusalem should be built up upon this land, unto the remnant of the seed of Joseph, for which things there has been a type: for as Joseph brought his father down into the land of Egypt, even so he died there; wherefore the Lord brought a remnant of the seed of Joseph out of the land of Jerusalem that he might be merciful unto the seed of Joseph, that they should perish not, even as he was merciful unto the father of Joseph that he should perish not; wherefore the remnant of the house of Joseph shall be built upon this land; and it shall be a land of their inheritance; and they shall build up a holy city unto the Lord, like unto the Jerusalem of old; and they shall no more be confounded, until the end come, when the earth shall pass away."

The prophets have declared that there shall

this city of David will also be built again; but not in fulfillment of the predictions of the prophets concerning the establishment of the latter day Zion, or the New Jerusalem, but in fulfillment of prophecy relating to the rebuilding of Jerusalem; for when it is built of course all its districts and suburbs will also be built. But we have said enough upon this part of the subject, and we hope that the reader will be able to designate the difference between the Zion which was at Jerusalem and the one that the Lord shall cause to be built for the saints to gather to, and be a place of refuge and deliverance at the time that God will trouble the nations with his wrath.

This Zion of the last days, we believe, will be located on the land of America; and, indeed, the prophets have said enough to establish this idea. David says: "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King. God is known in her palaces for a refuge." "As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the Lord of hosts, in the city of our God: God will establish it forever."—Psa. xlviii. 2–8. David evidently saw the situation of Zion, which he says is beautiful, at some other place besides Jerusalem, or he would not have said that it was on the sides of the north. Match this saying with what Isaiah says in the xviii. of his prophecy, concerning a land [America] beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, and we learn, first, as Isaiah says, that this is the land where the Lord's ensign of the last days was to be reared, and from whence the embassadors of the Lord are to be sent to all nations, and where "the place of the name of the Lord of hosts, the Mount Zion" shall be established, to which the servants of God or swift messengers to the nations shall bring a present unto the Lord of a people terrible from their beginning.

This proves that Zion is to be located in America. Second, that, according to David, it is to be on the sides of the north; consequently, on North America. David says in another place: "I will not give sleep to my eyes nor slumber to mine eyelids until I find out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob. Lo, we heard of it at Ephrata; we found it in the fields of the wood." "For the Lord hath chosen Zion: he hath desired it for his habitation." Psa. cxxxii. 4–13. It cannot be said in truth that Jerusalem was in the fields of the wood in David's time; therefore, we conclude that he had reference to some other place besides Jerusalem. Indeed, the interior of North America is interspersed with the fields of the woods; or, in other words, fields in the midst of the wilderness. Isaiah says: "Zion is a wilderness, Jerusalem a desolation."

We have before proved the Book of Mormon to be true; therefore, whatever it says upon this subject we consider as valid testimony.—Moroni, writing the words of Ether, says, page 550: "Behold, Ether saw the days of Christ, and he spake concerning a New Jerusalem upon this land; and he spake also concerning the house of Israel, and the Jerusalem from whence Lehi should come; after it be destroyed, it should be built up again a holy city unto the Lord; wherefore it could not be a New Jerusalem, for it had been in a time of old, but it should be built up again and become a holy city of the Lord: and should be built up unto the house of Israel; and that a new Jerusalem should be built up upon this land, unto the remnant of the seed of Joseph, for which things there has been a type: for as Joseph brought his father down into the land of Egypt, even so he died there; wherefore the Lord brought a remnant of the seed of Joseph out of the land of Jerusalem that he might be merciful unto the seed of Joseph, that they should perish not, even as he was merciful unto the father of Joseph that he should perish not; wherefore the remnant of the house of Joseph shall be built upon this land; and it shall be a land of their inheritance; and they shall build up a holy city unto the Lord, like unto the Jerusalem of old; and they shall no more be confounded, until the end come, when the earth shall pass away."

The prophets have declared that there shall be deliverance for the saints in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem; therefore, when we take all things into consideration, we discover that it is perfectly consistent with reason and the scriptures, for Zion to be built upon this continent: for this is a promised land to the tribe of Joseph, as much so as Canaan to the House of Israel. For instance, the Lord will establish a place of gathering upon this land, near the centre of the North division of the continent, which will be convenient for the House of Joseph that is upon this land to gather to, and also, for many of the saints that are now scattered among the Gentile nations. And also he will cause the old city of Jerusalem to be rebuilt, and the Jews to gather there. Thus there will be two central places of gathering, and deliverance. Zion and Jerusalem, when spoken of as being the two great places of deliverance, are not synonymous: for Jerusalem and its suburbs, when spoken of at a distance, are all ranked under the one head; but the prophets speak of Zion as being established, and having stakes or auxiliary cities.

The city of David, or Zion at Jerusalem, was merely an auxiliary, and not the principal. Isaiah places this matter beyond doubt, that Zion and Jerusalem are not synonymous, but on two separate lands. "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory; and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken: neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah, and thy land Bulah: for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married."

It is said, Gen. x. 25, that in the days of Peleg the earth (not nations) was divided; it is also said, Gen. i. 9, that the waters were gathered together unto one place at the time of the creation; and of course the land was in one place; but it is manifest that there has been a great division, so much so that the earth has been divided into continents, which the Bible says was done in the days of Peleg; but according to the prophet Isaiah, when the time of restoration comes, then this continent upon which Zion shall be built, shall re-unite with the eastern, and thus fulfill the saying, "thy land shall be married," or joined. But, says the objector, how can there be two places of gathering if Ezekiel's words are true? "And I will make them one nation upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all."

The land of America is a promised land to the house of Joseph; therefore, the "mountains of Israel" are here as much so as in the land of Canaan. The idea is that the whole earth will be subjected to one form of government, and to one code of laws, and one king shall rule over them, whether in America or in Asia. But the two cotinents are to be united, and then it will be an easy thing for them to become one nation upon the mountains (not mountain) of Israel, and at the same time the tribe of Joseph and others dwell in Zion, and its vicinity upon this land, and the Jews in the land of Canaan, and one king rule over them all.—Reflector.

For the Gospel Herald.

I some time since had in my hands a work entitled "Wesley's Sermons," from which I saw fit to make a few extracts, not because they are any more true because they were written by John Wesley, who is styled "the great Apostle or founder of Methodism."—But as many have a particular respect and reverence for such men as Mr. Wesley, I hope they may believe the quotations which I shall make from his writings concerning the apostacy of the church established by Christ and his ancient Apostles, and the cause of the departure of the spiritual gifts, especially those who profess to believe the same religion which he taught. Speaking concerning the church and the signs of the times in the fourth century, he thus remarks:—

"A wounderful instance of this spiritual blindness, this total inability to discern the signs of the times mentioned in the scriptures, is given us in a very celebrated work of a late eminent writer, who supposed the New Jerusalem came down from heaven when Constantine the Great called himself a christian. I say called himself a christian, for I dare not affirm that he was one any more than Peter the Great. I cannot but believe he would have come nearer the mark if he had said that it was the time when a huge cloud of infernal brimstone came up from the bottomless pit! for surely there never was a time when Satan gained so fatal an advantage over the church of Christ as when such a flood of riches, and honor and be deliverance for the saints in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem; therefore, when we take all things into consideration, we discover that it is perfectly consistent with reason and the scriptures, for Zion to be built upon this continent: for this is a promised land to the tribe of Joseph, as much so as Canaan to the House of Israel. For instance, the Lord will establish a place of gathering upon this land, near the centre of the North division of the continent, which will be convenient for the House of Joseph that is upon this land to gather to, and also, for many of the saints that are now scattered among the Gentile nations. And also he will cause the old city of Jerusalem to be rebuilt, and the Jews to gather there. Thus there will be two central places of gathering, and deliverance. Zion and Jerusalem, when spoken of as being the two great places of deliverance, are not synonymous: for Jerusalem and its suburbs, when spoken of at a distance, are all ranked under the one head; but the prophets speak of Zion as being established, and having stakes or auxiliary cities.

The city of David, or Zion at Jerusalem, was merely an auxiliary, and not the principal. Isaiah places this matter beyond doubt, that Zion and Jerusalem are not synonymous, but on two separate lands. "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory; and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken: neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah, and thy land Bulah: for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married."

It is said, Gen. x. 25, that in the days of Peleg the earth (not nations) was divided; it is also said, Gen. i. 9, that the waters were gathered together unto one place at the time of the creation; and of course the land was in one place: but it is manifest that there has been a great division, so much so that the earth has been divided into continents, which the Bible says was done in the days of Peleg; but according to the prophet Isaiah, when the time of restoration comes, then this continent upon which Zion shall be built, shall re-unite with the eastern, and thus fulfill the saying, "thy land shall be married," or joined. But, says the objector, how can there be two places of gathering if Ezekiel's words are true? "And I will make them one nation upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all"

The land of America is a promised land to the house of Joseph; therefore, the "mountains of Israel" are here as much so as in the land of Canaan. The idea is that the whole earth will be subjected to one form of government, and to one code of laws, and one king shall rule over them, whether in America or in Asia. But the two cotinents are to be united, and then it will be an easy thing for them to become one nation upon the mountains (not mountain) of Israel, and at the same time the tribe of Joseph and others dwell in Zion, and its vicinity upon this land, and the Jews in the land of Canaan, and one king rule over them all.—Reflector.

For the Gospel Herald.

I some time since had in my hands a work entitled "Wesley's Sermons," from which I saw fit to make a few extracts, not because they are any more true because they were written by John Wesley, who is styled "the great Apostle or founder of Methodism."—But as many have a particular respect and reverence for such men as Mr. Wesley, I hope they may believe the quotations which I shall make from his writings concerning the apostacy of the church established by Christ and his ancient Apostles, and the cause of the departure of the spiritual gifts, especially those who profess to believe the same religion which he taught. Speaking concerning the church and the signs of the times in the fourth century, he thus remarks:—

"A wounderful instance of this spiritual blindness, this total inability to discern the signs of the times mentioned in the scriptures, is given us in a very celebrated work of a late eminent writer, who supposed the New Jerusalem came down from heaven when Constantine the Great called himself a christian. I say called himself a christian, for I dare not affirm that he was one any more than Peter the Great. I cannot but believe he would have come nearer the mark if he had said that it was the time when a huge cloud of infernal brimstone came up from the bottomless pit! for surely there never was a time when Satan gained so fatal an advantage over the church of Christ as when such a flood of riches, and honor and power broke in upon it, particularly on the clergy." See Vol. 2, page 97.

Again he says, in his sermon on "the More Excellent Way," speaking concerning the spiritual gifts :—

"It does not appear that these extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost were common in the church for more than two or three centuries.—We seldom hear of them after that fatal period when the emperor Constantine called himself a christian; and, from a vain imagination of promoting the christian cause thereby, heaped riches, and power, and honor upon the christians in general; but in particular upon the christian clergy. From this time they almost totally ceased: very few instances of the kind were found. The cause of this was not (as has been vulgarly supposed) 'because there was no more occasion for them;' because all the world was become christians. This is a miserable mistake; not a twentieth part of it was then nominally christians. The real cause was 'the love of many,' almost of all, christians 'waxed cold.' The Son of Man, when he came to examine his church, could hardly 'find faith on earth.' This was the real cause why the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost were no longer to be found in the christian church: because the christian world turned heathens again, and had only a dead form left." Sermon 94, page 266.

So much for Mr. Wesley. I must confess him to be ahead of most of the Protestant writers on this subject; for he, unlike the most of the writers, was able to discover the grand reason why the spiritual gifts ceased to be in the church; that it was not as many suppose now at the present time, "that they were simply given for the establishment of the christian religion," but that they were to exist while the christian religion existed; and that when that ceased to to exist, or was perverted, or exchanged for heathenism, then they would cease to be manifest also. Yet we still find Mr. Wesley in a bad dilemma; for notwithstanding the power of godliness, he acknowledges, did not exist in the church for more than one thousand years previous to his day, yet by virtue of the power which the old Romish or apostate church held, passing through the English church, made John Wesley a minister of the gospel by the imposition of hands. O, fudge! "Can a stream rise higher than its fountain?" If not, how could he be made a minister of the gospel by those who were teaching false doctrine, who had nothing but a form of godliness, without the power?

"Can a bitter fountain send forth sweet water?" If not, according to Wesley's own theory, he was no more a minister after his ordination than before. But he is not alone. All that immense number of "dissenters from the old Roman church faith," now known under the name of "Reformers," are with him on this ground in this respect. And by turning round and calling the Roman church the "Mother of Harlots," they simply acknowledge that they, or the churches which they established, are the Harlots,—the illegitimate offspring of the "Mother." Yet strange as this may be, and as inconsistent as it may appear, men, in order to be in possession of some kind of religion, have readily embraced their various creeds and theories; and when discovering their vast difference of religious tenets, wherein they differ one from the other, they have excused themselves by saying, "as a man thinketh so is he;" "let every one be persuaded in his own mind;" "that they were all on the way to heaven, only traveling different roads;" "that they were all climbing up the same hill, and would all finally arrive there at last;" with various other expressions, made on various occasions, calculated to suppress doubts, and drive away fears and make themselves believe that they were justified in the sight of heaven.

But what of all this? Why, it simply shows that all men and nations have been left to walk in their own way, as well since the days of the primitive church and Apostles, as before. And as Paul said to the "Lycaonians that God in time past, suffered all nations to walk in their own ways. Nevertheless he left not himself without a witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness." Acts xiv. 16, 17. So it has been with ages and generations since Paul's day; "men have been blessed with rain from heaven and fruitful seasons." It is thus that God has not left himself entirely without a witness for the past twelve hundred years, yet during that time no special witness has been sent to the nations of the earth from heaven. No man has stood up to receive the word from God's own mouth, Moses-like, to give unto the people.

None have received the ministrations of angels; in fact, none have received those gifts and manifestations of the Holy Ghost which were common in the primitive church, such as seeing visions, healing the sick, speaking in tongues, prophecying, &c. Indeed we may safely say that God has left all nations to walk in their own way. The heavens have been as brass over their heads. All, all have pursued their own occupation, their own customs, their own religion, and have flattered themselves that so it would always be. But, again, in this the nineteenth century, the voice from heaven is heard. The angel comes down from heaven, "having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and tongue, and people, (in fulfillment of the revelation given to St. John,) saying with a loud voice, fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water." Rev. xiv. 6, 7.

S. P. BACON.

(Continued from page 315.)

Light) he, in a treatise on the sonship of Christ, proved successfully, in the affirmative, that he was not, neither indeed could be, both Father and Son. And having invited the world to show his position false and prove to the contrary, asking at the same time thirty-three questions that cannot be gainsayed; holding the idea that the Father, Son and Holy Ghost is but one and the same being as a scandal to the word of the Lord, and shows it to be so in the most ridiculous light he possibly could; which position he now denies, and has taken it upon himself to prove the negative and whip himself; which after he has done, I wish him to show where his (Christ's) Father was when he told Mary that he had not yet ascended to his Father, or whether he was acting the necromancer when the voice came and said, I have glorified, &c. And the people that stood by said it thundered, or that an angel spoke, John xii. 28, 29. Or if he was Father, Son and Holy Ghost, when the Holy Ghost descended like a dove and rested on him, and a voice came from heaven, saying, thou art my beloved Son, was he the Holy Ghost before he descended like a dove, being bot*h* in *h*eaven and on earth at the same time? Or was he the Father and Son when the voice came from *h*eaven declaring him to be his Son, being bot*h* in *h*eaven and on earth? Or was he all three when he prayed to his Father that he would give the Holy Ghost to those that believed, that he might be in them as thou, Father, art in me, that we may be one? Book of Nephi, page 480-81.

A. HALE.

power broke in upon it, particularly on the clergy." See Vol. 2, page 97.

Again he says, in his sermon on "the More Excellent Way," speaking concerning the spiritual gifts :—

"It does not appear that these extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost were common in the church for more than two or three centuries.—We seldom hear of them after that fatal period when the emperor Constantine called himself a christian; and, from a vain imagination of promoting the christian cause thereby, heaped riches, and power, and honor upon the christians in general; but in particular upon the christian clergy. From this time they almost totally ceased: very few instances of the kind were found. The cause of this was not (as has been vulgarly supposed) 'because there was no more occasion for them;' because all the world was become christians. This is a miserable mistake; not a twentieth part of it was then nominally christians. The real cause was 'the love of many,' almost of all, christians 'waxed cold.' The Son of Man, when he came to examine his church, could hardly 'find faith on earth.' This was the real cause why the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost were no longer to be found in the christian church: because the christian world turned heathens again, and had only a dead form left." Sermon 94, page 266.

So much for Mr. Wesley. I must confess him to be ahead of most of the Protestant writers on this subject; for he, unlike the most of the writers, was able to discover the grand reason why the spiritual gifts ceased to be in the church: that it was not as many suppose now at the present time, "that they were simply given for the establishment of the christian religion," but that they were to exist while the christian religion existed; and that when that ceased to to exist, or was perverted, or exchanged for heathenism, then they would cease to be manifest also. Yet we still find Mr. Wesley in a bad dilemma; for notwithstanding the power of godliness, he acknowledges, did not exist in the church for more than one thousand years previous to his day, yet by virtue of the power which the old Romish or apostate church held, passing through the English church, made John Wesley a minister of the gospel by the imposition of hands. O, fudge! "Can a stream rise higher than its fountain?" If not, how could he be made a minister of the gospel by those who were teaching false doctrine, who had nothing but a form of godliness, without the power?

"Can a bitter fountain send forth sweet water?" If not, according to Wesley's own theory, he was no more a minister after his ordination than before. But he is not alone. All that immense number of "dissenters from the old Roman church faith," now known under the name of "Reformers," are with him on this ground in this respect. And by turning round and calling the Roman church the "Mother of Harlots," they simply acknowledge that they, or the churches which they established, are the Harlots,—the illegitimate offspring of the "Mother." Yet strange as this may be, and as inconsistent as it may appear, men, in order to be in possession of some kind of religion, have readily embraced their various creeds and theories; and when discovering their vast difference of religious tenets, wherein they differ one from the other, they have excused themselves by saying, "as a man thinketh so is he;" "let every one be persuaded in his own mind;" "that they were all on the way to heaven, only traveling different roads;" "that they were all climbing up the same hill, and would all finally arrive there at last;" with various other expressions, made on various occasions, calculated to suppress doubts, and drive away fears and make themselves believe that they were justified in the sight of heaven.

But what of all this? Why, it simply shows that all men and nations have been left to walk in their own way, as well since the days of the primitive church and Apostles, as before. And as Paul said to the "Lycaonians that God in time past, suffered all nations to walk in their own ways. Nevertheless he left not himself without a witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness." Acts xiv. 16, 17. So it has been with ages and generations since Paul's day; "men have been blessed with rain from heaven and fruitful seasons." It is thus that God has not left himself entirely without a witness for the past twelve hundred years, yet during that time no special witness has been sent to the nations of the earth from heaven. No man has stood up to receive the word from God's own mouth, Moses-like, to give unto the people.

None have received the ministrations of angels; in fact, none have received those gifts and manifestations of the Holy Ghost which were common in the primitive church, such as seeing visions, healing the sick, speaking in tongues, prophecying, &c. Indeed we may safely say that God has left all nations to walk in their own way. The heavens have been as brass over their heads. All, all have pursued their own occupation, their own customs, their own religion, and have flattered themselves that so it would always be. But, again, in this the nineteenth century, the voice from heaven is heard. The angel comes down from heaven, "having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and tongue, and people, (in fulfillment of the revelation given to St. John,) saying with a loud voice, fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water." Rev. xiv. 6, 7.

S. P. BACON.

(Continued from page 315.)

Light he, in a treatise on the sonship of Christ, proved successfully, in the affirmative, that he was not, neither indeed could be, both Father and Son. And having invited the world to show his position false and prove to the contrary, asking at the same time thirty-three questions that cannot be gainsayed; holding the idea that the Father, Son and Holy Ghost is but one and the same being as a scandal to the word of the Lord, and shows it to be so in the most ridiculous light he possibly could; which position he now denies, and has taken it upon himself to prove the negative and whip himself; which after he has done, I wish him to show where his (Christ's) Father was when he told Mary that he had not yet ascended to his Father, or whether he was acting the necromancer when the voice came and said, I have glorified, &c. And the people that stood by said it thundered, or that an angel spoke, John xii. 28, 29. Or if he was Father, Son and Holy Ghost, when the Holy Ghost descended like a dove and rested on him, and a voice came from heaven, saying, thou art my beloved Son, was he the Holy Ghost before he descended like a dove, being bot*h* in *h*eaven and on eart*h* at t*h*e same time? Or was he the Father and Son when t*h*e voice came from *h*eaven declaring him to be his Son, being bot*h* in *h*eaven and on eart*h*? Or was he all three when he prayed to his Fat*h*er that he would give the Holy G*h*ost to those that believed, that he might be in them as thou, Fat*h*er, art in me, that we may be one? Book of Nep*h*i, page 480–81.

A. HALE.

HOPE.

BY BERNARD BARTON.

We journey through a vale of tears,
By many a cloud o'ercast;
And worldly cares and worldly fears,
Go with us to the last.
Not to the last! Thy word hath said,
Could we but read aright,
"Poor pilgrim, lift in hope thy head,
At eve it shall be light!"

"Though earth born shadows now may shroud
Thy thorny path awhile,
God's blessed word can part each cloud,
And bid the sunshine smile.
Only believe, in living faith,
His love and power divine,
And ere thy sun shall set in death
His light shall round thee shine.

"When tempest clouds are dark on high,
His bow of love and peace
Shines sweetly in the vaulted sky,
Betokening storms shall cease.
Hold on thy way, with hope unchilled,
By faith and not by sight,
And thou shalt own his word fulfilled,
At eve it shall be light."

FREAKS OF INSANITY.

The most amusing cases of insanity are those who are monomaniacs, or those who are perfectly sane on all points but one. A man who had been confined for a length of time, wrote a perfectly rational letter to the commissary of the institution where he was kept, about the subject of his discharge from confinement. The officer called, and had a long conversation with him, in which he conducted himself with the greatest propriety. An instrument was then prepared for his discharge, to which he was desired to put his name; he immediately subscribed himself as Jesus Christ, and then indulged in all the extravagances pertaining to that singular delusion.

A man is mentioned by Dr. Rush, who imagined that he had a Hottentot in his stomach, that he had got in at the Cape of Good-Hope, and no reasoning could persuade him to the contrary. Pinel mentions a man who had become insane during the horrors of the French Revolution, and imagined that he had been guillotined. The judges changed their mind after his head had been taken off, and ordered it to be put on again. The persons to whom this duty was assigned, had made a mistake and placed upon him a wrong head. Another individual harbored the idea that he had been hanged, and afterwards brought to life by means of galvanism; and that the whole of his life had been restored to him.

It has been ascertained that in France, maniacs of the better educated classes consist almost entirely of priests, artists, painters, sculptors, poets, and musicians. No instance, it is said, occurs of the disease in the naturalists, geometricians, or chemists.—Ex. paper.

AN ANTIQUARIAN.

The Buffalo Republic tells of a curiosity monger from the east, who came to that city recently for the purpose of examining the mounds in the vicinity that are supposed to be the remains of Indian tribes, now extinct. Having got a description of their locality, he resolved to obtain some specimens for his cabinet, and started hence in a buggy, and with spade and pickaxe. After traveling some distance, he drove up near a log cabin about dark, and commenced operations upon a small mound, and had made some progress in his work, when the door of the cabin opened, and a voice issued with, "Halloo, stranger, what are you stealing them ere potatoes for?" The Barnumite vamosed, leaving his spade and pickaxe in his haste.

HUMAN PURSUITS.

Every one would pursue his own interest, if he knew what it was; and, in fact, every one does pursue it, but the generality totally mistake it. No man would pursue riches before happiness, power before quiet or fame before safety, if he knew the true value of each; no man would prefer the transitory and worthless enjoyment in this world, to the permanent and sublime felicity of a better, if he had a clear prospect of them both; but we see the former through a mist, which always magnifies, and the latter appears to be at so great a distance, that we scarce see it at all, and therefore it makes little impression upon our senses, and has little influence upon our conduct.—Ex. paper.

A DESPERATE CHANCE FOR SALVATION.—A little tract just published by our reverential friends of the American Tract Society, and entitled "George Taylor" contains the following among other equally consoling declarations: "Unless you are brought to loathe and abhor yourself you must perish."

If these are really the conditions of salvation, and we confess that, although in the main rather devotional, we do not deem ourselves sufficiently versed in such matters to contest so nice a point with our theological friends of the Tract Society, we must give it as our deliberate and settled conviction that not more than one out of every thousand of our most pious religious professors stand the first sight of getting even the tip end of their reverential snouts inside the outside gate of paradise.—Universe.

A PEOPLE WITHOUT RELIGION.

The Arafuras, a people of the Moluccan Archipelago, seem to have no religion whatever. Mr. Bik, who visited them in 1824, found it impossible to convey to them the notion of a Deity. "At length one of them, who had listened with particular attention, demanded of me where this all-ruling Being took up its abode. I answered, that Deity was present everywhere, not only among us, but in every plant, through his goodness and power, he has furnished us with food. The idea was too abstruse for the Arafuras; for one of them answered, 'That this God is certainly in your arrack, (a spirituous liquor,) for I never feel happier than when I have drank plenty of it!'"—Kloff's Voyages.

☞ Bacon says the logical part of men's minds is often good, but the mathematical part nothing; that is, they can judge well of the mode of attaining any end, but cannot estimate the value of the end itself.

HOPE.

BY BERNARD BARTON.

We journey through a vale of tears,
By many a cloud o'ercast;
And worldly cares and worldly fears,
Go with us to the last.
Not to the last! Thy word hath said,
Could we but read aright,
"Poor pilgrim, lift in hope thy head,
At eve it shall be light!"

"Though earth born shadows now may shroud
Thy thorny path awhile,
God's blessed word can part each cloud,
And bid the sunshine smile.
Only believe, in living faith,
His love and power divine,
And ere thy sun shall set in death
His light shall round thee shine.

"When tempest clouds are dark on high,
His bow of love and peace
Shines sweetly in the vaulted sky,
Betokening storms shall cease.
Hold on thy way, with hope unchilled,
By faith and not by sight,
And thou shalt own his word fulfilled,
At eve it shall be light."

FREAKS OF INSANITY.

The most amusing cases of insanity are those who are monomaniacs, or those who are perfectly sane on all points but one. A man who had been confined for a length of time, wrote a perfectly rational letter to the commissary of the institution where he was kept, about the subject of his discharge from confinement. The officer called, and had a long conversation with him, in which he conducted himself with the greatest propriety. An instrument was then prepared for his discharge, to which he was desired to put his name; he immediately subscribed himself as Jesus Christ, and then indulged in all the extravagances pertaining to that singular delusion.

A man is mentioned by Dr. Rush, who imagined that he had a Hottentot in his stomach, that he had got in at the Cape of Good-Hope, and no reasoning could persuade him to the contrary. Pinel mentions a man who had become insane during the horrors of the French Revolution, and imagined that he had been guillotined. The judges changed their mind after his head had been taken off, and ordered it to be put on again. The persons to whom this duty was assigned, had made a mistake and placed upon him a wrong head. Another individual harbored the idea that he had been hanged, and afterwards brought to life by means of galvanism; and that the whole of his life had been restored to him.

It has been ascertained that in France, maniacs of the better educated classes consist almost entirely of priests, artists, painters, sculptors, poets, and musicians. No instance, it is said, occurs of the disease in the naturalists, geometricians, or chemists.—Ex. paper.

AN ANTIQUARIAN.

The Buffalo Republic tells of a curiosity monger from the east, who came to that city recently for the purpose of examining the mounds in the vicinity that are supposed to be the remains of Indian tribes, now extinct. Having got a description of their locality, he resolved to obtain some specimens for his cabinet, and started hence in a buggy, and with spade and pickaxe. After traveling some distance, he drove up near a log cabin about dark, and commenced operations upon a small mound, and had made some progress in his work, when the door of the cabin opened, and a voice issued with, "Halloo, stranger, what are you stealing them ere potatoes for?" The Barnumite vamosed, leaving his spade and pickaxe in his haste.

HUMAN PURSUITS.

Every one would pursue his own interest, if he knew what it was; and, in fact, every one does pursue it, but the generality totally mistake it. No man would pursue riches before happiness, power before quiet or fame before safety, if he knew the true value of each; no man would prefer the transitory and worthless enjoyment in this world, to the permanent and sublime felicity of a better, if he had a clear prospect of them both; but we see the former through a mist, which always magnifies, and the latter appears to be at so great a distance, that we scarce see it at all, and therefore it makes little impression upon our senses, and has little influence upon our conduct.—Ex. paper.

A DESPERATE CHANCE FOR SALVATION.—A little tract just published by our reverential friends of the American Tract Society, and entitled "George Taylor" contains the following among other equally consoling declarations: "Unless you are brought to loathe and abhor yourself you must perish."

If these are really the conditions of salvation, and we confess that, although in the main rather devotional, we do not deem ourselves sufficiently versed in such matters to contest so nice a point with our theological friends of the Tract Society, we must give it as our deliberate and settled conviction that not more than one out of every thousand of our most pious religious professors stand the first sight of getting even the tip end of their reverential snouts inside the outside gate of paradise.—Universe.

A PEOPLE WITHOUT RELIGION.

The Arafuras, a people of the Moluccan Archipelago, seem to have no religion whatever. Mr. Bik, who visited them in 1824, found it impossible to convey to them the notion of a Deity. "At length one of them, who had listened with particular attention, demanded of me where this all-ruling Being took up its abode. I answered, that Deity was present everywhere, not only among us, but in every plant, through his goodness and power, he has furnished us with food. The idea was too abstruse for the Arafuras; for one of them answered, 'That this God is certainly in your arrack, (a spirituous liquor,) for I never feel happier than when I have drank plenty of it!'"—Kloff's Voyages.

☞ Bacon says the logical part of men's minds is often good, but the mathematical part nothing; that is, they can judge well of the mode of attaining any end, but cannot estimate the value of the end itself.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 1.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1850. [WHOLE No. 169.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v. 5.

O what a blessed hope is ours, if we are of that happy number called the meek! We are not only blessed, but we are told what our blessing shall consist in; for we shall "inherit the earth." The wisest man, so called, says: "The hope of the righteous shall be gladness; but the expectation of the wicked shall perish." For he says, "the righteous shall never be removed; (of course from the earth;) but the wicked shall not inherit the earth." Prov. x. 28, 30.

And, again: "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished; but the seed of the righteous shall be delivered." But where, O where, are we to be recompensed? Here upon this planet where we were created, and where our sphere of action has been? or in some, to us, unknown region? "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed." Where, I ask? "In the earth;" "much more the wicked and the sinner." Prov. xi. 21, 31. Is it indeed possible that eighteen hundred years have rolled away, and kingdoms, principalities and powers have been reared up by the power of man, and as a millstone have fallen, never more to rise, and mankind should in this, the boasted nineteenth century, filled with a so called religious knowledge, be found singing with all zeal of a devotee—

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,
Look forward to that heavenly place,
The saints secure abode."

O heavens! have not the sectarian world read their Bibles? If they have, are they blind, or are they consummate hypocrites? "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner." But what is the recompense of the righteous?—"They shall inherit the earth." "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." Prov. iii. 21, 22. "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." Matt. xv. 13. "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain the; he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved." Psa. lv. 22.

"Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in any wise to do evil: for evil doers shall be cut off; but those who wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth: for yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt dilligently consider his place and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnaseth upon him with his teeth. The Lord shall laugh at him; for he seeth that his days are coming." Psa. xxxvii. 8, 13.

Again: "The Lord knoweth the days of the upright; and their inheritance shall be forever. For such as are blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off. The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever. Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it." Psa. xxxvii. 18, 22, 29, 34. What glorious, what interesting promises "to the meek, to the just," to the "righteous," for

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 1.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1850. [WHOLE No. 169.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v. 5.

O what a blessed hope is ours, if we are of that happy number called the meek! We are not only blessed, but we are told what our blessing shall consist in; for we shall "inherit the earth." The wisest man, so called, says: "The hope of the righteous shall be gladness; but the expectation of the wicked shall perish." For he says, "the righteous shall never be removed; (of course from the earth;) but the wicked shall not inherit the earth." Prov. x. 28, 30.

And, again: "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished; but the seed of the righteous shall be delivered." But where, O where, are we to be recompensed? Here upon this planet where we were created, and where our sphere of action has been? or in some, to us, unknown region? "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed." Where, I ask? "In the earth;" "much more the wicked and the sinner." Prov. xi. 21, 31. Is it indeed possible that eighteen hundred years have rolled away, and kingdoms, principalities and powers have been reared up by the power of man, and as a millstone have fallen, never more to rise, and mankind should in this, the boasted nineteenth century, filled with a so called religious knowledge, be found singing with all zeal of a devotee—

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,
Look forward to that heavenly place,
The saints secure abode."

O heavens! have not the sectarian world read their Bibles? If they have, are they blind, or are they consummate hypocrites? "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner." But what is the recompense of the righteous?—"They shall inherit the earth." "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." Prov. iii. 21, 22. "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." Matt. xv. 13. "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain the; he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved." Psa. lv. 22.

"Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in any wise to do evil: for evil doers shall be cut off; but those who wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth: for yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt dilligently consider his place and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnaseth upon him with his teeth. The Lord shall laugh at him; for he seeth that his days are coming." Psa. xxxvii. 13.

Again: "The Lord knoweth the days of the upright; and their inheritance shall be forever. For such as are blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off. The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever. Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it." Psa. xxxvii. 18, 22, 29, 34. What glorious, what interesting promises "to the meek, to the just," to the "righteous," for they shall eventually see the wicked rooted up, cut off and receive their recompense in the earth; and the meek shall diligently consider his (the wicked's) former place, and shall not find it, for he shall not inhabit or inherit the land.

But God will never suffer the righteous to be moved from the earth. Here they shall have an everlasting inheritance, and sinners shall be destroyed, "cut off, consume away as smoke," and the meek shall see it, and shall inherit the earth; for so say the prophets, so said Jesus, and so saith nature, reason, philosophy, and God's eternal truth. As strange as it may seem to some, "the meek" have never as yet "inherited the earth." The wicked have held universal sway, as regards the inheritance of the earth. Abraham received a promise from God that his seed should have the land of Canaan as a gift from him. Gen. xii. 6, 7. "And the Lord said unto Abraham, after Lot was separated from him, lift up now thine eyes and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: For all the land which thou seest to thee will I give it, and thy seed forever." Gen. xiii. 14, 15.

But did they expect to realize the full extent of that promise in this life? Let us well consider this matter. When they inherit the earth the "wicked shall be cut off, rooted up, consumed away," and "burned up root and branch, and the expectation of the wicked shall perish." This was never accomplished in the days of Abraham, or any of his seed. Stephen, in speaking of this very same thing, says, Acts vii. 5: "And he (God) gave him (Abraham) none inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet, he had no child." Paul says, Heb. xi. 8,9: "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange land, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs of the same promise; for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

Now Stephen says, God gave him none inheritance in the land, not so much as a place to set his foot on. And Paul says, when he was called on to go into the land which he should afterward receive for an inheritance, obeyed. And, again, he sojourned there in the land of promise, as in a strange land. Now if God did not give him any inheritance thereon at that time, or during his sojourning there, or his life-time, when was he to receive or realize the promises from God? It says, he should afterward receive it as an inheritance. But in order to throw still more light on this all important subject, I will again quote Paul, Heb. xi. 13. "These," speaking of Abraham, Enoch, and Noah, who had alike precious faith, "all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth."

By this we learn that Abraham and others all died in faith, not yet having received the promises, or not having yet received their inheritance which God promised them they should afterwards receive; but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed they were strangers, not citizens and landlords, but strangers and pilgrims on the earth, which they should afterwards receive for an inheritance. No, the patriarchs had to wander in sheep-skins and goat-skins, and with their brethren, the prophets and apostles, had to be "afflicted, destitute and tormented, of whom the world was not worthy; they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens, and in caves of the earth." "And all these," says Paul, "having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promises." Heb. xi. 37–39. Like good old Job, in his trial of faith, all of those worthies spoken of by Paul could cry out, "O that my words were now written! O that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen, and laid in the rock forever! For I know they shall eventually see the wicked rooted up, cut off and receive their recompense in the earth; and the meek shall diligently consider his (the wicked's) former place, and shall not find it, for he shall not inhabit or inherit the land.

But God will never suffer the righteous to be moved from the earth. Here they shall have an everlasting inheritance, and sinners shall be destroyed, "cut off, consume away as smoke," and the meek shall see it, and shall inherit the earth; for so say the prophets, so said Jesus, and so saith nature, reason, philosophy, and God's eternal truth. As strange as it may seem to some, "the meek" have never as yet "inherited the earth." The wicked have held universal sway, as regards the inheritance of the earth. Abraham received a promise from God that his seed should have the land of Canaan as a gift from him. Gen. xii. 6, 7. "And the Lord said unto Abraham, after Lot was separated from him, lift up now thine eyes and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: For all the land which thou seest to thee will I give it, and thy seed forever." Gen. xiii. 14, 15.

But did they expect to realize the full extent of that promise in this life? Let us well consider this matter. When they inherit the earth the "wicked shall be cut off, rooted up, consumed away," and "burned up root and branch, and the expectation of the wicked shall perish." This was never accomplished in the days of Abraham, or any of his seed. Stephen, in speaking of this very same thing, says, Acts vii. 5: "And he (God) gave him (Abraham) none inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child." Paul says, Heb. xi. 8,9: "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange land, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs of the same promise; for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

Now Stephen says, God gave him none inheritance in the land, not so much as a place to set his foot on. And Paul says, when he was called on to go into the land which he should afterward receive for an inheritance, obeyed. And, again, he sojourned there in the land of promise, as in a strange land. Now if God did not give him any inheritance thereon at that time, or during his sojourning there, or his life-time, when was he to receive or realize the promises from God? It says, he should afterward receive it as an inheritance. But in order to throw still more light on this all important subject, I will again quote Paul, Heb. xi. 13. "These," speaking of Abraham, Enoch, and Noah, who had alike precious faith, "all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth."

By this we learn that Abraham and others all died in faith, not yet having received the promises, or not having yet received their inheritance which God promised them they should afterwards receive; but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed they were strangers, not citizens and landlords, but strangers and pilgrims on the earth, which they should afterwards receive for an inheritance. No, the patriarchs had to wander in sheep-skins and goat-skins, and with their brethren, the prophets and apostles, had to be "afflicted, destitute and tormented, of whom the world was not worthy: they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens, and in caves of the earth." "And all these," says Paul, "having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promises." Heb. xi. 37–39. Like good old Job, in his trial of faith, all of those worthies spoken of by Paul could cry out, "O that my words were now written! O that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen, and laid in the rock forever! For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me." Job xix. 23–28.

Yes, they "endured as seeing him who is invisible," expecting to reap in due season, if they did not faint. They all knew, like good old Isaiah, who saw so much of the latter day work, that "thy dead men, together with my dead body, shall they arise; and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. xxvi. 19. Therefore even women would "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints," and "receive their dead raised to life again, and others were tortured not excepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." Heb. xi. 35. They wanted to stand in the latter day upon the earth with their Redeemer, though their bodies crumbled to the dust they knew the earth would cast out the dead, and they should obtain a better resurrection, and receive their inheritance when the wicked should be burned up, and few men left, and none to molest or make them afraid while they enjoy the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world.

O what a glorious theme for the latter day saints! It is that which animated the hearts of all the old patriarchs, prophets and apostles, and saints of God in all the world. The day is drawing nigh when the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord, and he will come and wipe away all tears from off all faces, and reign on the earth, and give the meek their inheritance on the earth, when nothing shall hurt or molest or make them afraid, and every man shall sit under his vine and fig-tree, according to the prophets. Seeing we look for these things, what manner of men ought we to be, in all meekness and lowliness of heart?—Let us be up and doing just what God would have us to do, with an eye single to the glory of the King of kings, and Lord of lords, that we may be called the meek, and receive the blessing of Christ, and our inheritance on the earth, "when the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." Let us love one another and never dissemble, and by so doing we may be one, and then soon, yea, soon, the work will be accomplished, and we will take the kingdom, and possess it forever and ever.

H. P. B.

A Barbarous Custom.—It seems that the heathen practice of burying the living with the dead, which used to be so much talked about by the Missionaries in Asia and Africa, prevails to some extent in our own country. A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Fort Vancouver, gives the following account of this custom as it exists at present among the Indians of Oregon:—

"I have just returned from a visit to the Chinook Indian country, where I witnessed a revolting ceremony—that of burying the living with the dead. One of the old chiefs lost a daughter—a fine looking woman about 20 years of age. She was wrapped up in a rush mat, together with all her trinkets, and placed in a canoe. The father had an Indian slave bound hand and foot, fastened to the body of the deceased, and then enclosed the two in another mat, leaving out the head of the living one. The Indians then took the canoe and carried it to a high rock and left it there. Their custom is to let the slave live for three days, then another slave is forced to strangle it by a cord drawn around the neck. They also kill the horse that may have been the favorite of the deceased, and bury it at the head of the canoe. I was desirous of interfering and saving the life of the poor victim, but Mr. Harris, the gentleman with me and the two Indians, our companions, assured me, that I should only get myself into a serious trouble, and as we were a great distance from the settlements, and our party so small, self-preservation dictated a different course from the inclinations of our hearts."

MODERN LITERATURE.

A desire to be new and original and striking, is a distinguishing feature in modern literature, and the results are certainly eccentric. The great river of thought, that sometimes rushed in a resistless rapid, sometimes widened out deep and calm as a lake, flows no more in its cold bed. The stream is really turned to purely practical uses, or makes a man happy with waterworks. Here and there a rill steals eccentrically off, which the fortunate discoverer explores with the ardor of a Nile traveller, and wades the driblet ankle deep, as if he were struggling in the great cataract—while another solemn, earnest spirit, smit with poesy, takes the splash of his own mill-dam for the roar of Niagara.

The world is full of appreciators, who mistake their sympathy with eccellence for the power of evincing it. A great deal is known about every thing, and little of anything. Thought in the abstract is spoken of with a reverence quite superstitious, but nobody thinks. To mark the complacency with which our critics and philosophers talk of truth and progress, you might fancy the age teemed with Bacons and Newtons; to hear them discourse learnedly of the poetic faculty, nobody would suspect there was a lack of poets. Compare our modern "thinkers" (as they are fond of calling themselves) carefully tending, nursing and dressing his tender thought and extremely young idea, and inviting all the world to come and admire the babe, which, after all, is probably ricketty and peevish, with a Shakspear casting his sturdy children forth on mankind to shift for themselves. His pages are yet unmatched, though they floated from him uncared for, as the leaves of the less inspired sybil.

that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me." Job xix. 23-28.

Yes, they "endured as seeing him who is invisible," expecting to reap in due season, if they did not faint. They all knew, like good old Isaiah, who saw so much of the latter day work, that "thy dead men, together with my dead body, shall they arise; and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. xxvi. 19. Therefore even women would "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints," and "receive their dead raised to life again, and others were tortured not excepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." Heb. xi. 35. They wanted to stand in the latter day upon the earth with their Redeemer, though their bodies crumbled to the dust they knew the earth would cast out the dead, and they should obtain a better resurrection, and receive their inheritance when the wicked should be burned up, and few men left, and none to molest or make them afraid while they enjoy the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world.

O what a glorious theme for the latter day saints! It is that which animated the hearts of all the old patriarchs, prophets and apostles, and saints of God in all the world. The day is drawing nigh when the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord, and he will come and wipe away all tears from off all faces, and reign on the earth, and give the meek their inheritance on the earth, when nothing shall hurt or molest or make them afraid, and every man shall sit under his vine and fig-tree, according to the prophets. Seeing we look for these things, what manner of men ought we to be, in all meekness and lowliness of heart?—Let us be up and doing just what God would have us to do, with an eye single to the glory of the King of kings, and Lord of lords, that we may be called the meek, and receive the blessing of Christ, and our inheritance on the earth, "when the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." Let us love one another and never dissemble, and by so doing we may be one, and then soon, yea, soon, the work will be accomplished, and we will take the kingdom, and possess it forever and ever.

H. P. B.

A Barbarous Custom.—It seems that the heathen practice of burying the living with the dead, which used to be so much talked about by the Missionaries in Asia and Africa, prevails to some extent in our own country. A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Fort Vancouver, gives the following account of this custom as it exists at present among the Indians of Oregon:—

"I have just returned from a visit to the Chinook Indian country, where I witnessed a revolting ceremony—that of burying the living with the dead. One of the old chiefs lost a daughter—a fine looking woman about 20 years of age. She was wrapped up in a rush mat, together with all her trinkets, and placed in a canoe. The father had an Indian slave bound hand and foot, fastened to the body of the deceased, and then enclosed the two in another mat, leaving out the head of the living one. The Indians then took the canoe and carried it to a high rock and left it there. Their custom is to let the slave live for three days, then another slave is forced to strangle it by a cord drawn around the neck. They also kill the horse that may have been the favorite of the deceased, and bury it at the head of the canoe. I was desirous of interfering and saving the life of the poor victim, but Mr. Harris, the gentleman with me and the two Indians, our companions, assured me, that I should only get myself into a serious trouble, and as we were a great distance from the settlements, and our party so small, self-preservation dictated a different course from the inclinations of our hearts."

MODERN LITERATURE.

A desire to be new and original and striking, is a distinguishing feature in modern literature, and the results are certainly eccentric. The great river of thought, that sometimes rushed in a resistless rapid, sometimes widened out deep and calm as a lake, flows no more in its cold bed. The stream is really turned to purely practical uses, or makes a man happy with waterworks. Here and there a rill steals eccentrically off, which the fortunate discoverer explores with the ardor of a Nile traveller, and wades the driblet ankle deep, as if he were struggling in the great cataract—while another solemn, earnest spirit, smit with poesy, takes the splash of his own mill-dam for the roar of Niagara.

The world is full of appreciators, who mistake their sympathy with eccellence for the power of evincing it. A great deal is known about every thing, and little of anything. Thought in the abstract is spoken of with a reverence quite superstitious, but nobody thinks. To mark the complacency with which our critics and philosophers talk of truth and progress, you might fancy the age teemed with Bacons and Newtons; to hear them discourse learnedly of the poetic faculty, nobody would suspect there was a lack of poets. Compare our modern "thinkers" (as they are fond of calling themselves) carefully tending, nursing and dressing his tender thought and extremely young idea, and inviting all the world to come and admire the babe, which, after all, is probably ricketty and peevish, with a Shakspear casting his sturdy children forth on mankind to shift for themselves. His pages are yet unmatched, though they floated from him uncared for, as the leaves of the less inspired sybil.

Williamsburg, N. Y., Feb. 27th, 1850.

MY DEAR BRO. COOPER:—I improve the present inch of time by informing you of the situation of the church in the eastern country. So far as I can learn its real condition there is an increase of faith in general, notwithstanding the many opposing spirits that have united their baneful influence against the work of God since we started on the eastern mission. Since I have left the city of Boston I have good tidings from there. The church is increasing in faith, but it is a hard warfare to maintain the field against the united powers of sectarianism, aided by the soul poisoning influence of Brighamism, which seems to have rested on the eastern cities as a mildew from the Almighty, leaving an impenetrable mist of darkness and moral degradation. However the spell in some places is being broken, and the result is that truth and virtue appears more lovely since their opposites have been tested.

I look for something of a company in the spring from Boston and Salem for the gathering place appointed of God for deliverance to his people, who, having been tried in the crucible, are found worthy. But a large portion of the Lord's people are poor, as they always were, and cannot yet gather. To all such we say when the Lord brings redemption to Zion he will satisfy all her poor with bread. Therefore rejoice, for your redemption is nigh. And to those who have robbed and oppressed you the Lord will render double for your sakes, if you are faithful, and cry unto him. I have also good accounts from Portland, Me., and New Hampshire.

Many who had for a time, like the daughters of Zion, hung their harps on the willow because of oppression in a land of strangers, are now making melody in their hearts to the Lord, our deliverer, and our king. Under the faithful labors of Bro. Charles Greenwood, one of the Seventies, the church is being comforted at Salem and Georgetown. And he is hereby instructed to organize all who for want of means cannot immediately gather, that they may be strengthened and encouraged by meeting often together to break bread in remembrance of their coming Lord until the day shall come when they can gather up to Zion, and there be prepared to drink of the new wine at the marriage supper of the Lamb, which is near at hand.

The church in the city of New York are doing very well now, and have good meetings.—The spirit and power of God is known among the faithful. And under the prudent teaching of our highly esteemed Bro. and fellow laborer Samuel Bennett they are of one mind in relation to the gathering, and all who can make arrangements express an anxiety to gather to the Island early in the spring. I am expecting to leave here on Monday next for Buffalo, and so on for the west, hoping soon to set my feet upon our God-given inheritance, the home of the free, and the land of the meek.

I am greatly rejoiced at the success of my brethren in Canada. May the blessings of God ever attend the labors of his chosen ones, and their hearts be made to rejoice, even in the midst of peril. The accounts from the south are also encouraging, and no doubt a good company will be able to reach Beaver in May. And in order to have a good time, and peace, and rest when gathered, let every one look to home for perfection, and make every effort to walk blameless; and each endeavor to keep one free from sin. By doing this we shall be blessed of God, and be established, truly a light to the world, and a terror to evil doers.

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Lapeer, Mich., Feb. 16th, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—I must speak. I have held my peace as long as it will do. I will declare unto all the saints the loving kindness of the Lord, and warn the rebellious to be careful how they oppose the Lord's anointed; for God is able to hold him up in spite of men or Devils. There is one great evil under the sun, and that is, men call good evil and evil good. O that men would learn to be wise, yet not wise above what is written.

We as a people ought to be very thankful

Williamsburg, N. Y., Feb. 27th, 1850.

My Dear Bro. Cooper:—I improve the present inch of time by informing you of the situation of the church in the eastern country. So far as I can learn its real condition there is an increase of faith in general, notwithstanding the many opposing spirits that have united their baneful influence against the work of God since we started on the eastern mission. Since I have left the city of Boston I have good tidings from there. The church is increasing in faith, but it is a hard warfare to maintain the field against the united powers of sectarianism, aided by the soul poisoning influence of Brighamism, which seems to have rested on the eastern cities as a mildew from the Almighty, leaving an impenetrable mist of darkness and moral degradation. However the spell in some places is being broken, and the result is that truth and virtue appears more lovely since their opposites have been tested.

I look for something of a company in the spring from Boston and Salem for the gathering place appointed of God for deliverance to his people, who, having been tried in the crucible, are found worthy. But a large portion of the Lord's people are poor, as they always were, and cannot yet gather. To all such we say when the Lord brings redemption to Zion he will satisfy all her poor with bread. Therefore rejoice, for your redemption is nigh. And to those who have robbed and oppressed you the Lord will render double for your sakes, if you are faithful, and cry unto him. I have also good accounts from Portland, Me., and New Hampshire.

Many who had for a time, like the daughters of Zion, hung their harps on the willow because of oppression in a land of strangers, are now making melody in their hearts to the Lord, our deliverer, and our king. Under the faithful labors of Bro. Charles Greenwood, one of the Seventies, the church is being comforted at Salem and Georgetown. And he is hereby instructed to organize all who for want of means cannot immediately gather, that they may be strengthened and encouraged by meeting often together to break bread in remembrance of their coming Lord until the day shall come when they can gather up to Zion, and there be prepared to drink of the new wine at the marriage supper of the Lamb, which is near at hand.

The church in the city of New York are doing very well now, and have good meetings.—The spirit and power of God is known among the faithful. And under the prudent teaching of our highly esteemed Bro. and fellow laborer Samuel Bennett they are of one mind in relation to the gathering, and all who can make arrangements express an anxiety to gather to the Island early in the spring. I am expecting to leave here on Monday next for Buffalo, and so on for the west, hoping soon to set my feet upon our God-given inheritance, the home of the free, and the land of the meek.

I am greatly rejoiced at the success of my brethren in Canada. May the blessings of God ever attend the labors of his chosen ones, and their hearts be made to rejoice, even in the midst of peril. The accounts from the south are also encouraging, and no doubt a good company will be able to reach Beaver in May. And in order to have a good time, and peace, and rest when gathered, let every one look to home for perfection, and make every effort to walk blameless; and each endeavor to keep one free from sin. By doing this we shall be blessed of God, and be established, truly a light to the world, and a terror to evil doers.

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Lapeer, Mich., Feb. 16th, 1850.

Bro. Cooper:—I must speak. I have held my peace as long as it will do. I will declare unto all the saints the loving kindness of the Lord, and warn the rebellious to be careful how they oppose the Lord's anointed; for God is able to hold him up in spite of men or Devils. There is one great evil under the sun, and that is, men call good evil and evil good. O that men would learn to be wise, yet not wise above what is written.

We as a people ought to be very thankful for what God has done, is now doing, and for what he has promised to do for us. And first, let me notice the things which he hath done for us. First, then, we are permitted to live in the age when God has spoken from the heavens, even sent holy angels to visit our earth and bring good news and glad tidings of great joy to all nations. And now, my dear brethren, let us look at our former condition, and then perhaps we can tell or appreciate our present priviliges.

What was it? I say it was awful. We were without God, and without hope in the world. It is true we had faith, but what was our faith in? What kind of a God did we hope in? I answer, one without body or passions. Sometimes we held to one thing, and then, perhaps, in one week, as soon as the priest came along, our opinions must all be given up for his, and the sure word of prophecy destroyed. And thus we were left to dwindle in unbelief, and heathen notions, in reference to a God.

One more thought on our former condition. What kind of a church did you and I belong to, brother or sister? Was it organized according to the pattern laid down in the New Testament? I answer, dear brethren, no, it was not. Many has been the time when I was a young professor in religion that I prayed for the faith once delivered to the saints, and contended for Apostolic order. Yea, I have often wept bitterly over the whole world, while around a Methodist family altar. Yea, it was the language of my heart, O that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of a wayfaring man, then would I be at rest.

I am talking of facts,and not fiction. And thus we see what our former situation was. I say it is a fact, if I ever was unhappy it was when I used to try to make myself believe that the different denominations were right. I do not wish to carry the idea that I found no honest friends among them, for I did, and now and then one now. But we had no shepherds to watch over the sheep. I mean shepherds that the Lord called and ordained by divine revelation. But I bless God that he left us not in this condition. But in the days of my boyhood, within four and a half miles of where I used to live, God sent his angel, and there the earth was opened, and the sacred treasure (the Book of Mormon or plates) was taken from its bowels; and by the gift and power of God part of it has been translated.

Thus we see the great change from darkness to light. And we, brethren, have been permitted to see these manifestations by the spirit of the Lord, and many of us have been made partakers of blessings under the everlasting priesthood, our hearts have been made glad, and our spirits have been revived by the powerful manifestations of God. Then let us remember the past, and as we remember let us be glad that our days are the days of Prophets and Apostles.

My brethren, you must not think light of these things, if you do God will judge you at the last day, and awful will be your condition. I have tried both sides of this question, and I know the way of the transgressor is hard. O do not harden your hearts and stiffen your necks, for if you do judgment will be close at your doors. Now I ask, what else has the Lord done for us? He sent his angels to James and blessed him with power, and dominion, &c. And the Lord said he should be a blessing to us just in proportion to our faith.—O let us have faith in God, and build on the rock, and then our peace will be like a river, and our righteousness like the waves of the sea.

I can tell you, brethren, how to do, and you will never fall. What! never? Yes, I say never fall, but stand sure, steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. I remember the year after Bro. Strang had the trouble with J. C. B., Greenhow, Ellsworth, and a number of others, some of the Mormons in this State could not see how I could hold up Bro. Strang as a prophet. I told them it was not for me to hold up any other until I knew where the other was, and who, &c. Well, what were my feelings? I felt r what God has done, is now doing, and for hat he has promised to do for us. And first, me notice the things which he hath done r us. First, then, we are permitted to live the age when God has spoken from the avens, even sent holy angels to visit our rth and bring good news and glad tidings of eat joy to all nations. And now, my dear ethren, let us look at our former condition, d then perhaps we can tell or appreciate our esent priviliges.

What was it? I say it was awful. We re without God, and without hope in the rld. It is true we had faith, but what was faith in? What kind of a God did we e in? I answer, one without body or pas-ns. Sometimes we held to one thing, and n, perhaps, in one week, as soon as the est came along, our opinions must all be giv-up for his, and the sure word of prophecy stroyed. And thus we were left to dwindle unbelief, and heathen notions, in reference a God.

One more thought on our former condition. hat kind of a church did you and I belong brother or sister? Was it organized ac-ding to the pattern laid down in the New stament? I answer, dear brethren, no, it s not. Many has been the time when I s a young professor in religion that I prayed the faith once delivered to the saints, and tended for Apostolic order. Yea, I have n wept bitterly over the whole world, while and a Methodist family altar. Yea, it was language of my heart, O that I had in the lderness a lodging place of a wayfaring man, n would I be at rest.

I am talking of facts, and not fiction. And thus see what our former situation was. I say s a fact, if I ever was unhappy it was when ed to try to make myself believe that the erent denominations were right. I do not h to carry the idea that I found no honest nds among them, for I did, and now and n one now. But we had no shepherds to ch over the sheep. I mean shepherds that Lord called and ordained by divine revela-tion. But I bless God that he left us not in this condition. But in the days of my boy-hood, within four and a half miles of where I used to live, God sent his angel, and there the earth was opened, and the sacred treasure (the Book of Mormon or plates) was taken from its bowels; and by the gift and power of God part of it has been translated.

Thus we see the great change from darkness to light. And we, brethren, have been per-mitted to see these manifestations by the spirit of the Lord, and many of us have been made partakers of blessings under the everlasting priesthood, our hearts have been made glad, and our spirits have been revived by the pow-erful manifestations of God. Then let us re-member the past, and as we remember let us be glad that our days are the days of Prophets and Apostles.

My brethren, you must not think light of these things, if you do God will judge you at the last day, and awful will be your condition. I have tried both sides of this question, and I know the way of the transgressor is hard. O do not harden your hearts and stiffen your necks, for if you do judgment will be close at your doors. Now I ask, what else has the Lord done for us? He sent his angels to James and blessed him with power, and domin-ion, &c. And the Lord said he should be a blessing to us just in proportion to our faith.— O let us have faith in God, and build on the rock, and then our peace will be like a river, and our righteousness like the waves of the sea.

I can tell you, brethren, how to do, and you will never fall. What! never? Yes, I say never fall, but stand sure, steadfast and im-movable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. I remember the year after Bro. Strang had the trouble with J. C. B., Greenhow, Ells-worth, and a number of others, some of the Mormons in this State could not see how I could hold up Bro. Strang as a prophet. I told them it was not for me to hold up any other until I knew where the other was, and who, &c. Well, what were my feelings? I felt well. The power of the priesthood rested on me, &c. So it was with you, brethren. I mean you who have gone astray. But since you yielded to that spirit of jealousy, you have been the unhappy and the fallen.

O, brethren, let us love God, and his son, and his prophet, and our brethren, then joy will fill our bosoms, and God will own and bless every effort we make to carry out the great work of this dispensation. I confess I have sinned against the Lord and his holy ones, and O the bitterness and pain, the groans, the sighs, no mortal knows. O I do bless God that he heard my cry. Yes, when I did cry unto him he heard my prayer. But, O my brethren and sisters, do not take the steps that I took. I love all my brethren, and I firmly believe that James J. Strang is trying to redeem Zion, and exalt the poor, and bring down the rich.

Then I exhort you, one and all, to keep your eyes on the revelations that God gives through him, and if you want to prosper look well to those that have already been given. Yes, I have a word to say about tithing. I know this generation are guilty of robbery—they have robbed God. Now, brethren, if you know what becomes of robbers, I think you will get out of their company and flee to Zion, and pay your tithing. Look well to the words on baptism given last fall by Elijah, and let us turn our hearts to our fathers, and pray to God for them, that they may turn their hearts to their children, lest God smite the earth with a curse.

I want to say one word about the spirits that seem to be working on the minds of some in reference to Bro. Strang. No man, speaking by the spirit of God, calleth James accursed. Now mark this, ye rebels against the Lord's anointed; and I exhort you to try the spirits, and then you will perhaps see as you are seen. I do not feel a disposition to quarrel with any, or rail or abuse any man; for I would sooner try to save and bring back that which was lost. I will now tell you how to prevent falling, or apostacy. Read and obey the first ten verses of the first chapter of second Peter; that is, add the graces, and he says we shall never fall. Strange as it may seem to some, I flatter myself with the idea that I shall baptize some in these parts. My prayer is, for God to bless the righteous and overturn the plans of the wicked, and bind them up in bundles as soon as the righteous are all gathered out.

L. D. HICKEY.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

This number commences the fifth volume of the Herald. All whose term of subscription expired with the last volume, if they wish their papers continued, will of necessity have to renew their subscriptions; for, according to the turn of the times, cash and not credit is the best medium for both publishers and patrons. Our subscription list, though not large, is larger than it has ever been before, and is gradually increasing; but a little effort on the part of our subscribers and the traveling Elders might double it. If this could be accomplished, we could double the reading matter of the paper, and also greatly improve its appearance. There is no saint but what would like to see the Herald in as good a dress as any of the Gentile papers. In order to do this all that is necessary is, to enlarge our subscription list to make it equal with theirs. Let every one therefore who desires to see this accomplished use his influence for its accomplishment.

The publication of the Herald commenced with the year 1846—at a time when the great body of the church was about leaving the haunts of civilization, under the guidance of apostates and usurpers—to make known unto the saints the appointment of the true shepherd and a place of refuge. It has continued from that time to this to faithfully warn the saints of all approaching danger, and to instruct and edify them in "the faith once delivered to the saints." During the first three years of its existence—the darkest period that the church was ever called to pass through—it was continued in the midst of trials by poverty and perils by false brethren, by unswerving faith well. The power of the priesthood rested on me, &c. So it was with you, brethren. I mean you who have gone astray. But since you yielded to that spirit of jealousy, you have been the unhappy and the fallen.

O, brethren, let us love God, and his son, and his prophet, and our brethren, then joy will fill our bosoms, and God will own and bless every effort we make to carry out the great work of this dispensation. I confess I have sinned against the Lord and his holy ones, and O the bitterness and pain, the groans, the sighs, no mortal knows. O I do bless God that he heard my cry. Yes, when I did cry unto him he heard my prayer. But, O my brethren and sisters, do not take the steps that I took. I love all my brethren, and I firmly believe that James J. Strang is trying to redeem Zion, and exalt the poor, and bring down the rich.

Then I exhort you, one and all, to keep your eyes on the revelations that God gives through him, and if you want to prosper look well to those that have already been given. Yes, I have a word to say about tithing. I know this generation are guilty of robbery—they have robbed God. Now, brethren, if you know what becomes of robbers, I think you will get out of their company and flee to Zion, and pay your tithing. Look well to the words on baptism given last fall by Elijah, and let us turn our hearts to our fathers, and pray to God for them, that they may turn their hearts to their children, lest God smite the earth with a curse.

I want to say one word about the spirits that seem to be working on the minds of some in reference to Bro. Strang. No man, speaking by the spirit of God, calleth James accursed. Now mark this, ye rebels against the Lord's anointed; and I exhort you to try the spirits, and then you will perhaps see as you are seen. I do not feel a disposition to quarrel with any, or rail or abuse any man; for I would sooner try to save and bring back that which was lost. I will now tell you how to prevent falling, or apostacy. Read and obey the first ten verses of the first chapter of second Peter; that add the graces, and he says we shall never f Strange as it may seem to some, I flatter m self with the idea that I shall baptize some these parts. My prayer is, for God to b the righteous and overturn the plans of wicked, and bind them up in bundles as s as the righteous are all gathered out.

L. D. HICKEY

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

This number commences the fifth volume the Herald. All whose term of subscrip expired with the last volume, if they wish th papers continued, will of necessity have to new their subscriptions; for, according to turn of the times, cash and not credit is t best medium for both publishers and patro Our subscription list, though not large, is larg than it has ever been before, and is gradual increasing; but a little effort on the part of subscribers and the traveling Elders mi double it. If this could be accomplished, could double the reading matter of the pape and also greatly improve its appearance. The is no saint but what would like to see the He ald in as good a dress as any of the Gentile p pers. In order to do this all that is necessa is, to enlarge our subscription list to make equal with theirs. Let every one therefo who desires to see this accomplished use i influence for its accomplishment.

The publication of the Herald commence with the year 1846—at a time when the gre body of the church was about leaving th haunts of civilization, under the guidance apostates and usurpers—to make known un the saints the appointment of the true she herd and a place of refuge. It has continue from that time to this to faithfully warn th saints of all approaching danger, and to instru and edify them in "the faith once delivered t the saints." During the first three years of it existence—the darkest period that the churc was ever called to pass through—it was con tinued in the midst of trials by poverty an perils by false brethren, by unswerving fait in the promises of God that truth would come off triumphant.

When we commenced the publication of the last volume the day dawned brightly for the first time. It has continued to brighten, and will continue, like the path of the just, to grow brighter and brighter until the perfect day.—The church is now in a flourishing condition. Hundreds of saints, if not thousands, will gather to their God-given possessions the ensuing season. We begin this volume with gratitude to God that he has cast our lot in pleasant pastures, and with strong faith that the day is near at hand when he will establish his people upon an everlasting foundation, no more to be trodden under foot of the enemy.

☞ Mr. Benedict, from Springfield, Ill., a Brewsterite missionary, has been occasionally trying to lecture on various subjects pertaining to his peculiar belief to the people of this place during the past week. We said trying, because he is evidently a novice in the work in which he is engaged, and inexperienced in public speaking. The subjects of most importance to his cause he has as yet scarcely touched upon. He has not, so far as we have heard, undertaken to show how Mr. Brewster came to be a prophet, nor to give any reason whatever why we should receive him as such. He frequently quotes from the writings of Esdras, purported to be translated by Mr. Brewster; but has never given any evidence of their divine authenticity. Probably we were a little too fast in saying he was a novice. The fault may be in the system, and not in the man. It may be that Mr. Brewster is not a prophet, and therefore has no claims to present. Indeed, we are more than half inclined to this opinion. The gentleman said himself, that, although he believed Mr. Brewster to be a prophet, and the writings of Esdras to be the word of God, yet he could not demonstrate them so to be; for the reason, we presume, that it cannot be done. Some of the Brewsterites here, (principally old McLellinites,) to use a homely phrase, begin to think their cake is all dough. Others are choked by too strong meat. We are informed that Mr. Benedict has been teaching privately that Mr. Brewster will be king when they are organized at their gathering place on the Colorado. They cannot stand this. It is too strong meat for them.

NOTICE.

At a church meeting assembled pursuant to previous notice, at the house of Samuel Bennett, in Williamsburg, N. Y., Heman Bassett, an Elder in the quorum of Seventy, was excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for apostacy and rebellion, and delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until he repents and learns meekness, by unanimous vote of the church.

SAMUEL GRAHAM, Pres. of the Twelve.
SAMUEL BENNETT, One of the Twelve.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

D. S. Brown,	$3,00 to Vol. VI. No. 13
John Shippy,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Chloe Oaks,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 52
Hiram Milaman,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 52
Briggs Alden,	3,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Mrs. L. Hammon,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 47

THE PNEUMATOLOGIST.

A work devoted to the proof and illustation of Man's spiritual existence, after death, by an appeal to Scripture and facts; and also a Scriptural view of his final destiny.

This periodical is designed to present, 1st, The Scriptural evidence of man's spiritual nature, and conscious existence in the intermediate state. 2. To illustrate the Scriptural references to necromancy, and the dealing with familiar spirits. 3. To present a series of well authenticated facts of the personal and visible appearance of departed spirits. 4. To state and review the spiritual proceedings at Rochester, in reference to the knocking, also clairvoyant visions and revelations, psycological phenomena, &c.; and expose their wickedness. 5. To investigate the subject of modern miracles as practised by the Catholic church, the Mormons, and others. 6. To review works extant on the future punishment of the wicked, especially Dobney.

Terms—The work to be issued monthly, twenty-four pages octavo.

To subscribers, One dollar per year; single copies, Ten cents; ten copies for Seven dollars; twenty copies for Thirteen dollars, in advance.

The first number to be published the first of April. Address J. Litch, No. 16 Chester Street, Philadelphia. J. Litch.

☞ What is this world? A dream within a dream—as we grow older, each step is an inward awakening. The youth awakens as he thinks from childhood—the full grown man despises the pursuits of youth as visionary—the old man looks on manhood as a feverish dream. Is death the last sleep? No—it is the last final awakening.—Sir Walter Scott.

the promises of God that truth would come triumphant.

When we commenced the publication of the volume the day dawned brightly for the time. It has continued to brighten, and will continue, like the path of the just, to grow lighter and brighter until the perfect day.—The church is now in a flourishing condition. Hundreds of saints, if not thousands, will gather to their God-given possessions the ensuing season. We begin this volume with gratitude to God that he has cast our lot in pleasant places, and with strong faith that the day is near at hand when he will establish his people upon an everlasting foundation, no more to be trodden under foot of the enemy.

☞ Mr. Benedict, from Springfield, Ill., a Brewsterite missionary, has been occasionally trying to lecture on various subjects pertaining to his peculiar belief to the people of this place during the past week. We said trying, because he is evidently a novice in the work in which he is engaged, and inexperienced in public speaking. The subjects of most importance to his cause he has as yet scarcely touched upon. He has not, so far as we have heard, undertaken to show how Mr. Brewster came to be a prophet, nor to give any reason whatever why we should receive him as such. He frequently quotes from the writings of Esdras, reported to be translated by Mr. Brewster; but has never given any evidence of their divine authenticity. Probably we were a little too fast in saying he was a novice. The fault may be in the system, and not in the man. It may be that Mr. Brewster is not a prophet, and therefore has no claims to present. Indeed, we are more than half inclined to this opinion. The gentleman said himself, that, although he believed Mr. Brewster to be a prophet, and the writings of Esdras to be the word of God, yet he could not demonstrate them so to be; for the reason, we presume, that it cannot be done. Some of the Brewsterites here, (principally old McLellinites,) to use a homely phrase, begin to think their cake is all dough. Others are choked by too strong meat. We are informed that Mr. Benedict has been teaching privately that Mr. Brewster will be king when they are organized at their gathering place on the Colorado. They cannot stand this. It is too strong meat for them.

NOTICE.

At a church meeting assembled pursuant to previous notice, at the house of Samuel Bennett, in Williamsburg, N. Y., Heman Bassett, an Elder in the quorum of Seventy, was excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for apostacy and rebellion, and delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until he repents and learns meekness, by unanimous vote of the church.

SAMUEL GRAHAM, Pres. of the Twelve.
SAMUEL BENNETT, One of the Twelve.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

D. S. Brown,	$3,00 to Vol. VI. No. 13
John Shippy,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Chloe Oaks,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 52
Hiram Milaman,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 52
Briggs Alden,	3,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Mrs. L. Hammon,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 47

THE PNEUMATOLOGIST.

A work devoted to the proof and illustation of Man's spiritual existence, after death, by an appeal to Scripture and facts; and also a Scriptural view of his final destiny.

This periodical is designed to present, 1st, The Scriptural evidence of man's spiritual nature, and conscious existence in the intermediate state. 2. To illustrate the Scriptural references to necromancy, and the dealing with familiar spirits. 3. To present a series of well authenticated facts of the personal and visible appearance of departed spirits. 4. To state and review the spiritual proceedings at Rochester, in reference to the knocking, also clairvoyant visions and revelations, psycological phenomena, &c.; and expose their wickedness. 5. To investigate the subject of modern miracles as practised by the Catholic church, the Mormons, and others. 6. To review works extant on the future punishment of the wicked, especially Dobney.

Terms—The work to be issued monthly, twenty-four pages octavo.

To subscribers, One dollar per year; single copies, Ten cents: ten copies for Seven dollars; twenty copies for Thirteen dollars, in advance.

The first number to be published the first of April. Address J. Litch, No. 16 Chester Street, Philadelphia. J. Litch.

☞ What is this world? A dream within a dream—as we grow older, each step is an inward awakening. The youth awakens as he thinks from childhood—the full grown man despises the pursuits of youth as visionary—the old man looks on manhood as a feverish dream. Is death the last sleep? No—it is the last final awakening.—Sir Walter Scott.

CULTIVATE ENERGY.

Many of the physical evils, the inaction of the system, the languor and hysterical affections which are so prevalent among the delicate young women of the present day, may be traced to a want of well-trained mental power, and well-exercised self-control, and to an absence of fixed habits of employment. Real cultivation of the intellect, earnest exercise of the moral powers, the enlargement of the mind by the acquirement of knowledge, and the strengthening of its capabilities for effort, the firmness for endurance of evils, and for energy in combating such as may be overcome, are ends which education has to attain; weakness, if met by indulgence, will not only remain weakness, but becomes infirmity. The power of the mind over the body is immense. Let that power be called forth; let it be trained and exercised, and vigor, both of mind and body, will be the result. There is a homely unpolished saying, that "it is better to wear out than to rust out;" but it tells a plain truth, rust consumes faster than use. Better, a million times better, to work hard even to the shortening of existence, than to sleep and eat away this precious gift of life, giving no other cognizance of its possession. By work, or industry, of whatever kind it may be, we give a practical acknowledgement of the value of life, and of its high intentions, of its manifold duties. Earnest, active industry is a living hymn of praise, a never-failing source of happiness; it is obedience, for it is God's great law for moral existence.—Madame de Wilde.

ALEXANDER AND THE AFRICANS.

Alexander the conqueror of the world in one of his expeditions came into Macedonia situated in an obscure corner of Africa. The inhabitants dwelled in humble cottages, and were neither versed in the arts of war, nor yet subject to a conqueror. On the arrival of Alexander, he was conducted to the dwelling of the chief, who placed before him dates, figs, and apples of pure gold.

"Do you eat gold here?" said Alexander.

"You being able as I suppose," replied the chief, "to obtain provisions in your own country, for what except this have you come hither?"

"It is not for gold that I have come," replied Alexander, "but to become acquainted with the customs of your people."

"Since this is the case then," added the chief, "tarry as long as thou wilt."

During this colloquy, two citizens came for judgment. The Plaintiff said, "I purchased of this man a piece of land, and turning up the soil, I discovered a valuable treasure contained therein; yet this man refuses to receive it again."

Then the other replied, "I am as conscious in the matter as my neighbor. I sold him the field with all that was therein concealed. Therefore the treasure is his own."

The judge then repeated their words, that he might be sure he understood the meaning of each correctly, and after a little reflection thus spoke:

"You," said he, addressing the first, "have a son—have you not?"

"I have," replied he.

"And you," said he to the other, "a daughter?"

"Yes."

"Well then the son shall marry the daughter, and the treasure shall be the marriage portion."

Alexander seemed perplexed.

"Is my sentence unjust?" inquired the chief.

"By no means," said Alexander, "but to me the decision seemed strange and peculiar."

"How then would the affair been decided in your own country?"

"To speak truly," said Alexander, "we should have detained the two men in prison, and have taken possession of the treasure for the king."

"For the king!" said the other in astonishment, "does the sun shine in that land?"

"Surely."

"And does it rain there?"

"Yes."

"Are flocks and herds there?"

"Very many."

"It is well then that the Great Being who rules over all things, should permit the rain to fall upon that land, and the sun to shine there for the sake of those innocent beasts, but you do not deserve it."

THE VEGETABLE WORLD.

The history of the vegetable world is one of peculiar interest.—The gradual progress from the lichen of the naked rock to the gigantic tree of the forest, and the many classes indigenous in different climes;—the beauty of the delicate flower, the grandeur of the time-enduring cedar, or the utility of the life-supporting fruits and vegetables—are all subjects worthy the investigation of an intelligent being. In the physical, as in the moral world, the Good, the True and Beautiful, form a trinity, whose union is seldom or never dissolved. The luxuriance of vegetation is not only useful, but it is beautiful. It is spread like a garment over the earth, decking her with glory; that the beneficence of nature does not deny even to the blade of grass the attribute of beauty.

☞ In that early dawn of manhood, when the knowledge of our own and others' vices has not taught the art of concealment, or implanted the mean quality of suspicion in our breast, the character lies open to the inspection of our fellow men, and mutual truth begets mutual confidence. It is assuredly, then, that the most valuable friendships are formed; and though in riper years, something may be done, yet it is neither so easy nor so sure.

The Universe.—In the vast and varied scene of vegetable production—of animal life, are everywhere found the impress of the divine hand. In the wonderful adaptation of parts—in their minuteness and in their strength, in the ceaseless dissemination of life,—we find this wonderful agency at work which sustains the world and its nomadic atoms. The very air we breathe is full of life—the earth we tread on is instinct with vitality.

CULTIVATE ENERGY.

Many of the physical evils, the inaction of the system, the languor and hysterical affections which are so prevalent among the delicate young women of the present day, may be traced to a want of well-trained mental power, and well-exercised self-control, and to an absence of fixed habits of employment. Real cultivation of the intellect, earnest exercise of the moral powers, the enlargement of the mind by the acquirement of knowledge, and the strengthening of its capabilities for effort, the firmness for endurance of evils, and for energy in combating such as may be overcome, are ends which education has to attain: weakness, if met by indulgence, will not only remain weakness, but becomes infirmity. The power of the mind over the body is immense. Let that power be called forth: let it be trained and exercised, and vigor, both of mind and body, will be the result. There is a homely unpolished saying, that "it is better to wear out than to rust out;" but it tells a plain truth, rust consumes faster than use. Better, a million times better, to work hard even to the shortening of existence, than to sleep and eat away this precious gift of life, giving no other cognizance of its possession. By work, or industry, of whatever kind it may be, we give a practical acknowledgement of the value of life, and of its high intentions, of its manifold duties. Earnest, active industry is a living hymn of praise, a never-failing source of happiness; it is obedience, for it is God's great law for moral existence.—Madame de Wilde.

ALEXANDER AND THE AFRICANS.

Alexander the conqueror of the world in one of his expeditions came into Macedonia situated in an obscure corner of Africa. The inhabitants dwelled in humble cottages, and were neither versed in the arts of war, nor yet subject to a conqueror. On the arrival of Alexander, he was conducted to the dwelling of the chief, who placed before him dates, figs, and apples of pure gold.

"Do you eat gold here?" said Alexander.

"You being able as I suppose," replied the chief, "to obtain provisions in your own country, for what except this have you come hither?"

"It is not for gold that I have come," replied Alexander, "but to become acquainted with the customs of your people."

"Since this is the case then," added the chief, "tarry as long as thou wilt."

During this colloquy, two citizens came for judgment. The i tiff said, "I purchased of this man a piece of land, and turn the soil, I discovered a valuable treasure contained there this man refuses to receive it again."

Then the other replied, "I am as conscious in the matte neighbor. I sold him the field with all that was therein co Therefore the treasure is his own."

The judge then repeated their words, that he might be s understood the meaning of each correctly, and after a little re thus spoke:

"You," said he, addressing the first, "have a son—hav not?"

"I have," replied he.

"And you," said he to the other, "a daughter?"

"Yes."

"Well then the son shall marry the daughter, and the t shall be the marriage portion."

Alexander seemed perplexed.

"Is my sentence unjust?" inquired the chief.

"By no means," said Alexander, "but to me the decision s strange and peculiar."

"How then would the affair been decided in your own coun

"To speak truly," said Alexander, "we should have de the two men in prison, and have taken possession of the treas the king."

"For the king!" said the other in astonishment, "does th shine in that land?"

"Surely."

"And does it rain there?"

"Yes."

"Are flocks and herds there?"

"Very many."

"It is well then that the Great Being who rules over all t should permit the rain to fall upon that land, and the sun to there for the sake of those innocent beasts, but you do not de it."

THE VEGETABLE WORLD.

The history of the vegetable world is one of peculiar intere The gradual progress from the lichen of the naked rock to the g tic tree of the forest, and the many classes indigenous in diff climes;—the beauty of the delicate flower, the grandeur of the enduring cedar, or the utility of the life-supporting fruits and v ables—are all subjects worthy the investigation of an intelli being. In the physical, as in the moral world, the Good, the and Beautiful, form a trinity, whose union is seldom or never solved. The luxuriance of vegetation is not only useful, but beautiful. It is spread like a garment over the earth, decking with glory; that the beneficence of nature does not deny even t blade of grass the attribute of beauty.

☞ In that early dawn of manhood, when the knowledge of own and others' vices has not taught the art of concealment, or planted the mean quality of suspicion in our breast, the chara lies open to the inspection of our fellow men, and mutual truth gets mutual confidence. It is assuredly, then, that the most valu friendships are formed; and though in riper years, something be done, yet it is neither so easy nor so sure.

THE UNIVERSE.—In the vast and varied scene of vegetable duction—of animal life, are everywhere found the impress of the vine hand. In the wonderful adaptation of parts—in their minute and in their strength, in the ceaseless dissemination of life,— find this wonderful agency at work which sustains the world an nomadic atoms. The very air we breathe is full of life—the e we tread on is instinct with vitality.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 2.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. MARCH 28, 1850. [WHOLE No. 170.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Baltimore, Md., March, 6th, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—As it has been some time since I have written to you and to the saints, I thought I would devote a leisure hour to that purpose this morning. In looking over our labors the past winter, we have every reason to praise God. In our mission we have been triumphantly successful. Every evil influence has given way before the power of eternal truth. Some have been weak enough to attempt to steady the ark of God and direct his servants, but they have utterly failed, and all their efforts to injure James and myself have recoiled back upon themselves; and, "like young chickens, their attempted injuries on us have gone home to roost."

The great cause is prospering everywhere throughout the east and south; even in Washington city we have raised up a branch—a place where we never could get a foothold before. We have four Elders laboring in the great cause at the Capital and the surrounding towns. A number will go from there to Beaver this spring. Our cause is prospering everywhere. God has raised up many able and faithful Elders in this region, who will soon go forth into the vineyard and labor for the kingdom. We are baptizing some every week. They all have the spirit of gathering to Beaver.

President Strang is in Philadelphia. Everything there is in a prosperous condition. The saints there are strong, and full of the gathering spirit. They are baptizing there every week. The church there is in much the most flourishing condition that it has been since the death of Joseph. New York and Boston are also in a fine condition, much better than we could expect under the circumstances that have surrounded us. There will be a large emigration from the south, and east this season; many will go early. Several of us will leave here in about ten days for Beaver.

Let me say unto the brethren far and near, dear brethren, be of good cheer; God is with us, and will give us the kingdom; for the set time to favor Zion has come, and God will take pleasure in his saints, and will give us power to redeem the poor from suffering and violence. The reaction is now taking place in our favor all over this entire nation. Thousands that have stood still for a long time are now coming up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. This nation is becoming weaker every day and every hour. It is on the very brink of ruin. There is not virtue enough left in the entire country to save it from crumbling into a mass of ruins, and then will come its desolation and final overthrow. O God! hasten the time that such a cruel, blood-thirsty nation may be blotted out from under heaven, and be no more a people. Oh! ye saints scattered abroad, gather up to Beaver, and help to set up the kingdom of God, that man may be redeemed from oppression and cruelty.

Let every saint who wants an inheritance without money and without price, as the gift of God, come to Beaver as early this season as possible. Let them that want sickness, accidents, vexatious law-suits, and other troubles and disappointments, stay among the Gentiles, that they may be robbed and plundered a little longer. Let them that want to be deceived, and deny the faith, put their money in a Gentile bank, and spend about $50,00 in go-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 2.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MARCH 28, 1850. [WHOLE No. 170.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Baltimore, Md., March, 6th, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—As it has been some time since I have written to you and to the saints, I thought I would devote a leisure hour to that purpose this morning. In looking over our labors the past winter, we have every reason to praise God. In our mission we have been triumphantly successful. Every evil influence has given way before the power of eternal truth. Some have been weak enough to attempt to steady the ark of God and direct his servants, but they have utterly failed, and all their efforts to injure James and myself have recoiled back upon themselves; and, "like young chickens, their attempted injuries on us have gone home to roost."

The great cause is prospering everywhere throughout the east and south; even in Washington city we have raised up a branch—a place where we never could get a foothold before. We have four Elders laboring in the great cause at the Capital and the surrounding towns. A number will go from there to Beaver this spring. Our cause is prospering everywhere. God has raised up many able and faithful Elders in this region, who will soon go forth into the vineyard and labor for the kingdom. We are baptizing some every week. They all have the spirit of gathering to Beaver.

President Strang is in Philadelphia. Everything there is in a prosperous condition. The saints there are strong, and full of the gathering spirit. They are baptizing there every week. The church there is in much the most flourishing condition that it has been since the death of Joseph. New York and Boston are also in a fine condition, much better than we could expect under the circumstances that have surrounded us. There will be a large emigration from the south, and east this season; many will go early. Several of us will leave here in about ten days for Beaver.

Let me say unto the brethren far and near, dear brethren, be of good cheer; God is with us, and will give us the kingdom; for the set time to favor Zion has come, and God will take pleasure in his saints, and will give us power to redeem the poor from suffering and violence. The reaction is now taking place in our favor all over this entire nation. Thousands that have stood still for a long time are now coming up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. This nation is becoming weaker every day and every hour. It is on the very brink of ruin. There is not virtue enough left in the entire country to save it from crumbling into a mass of ruins, and then will come its desolation and final overthrow. O God! hasten the time that such a cruel, blood-thirsty nation may be blotted out from under heaven, and be no more a people. Oh! ye saints scattered abroad, gather up to Beaver, and help to set up the kingdom of God, that man may be redeemed from oppression and cruelty.

Let every saint who wants an inheritance without money and without price, as the gift of God, come to Beaver as early this season as possible. Let them that want sickness, accidents, vexatious law-suits, and other troubles and disappointments, stay among the Gentiles, that they may be robbed and plundered a little longer. Let them that want to be deceived, and deny the faith, put their money in a Gentile bank, and spend about $50,00 in going up to see if it is a good place, and find out whether the servants of God have lied to them or not. Let them that want to stand in the kingdom of God and prosper, and become mighty men, men of renown,take their means and go to Beaver, get their inheritance, go into business as a steward over their own house, and God will prosper them on every side, just as surely as he will curse the others. More soon. I remain yours in love, truth, and everlasting friendship, G. J. ADAMS.

For the Gospel Herald.

Voree, Wis., March 24th, 1850.

BROTHER COOPER:—Sometime since an old acquaintance sent me the following extract from a sermon by the Rev. R. Thornton, published in "The New Covenant" of Feb. 2d, 1850, with a request to give it my candid consideration; believing, I presume, that it was a perfect use up to Mormonism. I have done so, and the appended notes is the result. Yours, &c. G. WATSON.

"Within our own day has appeared the Mormon sect, taking its rise from Joseph Smith, who pretended to find, engraven on golden plates, another revelation—the prophecy of Nephi, the Book of Mormon. The members of this sect pretend to receive new revelations, and to have the power of prophecying and working miracles. Hence they are not Christians. 1. If the miracles and power of prophecy were sufficient to establish the claims of Christ, then a further continuance of prophecy and miraculous powers would be unreasonable. The necessity and occasion of them having passed away, they would cease. If the miracles of Christ were insufficient to establish his claim to be the Messiah, then Christianity is a humbug. Let the Mormons take either position—either horn of the dilemma—and their claims to the Christian name is overthrown.—2. If the Christian religion be true, there can be no such thing as miracles, or prophecy, or new revelations now. 3. They cannot have faith in Christ as the only truth, and the only way to it, while they claim to have discovered other revelations, and to have such revelations at the present day, confirmed by equal authority with that of Jesus Christ. 4. If Christ had not done 'mighty works' which no other man could do, the Jews would not have sinned in rejecting him. If the Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, can now do those miracles which Christ and the Apostles wrought, then we are justified in rejecting Christianity as spurious—justified by Christ's own words. 5. By pretending to miraculous gifts and works—to new revelations—they sit their own teachers in the place of Christ—usurp the authority due only to him, and deny him the Messiahship which he claimed." 6.

☞ To read inteligibly, observe the figures in the extract, and the corresponding ones in the notes.

1. A sage conclusion, indeed. Had this Rev. gentleman lived eighteen hundred years ago he would doubtless have said that the disciples at Antioch were not christians, because they "pretended to prophecy and work miracles," and would have cut Paul off from the church for heresy, because he exhorted his brethren to "covet to prophecy, and forbid not to speak with tongues."

2. The Mormons do not take either horn of the dilemma. Both positions are false. The first gives the lie to Jesus Christ; for he said, expressly, "verily, verily I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto the Father." John xiv. 12. "The necessity and occasion" of miracles, spiritual gifts, Apostles, Prophets, &c., will not pass away "till we all come to the unity of the faith, and to the knowledge of the Son of God, and the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." For proof of this read Eph. iv. 8–16. The church not having arrived at this state, such gifts are necessary. All who deny their necessity have no claims to the name of true believers, but are of those who have "a form of godliness, and deny the power thereof." As regards the second position, it has yet to be shown that Jesus ever worked a miracle to prove that he was the Messiah. The miracles of Christ no more prove him to be the Messiah than did the miracles of Moses prove Moses to be the Messiah. It was his coming in the way and manner foretold by the prophets that gave him indisputable claims to this office. And it was to this fact that the Apostles gnerally appealed. An example of this will be found in Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost. All that Peter claimed for Christ on account of the miracles that he done was, that he was "a man approved of God." But he proved by certain prophecies that were fulfilled in him, that he was both Lord and Christ; in other words, the Messiah. This being the case it does not follow, as intimated, that the Christian religion is a humbug. Miracles and all spiritual gifts, as has been shown, are for the edifying of the body of Christ, to continue

ing up to see if it is a good place, and find out whether the servants of God have lied to them or not. Let them that want to stand in the kingdom of God and prosper, and become mighty men, men of renown, take their means and go to Beaver, get their inheritance, go into business as a steward over their own house, and God will prosper them on every side, just as surely as he will curse the others. More soon. I remain yours in love, truth, and everlasting friendship, G. J. ADAMS.

For the Gospel Herald.

Voree, Wis., March 24th, 1850.

BROTHER COOPER:—Sometime since an old acquaintance sent me the following extract from a sermon by the Rev. R. Thornton, published in "The New Covenant" of Feb. 2d, 1850, with a request to give it my candid consideration; believing, I presume, that it was a perfect use up to Mormonism. I have done so, and the appended notes is the result. Yours, &c. G. WATSON.

"Within our own day has appeared the Mormon sect, taking its rise from Joseph Smith, who pretended to find, engraven on golden plates, another revelation—the prophecy of Nephi, the Book of Mormon. The members of this sect pretend to receive new revelations, and to have the power of prophecying and working miracles. Hence they are not Christians. 1. If the miracles and power of prophecy were sufficient to establish the claims of Christ, then a further continuance of prophecy and miraculous powers would be unreasonable. The necessity and occasion of them having passed away, they would cease. If the miracles of Christ were insufficient to establish his claim to be the Messiah, then Christianity is a humbug. Let the Mormons take either position—either horn of the dilemma—and their claims to the Christian name is overthrown.—2. If the Christian religion be true, there can be no such thing as miracles, or prophecy, or new revelations now. 3. They cannot have faith in Christ as the only truth, and the only way to it, while they claim to have discovered other revelations, and to have such revelations at the present day, confirmed by equal authority with that of Jesus Christ. 4. If Christ had not done 'mighty works' which no other man could do, the Jews would not have sinned in rejecting him. If the Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, can now do those miracles which Christ and the Apostles wrought, then we are justified in rejecting Christianity as spurious—justified by Christ's own words. 5. By pretending to miraculous gifts and works—to new revelations—they sit their own teachers in the place of Christ—usurp the authority due only to him, and deny him the Messiahship which he claimed." 6.

☞ To read inteligibly, observe the figures in the extract, and the corresponding ones in the notes.

1. A sage conclusion, indeed. Had this Rev. gentleman lived eighteen hundred years ago he would doubtless have said that the disciples at Antioch were not christians, because they "pretended to prophecy and work miracles," and would have cut Paul off from the church for heresy, because he exhorted his brethren to "covet to prophecy, and forbid not to speak with tongues."

2. The Mormons do not take either horn of the dilemma. Both positions are false. The first gives the lie to Jesus Christ; for he said, expressly, "verily, verily I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto the Father." John xiv. 12. "The necessity and occasion" of miracles, spiritual gifts, Apostles, Prophets, &c., will not pass away "till we all come to the unity of the faith, and to the knowledge of the Son of God, and the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." For proof of this read Eph. iv. 8–16. The church not having arrived at this state, such gifts are necessary. All who deny their necessity have no claims to the name of true believers, but are of those who have "a form of godliness, and deny the power thereof." As regards the second position, it has yet to be shown that Jesus ever worked a miracle to prove that he was the Messiah. The miracles of Christ no more prove him to be the Messiah than did the miracles of Moses prove Moses to be the Messiah. It was his coming in the way and manner foretold by the prophets that gave him indisputable claims to this office. And it was to this fact that the Apostles gnerally appealed. An example of this will be found in Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost. All that Peter claimed for Christ on account of the miracles that he done was, that he was "a man approved of God." But he proved by certain prophecies that were fulfilled in him, that he was both Lord and Christ; in other words, the Messiah. This being the case it does not follow, as intimated, that the Christian religion is a humbug. Miracles and all spiritual gifts, as has been shown, are for the edifying of the body of Christ, to continue with the church till she is perfected, when that which is in part shall be done away. It, however, proves what is commonly called Christianity now-a-days to be a humbug, so far as having any claims to be the religion established by Christ and his Apostles. Its claims to the name of primitive christianity being overthrown.

3. This Rev. gentleman again contradicts the words of Jesus Christ. When he gave the last commission to his disciples, he said:—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Mark xvi. 15, 16, 17, 18. From this it is evident that signs should follow those who believe and obey the gospel in all ages. Whoever attempts to limit the manifestation of these signs to the days of the Apostles, must, by the same reasoning, limit the proclamation of the gospel to the same time. The reason that they do not follow modern Christians is, because they do not believe the gospel. They believe something, but it is no more like the gospel than light is like darkness.

4. "They" are the only ones that have faith in Christ as "the way, and the truth, and the life." "They" seek salvation in the "way" he has pointed out, are thereby "led into all truth" by the spirit of truth, and also shown things to come. What his Reverence means by Christ's being the "only truth," I am unable to tell.—It doubtless has some "spiritual meaning," but not being versed in sectarian spiritualizing, I will let it pass.

5. Will the Rev. R. Thornton, or any other gentleman, give us the book, chapter, and verse where these words are found?

6. Not at all. We have not taken any honor upon ourselves, contrary to the word of God. We believe Christ to be the Messiah, and act by authority delegated by him, being "called of God, as was Aaron." Aaron was called by revelation. How was Mr. Thornton called? by revelation? No, he denies it. He is therefore a usurper and an impostor; for Paul says, "no man taketh this honor upon himself but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."

NEW YORK BY GAS LIGHT.

The author of the renowned sketches entitled "New York in Slices," has just issued a work entitled, "New York by Gas Light." This Book is a mirror of the nightly exhibitions in the great Metropolis. The following is one leaf from the volume:—

"A Fashionable Oyster Saloon.—The oyster-cellars, with their bright lamps casting broad gleams of red light across the street, are now in full tide, and every instant sees them swallow up at one door a party of rowdy and half-drunken young men, on their way to the theatre, the gambling-house, the bowling-saloon or the brothel—or most likely to all in turn—while another is vomited up the other stair-way, having already swilled their fill of oysters and bad brandy, and garnished their reeking mouths each with an atrocious cigar, which the bar-keeper recommends as "full flavored." If we step down one of these wide entrances, we shall see a long counter gorgeously decked with crystal decanters and glasses, richly carved and gilt, and the wall ornamented with a voluptuous picture of a naked Venus—perhaps the more seductive from being exquisitely painted.

"Before the long marble bar are arranged some dozen or score of individuals, waiting their turn for liquor; while on the other side, a man with his shirt sleeves rolled up and his face in a fiery glow, seems to be pulling long ribbons of mint julep out of a tin cup. At the other end of the room is a row of little stalls, each fitted up with its gass-burner, its red curtain, its little table and voluptuous picture, and all occupied with busy eaters. In the rear of these boxes is a range of larger apartments, called 'private rooms,' where men and women enter promiscuously, eat, drink, and make merry, and disturb the whole neighborhood with their obscene and disgusting revels, prolonged far beyond midnight. The women of course are all of one kind—but among the men you would find, if you looked curiously, reverend judges and juvenile delinquents, pious and devout hypocrites, and undisguised libertines and debauchees. Gamblers and fancy-men, high-flyers and spoonies, genteel pick-pockets and burglars, even, sometimes mix in the detestable orgies of these detestable caverns; and the shivering policeman, as he crawls sleepily by at the dead of night, and mechanically wraps his bludgeon on the pavement as he hears the boisterous mirth below, may be reminding a grave functionary of the city, that it is time to go home to his wife and children after the discharge of his 'arduous public duties.'"

☞ The reading of a good and well conducted newspaper, even for the short space of one quarter of a year, brings more sound instruction, and leaves a deeper impression than would be acquired, probably, at the best school in twelve months. Talk to the members of a family who read the papers, and compare their information and intelligence with those who do not. The difference is beyond comparison.

☞ A black rainbow was seen by the citizens of New Bedford one evening last week. It was visible twenty minutes.

with the church till she is perfected, when that which is in part shall be done away. It, however, proves what is commonly called Christianity now-a-days to be a humbug, so far as having any claims to be the religion established by Christ and his Apostles. Its claims to the name of primitive christianity being overthrown.

3. This Rev. gentleman again contradicts the words of Jesus Christ. When he gave the last commission to his disciples, he said:—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues: they shall take up serpents and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Mark xvi. 15, 16, 17, 18. From this it is evident that signs should follow those who believe and obey the gospel in all ages. Whoever attempts to limit the manifestation of these signs to the days of the Apostles, must, by the same reasoning, limit the proclamation of the gospel to the same time. The reason that they do not follow modern Christians is, because they do not believe the gospel. They believe something, but it is no more like the gospel than light is like darkness.

4. "They" are the only ones that have faith in Christ as "the way, and the truth, and the life." "They" seek salvation in the "way" he has pointed out, are thereby "led into all truth" by the spirit of truth, and also shown things to come. What his Reverence means by Christ's being the "only truth," I am unable to tell.—It doubtless has some "spiritual meaning," but not being versed in sectarian spiritualizing, I will let it pass.

5. Will the Rev. R. Thornton, or any other gentleman, give us the book, chapter, and verse where these words are found?

6. Not at all. We have not taken any honor upon ourselves, contrary to the word of God. We believe Christ to be the Messiah, and act by authority delegated by him, being "called of God, as was Aaron." Aaron was called by revelation. How was Mr. Thornton called? by revelation? No, he denies it. He is therefore a usurper and an impostor; for Paul says, "no man taketh this honor upon himself but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."

NEW YORK BY GAS LIGHT.

The author of the renowned sketches entitled "New York in Slices," has just issued a work entitled, "New York by Gas Light." This Book is a mirror of the nightly exhibitions in the great Metropolis. The following is one leaf from the volume:—

"A Fashionable Oyster Saloon.—The oyster-cellars, with their bright lamps casting broad gleams of red light across the street, are now in full tide, and every instant sees them swallow up at one door a party of rowdy and half-drunken young men, on their way to the theatre, the gambling-house, the bowling-saloon or the brothel—or most likely to all in turn—while another is vomited up the other stair-way, having already swilled their fill of oysters and bad brandy, and garnished their reeking mouths each with an atrocious cigar, which the bar-keeper recommends as "full flavored." If we step down one of these wide entrances, we shall see a long counter gorgeously decked with crystal decanters and glasses, richly carved and gilt; and the wall ornamented with a voluptuous picture of a naked Venus—perhaps the more seductive from being exquisitely painted.

"Before the long marble bar are arranged some dozen or score of individuals, waiting their turn for liquor; while on the other side, a man with his shirt sleeves rolled up and his face in a fiery glow, seems to be pulling long ribbons of mint julep out of a tin cup. At the other end of the room is a row of little stalls, each fitted up with its gass-burner, its red curtain, its little table and voluptuous picture, and all occupied with busy eaters. In the rear of these boxes is a range of larger apartments, called 'private rooms,' where men and women enter promiscuously, eat, drink, and make merry, and disturb the whole neighborhood with their obscene and disgusting revels, prolonged far beyond midnight. The women of course are all of one kind—but among the men you would find, if you looked curiously, reverend judges and juvenile delinquents, pious and devout hypocrites, and undisguised libertines and debauchees. Gamblers and fancy-men, high-flyers and spoonies, genteel pick-pockets and burglars, even, sometimes mix in the detestable orgies of these detestable caverns; and the shivering policeman, as he crawls sleepily by at the dead of night, and mechanically wraps his bludgeon on the pavement as he hears the boisterous mirth below, may be reminding a grave functionary of the city, that it is time to go home to his wife and children after the discharge of his 'arduous public duties.'"

☞ The reading of a good and well conducted newspaper, even for the short space of one quarter of a year, brings more sound instruction, and leaves a deeper impression than would be acquired, probably, at the best school in twelve months. Talk to the members of a family who read the papers, and compare their information and intelligence with those who do not. The difference is beyond comparison.

☞ A black rainbow was seen by the citizens of New Bedford one evening last week. It was visible twenty minutes.

Philadelphia, Pa., March 8th, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—I expected to have left this city this morning for home, but Charlie is sick, and I do not wish to leave him behind. As he is rapidly recovering, I shall doubtless go on Monday. I was at Washington three Sundays. The church in Washington is in a flourishing condition, and constantly increasing. While there I received much kindness from numerous distinguished men, and enlisted several in favor of a just and free distribution of vacant lands among all the landless, for a perpetual inheritance, according to the principles of the law of God.

Daniel Webster is fairly committed to this policy, as well as various members of both Houses of Congress. I also received all desired aid in the public offices, in making copies of maps, surveys, records, &c. As an individual, I received from all persons in all places, while there, as much and as kind attention as I could look for if I had represented a foreign nation; and in business matters, though I do not wish to speak particularly of it, but just to say that I was more successful than in my most sanguine moments I had anticipated.

The church at Baltimore is constantly increasing, and from its first beginning has not been cursed with a single schism. They will come up strong from both places to the home of the saints. Their arrangements are extensively going on for removing, and they will go up early.

While in Baltimore I saw No. 8 of Wm. Smith's paper, saying that the editor was in possession of very important letters from U. C. H. Nickerson and John E. Page, exposing the vices and wickedness of Strangism. Is not this a pretty trio to establish sanctity and put down vice, Wm. Smith, John E. Page and Chitenden Nickerson! Well, now; won't we sinners get used up. Go to St. Louis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York and Boston with their names, and it will give character to any cause. We need not blame them. Wm. Smith has proved by careful experiment that a man can get a living in the dark alleys and miserable purlieus of the great cities, by inventing Mormon abominations. If he, why not others?

Wm. is gifted only in prayer and sanctity.—Give him some one to preach, and another to pick up the fragments that nothing be lost, and the three can get notoriety, if not fame. It is not certain that the pole cat knows that his den is no perfumery. Two such ought to be able to make a noise, if not to create an interest; and if Old Nick answered no other purpose, he would abundantly supply the place of Hook, with only this fault, that if he carried the bag he would keep what was put therein.

After all, Frank, I think we ought rather to pity than to blame John. You are aware that he frequently remarked that his brethren were all basswood, and that there was no talent in the church but himself and Bro. Strang. Doubtless the exception of "Bro. Strang" was simply a matter of courtesy. Of course he was quite disappointed that the church did not fall quite flat when he fell off. Seeing instead of that, a new impetus given to the work generally throughout the length and breadth of the land, he of course is anxious to get his great name before the public in some way. Let him go on, and give him a little boost occasionally.

If any evils existed in the church he was in it, and partaker of them as fully as any other. If there were no evils, then as a "seeker after truth," and a lover of it, he cannot say much against it. We have no need to speak ill of him, because when he joined us he confessed his faults, and promised to do better, and as often as we detected him in violating the promise we called him to account. No, if he wants notoriety, if he is anxious to let the world know that he has turned back from his faith and his testimony, and endeavoring to build himself up by a Mormon expose in conjunction with Chitenden Nickerson and William Smith, it is best to be kind enough to notice him occasionally, and without one reproach. We have truth for our foundation, and do not need to build up ourselves on the faults of others.

I am going hastily from here to New York

Philadelphia, Pa., March 8th, 1850.

DEAR FRANK:—I expected to have left this city this morning for home, but Charlie is sick, and I do not wish to leave him behind. As he is rapidly recovering, I shall doubtless go on Monday. I was at Washington three Sundays. The church in Washington is in a flourishing condition, and constantly increasing. While there I received much kindness from numerous distinguished men, and enlisted several in favor of a just and free distribution of vacant lands among all the landless, for a perpetual inheritance, according to the principles of the law of God.

Daniel Webster is fairly committed to this policy, as well as various members of both Houses of Congress. I also received all desired aid in the public offices, in making copies of maps, surveys, records, &c. As an individual, I received from all persons in all places, while there, as much and as kind attention as I could look for if I had represented a foreign nation; and in business matters, though I do not wish to speak particularly of it, but just to say that I was more successful than in my most sanguine moments I had anticipated.

The church at Baltimore is constantly increasing, and from its first beginning has not been cursed with a single schism. They will come up strong from both places to the home of the saints. Their arrangements are extensively going on for removing, and they will go up early.

While in Baltimore I saw No. 8 of Wm. Smith's paper, saying that the editor was in possession of very important letters from U. C. H. Nickerson and John E. Page, exposing the vices and wickedness of Strangism. Is not this a pretty trio to establish sanctity and put down vice, Wm. Smith, John E. Page and Chitenden Nickerson! Well, now; won't we sinners get used up. Go to St. Louis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York and Boston with their names, and it will give character to any cause. We need not blame them. Wm. Smith has proved by careful experiment that a man can get a living in the dark alleys and miserable purlieus of the great cities, by inventing Mormon abominations. If he, why not others?

Wm. is gifted only in prayer and sanctity.—Give him some one to preach, and another to pick up the fragments that nothing be lost, and the three can get notoriety, if not fame. It is not certain that the pole cat knows that his den is no perfumery. Two such ought to be able to make a noise, if not to create an interest: and if Old Nick answered no other purpose, he would abundantly supply the place of Hook, with only this fault, that if he carried the bag he would keep what was put therein.

After all, Frank, I think we ought rather to pity than to blame John. You are aware that he frequently remarked that his brethren were all basswood, and that there was no talent in the church but himself and Bro. Strang. Doubtless the exception of "Bro. Strang" was simply a matter of courtesy. Of course he was quite disappointed that the church did not fall quite flat when he fell off. Seeing instead of that, a new impetus given to the work generally throughout the length and breadth of the land, he of course is anxious to get his great name before the public in some way. Let him go on, and give him a little boost occasionally.

If any evils existed in the church he was in it, and partaker of them as fully as any other. If there were no evils, then as a "seeker after truth," and a lover of it, he cannot say much against it. We have no need to speak ill of him, because when he joined us he confessed his faults, and promised to do better, and as often as we detected him in violating the promise we called him to account. No, if he wants notoriety, if he is anxious to let the world know that he has turned back from his faith and his testimony, and endeavoring to build himself up by a Mormon expose in conjunction with Chitenden Nickerson and William Smith, it is best to be kind enough to notice him occasionally, and without one reproach. We have truth for our foundation, and do not need to build up ourselves on the faults of others.

I am going hastily from here to New York and Boston, where large numbers are getting ready to go up with us. I learned from Bro. Brownson that the prospect was that he would raise up a large company to go on this spring. What Bros. Wright, Savage, Gurley, Briggs, E. Page and others have accomplished I am not informed; but from the past success of some, and the energy and faith of others, I am confident that they will give a good account of themselves. A company of thirty are now on their way from the far-off State of Texas, bound to Beaver. We shall go up and divide the land by lot, and a beautiful possession it will be.

The book says, it is better to give than to receive. This is true; but its truth depends on circumstances. When one has given all he has, then it is better to receive. Many of the saints have been in that situation a long time. It is better for them to receive. They shall now inherit the earth. I have not yet finished up my business at Washington, and having no one to write for me, labor presses hard. My health is good, but I am worn nearly to a skeleton. Since Charlie's sickness my labor has been much severer than before. He is now able to sit up a little, and the excellent saints in Philadelphia give him the best of care, besides helping me as much as possible in my labors.

Truly I may say that I have never known the Elders going to the field of their labors to encounter as violent opposition both from before and behind as those who came east last fall. Yet every man who stood to his post has been greatly prospered. We are reaping a rich harvest. Opposition in every quarter this way is silenced. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

☞ We publish the following in pursuance of our rule of opening our columns to discussion. The reply will probably appear in our next:—

A TEXT,

Extracted from S. P. Bacon's remarks upon John Wesley's sermons, or pretensions to ordination, as found in the Gospel Herald, Vol. IV. No. 52: "O fudge! can a stream rise higher than its fountain?" 1. My remarks will be principally confined, in this short essay, to the first clause or phrase of this sentence, as it holds a connection with the main subject of those remarks, viz., O fudge! This is an exclamation, the signification of which is too generally understood to require a lengthy definition by way of elucidation. I shall, therefore, leave this part of the subject untouched, and enter immediately upon the examination of that more interesting matter alluded to in the context, even that which seems to have called forth this exclamation.

2. It appears that Mr. B. takes exceptions to the validity of Mr. Wesley's claims to a legal ordination to the ministry of the gospel, upon the ground that the spiritual gifts were not known to exist in the church for centuries previous to his, Mr. W.'s, ordination by the ministers of one of its branches.

3. He has not told us, except by leaving us to our own inference of his views, whether the legal form of ordination has been observed down to Wesley's day or not. Neither has he denied it.

4. Now, then, does he mean to teach his readers to follow his example in crying out, O fudge! to all claims to the ministry, and to the most efficient and powerful arguments in favor of the truth and against error that any honest hearted and talented man may introduce, simply for the reason that generations before him have held no just claims to authority, and at the same time draw his supposition from this man's assertion that the spiritual gifts had been so long absent from the church?

5. If this is Mr. B.'s meaning, then I should infer that he supposes that these gifts were always necessary to substantiate any man's claims to similar authority. And unless Mr. B. can prove that spiritual gifts are necessary to be manifested through the church to test its authority, then he must either show that the church of which he speaks, through which Mr. W. received his ordination, lost their authority

d Boston, where large numbers are getting dy to go up with us. I learned from Bro. owuson that the prospect was that he would ise up a large company to go on this spring. hat Bros. Wright, Savage, Gurley, Briggs, E. ge and others have accomplished I am not in- med; but from the past success of some, d the energy and faith of others, I am confi- nt that they will give a good account of emselves. A company of thirty are now on eir way from the far-off State of Texas, bound Beaver. We shall go up and divide the d by lot, and a beautiful possession it will .

The book says, it is better to give than to ceive. This is true; but its truth depends circumstances. When one has given all he . then it is better to receive. Many of the nts have been in that situation a long time. is better for them to receive. They shall inherit the earth. I have not yet finished my business at Washington, and having no to write for me, labor presses hard. My lth is good, but I am worn nearly to a skel- . Since Charlie's sickness my labor has n much severer than before. He is now to sit up a little, and the excellent saints Philadelphia give him the best of care, be- s helping me as much as possible in my la- .

Truly I may say that I have never known Elders going to the field of their labors to ounter as violent opposition both from be- and behind as those who came east last Yet every man who stood to his post has n greatly prospered. We are reaping a harvest. Opposition in every quarter this is silenced. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

☞ We publish the following in pursu- of our rule of opening our columns to dis- ion. The reply will probably appear in our t:—

A TEXT,

xtracted from S. P. Bacon's remarks upon Wesley's sermons, or pretensions to or- dination, as found in the Gospel Herald, Vol. IV. No. 52: "O fudge! can a stream rise high- er than its fountain?" 1. My remarks will be principally confined, in this short essay, to the first clause or phrase of this sentence, as it holds a connection with the main subject of those remarks, viz., O fudge! This is an ex- clamation, the signification of which is too gen- erally understood to require a lengthy defini- tion by way of elucidation. I shall, therefore, leave this part of the subject untouched, and enter immediately upon the examination of that more interesting matter alluded to in the context, even that which seems to have called forth this exclamation.

2. It appears that Mr. B. takes exceptions to the validity of Mr. Wesley's claims to a legal ordination to the ministry of the gospel, upon the ground that the spiritual gifts were not known to exist in the church for centuries pre- vious to his, Mr. W.'s, ordination by the min- isters of one of its branches.

3. He has not told us, except by leaving us to our own inference of his views, whether the legal form of ordination has been observed down to Wesley's day or not. Neither has he denied it.

4. Now, then, does he mean to teach his readers to follow his example in crying out, O fudge! to all claims to the ministry, and to the most efficient and powerful arguments in favor of the truth and against error that any honest hearted and talented man may introduce, sim- ply for the reason that generations before him have held no just claims to authority, and at the same time draw his supposition from this man's assertion that the spiritual gifts had been so long absent from the church?

5. If this is Mr. B.'s meaning, then I should infer that he supposes that these gifts were al- ways necessary to substantiate any man's claims to similar authority. And unless Mr. B. can prove that spiritual gifts are necessary to be manifested through the church to test its au- thority, then he must either show that the church of which he speaks, through which Mr. W. received his ordination, lost their authority to ordain through some other means, or else allow that the imposition of hands upon the head of Mr. W. might have been legal still, provided he may not be able to disprove that the church of Rome ever held legal authority to ordain men to the ministration of the gospel.

6. If Mr. B. will take the position, and maintain that the spiritual gifts once in the church are always necessary in every age or generation to establish the authority of its ministry, and prove the legality of ordination, then I for one will acknowledge him so far a candid, honest man, and shall expect of course that he will be willing to be tried by his own standard, or else allow, as he necessarily must, that his standard is got up in falsehood.

7. But if he refuse to maintain this position, then we will consider him in duty bound to prove that either the Roman Catholic church never held authority to ordain to the gospel ministry; or, if she did, how and when did she lose the legal form, or power of ordination?

8. For if I understand Mr. W. upon this point, he argued that it was for lack of faith and love in the cause of God, and a consequent departure from true spiritual worship back to heathenism that the gifts were absent from the church, and not because the legal form of ordination had not been kept up.

9. But if this Mr. B. agrees with one of the Mormon champions, that it was in consequence of the church fleeing for protection under the civil arm or state authority, then we, as dissenters from the Romish See, would inquire how it happened when the prophet Joseph Smith sought the Presidential chair that he did not also lose his authority to ordain Elders; and especially when Joe's Apostles earnestly petitioned the government of these United States to spread over them their two great wings of an eagle to protect them from the invasion of those dreaded Indians, which they for so many years pretended that God had raised them up especially to deliver from oppression, and gather home to the peaceable possession which God gave to them and to their fathers for an everlasting inheritance.

10. But, as a Methodist, or one who respects all good men and their honest endeavors to do good in the world, and better the condition of the human race, I shall be inclined to favor Mr. W.'s claims, so far as he pretended to authority, until a better can be shown, or until his claim shall be reasonably and scripturally disproved. His claim was simply to preach, baptize, establish churches, or societies, and ordain ministers; but at the same time to leave every man free to enjoy all the liberty delegated to him by God, and the state authorities where they might reside.

11. Claiming no right to dictate as Pope, Emperor, or King, but only as peaceable counselor, and as an equal among his brethren, boasting not of superiority among men on account of ordination merely, but meekly showed forth by fair reasoning his qualification or ability to instruct; which superiority was not by him affected nor imposed, but justly merited and truly and willingly acknowledged by many of his worthy cotemporaries. In testimony of which appear his credentials or his ordination accompanying his worthy labors.

12. And now until something more clear and argumentative shall be offered against Mr. W.'s authority than is contained in Mr. B.'s remarks we shall think proper to hand him back his own coin—O fudge!

A Friend of Wesley.

Port Rowen, C. W., Feb. 26th, 1850.

Francis Cooper,—Dear Bro.:—I write a few lines that you and all others who are interested in the cause of Zion may know how the work of God is prospering here. Although there is not much visible appearance of the work of God to the world, still the discerning eye can see that it is rolling on, and that the way is opening for the kingdom of God to be established spoken of by Daniel the prophet. See Dan. ii. 44. "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but to ordain through some other means, or else allow that the imposition of hands upon the head of Mr. W. might have been legal still, provided he may not be able to disprove that the church of Rome ever held legal authority to ordain men to the ministration of the gospel.

6. If Mr. B. will take the position, and maintain that the spiritual gifts once in the church are always necessary in every age or generation to establish the authority of its ministry, and prove the legality of ordination, then I for one will acknowledge him so far a candid, honest man, and shall expect of course that he will be willing to be tried by his own standard, or else allow, as he necessarily must, that his standard is got up in falsehood.

7. But if he refuse to maintain this position, then we will consider him in duty bound to prove that either the Roman Catholic church never held authority to ordain to the gospel ministry; or, if she did, how and when did she lose the legal form, or power of ordination?

8. For if I understand Mr. W. upon this point, he argued that it was for lack of faith and love in the cause of God, and a consequent departure from true spiritual worship back to heathenism that the gifts were absent from the church, and not because the legal form of ordination had not been kept up.

9. But if this Mr. B. agrees with one of the Mormon champions, that it was in consequence of the church fleeing for protection under the civil arm or state authority, then we, as dissenters from the Romish See, would inquire how it happened when the prophet Joseph Smith sought the Presidential chair that he did not also lose his authority to ordain Elders; and especially when Joe's Apostles earnestly petitioned the government of these United States to spread over them their two great wings of an eagle to protect them from the invasion of those dreaded Indians, which they for so many years pretended that God had raised them up especially to deliver from oppression, and gather home to the peaceable possession which God gave to them and to their fathers for an everlasting inheritance.

10. But, as a Methodist, or one who respec all good men and their honest endeavors to good in the world, and better the condition the human race, I shall be inclined to fav Mr. W.'s claims, so far as he pretended to a thority, until a better can be shown, or unt his claim shall be reasonably and scripturall disproved. His claim was simply to preac baptize, establish churches, or societies, an ordain ministers; but at the same time to leav every man free to enjoy all the liberty delega ed to him by God, and the state authoritie where they might reside.

11. Claiming no right to dictate as Po Emperor, or King, but only as peaceable cou selor, and as an equal among his brethren boasting not of superiority among men on a count of ordination merely, but meekly showe forth by fair reasoning his qualification or abi ity to instruct; which superiority was not b him affected nor imposed, but justly merite and truly and willingly acknowledged by man of his worthy cotemporaries. In testimony which appear his credentials or his ordinatio accompanying his worthy labors.

12. And now until something more clear an argumentative shall be offered against Mr. W. authority than is contained in Mr. B.'s remark we shall think proper to hand him back h own coin—O fudge!

A Friend of Wesley.

Port Rowen, C. W., Feb. 26th, 1850.

Francis Cooper,—Dear Bro.:—I write few lines that you and all others who are inter ested in the cause of Zion may know how th work of God is prospering here. Althoug there is not much visible appearance of th work of God to the world, still the discernin eye can see that it is rolling on, and that th way is opening for the kingdom of God to b established spoken of by Daniel the prophet See Dan. ii. 44. "In the days of these king shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the king dom shall not be left to other people, but i shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."

What! will the kingdom of God be set up? Yes, it will. The saints here are firm in the faith, and some will go to Beaver Island next summer, if they can get ready. They are tired of living with the Gentiles, and I do not wonder at it, for there is nothing but one continual scene of lying, gambling, drunkenness and sectarian ignorance and religious bigotry. Some places seem to equal Sodom and Gomorrah.—Christ said, as it was in the days of Noah, so should it be when the Son of man is revealed. There are some who are willing to hear, and a few who say they will obey. May God help them to obey.

I still keep preaching, although surrounded by enemies, and a howling set of hireling priests, who are laboring for the fleece, and not the flock. May God grant that the kingdom be established in power, that the saints may inherit the earth after the wicked are cut off.

JOHN SHIPPY.

TURNING THE GRINDSTONE.

When I was a little boy, I remember one cold winter's morning, I was accosted by a smiling man with an axe on his shoulder, "My pretty boy," said he, "has your father a grindstone?" "Yes sir," said I. "You are a fine little fellow," said he, "will you let me grind my axe on it?" Pleased with his compliment of "fine little fellow," "O yes sir," I answered, "it is down in the shop." "And will you, my man," said he, patting me on the head, "get a little hot water?" I ran and soon brought a kettlefull. "How old are you, and what's your name?" continued he, without waiting for a reply; "I am sure you are one of the finest lads that ever I have seen; will you just turn a few minutes for me?" Tickled with his flattery, like a fool I went to work, and bitterly did I rue the day. It was a new axe, and I toiled and tugged till I was almost tired to death.—The school-bell rang, and I could not get away; my hands were blistered, and it was not half ground. At length, however, the axe was sharpened, and the man turned to me with, "now, you little rascal, you've played the truant, scud to school or you'll rue it." Alas! thought I, it was hard enough to turn a grindstone this cold day, but now to be called a little rascal was too much. It sank deep in my mind, and often have I thought of it since. When I see a merchant over polite to his customers—begging them to take a little brandy, and throwing his goods on the counter—thinks I that man has an axe to grind. When I see a man flattering the people, making great professions of attachment to liberty, who is in private life a tyrant—methinks, look out, good people; that fellow would set you turning grindstones.—When I see a man hoisted into office by party spirit, without a single qualification to render him either respectable or useful—alas! methinks, deluded people, you are doomed for a season to turn the grindstone for a booby.—Franklin.

PHENOMENA OF THE BRAIN.

Dr. Wagan, in a treatise on the "Quality of the Mind," makes the following remarks:—"One of the most inconceivable things in the nature of the brain is, that the organ of sensation should itself be insensible. To cut the brain gives no pain, yet in the brain alone resides the power of feeling pain in any other part of the body. If the nerve which leads from it to the injured part be divided, it becomes instantly unconscious of suffering. It is only by communication with the brain that any kind of sensation is produced, yet the organ itself is sensible. But there is a circumstance more wonderful still. The brain itself may be removed, may be cut away down to the corpus colassum without destroying life. The animal lives and performs all the functions which are necessary to simple vitality, but no longer has a mind; it cannot think or feel—it requires that the food should be pushed into its stomach; once there it is digested, and the animal will even thrive and grow fat. We infer, therefore, that the part of the brain, the convolutions, is simply intended for the exercise of the intellectual faculties, whether of the low degree, called instinct, or of the exalted kind bestowed on man, the gift of reason."

☛ Love is a sweeter, and stronger principle of obedience than fear. The law is indeed a hammer to break the heart, but the gospel is a key to open hearts. A soul assured of God's love, how it will twine about a precept; suck sweetness of a command; catch at an opportunity; long for a duty. How doth he go like a bee from flower to flower, from duty to duty, from ordinance to ordinance, and extract the very quintessence of all. Such a soul will send back the streams of its affections into the ocean. But such as are frightened into obedience by fear, would soon abuse such love. Love returns love. The love of God alone constrains to genuine obedience.

☛ Keep at work if you would be happy. There is more true enjoyment in sweating an hour, than in yawning a century.

hall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."

What! will the kingdom of God be set up? Yes, it will. The saints here are firm in the faith, and some will go to Beaver Island next summer, if they can get ready. They are tired of living with the Gentiles, and I do not wonder at it, for there is nothing but one continual scene of lying, gambling, drunkenness and sectarian ignorance and religious bigotry. Some places seem to equal Sodom and Gomorrah.—Christ said, as it was in the days of Noah, so should it be when the Son of man is revealed. There are some who are willing to hear, and a few who say they will obey. May God help them to obey.

I still keep preaching, although surrounded by enemies, and a howling set of hireling priests, who are laboring for the fleece, and not the flock. May God grant that the kingdom be established in power, that the saints may inherit the earth after the wicked are cut off.

JOHN SHIPPY.

TURNING THE GRINDSTONE.

When I was a little boy, I remember one cold winter's morning, I was accosted by a smiling man with an axe on his shoulder, "My pretty boy," said he, "has your father a grindstone?" "Yes sir," said I. "You are a fine little fellow," said he, "will you let me grind my axe on it?" Pleased with his compliment of "fine little fellow," "O yes sir," I answered, "it is down in the shop." "And will you, my man," said he, patting me on the head, "get a little hot water?" I ran and soon brought a kettlefull. "How old are you, and what's your name?" continued he, without waiting for a reply; "I am sure you are one of the finest lads that ever I have seen; will you just turn a few minutes for me?" Tickled with his flattery, like a fool I went to work, and bitterly did I rue the day. It was a new axe, and I toiled and tugged till I was almost tired to death.—The school-bell rang, and I could not get away; my hands were blistered, and it was not half ground. At length, however, the axe was sharpened, and the man turned to me with, "now, you little rascal, you've played the truant, scud to school or you'll rue it." Alas! thought I, it was hard enough to turn a grindstone this cold day, but now to be called a little rascal was too much. It sank deep in my mind, and often have I thought of it since. When I see a merchant over polite to his customers—begging them to take a little brandy, and throwing his goods on the counter—thinks I that man has an axe to grind. When I see a man flattering the people, making great professions of attachment to liberty, who is in private life a tyrant—methinks, look out, good people; that fellow would set you turning grindstones.—When I see a man hoisted into office by party spirit, without a single qualification to render him either respectable or useful—alas! methinks, deluded people, you are doomed for a season to turn the grindstone for a booby.—Franklin.

PHENOMENA OF THE BRAIN.

Dr. Wagan, in a treatise on the "Quality of the Mind," makes the following remarks:—"One of the most inconceivable things in the nature of the brain is, that the organ of sensation should itself be insensible. To cut the brain gives no pain, yet in the brain alone resides the power of feeling pain in any other part of the body. If the nerve which leads from it to the injured part be divided, it becomes instantly unconscious of suffering. It is only by communication with the brain that any kind of sensation is produced, yet the organ itself is sensible. But there is a circumstance more wonderful still. The brain itself may be removed, may be cut away down to the corpus colassum without destroying life. The animal lives and performs all the functions which are necessary to simple vitality, but no longer has a mind; it cannot think or feel—it requires that the food should be pushed into its stomach; once there it is digested, and the animal will even thrive and grow fat. We infer, therefore, that the part of the brain, the convolutions, is simply intended for the exercise of the intellectual faculties, whether of the low degree, called instinct, or of the exalted kind bestowed on man, the gift of reason."

☞ Love is a sweeter, and stronger principle of obedience than fear. The law is indeed a hammer to break the heart, but the gospel is a key to open hearts. A soul assured of God's love, how it will twine about a precept; suck sweetness of a command; catch at an opportunity; long for a duty. How doth he go like a bee from flower to flower, from duty to duty, from ordinance to ordinance, and extract the very quintessence of all. Such a soul will send back the streams of its affections into the ocean. But such as are frightened into obedience by fear, would soon abuse such love. Love returns love. The love of God alone constrains to genuine obedience

☞ Keep at work if you would be happy. There is more true enjoyment in sweating an hour, than in yawning a century.

THE UNCERTAIN.

"Of constancy no root infix'd,
That either they love nothing, or not long."

We frequently meet with individuals of superior mental capacity, richly endowed by nature, and fully accomplished by education—and yet, because of a fickle and uncertain disposition, of a propensity to attempt many objects, without adhering to and prosecuting one, they find it exceedingly difficult to get along in the world. They are unsteady, uncertain and variable. What they propose to-day they will abandon to-morrow. A successful enterprise only renders them the more sanguine, and thus, in the midst of "good fortune," they will attempt something wild, visionary, and impracticable, and of course fail. We have an individual of this kind before our mental eye at the present moment. He is remarkably clever, nay—highly gifted. Indeed, his mental qualifications are of a very superior order; and his readiness, tact, and talent are undoubted. He is fitted to succeed in almost any undertaking, if he would adhere to and prosecute it with a due degree of perseverance. But, unfortunately, there is no fixity of purpose in his composition. He is as uncertain as the wind. To-day he is an enthusiast in some new enterprise, and to-morrow, the bubble having exploded, he is won away by some still more novel undertaking. And thus he pursues phantoms from year to year, but does not contrive to advance or make his way in the world. Nay, at times he is overwhelmed with misfortune and poverty. He is surprised at his own reverses—he admits his error of inconstancy, and resolves to act with more discretion for the future. But the resolution is only for the hour.

Eager, impulsive and sanguine, he is soon caught by some new phantom, and on he rushes as blindly and as recklessly as ever.—This disposition is a great misfortune. It not only impairs confidence, but it provokes disaster. Admonish our friend upon the subject, glance at his history for a few years, and he will frankly acknowledge his infirmity. Nay, he will point out and deplore his abandonment of enterprises, in which, had he only persevered a little longer, success would have been certain. And this is no rare character in society. The inconstant, uncertain and fickle-minded are to be found all around us. How many, indeed, waste the best hours of their existence in the pursuit of their bubbles! How many become infatuated by some unsubstantial dream, and only awake to find themselves deceived, misguided and betrayed. How many delude themselves into the belief that fortunes are realized by some lucky chance, instead of by untiring exercise of energy, industry and activity in some practical pursuit. Steadiness of purpose is almost essential to worldly success. Constant accumulations, however small, are far more reliable than the hap-hazard chances and gains of bold, wild and even magnificent schemes.

A practical knowledge of business and of men should be regarded as among the essentials of all who aim at pecuniary independence. A close examination into society will exhibit two things—first, that the fickle and uncertain are seldom permanently successful—second, that the constant, the steady and the untiring are seldom permanently unfortnnate. Let us not be misunderstood. If on arriving at the years of manhood, an indivdual discover that he has made a mistake in his business or profession,—that he is not fitted for the particular calling to which he has devoted years of time and attention,—that the prospect is dim and shadowy, and that some other chance or line holds out greater inducements, we would not have him adhere to the old calling, simply because of the original mistake. By no means. But having committed one error, he should dwell upon the subject calmly and thoughtfully before re-entering upon a new enterprise, and having once determined upon a change, he should give a full, an adequate, and an ample trial. Ordinary reverses, a first failure, limited success at the beginning, should not dishearen or depress.

It frequently happens that the morning is cloudy, but that mid-da is bright and beautiful in the natural world. A similar change ma often be observed in the business and commercial world. Some times, too, the temper and capacity of man are tried, tested and pu rified by some early reverse; and thus he is the better for after strug gles and ultimate success. All that we aim at is to show that fu quent changes, changes too that are based upon whim and caprice rather than reason and facts, should be carefully guarded against especially by the young. They have their fortunes to carve ou their reputations to make—and one or two mis-steps at the begin ning are calculated to retard and overshadow, throughout th whole of their after existence. We some days since heard a frien in conversation with another, introduce the name of a third perso and ask—"Is he reliable? May he be depended upon? If I con fide the business to him, may I feel assured that it will be transa ted?"

The other hesitated, said every thing that he could in relation the capacity and integrity of the individual in question, but w compelled in frankness to admit, that he was changeable and unce tain. The inquirer expressed regret, but said that the objection w fatal. It was essential that the business in view should be tra acted promptly, thoroughly and within a specified period. A hence it was impossible for him to confide it to one, on whose d termination as well as ability to go through with the work he cou not rely. A moral is conveyed in these hasty hints, which it wou be well for all who are starting in life, for all indeed who have d covered the folly of fickleness, to ponder in a thoughtful and self- quiring spirit. We so frequently see the evil consequences of fic leness or irresolution, that the infirmity appears especially worthy notice and admonition. Thousands have lost enviable positi through its influence, while other thousands have sacrificed the ve fortune they desired so earnestly to win, simply because th forsook the rough but quiet path which led slowly but surely to t timate prosperity, and were won away by the tempting, the haza ous and the uncertain.—Inquirer.

CONTRADICTORY PEOPLE.

It is scarcely possible to go into any compa ny whatever without meeting with a sample the class-men, who must be first in every thin and make a point of opposing every argume advanced, no matter what the subject, and wh would declare to-day that so-and-so was rig and true, even though they had solemnly pledge their "sacred word of honor" to the contra yesterday, provided any person present happe ed to be daring enough to think differently them. They are the great guns of public-house and are known in every tap-room and pari from John-o'-Groat's to Land's end. Th are the people who insist upon seeing defe in a play or a picture where every body else s only beauties. They make capital husban before company, though their wives say the is no bearing with them at home. They a captious with strangers, and overbearing amo their families; and, rather than not indul their favorite propensity, will start an argume for the occasion and propose to take eith side of the contest.—Ex. paper.

THE UNCERTAIN.

"Of constancy no root infix'd,
That either they love nothing, or not long."

We frequently meet with individuals of superior mental capacity, richly endowed by nature, and fully accomplished by education—and yet, because of a fickle and uncertain disposition, of a propensity to attempt many objects, without adhering to and prosecuting one, they find it exceedingly difficult to get along in the world. They are unsteady, uncertain and variable. What they propose to-day they will abandon to-morrow. A successful enterprise only renders them the more sanguine, and thus, in the midst of "good fortune," they will attempt something wild, visionary, and impracticable, and of course fail. We have an individual of this kind before our mental eye at the present moment. He is remarkably clever, nay—highly gifted. Indeed, his mental qualifications are of a very superior order; and his readiness, tact, and talent are undoubted. He is fitted to succeed in almost any undertaking, if he would adhere to and prosecute it with a due degree of perseverance. But, unfortunately, there is no fixity of purpose in his composition. He is as uncertain as the wind. To-day he is an enthusiast in some new enterprise, and to-morrow, the bubble having exploded, he is won away by some still more novel undertaking. And thus he pursues phantoms from year to year, but does not contrive to advance or make his way in the world. Nay, at times he is overwhelmed with misfortune and poverty. He is surprised at his own reverses—he admits his error of inconstancy, and resolves to act with more discretion for the future. But the resolution is only for the hour.

Eager, impulsive and sanguine, he is soon caught by some new phantom, and on he rushes as blindly and as recklessly as ever.—This disposition is a great misfortune. It not only impairs confidence, but it provokes disaster. Admonish our friend upon the subject, glance at his history for a few years, and he will frankly acknowledge his infirmity. Nay, he will point out and deplore his abandonment of enterprises, in which, had he only persevered a little longer, success would have been certain. And this is no rare character in society. The inconstant, uncertain and fickle-minded are to be found all around us. How many, indeed, waste the best hours of their existence in the pursuit of their bubbles! How many become infatuated by some unsubstantial dream, and only awake to find themselves deceived, misguided and betrayed. How many delude themselves into the belief that fortunes are realized by some lucky chance, instead of by untiring exercise of energy, industry and activity in some practical pursuit. Steadiness of purpose is almost essential to worldly success. Constant accumulations, however small, are far more reliable than the hap-hazard chances and gains of bold, wild and even magnificent schemes.

A practical knowledge of business and of men should be regarded as among the essentials of all who aim at pecuniary independence. A close examination into society will exhibit two things—first, that the fickle and uncertain are seldom permanently successful—second, that the constant, the steady and the untiring are seldom permanently unfortunate. Let us not be misunderstood. If on arriving at the years of manhood, an indivdual discover that he has made a mistake in his business or profession,—that he is not fitted for the particular calling to which he has devoted years of time and attention,—that the prospect is dim and shadowy, and that some other chance or line holds out greater inducements, we would not have him adhere to the old calling, simply because of the original mistake. By no means. But having committed one error, he should dwell upon the subject calmly and thoughtfully before re-entering upon a new enterprise, and having once determined upon a change, he should give a full, an adequate, and an ample trial. Ordinary reverses, a first failure, limited success at the beginning, should not dishearen or depress.

It frequently happens that the morning is cloudy, but that mid- is bright and beautiful in the natural world. A similar change often be observed in the business and commercial world. S times, too, the temper and capacity of man are tried, tested and rified by some early reverse; and thus he is the better for after s gles and ultimate success. All that we aim at is to show that quent changes, changes too that are based upon whim and ca rather than reason and facts, should be carefully guarded aga especially by the young. They have their fortunes to carve their reputations to make—and one or two mis-steps at the be ning are calculated to retard and overshadow, throughout whole of their after existence. We some days since heard a fr in conversation with another, introduce the name of a third pe and ask—"Is he reliable? May he be depended upon? If I fide the business to him, may I feel assured that it will be tran ted?"

The other hesitated, said every thing that he could in relati the capacity and integrity of the individual in question, but compelled in frankness to admit, that he was changeable and u tain. The inquirer expressed regret, but said that the objection fatal. It was essential that the business in view should be t acted promptly, thoroughly and within a specified period. hence it was impossible for him to confide it to one, on whose termination as well as ability to go through with the work he c not rely. A moral is conveyed in these hasty hints, which it w be well for all who are starting in life, for all indeed who have covered the folly of fickleness, to ponder in a thoughtful and sel quiring spirit. We so frequently see the evil consequences of leness or irresolution, that the infirmity appears especially wort notice and admonition. Thousands have lost enviable posi through its influence, while other thousands have sacrificed the fortune they desired so earnestly to win, simply because forsook the rough but quiet path which led slowly but surely t timate prosperity, and were won away by the tempting, the ha ous and the uncertain.—Inquirer.

CONTRADICTORY PEOPLE.

It is scarcely possible to go into any com ny whatever without meeting with a sample the class-men, who must be first in every thi and make a point of opposing every argume advanced, no matter what the subject, and w would declare to-day that so-and-so was ri and true, even though they had solemnly pled their "sacred word of honor" to the contra yesterday, provided any person present happ ed to be daring enough to think differently them. They are the great guns of public-hous and are known in every tap-room and par from John-o'-Groat's to Land's end. Th are the people who insist upon seeing defe in a play or a picture where every body else s only beauties. They make capital husba before company, though their wives say th is no bearing with them at home. They captious with strangers, and overbearing am their families; and, rather than not indu their favorite propensity, will start an argume for the occasion and propose to take eit side of the contest.—Ex. paper.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 3.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, APRIL 4, 1850. [WHOLE No. 171.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

"A STANDARD."

BRO. COOPER:—In reading carefully the little paper called the "Olive Branch," I occasionally come across a piece written by "John E. Page," once an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, but "now running greedily after the error of Balaam, the son of Beor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness." And if God uses dumb asses to rebuke the madness of such prophets, this will be apology enough for my taking up the subject of J. E. Page's piece in the eighth number of "The Olive Branch," called the "Standard." J. E. P. quotes:—"And my words shall hiss forth unto all the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people of the house of Israel," and then says, "the Book of Mormon is the gift of God for a standard."

Well, J. E. P., Nephi did not say the Book of Mormon alone, but "MY WORDS," whether they be found in the "Book of Mormon, Book of the Lamb of God," (New Testament,) or the "other books" which are to come forth to establish the truth of the former record, (Book of Mormon page 33,) or God's words when he reveals unto his servants "the abundance of peace and truth." Jer. xxxiii. 6. Truth being the "word, law and commandments" of God. John. xvii. 17. Psa. cxix. 142, 151. Well, J. E. P., if the Book of Mormon, (which although God's word, is only part of the words he has spoken and will speak,) is to be the standard, are you right in your conclusion, or God in his declation? He says, and you endorse it as his word: "And my words (not merely the Book of Mormon, but my words) shall hiss forth unto all the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people which are of the house of Israel." And you limit it to the Book of Mormon. Bro. J. E., don't get too wise all of a sudden, lest your "light become darkness," for the rest of us want to know something.

Again, "in it (the Book of Mormon) is written the fulness of the gospel, and rock of our salvation." See page 32. Now, John, you pervert the Book of Mormon, worse than any other sectarian I have seen in a long while. The word fullness of the gospel is not on the 32d page of the Book of Mormon. The angel of the Lord said, "thus saith the Lamb of God, I will be merciful unto the Gentiles in that day, insomuch that I will bring forth unto them in mine own power much of my gospel, which shall be plain and precious, saith the Lamb." Does much mean a part or the whole? Why, it means part of a whole.

Again, "behold these things shall be hid up, to come forth unto the Gentiles, by the gift and power of the Lamb; and in them shall be written my gospel, saith the Lamb, and my rock, and my salvation." Now he says, "I will bring forth unto them much of my gospel;" and again, "in them shall be written my gospel." From this, then, we learn that it is only part of the gospel, and that is the word of the gospel, or the record of the gospel, or the written gospel. Let us call on Paul, Bro. Page, to tell us what the whole, not much, but the whole of the gospel of the Lamb of God consists in.

1st Thes. i. 5. "For our gospel came not unto you in word only." From this we learn that the word of the gospel, or the much part is called the gospel, but not the whole gospel, for it cannot be written. For it came not in word

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 3.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, APRIL 4, 1850. [WHOLE No. 171.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

"A STANDARD."

BRO. COOPER:—In reading carefully the little paper called the "Olive Branch," I occasionally come across a piece written by "John E. Page," once an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, but "now running greedily after the error of Balaam, the son of Beor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness." And if God uses dumb asses to rebuke the madness of such prophets, this will be apology enough for my taking up the subject of J. E. Page's piece in the eighth number of "The Olive Branch," called the "Standard." J. E. P. quotes:—"And my words shall hiss forth unto all the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people of the house of Israel," and then says, "the Book of Mormon is the gift of God for a standard."

Well, J. E. P., Nephi did not say the Book of Mormon alone, but "MY WORDS," whether they be found in the "Book of Mormon, Book of the Lamb of God," (New Testament,) or the "other books" which are to come forth to establish the truth of the former record, (Book of Mormon page 33,) or God's words when he reveals unto his servants "the abundance of peace and truth." Jer. xxxiii. 6. Truth being the "word, law and commandments" of God. John. xvii. 17. Psa. cxix. 142, 151. Well, J. E. P., if the Book of Mormon, (which although God's word, is only part of the words he has spoken and will speak,) is to be the standard, are you right in your conclusion, or God in his declation? He says, and you endorse it as his word: "And my words (not merely the Book of Mormon, but my words) shall hiss forth unto all the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people which are of the house of Israel." And you limit it to the Book of Mormon. Bro. J. E., don't get too wise all of a sudden, lest your "light become darkness," for the rest of us want to know something.

Again, "in it (the Book of Mormon) is written the fulness of the gospel, and rock of our salvation." See page 32. Now, John, you pervert the Book of Mormon, worse than any other sectarian I have seen in a long while. The word fullness of the gospel is not on the 32d page of the Book of Mormon. The angel of the Lord said, "thus saith the Lamb of God, I will be merciful unto the Gentiles in that day, insomuch that I will bring forth unto them in mine own power much of my gospel, which shall be plain and precious, saith the Lamb." Does much mean a part or the whole? Why, it means part of a whole.

Again, "behold these things shall be hid up, to come forth unto the Gentiles, by the gift and power of the Lamb; and in them shall be written my gospel, saith the Lamb, and my rock, and my salvation." Now he says, "I will bring forth unto them much of my gospel;" and again, "in them shall be written my gospel." From this, then, we learn that it is only part of the gospel, and that is the word of the gospel, or the record of the gospel, or the written gospel. Let us call on Paul, Bro. Page, to tell us what the whole, not much, but the whole of the gospel of the Lamb of God consists in.

1st Thes. i. 5. "For our gospel came not unto you in word only." From this we learn that the word of the gospel, or the much part is called the gospel, but not the whole gospel, for it cannot be written. For it came not in word only, (the only part which can be written,) but also in power, or priesthood, or authority, which cannot be written; and in the Holy Ghost, which part cannot be written, and in much assurance, which is testimony, and the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy, which spirit cannot be written; for the "letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." 2 Cor. iii. 6.

Again, "that ye should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ; in whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, after ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of his glory." Wherefore Paul prayed for them, "that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him."—Eph. i. 12–17. By this we learn that the Ephesians trusted in Christ after they heard the word of truth, which word of truth Paul called gospel, but which in reality was only the word of the gospel, "in which also after ye believed," of course the word of truth, the gospel, "ye were sealed with that holy spirit of promise which gave the "spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him."

Now Paul says, as quoted before, "our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." Now the word of the gospel is all that can be written. Therefore all that the angel claimed as gospel in his declaration. In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants it is said that the Book of Mormon contains the fullness of the gospel of Christ. If, then, the Book of Mormon is the fullness of the gospel of our salvation, it contains the whole gospel, that is, all of it. Therefore, of course, there is no more to be revealed, as far as our spiritual salvation is concerned.

Now, J. E. Page, I am really surprised at such conclusions from a man of your talent.—The Book of Covenants says, "and gave him power from on high, by the means which were before prepared, to translate the Book of Mormon, which contains a record of a fallen people, and the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ." Here we see the Book of Mormon contains a record of a fallen people, and a record of the fullness of the gospel. Well, so much for that. And again, it says the elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which (Bible and Book of Mormon) is the fullness of the gospel. It does not say in the Book of Mormon alone, but both of them. So, J. E. P., we will let that pass.

"If the Book of Mormon does not contain the fullness, all and the whole of the gospel of Christ, then the Doctrine and Covenants has told an untruth in sec. 2, p. 2, sec. 13, p. 5, and sec. 11, p. 4." Well, brother J. E. P., you must remember you are a man, subject to the like passions of the rest of us, and you have no better right to sit in judgment upon the word of God than those who belong to the "pillar and ground of the truth." I have shown that, although the Book of Mormon is a record of the fullness of the gospel, yet it does not contain the whole and all of the gospel, after all, brother J. E. Page's ipse dixit to the contrary, notwithstanding.

"A fullness of a thing is all and the whole." Now, J. E. Page, I am sorry to be obliged to ask you in candor, if you are not ashamed of such conclusions as these. But your premises are wrong to start with, and your conclusions are certainly ridiculous. A fullness of a thing is all and the whole. Now I want to stir up your exceeding great bump of comparison by asking you to take your half bushel and go into somebody's wheat granary containing fifty bushels or less of wheat, and fill your half bushel ("thing") of wheat, and then ask yourself if "the fullness of a thing (or half bushel) is all and the whole" of the wheat.

Bro. J. E. P., there is one paragraph more on the subject of the fullness of the gospel for the benefit of yourself and other Brewsterites, which is the only one which is positive and to the point. In Doctrine and Covenants you will only, (the only part which can be written,) but also in power, or priesthood, or authority, which cannot be written; and in the Holy Ghost, which part cannot be written, and in much assurance, which is testimony, and the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy, which spirit cannot be written; for the "letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." 2 Cor. iii. 6.

Again, "that ye should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ; in whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, after ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of his glory." Wherefore Paul prayed for them, "that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him."—Eph. i. 12–17. By this we learn that the Ephesians trusted in Christ after they heard the word of truth, which word of truth Paul called gospel, but which in reality was only the word of the gospel, "in which also after ye believed," of course the word of truth, the gospel, "ye were sealed with that holy spirit of promise which gave the "spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him."

Now Paul says, as quoted before, "our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." Now the word of the gospel is all that can be written. Therefore all that the angel claimed as gospel in his declaration. In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants it is said that the Book of Mormon contains the fullness of the gospel of Christ. If, then, the Book of Mormon is the fullness of the gospel of our salvation, it contains the whole gospel, that is, all of it. Therefore, of course, there is no more to be revealed, as far as our spiritual salvation is concerned.

Now, J. E. Page, I am really surprised at such conclusions from a man of your talent.—The Book of Covenants says, "and gave him power from on high, by the means which were before prepared, to translate the Book of Mormon, which contains a record of a fallen people, and the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ." Here we see the Book of Mormon contains a record of a fallen people, and a record of the fullness of the gospel. Well, so much for that. And again, it says the elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which (Bible and Book of Mormon) is the fullness of the gospel. It does not say in the Book of Mormon alone, but both of them. So, J. E. P., we will let that pass.

"If the Book of Mormon does not contain the fullness, all and the whole of the gospel of Christ, then the Doctrine and Covenants has told an untruth in sec. 2, p. 2, sec. 13, p. 5, and sec. 11, p. 4." Well, brother J. E. P., you must remember you are a man, subject to the like passions of the rest of us, and you have no better right to sit in judgment upon the word of God than those who belong to the "pillar and ground of the truth." I have shown that, although the Book of Mormon is a record of the fullness of the gospel, yet it does not contain the whole and all of the gospel, after all, brother J. E. Page's ipse dixit to the contrary, notwithstanding.

"A fullness of a thing is all and the whole." Now, J. E. Page, I am sorry to be obliged to ask you in candor, if you are not ashamed of such conclusions as these. But your premises are wrong to start with, and your conclusions are certainly ridiculous. A fullness of a thing is all and the whole. Now I want to stir up your exceeding great bump of comparison by asking you to take your half bushel and go into somebody's wheat granary containing fifty bushels or less of wheat, and fill your half bushel ("thing") of wheat, and then ask yourself if "the fullness of a thing (or half bushel) is all and the whole" of the wheat.

Bro. J. E. P., there is one paragraph more on the subject of the fullness of the gospel for the benefit of yourself and other Brewsterites, which is the only one which is positive and to the point. In Doctrine and Covenants you will find in sec. 50, par. 2: "Behold this is wisdom in me; wherefore marvel not, for the hour cometh that I will drink of the fruit of the vine with you on the earth, and with Moroni; whom I have sent unto you to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fulness of mine everlasting gospel."

This is positive. But, brother J. E. P., what is the meaning of the little word of? "The fullness of mine everlasting gospel." The word "of" H. Tooke "supposes to be a fragment of the Gothic and Saxon noun afora, consequence, offspring, follower. 'Solomon, the son of (offspring) David.' Of or off, in its modern acceptation, signifies disjoined, sundered: A piece of (off) the loaf, is, a piece disjoined, or separated from the loaf. The fragrance of or off the rose." Kirkham's grammar, page 91.

Here then the whole mystery is solved, the Book of Mormon is the fullness of (separated, disjoined) the gospel. Why is it the fullness of the gospel? First, because it is the word of truth. Eph. i. 13. Second, that truth is perfect and eternal, and nothing can be added to it to make it imperfect, or make the truth a lie. Third, it is the record of the gospel, and not the whole and all the gospel. D. & C. sec. 2, p. 2. It is not the whole gospel, but is "of the gospel;" for it is merely the word and the gospel. "It came not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." 1 Thes. i. 5. The fullness of a thing is not all and the whole. A fullness of (disjoined, sundered) is not as much as a "whole and all."

A fullness of (offspring) the gospel is not all the whole gospel. The gospel which we have is truth; if truth, it is perfect; if perfect, it is perfectly full of truth. Nothing can be added to perfection to make it any more perfect. But we can have more perfect truths added to our stock of truths or knowledge, and there will be a perfect fullness in those new truths added. So it is as regards revelation. The truths in the Bible were full before the Book of Mormon was revealed: by revealing the Book of Mormon made those truths no more true. Now, J. E. Page, you say, "brethren, let us return to the standard." Do that and you will be in a fair way to be saved. God's words, all of them, not merely a part, but "all the whole," shall hiss forth to the ends of the earth for a stanard to the house of Israel. But what is the standard of the words of God, or his truth? Paul says, the church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth. That is, the standard to try truth by. It is the church of God, out of which you have gone, and you know it. And so do even the Gentiles. They laugh at your arguments now when they compare them with former writings of yours. Now I write this not in malice, but in love. H. P. BROWN.

French Creek, N. Y., March 1st, 1850.

DEAR BRO. COOPER:—It is with much pleasure that I write to you at this time. As to my health, it is good; and, if I mistake not, good health and strong faith is the complaint that generally prevails among the saints who are preparing to go to Beaver Island in the spring. May God help them. Yesterday I was at sister Griffis', and am now at brother Wheelock's. They are all well, and enjoying good faith, which is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. I have baptized some two or three since my last letter to you. And with the help of God (whether providence is willing or not) I mean to baptize some two or three more the last of this week or the first of next.

I am on my way to Clayton now, where I shall preach next Sunday. And with the help of God I intend to wake them up from their dead, profound sleep, which they have been preached into by the precepts of man. From there I shall go back to the old fishing ground, (Cape Vincent,) and from there to Shemow, and from there wherever the spirit may direct. I noticed in the Herald that brother Wright ordained one High Priest by the name of Silsbury at French Creek. This is a small mistake. His name is Silsbey. Yours in the truth and faith, &c., A. B. CALKINS.

find in sec. 50, par. 2: "Behold this is wisdom in me; wherefore marvel not, for the hour cometh that I will drink of the fruit of the vine with you on the earth, and with Moroni; whom I have sent unto you to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fulness of mine everlasting gospel."

This is positive. But, brother J. E. P., what is the meaning of the little word of? "The fullness of mine everlasting gospel." The word "of" H. Tooke "supposes to be a fragment of the Gothic and Saxon noun afora, consequence, offspring, follower. 'Solomon, the son of (offspring) David.' Of or off, in its modern acceptation, signifies disjoined, sundered: A piece of (off) the loaf, is, a piece disjoined, or separated from the loaf. The fragrance of or off the rose." Kirkham's grammar, page 91.

Here then the whole mystery is solved, the Book of Mormon is the fullness of (separated, disjoined) the gospel. Why is it the fullness of the gospel? First, because it is the word of truth. Eph. i. 13. Second, that truth is perfect and eternal, and nothing can be added to it to make it imperfect, or make the truth a lie. Third, it is the record of the gospel, and not the whole and all the gospel. D. & C. sec. 2, p. 2. It is not the whole gospel, but is "of the gospel;" for it is merely the word and the gospel. "It came not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." 1 Thes. i. 5. The fullness of a thing is not all and the whole. A fullness of (disjoined, sundered) is not as much as a "whole and all."

A fullness of (offspring) the gospel is not all the whole gospel. The gospel which we have is truth; if truth, it is perfect; if perfect, it is perfectly full of truth. Nothing can be added to perfection to make it any more perfect. But we can have more perfect truths added to our stock of truths or knowledge, and there will be a perfect fullness in those new truths added. So it is as regards revelation. The truths in the Bible were full before the Book of Mormon was revealed: by revealing the Book of Mormon made those truths no more true. Now, J. E. Page, you say, "brethren, let us return to the standard." Do that and you will be in a fair way to be saved. God's words, all of them, not merely a part, but "all the whole," shall hiss forth to the ends of the earth for a stanard to the house of Israel. But what is the standard of the words of God, or his truth? Paul says, the church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth. That is, the standard to try truth by. It is the church of God, out of which you have gone, and you know it. And so do even the Gentiles. They laugh at your arguments now when they compare them with former writings of yours. Now I write this not in malice, but in love. H. P. BROWN.

French Creek, N. Y., March 1st, 1850.

DEAR BRO. COOPER:—It is with much pleasure that I write to you at this time. As to my health, it is good; and, if I mistake not, good health and strong faith is the complaint that generally prevails among the saints who are preparing to go to Beaver Island in the spring. May God help them. Yesterday I was at sister Griffis', and am now at brother Wheelock's. They are all well, and enjoying good faith, which is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. I have baptized some two or three since my last letter to you. And with the help of God (whether providence is willing or not) I mean to baptize some two or three more the last of this week or the first of next.

I am on my way to Clayton now, where I shall preach next Sunday. And with the help of God I intend to wake them up from their dead, profound sleep, which they have been preached into by the precepts of man. From there I shall go back to the old fishing ground, (Cape Vincent,) and from there to Shemow, and from there wherever the spirit may direct. I noticed in the Herald that brother Wright ordained one High Priest by the name of Silsbury at French Creek. This is a small mistake. His name is Silsbey. Yours in the truth and faith, &c.. A. B. CALKINS.

For the Gospel Herald.

In answer to the article written by, or signed "A Friend of Wesley," purporting to be a kind of a rebut to an article written by myself, I must say it is rather a strange thing for one who styles himself a "Protestant," especially a "Methodist," to meddle with the main subject in view. I have heard the question put to men of all ranks, (when boasting of the great light of the gospel which sprang up under Martin Luther, as though he was particularly called to establish the true church,) how it was that Luther could establish and build up the true church of Christ by virtue of authority received from a false or apostate church, for he claimed no other. But as often as the question has been asked so often it has remained unanswered. The grand reason is, because that to answer it would cut the Protestant world off from all hope: and so it is with the writer of the article to which I refer. If he had taken pains to answer the first question which he quotes from my article, viz., "can a stream rise higher than its fountain?" he probably never would have written anything further.

1. As far as the expression O fudge! is concerned, I am glad that the gentleman has so good an understanding of the meaning. I would say, further, that I always intend to use words best calculated to convey the sense of the subject, and when there is no real sense in a thing I should be very likely to say O fudge! in speaking concerning it. It is a common thing with some school teachers, when their pupils are unruly or disobedient to the laws of the school, to send them out after rods to whip with. And when two or more are engaged in the same transgression, they are frequently made to whip one another. This is the course which I took in my former article, only I made Wesley flog himself, or the Methodists, which is the same in substance, as far as a legal priesthood or ordination is concerned.

2. You say that I "take exceptions to the validity of Mr. Wesley's claims to a legal ordination to the ministry of the gospel, upon the ground that the spiritual gifts were not known to exist in the church for centuries previous to his, Mr. W.'s, ordination, by the ministration of one of its branches." In answer to this I would say there are two points in the quotation which I made from "Wesley's Sermons," from which I drew my conclusions, viz., 1st, because the christian world turned heathens again. 2d. "They lost the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, and had only a dead form left." Then, in answer to the first, I would ask if the christians turned heathens at this time, or soon after, which Wesley affirms was the case, would not their ordinations be heathen ordinations? If so, what kind of qualifications would a heathen have after being ordained by a heathen for a minister of the gospel? In answering the second I shall answer the quotation which I have made from your second paragraph. I would say, then, that no man can be legally called and ordained to the priesthood where the spiritual gifts do not exist; and for the proof I will refer you to the New Testament. In reference to the ordination of Paul and Barnabas, "the Holy Ghost said, separate them for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away," &c. Acts xiii. 2, 3. Paul, in writing to Timothy, in reminding him of his calling and ordination, says to him, "neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of hands of the presbytery." 1 Tim. iv. 14. In all three of these instances the gift of prophecy or revelation is made manifest as an essential part of the calling and ordination to the ministry; and the principle was so strong in the mind of St. Paul that he said, in writing to the Hebrews, "no man taketh this honor (that is, to be a priest or minister of the gospel) but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." Heb. v. 4. The only certain conclusion, then, is, that if the spiritual gifts were not in the church in Wesley's day, Wesley was never called to minister unto the people in the name of the Lord, and therefore had no right to do so.

3. Your 3d paragraph is answered in my

For the Gospel Herald.

In answer to the article written by, or signed "A Friend of Wesley," purporting to be a kind of a rebut to an article written by myself, I must say it is rather a strange thing for one who styles himself a "Protestant," especially a "Methodist," to meddle with the main subject in view. I have heard the question put to men of all ranks, (when boasting of the great light of the gospel which sprang up under Martin Luther, as though he was particularly called to establish the true church,) how it was that Luther could establish and build up the true church of Christ by virtue of authority received from a false or apostate church, for he claimed no other. But as often as the question has been asked so often it has remained unanswered. The grand reason is, because that to answer it would cut the Protestant world off from all hope: and so it is with the writer of the article to which I refer. If he had taken pains to answer the first question which he quotes from my article, viz., "can a stream rise higher than its fountain?" he probably never would have written anything further.

1. As far as the expression O fudge! is concerned, I am glad that the gentleman has so good an understanding of the meaning. I would say, further, that I always intend to use words best calculated to convey the sense of the subject, and when there is no real sense in a thing I should be very likely to say O fudge! in speaking concerning it. It is a common thing with some school teachers, when their pupils are unruly or disobedient to the laws of the school, to send them out after rods to whip with. And when two or more are engaged in the same transgression, they are frequently made to whip one another. This is the course which I took in my former article, only I made Wesley flog himself, or the Methodists, which is the same in substance, as far as a legal priesthood or ordination is concerned.

2. You say that I "take exceptions to the validity of Mr. Wesley's claims to a legal ordination to the ministry of the gospel, upon the ground that the spiritual gifts were not known to exist in the church for centuries previous to his, Mr. W.'s, ordination, by the ministration of one of its branches." In answer to this I would say there are two points in the quotation which I made from "Wesley's Sermons," from which I drew my conclusions, viz., 1st, because the christian world turned heathens again. 2d. "They lost the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, and had only a dead form left." Then, in answer to the first, I would ask if the christians turned heathens at this time, or soon after, which Wesley affirms was the case, would not their ordinations be heathen ordinations? If so, what kind of qualifications would a heathen have after being ordained by a heathen for a minister of the gospel? In answering the second I shall answer the quotation which I have made from your second paragraph. I would say, then, that no man can be legally called and ordained to the priesthood where the spiritual gifts do not exist; and for the proof I will refer you to the New Testament. In reference to the ordination of Paul and Barnabas, "the Holy Ghost said, separate them for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away," &c. Acts xiii. 2, 3. Paul, in writing to Timothy, in reminding him of his calling and ordination, says to him, "neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of hands of the presbytery." 1 Tim. iv. 14. In all three of these instances the gift of prophecy or revelation is made manifest as an essential part of the calling and ordination to the ministry; and the principle was so strong in the mind of St. Paul that he said, in writing to the Hebrews, "no man taketh this honor (that is, to be a priest or minister of the gospel) but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." Heb. v. 4. The only certain conclusion, then, is, that if the spiritual gifts were not in the church in Wesley's day, Wesley was never called to minister unto the people in the name of the Lord, and therefore had no right to do so.

3. Your 3d paragraph is answered in my second, with regard to the "legal form of ordination," showing that the legal form is a call by revelation, as well as the laying on of hands.

4. "Now, then, does he mean to teach his readers to follow his example in crying out, O fudge! to all claims to the ministry, and to the most efficient and powerful arguments in favor of the truth and against error that any honest hearted and talented man may introduce, simply for the reason that generations before him have held no just claims to authority? and at the same time draw his supposition from this man's assertion that the spiritual gifts had been so long absent from the church?" I only wish to teach my readers to say O fudge! to all false claims, and the sophistry used in favor of error. If there is any honest hearted and talented man who has introduced any written claims to authority among the dissenters from the old Roman church, I would be glad to see the production. As far as the assertion of "this man" is concerned, I would say it is not only the assertion of "this man," but of the whole Protestant world, "that the spiritual gifts have been so long absent from the church."

5. In your 5th paragraph your language is so ambiguous that no man can tell what you mean. As far as the first sentence is concerned, with regard to the spiritual gifts, in "establishing any man's claims to similar authority," I have already shown that no man can take the priesthood without a call by revelation, as well as the laying on of hands, if this is what you mean. The next sentence requires me to prove that the "spiritual gifts are to be manifest through the church to test its authority." I would like to know who you wish to have them manifest to. I judge from the expression that you made that it was to unbelievers or heathens. If so, you wish me to do something that the gospel does not require. If so, Christ would have said to his Apostles, "go ye into all the world," and show signs to test your authority, instead of saying, as he did, "go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel: he that believeth," &c., "these signs shall follow." But providing the unbeliever should see signs, would he know they were done by the power of God? Or would he not say, like the Jews, that this man casteth out Devils by the prince of Devils. Paul said, that "no man knoweth the things of God, but by the spirit of God." So say we. For this reason I do not consider heathens capable of testing authority by signs, to know whether it comes from God or not.

6. In answer to your 6th paragraph I would say, it is but a repetition of what you have written once or twice before, consequently answered.

7. In answer to paragraph 7, when did the Roman Catholic church lose the legal form? I will let your eighth paragraph answer this, in your quotation from Mr. Wesley, that it was when "they turned back to heathenism;" for, although they might have continued to lay on hands after this time, yet the ordination would be illegal.

8. Your 8th paragraph is but a refutation of itself.

9. You say, in paragraph 9, "but if this Mr. B. agrees with one of the Mormon champions, that it was in consequence of the church fleeing for protection under the civil arm or state authority, then we, as dissenters from the Romish See, would inquire how it happened when the prophet Joseph Smith sought the Presidential chair that he did not lose his authority to ordain Elders." I do not believe that any "Mormon champion" made such an assertion without qualifying it so as to give a different inference from what you have. Yet the cases are not similar; for when the church fled under Constantine for protection he became the head of the church, as did also his successors, "and assumed to himself the supreme power over this sacred body, and the right of modeling and governing the same." By this means, before the close of the fourth century, "gorgeous robes, mitres, tiaras, wax tapers, crosiers, processions, lustrations, images, gold and silver vases, and many such circumstances of pageantry were equally to be seen in the heathen tem-second, with regard to the "legal form of ordination," showing that the legal form is a call by revelation, as well as the laying on of hands.

1. "Now, then, does he mean to teach his readers to follow his example in crying out, O fudge! to all claims to the ministry, and to the most efficient and powerful arguments in favor of the truth and against error that any honest hearted and talented man may introduce, simply for the reason that generations before him have held no just claims to authority? and at the same time draw his supposition from this man's assertion that the spiritual gifts had been so long absent from the church?" I only wish to teach my readers to say O fudge! to all false claims, and the sophistry used in favor of error. If there is any honest hearted and talented man who has introduced any written claims to authority among the dissenters from the old Roman church, I would be glad to see the production. As far as the assertion of "this man" is concerned, I would say it is not only the assertion of "this man," but of the whole Protestant world, "that the spiritual gifts have been so long absent from the church."

5. In your 5th paragraph your language is so ambiguous that no man can tell what you mean. As far as the first sentence is concerned, with regard to the spiritual gifts, in "establishing any man's claims to similar authority," I have already shown that no man can take the priesthood without a call by revelation, as well as the laying on of hands, if this is what you mean. The next sentence requires me to prove that the "spiritual gifts are to be manifest through the church to test its authority." I would like to know who you wish to have them manifest to. I judge from the expression that you made that it was to unbelievers or heathens. If so, you wish me to do something that the gospel does not require. If so, Christ would have said to his Apostles, "go ye into all the world," and show signs to test your authority, instead of saying, as he did, "go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel: he that believeth," &c., "these signs shall follow." But providing the unbeliever should see signs, would he know they were done by the power of God? Or would he not say, like the Jews, that this man casteth out Devils by the prince of Devils. Paul said, that "no man knoweth the things of God, but by the spirit of God." So say we. For this reason I do not consider heathens capable of testing authority by signs, to know whether it comes from God or not.

6. In answer to your 6th paragraph I would say, it is but a repetition of what you have written once or twice before, consequently answered.

7. In answer to paragraph 7, when did the Roman Catholic church lose the legal form? I will let your eighth paragraph answer this, in your quotation from Mr. Wesley, that it was when "they turned back to heathenism;" for, although they might have continued to lay on hands after this time, yet the ordination would be illegal.

8. Your 8th paragraph is but a refutation of itself.

9. You say, in paragraph 9, "but if this Mr. B. agrees with one of the Mormon champions, that it was in consequence of the church fleeing for protection under the civil arm or state authority, then we, as dissenters from the Romish See, would inquire how it happened when the prophet Joseph Smith sought the Presidential chair that he did not lose his authority to ordain Elders." I do not believe that any "Mormon champion" made such an assertion without qualifying it so as to give a different inference from what you have. Yet the cases are not similar; for when the church fled under Constantine for protection he became the head of the church, as did also his successors, "and assumed to himself the supreme power over this sacred body, and the right of modeling and governing the same." By this means, before the close of the fourth century, "gorgeous robes, mitres, tiaras, wax tapers, croziers, processions, lustrations, images, gold and silver vases, and many such circumstances of pageantry were equally to be seen in the heathen temples and christian churches." Therefore, as Constantine defended the church, he became a stepping-stone of the church from christianity to heathenism; or, in other words, he, with his successors, assisted the "woman" (or church) to mount the "scarlet colored beast." But Joseph Smith, as a citizen, had the same right to seek the "Presidential chair" as any man. As far as "Joe's Apostles" are concerned, when they rejected the word of God, and went into the wilderness, they had about the same success in converting the Indians that the Methodists have had, and both will have to give it up as a hard job. Yet they had as good a right to petition the United States to protect them as any other citizens.

10. In your paragraphs 10 and 11 I discover no argument or assertion to reply to, except what has been done already.

11. In answer to paragraph 12, you have continually harped upon the claims of Mr. Wesley's authority from beginning to the ending of your article. You stated in par. 10 and 11 the claims of Wesley. But what of them? The beggar in the street may give you a quit-claim deed of a large tract of land, yet your claim would be good for nothing. So with Wesley. The first bishops and other ministers in the English church received all their ordinations from the Romish church, which they considered not a true church. Accordingly Wesley, in his time, takes the same course with the English church that the English had taken with the Roman. Now if the English church had authority to ordain, and was the true church, when John Wesley left that church he left his authority also. So with the English when they left the Roman they left all their authority which they ever had there.—And when the church of Rome, with all the other christian churches in that age, turned away from christianity and turned unto the old heathen forms and Jewish ceremonies in worship, then they lost their authority; which, according to Protestant historians, took place chiefly during the fourth, fifth and sixth centuries. But what was the office Mr. Wesley held in the English church? Simply the office of Deacon. But how came the Methodists to have Bishops in their church? Upon the same principle that the first settlers of New England on a certain occasion made a minister. That is, the farmers got together, chose one out of their number, laid their hands on him, and ordained him a minister of the gospel. Dr. Thomas Coke was sent from England to America, where he arrived in 1784, on the 25th of Dec., laid his hands on Mr. Asbury, and ordained him a Bishop. But who ordained Mr. Coke a Bishop? Mr. Wesley, if any one.—But who ordained him one? Nobody. Hence the origin of the Episcopal form of government among the Methodists. Now will the "Friend of Wesley" tell me "if a stream can rise higher than its fountain." If not, let him say with me to such claims, O fudge!

S. P. BACON.

St. Lawrence, N. Y., March 15th, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—I am now in York State, in company with brother Linnel, assisting brother Silsbey in organizing the brethren and helping them in getting ready for Beaver. We expect seventy or one hundred will leave here in May for that place. I left brother Wright on Monday last. His health has been poor. We have labored very hard. There has been several additions to the branch in Leeds since I wrote you last. We have done oceans of preaching on the front of Kingston, but as yet it amounts to nothing.

Z. H. GURLEY.

DEVELOPMENT OF MIND.

The premature exertion of intellect to which it is stimulated by the constant excitement of emulation and vanity, far from strengthening, tends to impair the health and tone of the brain, and of all the organs depending on it; and hence we rarely perceive the genius of the school manifesting in future years any of the superiority which attracted attention in early life; but we find him on the contrary, either sunk below mediocrity, or dragging out a pain-

ples and christian churches." Therefore, as Constantine defended the church, he became a stepping-stone of the church from christianity to heathenism; or, in other words, he, with his successors, assisted the "woman" (or church) to mount the "scarlet colored beast." But Joseph Smith, as a citizen, had the same right to seek the "Presidential chair" as any man. As far as "Joe's Apostles" are concerned, when they rejected the word of God, and went into the wilderness, they had about the same success in converting the Indians that the Methodists have had, and both will have to give it up as a hard job. Yet they had as good a right to petition the United States to protect them as any other citizens.

10. In your paragraphs 10 and 11 I discover no argument or assertion to reply to, except what has been done already.

11. In answer to paragraph 12, you have continually harped upon the claims of Mr. Wesley's authority from beginning to the ending of your article. You stated in par. 10 and 11 the claims of Wesley. But what of them? The beggar in the street may give you a quit-claim deed of a large tract of land, yet your claim would be good for nothing. So with Wesley. The first bishops and other ministers in the English church received all their ordinations from the Romish church, which they considered not a true church. Accordingly Wesley, in his time, takes the same course with the English church that the English had taken with the Roman. Now if the English church had authority to ordain, and was the true church, when John Wesley left that church he left his authority also. So with the English when they left the Roman they left all their authority which they ever had there.—And when the church of Rome, with all the other christian churches in that age, turned away from christianity and turned unto the old heathen forms and Jewish ceremonies in worship, then they lost their authority; which, according to Protestant historians, took place chiefly during the fourth, fifth and sixth centuries. But what was the office Mr. Wesley held in the English church? Simply the of of Deacon. But how came the Methodists have Bishops in their church? Upon the sa principle that the first settlers of New Engla on a certain occasion made a minister. T is, the farmers got together, chose one out their number, laid their hands on him, and dained him a minister of the gospel. Thomas Coke was sent from England to Am ica, where he arrived in 1784, on the 25th Dec., laid his hands on Mr. Asbury, and dained him a Bishop. But who ordained Coke a Bishop? Mr. Wesley, if any one. But who ordained him one? Nobody. He the origin of the Episcopal form of governm among the Methodists. Now will the "Fri of Wesley" tell me "if a stream can rise hig er than its fountain." If not, let him say wi me to such claims, O fudge!

S. P. BACON.

St. Lawrence, N. Y., March 15th, 1850.

Bro. Cooper:—I am now in York State, company with brother Linnel, assisting broth Silsbey in organizing the brethren and hel ing them in getting ready for Beaver. We e pect seventy or one hundred will leave here May for that place. I left brother Wright Monday last. His health has been poor. W have labored very hard. There has been se eral additions to the branch in Leeds since wrote you last. We have done oceans preaching on the front of Kingston, but as y it amounts to nothing.

Z. H. GURLEY.

DEVELOPMENT OF MIND.

The premature exertion of intellect to whi it is stimulated by the constant excitement emulation and vanity, far from strengthenin tends to impair the health and tone of th brain, and of all the organs depending on i and hence we rarely perceive the genius of th school manifesting in future years any of th superiority which attracted attention in ear life; but we find him on the contrary, eithe sunk below mediocrity, or dragging out a pai ful existence, the victim of indigestion and melancholy. On the other hand, some of the most distinguished men who ever lived were in childhood remarkable only for health, idleness, and apparent stupidity.

The illustrious Newton, was, by his own account, an idle and inattentive boy, and "very low in the school," till he reached twelve years of age; and the young Napoleon himself is described as "having good health, and, being in other respects like other boys." Adam Clarke was considered "a grievous dunce" when a boy, and was seldom praised by his father except for his ability in rolling large stones, which his robust frame and good health enabled him to do. Shakspear, Gibbon, Byron, Scott, and Davy, were in like manner undistinguished for precocious genius, and were fortunately allowed to indulge freely in those wholesome bodily exercises, and that freedom of mind, which contributed so much to their future excellence. The mother of Sheriden, too, long regarded him as "the dullest and most hopeless of her sons."

Among the many who give great promise in early life, and whose talents are then forced by ill-judged cultivation into precocious maturity, how few live to manhood to reap the reward of their exertions, and how few of those who survive preserve their superiority unimpaired! Tasso was early distinguished, and wrote his immortal epic at twenty-two years of age; but his life was miserable, and his reason disordered. Pascal is another example of the same result, and Kirk White and many others might be named were it necessary.—Pysiology of Digestion, by Dr. Combe.

A SHOWER OF FLESH AND BLOOD.

The Fayetteville North Carolinaian, of the 9th inst., contains the following marvelous account of an extraordinary phenomenon. We received on Wednesday last the following communication from Mr. Clarkson, through Mr. Holland, of Clinton, and take great pleasure in laying the astonishing particulars before our readers:—

"On the 15th of February, 1850, there fell within one hundred yards of the residence of Thomas M. Clarkson in Sampson Co., a shower of flesh and blood, about thirty feet wide, and as far as it was traced, about 250 or 300 yards in length. The pieces appeared to be flesh, liver, lights, brains and blood. Some of the blood ran on the leaves, apparently very fresh. Three of his (T. M. C.'s) children were in it, and ran to their mother exclaiming, 'mother there is meat falling!' Their mother went immediately to see, but the shower was over; but there lay the flesh, &c. Neill Campbell, Esq., living close by, was on the spot shortly after it fell, and pronounced it as above. One of his children was about one hundred and fifty yards from the shower, and came running to the rest, saying he smelt something like blood. During the time it was falling there was a cloud over head, having a red appearance like a wind cloud. There was no rain.

"The above you may rely on, and by Mr. Holland, you have pieces of the flesh, which are reduced by being kept so long.

Yours, &c, T. M. C."

The piece which was left with us, has been examined with two of the best microscopes in the place, and the existence of blood well established: but nothing was shown giving any indication of the character of the matter. It has the smell both in its dry state, and when macerated in water, of putrid flesh; and there can scarcely be a doubt that it is such.—Scott's Weekly Paper.

POOR IRELAND.

It is expected that in the next spring, the tide of emigration will exceed that of preceding years. Thus the capital and enterprise which Ireland had possessed, is leaving her shores—a wretched population remains behind, the dregs of a rural population, of whom the Devon Commission reported that 43 out of every 100 families lived in houses unfit for human habitation. Some idea of the decay going forward may be gathered from the fact that, in Ireland, in 1843, there was 117,448 electors, and now, in 1849 there are only 72,216. The country generally is tranquil, yet it must be remembered that this quietness is mantained by 50,000 soldiers, constabulary and police, spread like net work over the land. It is probable too, that the manhood, the heart to struggle, is quelled in a population living below civilization, without the independence of a savage, content, if day by day they can ward off the agonies of famine.—Ex. Paper.

DISCONTENT.

Discontent is a sin that is its own punishment, and makes men torment themselves; it makes the spirit sad—the body sick—and, all enjoyments sour; it arises not from the condition but the mind. Paul was contented in a prison—Ahab was discontented in a palace; he had all the delights of Canaan, that pleasant land, the wealth of a kingdom, the pleasures of a court, the honors and powers of a throne; yet all this avails him nothing without Naboth's vineyard. Inordinate desires expose men to continual vexations; and being diposed to fret, they will always find something to fret about.

WOMEN'S OPINIONS.

Women are slower to change their opinions than men, exactly because they are adopted on less consideration. Man's opinions are founded on reason, and if you convince his reason, the opinion goes with it; but women's are founded on feeling, and therefore part of themselves, and not easy to change. Men derive theirs from without, women from within. With our sex they are but adopted children; with the other, their own.—Ex. Paper.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Richard Fulton,	$2,00 to	Vol. IV. No. 39
M. Smith, (5 copies,)	10,00 to	Vol. VI. No. 3
E. Silsbey,	2,00 to	Vol. V. No. 52
Samuel Williams,	1,00 to	Vol. V. No. 26

existence, the victim of indigestion and elancholy. On the other hand, some of the ost distinguished men who ever lived were childhood remarkable only for health, idleess, and apparent stupidity.

The illustrious Newton, was, by his own acunt, an idle and inattentive boy, and "very w in the school," till he reached twelve years age; and the young Napoleon himself is deribed as "having good health, and being in her respects like other boys." Adam Clarke s considered "a grievous dunce" when a y, and was seldom praised by his father expt for his ability in rolling large stones, which s robust frame and good health enabled him do. Shakspear, Gibbon, Byron, Scott, and wy, were in like manner undistinguished for recocious genius, and were fortunately allowd to indulge freely in those wholesome bodily xercises, and that freedom of mind, which conibuted so much to their future excellence. he mother of Sheriden, too, long regarded n as "the dullest and most hopeless of her ns."

Among the many who give great promise early life, and whose talents are then forced ill-judged cultivation into precocious matuy, how few live to manhood to reap the reard of their exertions, and how few of those o survive preserve their superiority unimired! Tasso was early distinguished, and ote his immortal epic at twenty-two years age; but his life was miserable, and his rea disordered. Pascal is another example of e same result, and Kirk White and many bers might be named were it necessary.—ysiology of Digestion, by Dr. Combe.

A SHOWER OF FLESH AND BLOOD.

he Fayetteville North Carolinaian, of the 9th inst., contains the wing marvelous account of an extraordinary phenomenon. We ived on Wednesday last the following communication from Mr. kson, through Mr. Holland, of Clinton, and take great pleasure ying the astonishing particulars before our readers:—

On the 15th of February, 1850, there fell within one hundred s of the residence of Thomas M. Clarkson in Sampson Co., a ver of flesh and blood, about thirty feet wide, and as far as it was d, about 250 or 300 yards in length. The pieces appeared to esh, liver, lights, brains and blood. Some of the blood ran on leaves, apparently very fresh. Three of his (T. M. C.'s) children were in it, and ran to their mother exclaiming, 'mother there is meat falling!' Their mother went immediately to see, but the shower was over; but there lay the flesh, &c. Neill Campbell, Esq., living close by, was on the spot shortly after it fell, and pronounced it as above. One of his children was about one hundred and fifty yards from the shower, and came running to the rest, saying he smelt something like blood. During the time it was falling there was a cloud over head, having a red appearance like a wind cloud. There was no rain.

"The above you may rely on, and by Mr. Holland, you have pieces of the flesh, which are reduced by being kept so long.

Yours, &c, T. M. C."

The piece which was left with us, has been examined with two of the best microscopes in the place, and the existence of blood well established: but nothing was shown giving any indication of the character of the matter. It has the smell both in its dry state, and when macerated in water, of putrid flesh; and there can scarcely be a doubt that it is such.—Scott's Weekly Paper.

POOR IRELAND.

It is expected that in the next spring, the tide of emigration will exceed that of preceding years. Thus the capital and enterprise which Ireland had possessed, is leaving her shores—a wretched population remains behind, the dregs of a rural population, of whom the Devon Commission reported that 43 out of every 100 families lived in houses unfit for human habitation. Some idea of the decay going forward may be gathered from the fact that, in Ireland, in 1843, there was 117,448 electors, and now, in 1849 there are only 72,216. The country generally is tranquil, yet it must be remembered that this quietness is mantained by 50,000 soldiers, constabulary and police, spread like net work over the land. It is probable too, that the manhood, the heart to struggle, is quelled in a population living below civilization, without the independence of a savage, content, if day by day they can ward off the agonies of famine.—Ex. Paper.

DISCONTENT.

Discontent is a sin that is its own punishment, and makes men torment themselves; it makes the spirit sad—the body sick—and all enjoyments sour; it arises not from the condition but the mind. Paul was contented in a prison—Ahab was discontented in a palace; he had all the delights of Canaan, that pleasant land, the wealth of a kingdom, the pleasures of a court, the honors and powers of a throne; yet all this avails him nothing without Naboth's vineyard. Inordinate desires expose men to continual vexations; and being diposed to fret, they will always find something to fret about.

WOMEN'S OPINIONS.

Women are slower to change their opinions than men, exactly because they are adopted on less consideration. Man's opinions are founded on reason, and if you convince his reason, the opinion goes with it; but women's are founded on feeling, and therefore part of themselves, and not easy to change. Men derive theirs from without, women from within. With our sex they are but adopted children; with the other, their own.—Ex. Paper.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Richard Fulton,	$2,00 to	Vol. IV. No. 39
M. Smith, (5 copies,)	10,00 to	Vol. VI. No. 3
E. Silsbey,	2,00 to	Vol V. No. 52
Samuel Williams,	1,00 to	Vol. V. No. 26

THE INFLUENCE OF THE MIND ON THE BODY.

The mind and the body exert a reciprocal sway over each other; and, as the smallest deviation from the standard of high health immediately affects the spirits or the intellect, so does the excess or excitement of one emotion or passion affect the health of the body. What frame is there so hardy as to escape the agitations and afflictions of the mind? And what mind so firm as to remain unharmed amid the infirmities and sufferings of the body?

The influence of the mind as a remote cause of disease is too frequently overlooked in the diligent search for more tangible causes; those of the medical profession ever concentrating their attention upon the physical, are too prone to neglect the mental cause of disease. A knowledge of the secret troubles and anxieties of our patients would, in many instances, shed a new light on their treatment; it might suggest a more speedy and effectual remedy; it might tell us decidedly that it is a moral balm which can alone reach their inward sorrow, and thus we might spare that over-drugging which cannot "minister to a mind diseased." How often does it happen that some unhappy, unrevealed passion or anxiety is preying on the very springs of life, producing fearful and uncontrollable symptoms, which are all unjustly imputed to bad diet, impure air, want of exercise, &c. When the medical attendant possesses the confidence of his patients, his duty is not confidence to the mere prescribing of drugs; he should become the friend, as well as the physician.

The medium by which the injurious influence of a perturbed mind is exerted is the nervous system, which, becoming depressed and deranged, directly affects the whole function of life, but especially that of the stomach and of digestion. We therefore find that those passions or emotions which are in their action depressing—as grief, anxiety, anger, jealousy, the troubles and cares of business, continued mental labor, heartache—occasioned by absence from home or country, or by unrequited love, envy, disappointment, &c., are frequent causes of indigestion. At some period in our lives we have all experienced mental agony, either at the loss of a beloved relative, pecuniary reverses, the shipwreck of the heart's dearest hopes, or other "sad sorrow," and the memory of the hour is too lasting to require present description. Every sudden grief meets with immediate sympathy in the stomach and interferes with digestion; on the instant an exhausting pain, or "sinking," is felt at the pit of the stomach; the mouth becomes parched; a feeling like choking comes on; the idea of food excites loathing; and the attempt to swallow anything solid is unbearable. Suppose an individual in rude, robust health, receives, whilst at dinner, intelligence of some calamity which bankrupts his happiness; with what disgust does he see the savory dishes which a moment before delighted his palate! the function of the stomach is arrested, almost revulsed, and he quits a scene which adds so much to his misery. Shakspear rightly appreciated this property of grief, when he made King Henry say to Cardinal Wolsey—

"————Read o'er this;
And after, this; and then to breakfast, with
What appetite you have."

When nervous excitement, sorrow, or despondency is of long duration, the indigestion is not only confirmed, but may lead to organic disease of the stomach. The death of Napoleon was, without doubt, caused by continued indigestion, induced and increased by the mental torture he suffered in his confinement at St. Helena, which ended in ulceration, or as some say, cancer of the stomach.

Persons of a gloomy disposition or an irritable temper seldom have a perfect digestion; for "a sour temper makes a sour stomach;" and although low spirits, hypochondriasis, or nervousness is as frequently an effect as a cause, yet we must all admit that the more cheerful and light-hearted of our acquaintance are generally the most vigorous and healthy. The influence of depressing emotion on the liver is so well marked that the word "melancholy" is derived from two Greek words signifiying black bile: and our great bard says we may—

"————creep into the jaundice
By being peevish"

During the last few years cases of indigestion, produced by the anxieties of business, the fluctuations of profit and loss, have been most rife. I have daily under my care patients troubled in body, because troubled in estate; and, however successfully medicine may palliate their symptoms, their amelioration, or total disappearance, is commensurate with resignation of mind or brighter prospects.—Men of studious habits, who devote their whole time to severe mental labor, depriving themselves of exercise and natural repose, are generally dyspeptics; the nervous energy is exhausted by the mental application, the stomach becomes torpid, and if the appetite continue, the food lies "heavy" and undigested. The student's midnight lamp is frequently trimmed with gastric juice.—The Family Physician.

WONDERS OF PHILOSOPHY.—The polypus like the fable hydra, receives new life from the knife which was raised to destroy it. There are 5041 muscles in a caterpillar. Hook discovered 4000 mirrors in the eye of a drone; and to effect the restoration of a carp, 13,300 arteries, veins, vessels, bones, etc., are necessary. The body of every spider contains four little masses, pierced with a number of imperceptible holes, each hole permitting the passage of a single thread; all the threads to the amount of 1000 to each mass, join together when they come out and make the single thread, with which the spider spins his web; so that what we call a spider's thread, consists of more than 4000 united. Leuwenhock, by means of microscopes, observed spiders, no bigger than a grain of sand, which spun threads so fine that it took over 4000 of them to equal in magnitude a single hair.—Ex. paper.

CLEALINESS.—Cleanliness is a mark of politensss, for one unadorned with this virtue can go into no company without giving a manifest offence. It may be said to be the foster-mother of affection. Beauty commonly produces love—cleanliness preserves it. Age itself is not unamiable while it is preserved clean and unsullied. Cleanliness is intimately connected with purity of mind, and naturally inspires refined sentiments and passions.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE MIND ON THE BODY.

The mind and the body exert a reciprocal sway over each other; and, as the smallest deviation from the standard of high health immediately affects the spirits or the intellect, so does the excess or excitement of one emotion or passion affect the health of the body. What frame is there so hardy as to escape the agitations and afflictions of the mind? And what mind so firm as to remain unharmed amid the infirmities and sufferings of the body?

The influence of the mind as a remote cause of disease is too frequently overlooked in the diligent search for more tangible causes; those of the medical profession ever concentrating their attention upon the physical, are too prone to neglect the mental cause of disease. A knowledge of the secret troubles and anxieties of our patients would, in many instances, shed a new light on their treatment; it might suggest a more speedy and effectual remedy; it might tell us decidedly that it is a moral balm which can alone reach their inward sorrow, and thus we might spare that over-drugging which cannot "minister to a mind diseased." How often does it happen that some unhappy, unrevealed passion or anxiety is preying on the very springs of life, producing fearful and uncontrollable symptoms, which are all unjustly imputed to bad diet, impure air, want of exercise, &c. When the medical attendant possesses the confidence of his patients, his duty is not confidence to the mere prescribing of drugs; he should become the friend, as well as the physician.

The medium by which the injurious influence of a perturbed mind is exerted is the nervous system, which, becoming depressed and deranged, directly affects the whole function of life, but especially that of the stomach and of digestion. We therefore find that those passions or emotions which are in their action depressing—as grief, anxiety, anger, jealousy, the troubles and cares of business, continued mental labor, heartache—occasioned by absence from home or country, or by unrequited love, envy, disappointment, &c., are frequent causes of indigestion. At some period in our lives we have all experienced mental agony, either at the loss of a beloved relative, pecuniary reverses, the shipwreck of the heart's dearest hopes, or other "sad sorrow," and the memory of the hour is too lasting to require present description. Every sudden grief meets with immediate sympathy in the stomach and interferes with digestion; on the instant an exhausting pain, or "sinking," is felt at the pit of the stomach; the mouth becomes parched; a feeling like choking comes on; the idea of food excites loathing; and the attempt to swallow anything solid is unbearable. Suppose an individual in rude, robust health, receives, whilst at dinner, intelligence of some calamity which bankrupts his happiness; with what disgust does he see the savory dishes which a moment before delighted his palate! the function of the stomach is arrested, almost revulsed, and he quits a scene which adds so much to his misery. Shakspear rightly appreciated this property of grief, when he made King Henry say to Cardinal Wolsey—

"————Read o'er this;
And after, this; and then to breakfast, with
What appetite you have."

When nervous excitement, sorrow, or despondency is of long duration, the indigestion is not only confirmed, but may lead to organic disease of the stomach. The death of Napoleon was, without doubt, caused by continued indigestion, induced and increased by the mental torture he suffered in his confinement at St. Helena, which ended in ulceration, or as some say, cancer of the stomach.

Persons of a gloomy disposition or an irritable temper seldom have a perfect digestion; for "a sour temper makes a sour stomach;" and although low spirits, hypochondriasis, or nervousness is as frequently an effect as a cause, yet we must all admit that the more cheerful and light-hearted of our acquaintance are generally the most vigorous and healthy. The influence of depressing emo[tions] on the liver is so well marked that the word "melancholy" is de[rived] from two Greek words signifiying black bile: and our great b[ard] says we may—

"————creep into the jaundice
By being peevish"

During the last few years cases of indigestion, produced by [the] anxieties of business, the fluctuations of profit and loss, have be[come] most rife. I have daily under my care patients troubled in b[ody] because troubled in estate; and, however successfully medicine [may] palliate their symptoms, their amelioration, or total disappearan[ce] is commensurate with resignation of mind or brighter prospects. Men of studious habits, who devote their whole time to severe m[en]tal labor, depriving themselves of exercise and natural repose, [are] generally dyspeptics; the nervous energy is exhausted by the m[en]tal application, the stomach becomes torpid, and if the appetite c[on]tinue, the food lies "heavy" and undigested. The student's m[id]night lamp is frequently trimmed with gastric juice.—The Fa[mily] Physician.

WONDERS OF PHILOSOPHY.—The polyp[us] like the fable hydra, receives new life fro[m] the knife which was raised to destroy it. The[re] are 5011 muscles in a caterpillar. Hook disco[v]ered 4000 mirrors in the eye of a drone; a[nd] to effect the restoration of a carp, 13,300 art[e]ries, veins, vessels, bones, etc., are necessar[y]. The body of every spider contains four litt[le] masses, pierced with a number of imperceptible holes, each hole permitting the passage [of] a single thread: all the threads to the amou[nt] of 1000 to each mass, join together when th[ey] come out and make the single thread, wi[th] which the spider spins his web; so that wh[at] we call a spider's thread, consists of more th[an] 1000 united. Leuwenhock, by means of micr[o]scopes, observed spiders, no bigger than a gra[in] of sand, which spun threads so fine that it to[ok] over 4000 of them to equal in magnitude a sin[gle] hair.—Ex. paper.

CLEALINESS.—Cleanliness is a mark of p[o]litensss, for one unadorned with this virtue ca[n] go into no company without giving a manifes[t] offence. It may be said to be the foster-moth[er] of affection. Beauty commonly produces love—cleanliness preserves it. Age itself [is] not unamiable while it is preserved clean an[d] unsullied. Cleanliness is intimately connec[t]ed with purity of mind, and naturally inspire[s] refined sentiments and passions.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 4.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1850. [WHOLE No. 172.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

Big Bend of Fox River, Kane Co., Ill., March 24th, 1850.

DEAR BRO. COOPER:—I write to inform you and the saints, that, through the goodness and mercy of our heavenly Father, I am still alive and endeavoring to do his will. My health is poor, and has been for the last six or seven months, and which was the reason, in part, of my coming home last fall. My health while in the east was very poor, and I thought best to come home. On arriving at home, or where my family was, I found them in want of my presence. The most of them, with myself, have been sick the past winter. But I have held meetings in Batavia, and in the region round about, as far as I was able, during the winter, up to the present time; and many are believing, and prejudice is giving way before the force of truth, and many say, if the Bible is true, the Latter Day Saints have all the evidence on their side of the question.

I think the cloud has so far burst which hangs over the people in this region that there will soon be a gathering into the church by baptism. Many are beginning to talk about obeying the gospel in this region; and, if I may judge from past experience, I should think that there will be quite a large accession to the church here soon. But time will determine. I am happy to learn through the Herald of the prosperity of the Elders in the east, south, and north, and I hope that the south will give up many of her sons and daughters the coming season, to settle the inheritance which the Lord is offering to his saints without money and without price. And I also hope that the north and east will not keep back, and that the west will contribute her part in the great work of gathering the coming season.

Beloved brethren, I trust that the time has come for the work of the last days to take a new and vigorous start ahead. Let us continue to strive together to roll on the great work, knowing that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. We have had a close time of it to get through the winter, having house rent to pay and every thing to buy, and having been sick so much. But the Lord has opened the hearts of some of the people to assist us, and more especially our highly esteemed Bro. Ansel Lake, and our old and well tried friend Ludlow Hill, who have been to us fathers and mothers in time of want. May the blessings of the God of our fathers rest upon them and their families, their flocks, and herds, and fields, and basket, and store, and remember them in the day when he makes up his jewels, and reward them for all their labors of love to his saints.

Dear brethren in the Lord, as one of the servants of God, whose duty it is to preach the gospel, I with my brethren in the ministry, wish to be remembered in your prayers, that we may be upheld by the power of God, and be able to finish our work, and have it well done, that peace, and truth may be established again in the earth, and everlasting righteousness may be brought in, to the overthrow of all false doctrines, and the banishment of all evil, and error from our world. May the Lord hasten his work in his time. I shall think it very strange if there should not be several candidates for Beaver Island from this neighborhood the present season. Many are inquiring after the truth,

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 4.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1850. [WHOLE No. 172.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

Big Bend of Fox River, Kane Co., Ill., March 24th, 1850.

DEAR BRO. COOPER:—I write to inform you and the saints, that, through the goodness and mercy of our heavenly Father, I am still alive and endeavoring to do his will. My health is poor, and has been for the last six or seven months, and which was the reason, in part, of my coming home last fall. My health while in the east was very poor, and I thought best to come home. On arriving at home, or where my family was, I found them in want of my presence. The most of them, with myself, have been sick the past winter. But I have held meetings in Batavia, and in the region round about, as far as I was able, during the winter, up to the present time; and many are believing, and prejudice is giving way before the force of truth, and many say, if the Bible is true, the Latter Day Saints have all the evidence on their side of the question.

I think the cloud has so far burst which hangs over the people in this region that there will soon be a gathering into the church by baptism. Many are beginning to talk about obeying the gospel in this region; and, if I may judge from past experience, I should think that there will be quite a large accession to the church here soon. But time will determine. I am happy to learn through the Herald of the prosperity of the Elders in the east, south, and north, and I hope that the south will give up many of her sons and daughters the coming season, to settle the inheritance which the Lord is offering to his saints without money and without price. And I also hope that the north and east will not keep back, and that the west will contribute her part in the great work of gathering the coming season.

Beloved brethren, I trust that the time has come for the work of the last days to take a new and vigorous start ahead. Let us continue to strive together to roll on the great work, knowing that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. We have had a close time of it to get through the winter, having house rent to pay and every thing to buy, and having been sick so much. But the Lord has opened the hearts of some of the people to assist us, and more especially our highly esteemed Bro. Ansel Lake, and our old and well tried friend Ludlow Hill, who have been to us fathers and mothers in time of want. May the blessings of the God of our fathers rest upon them and their families, their flocks, and herds, and fields, and basket, and store, and remember them in the day when he makes up his jewels, and reward them for all their labors of love to his saints.

Dear brethren in the Lord, as one of the servants of God, whose duty it is to preach the gospel, I with my brethren in the ministry, wish to be remembered in your prayers, that we may be upheld by the power of God, and be able to finish our work, and have it well done, that peace, and truth may be established again in the earth, and everlasting righteousness may be brought in, to the overthrow of all false doctrines, and the banishment of all evil, and error from our world. May the Lord hasten his work in his time. I shall think it very strange if there should not be several candidates for Beaver Island from this neighborhood the present season. Many are inquiring after the truth, and the more they become acquainted with our principles the better they like them. But it is one thing to get the people to believe, and quite another thing to get them to obey. But if we do our duty, all will be well with us.—God bless the faithful saints, is my prayer.

JAMES BLAKESLEE.

PROPHETS.

There is a strange notion which pervades the minds of both professed saints and the world at large, with regard to the purity of the prophets. Some suppose, and some believe, that the prophets were perfectly holy, and every body knew them to be so, and venerated them as the anointed of the Lord. But let us examine the scriptures and see how the prophets sent by the Lord at various times were treated by those who professed to be saints, and the wicked world. As for those who professed to have a knowledge of God, and to be governed by divine revelation, we cannot give a better sample than the one which fell from the lips of Christ to the Jews, as follows: "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell? Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes; and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city, that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar." Matt. xxiii. 33, 34, 35.

Moses, the man of God, who killed an Egyptian persecutor of the children of Israel, was driven from his country and kindred. Elijah had to flee his country and was fed by ravens. Daniel was cast into a den of lions. Micah was fed on the bread of affliction. Jeremiah was cast into the filthy hole under the Temple. And did these afflictions come upon these prophets of the Lord on account of transgressions? No! It was the iron hand of persecution.—And, mark, when these old prophets suffered, the vengeance of God in due time followed and left the wicked opposers of the Lord's anointed like those of Sodom and Gomorrah, like the Egyptians, like Jezebel, who was eaten by dogs, and like all Israel who were led away captive till the Lord had spent his fury upon them, even to this day.

Let us come down to the New Testament times, as so many are praising Christ and his Apostles. To commence with we will take John the Baptist, of whom Christ said there was not a greater prophet born of woman.—He was beheaded by the command of Herod at the request of the daughter of Herodias.—Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was crucified with his hands and feet nailed to the cross. Stephen was stoned to death. Mark, one of the Twelve, was dragged to death in the streets of Alexandria, in Egypt. Peter, who held the keys of the kingdom, was crucified with his head downwards at Rome.

We have given these few samples to show what a prophet has before him, and might follow down to the banishment of John the revelator to the isle of Patmos, but our limits are too small. Suffice it to say, that the servants of God are never welcome among the masses in their own day. Mankind seem to have forgotten that prophets are "men of like passions with themselves," but seem to think that they are of a higher race of beings, (at least the ancient ones.) But not so with modern prophets, or those who preach to them. They are all that the ingenuity of man can call despicable and mean. When we consider that prophets are as subject to temptation as ourselves, we should look with an eye of compassion on the faults of the men, when, at the same time, we are bound to obey the word of God by them, so long as God recognizes them as his anointed. X.

☞ The following was received a few days ago, though rather out of season, it will nevertheless be interesting to the saints:—

Bennington, N. Y., Jan. 1st, 1850.

A happy new year to all the saints. Arousing as it were from a few months slumber, I again, with pen in hand, sit down to inform you that I am yet among the living, and far from the stakes of Zion. Nevertheless I feel resolved in the coming spring to seek a home in one of the stakes of Zion, with the saints of God, to learn more per-

and the more they become acquainted with our principles the better they like them. But it is one thing to get the people to believe, and quite another thing to get them to obey. But if we do our duty, all will be well with us.—God bless the faithful saints, is my prayer.

JAMES BLAKESLEE.

PROPHETS.

There is a strange notion which pervades the minds of both professed saints and the world at large, with regard to the purity of the prophets. Some suppose, and some believe, that the prophets were perfectly holy, and every body knew them to be so, and venerated them as the anointed of the Lord. But let us examine the scriptures and see how the prophets sent by the Lord at various times were treated by those who professed to be saints, and the wicked world. As for those who professed to have a knowledge of God, and to be governed by divine revelation, we cannot give a better sample than the one which fell from the lips of Christ to the Jews, as follows: "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell? Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify: and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city, that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar" Matt. xxiii. 33, 34, 35.

Moses, the man of God, who killed an Egyptian persecutor of the children of Israel, was driven from his country and kindred. Elijah had to flee his country and was fed by ravens. Daniel was cast into a den of lions. Micah was fed on the bread of affliction. Jeremiah was cast into the filthy hole under the Temple. And did these afflictions come upon these prophets of the Lord on account of transgressions? No! It was the iron hand of persecution.—And, mark, when these old prophets suffered, the vengeance of God in due time followed and left the wicked opposers of the Lord's anointed like those of Sodom and Gomorrah, like the Egyptians, like Jezebel, who was eaten by dogs, and like all Israel who were led away captive till the Lord had spent his fury upon them, even to this day.

Let us come down to the New Testament times, as so many are praising Christ and his Apostles. To commence with we will take John the Baptist, of whom Christ said there was not a greater prophet born of woman.—He was beheaded by the command of Herod at the request of the daughter of Herodias.—Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was crucified with his hands and feet nailed to the cross. Stephen was stoned to death. Mark, one of the Twelve, was dragged to death in the streets of Alexandria, in Egypt. Peter, who held the keys of the kingdom, was crucified with his head downwards at Rome.

We have given these few samples to show what a prophet has before him, and might follow down to the banishment of John the revelator to the isle of Patmos, but our limits are too small. Suffice it to say, that the servants of God are never welcome among the masses in their own day. Mankind seem to have forgotten that prophets are "men of like passions with themselves," but seem to think that they are of a higher race of beings, at least the ancient ones. But not so with modern prophets, or those who preach to them. They are all that the ingenuity of man can call despicable and mean. When we consider that prophets are as subject to temptation as ourselves, we should look with an eye of compassion on the faults of the men, when, at the same time, we are bound to obey the word of God by them, so long as God recognizes them as his anointed. X.

☞ The following was received a few days ago, though rather out of season, it will nevertheless be interesting to the saints:—

Bennington, N. Y., Jan. 1st, 1850.

A happy new year to all the saints. Arousing as it were from a few months slumber, I again, with pen in hand, sit down to inform you that I am yet among the living, and far from the stakes of Zion. Nevertheless I feel resolved in the coming spring to seek a home in one of the stakes of Zion, with the saints of God, to learn more perfectly of his ways, and to do his will in all things, that I may have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city; for I find that I am without, where there are dogs, liars, and those who appear to love lies more than the truth, and have pleasure in unrighteousness. We have had two good treats here this winter, one from Bro. J. W. Briggs, as he was on his way to Steuben Co., some two months since: and one from Bro. E. Page, of the Twelve, both going on their missions in the strength of the God of Elijah, Joseph and James, bearing the tidings of salvation to the inhabitants of the earth, whereby the honest in heart, through obedience to the truth, may be gathered, Zion built up, and a people prepared for the coming Lord, being redeemed from deceit and violence, becoming lively stones, fitly joined together in the new and everlasting covenant, to dwell with God eternally. May God pour upon the President of the church all the the peculiar blessings of light and knowledge that is needful for the saints from time to time, and also preserved him from wolves in sheeps clothing, from the hands of evil doers in all places, and in his return to the stakes of Zion, where he with his associates in the Presidency and the saints may sit together in heavenly places in Christ. REUBEN T. NICHOLS.

THE PHONETIC ADVOCATE.

For a few months past we have been in the regular receipt of this able "Advocate" of the spelling reform. We take much pleasure in perusing its columns, and admire the beauty and simplicity of the system. What an amount of time and labor it would save the rising generation were it generally adopted! Children, instead of going to school ten or twelve years to learn to read and spell, could acquire these accomplishments in three or four months; and by this means devote a great deal more time to other studies. In the Phonetic Alphabet every letter has one unvariable sound, consequently no one will hesitate as to the proper pronunciation of any word spelled Phonetically, that may meet his eye. With this alphabet there is no difficulty in spelling correctly every word that may be spoken, it being "only necessary to arrange the letters representing the sounds heard in the order they are spoken in the word"

The "Advocate" has lately commenced the publication of a series of articles on Phonography, by which any one may instruct himself in this useful art without the aid of a teacher. Those who wish, can avail themselves of this rare opportunity of making themselves good Phonographers, and have the reading of a good family paper for one year "to boot," by sending one dollar to the publishers, Longley and Brother, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"A LITTLE MORE."

Two gentlemen were once earnestly discussing in the streets of Boston the question as to the sum of money requsite to make one happy in life. They could not agree, and determined to refer it to Mr. Gray, the richest man in the city, whom they saw approaching. The question was accordingly put as Mr. G. came up. Without stopping in his course he simply said in passing "a little more." Yee, a little more. It matters not how much money a man has—it matters not if he possesses the wealth of an Astor or a Girard, he wants a little more. The soul cannot be satisfied with gold. If its desires turn to it—if it seeks it as its chief good it can never possess a sufficiency. The wishes expand with every new attainment, so that when millions are secured the wishes are as far from being gratified as at the beginning. Gold is a very good thing. It has its uses. It is very inconvenient to be without it, but it is not a portion for the heart of man. It cannot fill the aching void—it cannot satisfy the large desire of a single mind. And yet though most men acknowledge all this, they act as if gold were the great—yea the only desideratum of life.

DISHONESTY.

Iniquities whose end is dark as midnight, are permitted to open as bright as the morning; the most poisonous bud unfolds with brilliant colors. So the threshold of perdition is burnished till it glows like the gate of paradise. "There is a way which seemeth right unto man, but the ends thereof are the ways of death." This is dishonesty described to the life. At first you look down upon a smooth and verdant path, covered with flowers, perfumed with odors, and overhung with fruits of grateful shade. Its long perspective is illusive, for it ends quickly in a precipice over which you pitch into inevitable ruin.

THE BEST FRIEND.

The most agreeable of all companions is a simple, frank man, without any high pretensions to an oppressive greatness; one who loves life, and understands the use of it; obliging alike at all hours; above all, golden temper, and steadfast as an anchor. For such a one we gladly exchange the greatest genius, the most brilliant wit, the profoundest thinker.

THE FARMER'S CREED.—We believe in small farms and thorough cultivation. We believe in large crops, which leave the land better than they found it. We believe in going to the bottom of things, and therefore in deep ploughing. We believe that the best fertilizer of the soil is the spirit of industry, enterprise, and intelligence, without this, lime, marl, plaster, bones, and green manures will be of little use. N. Y. Independent.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Rodolph G. Steele,	$2,00 to Vol. V. No. 52
Daniel Fillmore,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 3
Newman Fillmore,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Samuel Bills,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
A. H. Patterson,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Milan Fillmore,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
John A. Fillmore,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26

SCRAPS.

Never lean on the world, for if you do, the world will jump aside, and you will get a tumble.

A lie will travel a hundred miles while truth is putting on its boots.

When you see a person continually barking at and abusing those possessed of influence, you may know that he is like a dog at the foot of a tree, he barks because he cannot climb.

☞ The best cure for low spirits is business. One half of the melancholy that you run against is caused by indolence and feather beds. The best fun in the world is activity.

fectly of his ways, and to do his will in all things, that I may have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city; for I find that I am without, where there are dogs, liars, and those who appear to love lies more than the truth, and have pleasure in unrighteousness. We have had two good treats here this winter, one from Bro. J. W. Briggs, as he was on his way to Steuben Co., some two months since: and one from Bro. E. Page, of the Twelve, both going on their missions in the strength of the God of Elijah, Joseph and James, bearing the tidings of salvation to the inhabitants of the earth, whereby the honest in heart, through obedience to the truth, may be gathered, Zion built up, and a people prepared for the coming Lord, being redeemed from deceit and violence, becoming lively stones, fitly joined together in the new and everlasting covenant, to dwell with God eternally. May God pour upon the President of the church all the the peculiar blessings of light and knowledge that is needful for the saints from time to time, and also preserved him from wolves in sheeps clothing, from the hands of evil doers in all places, and in his return to the stakes of Zion, where he with his associates in the Presidency and the saints may sit together in heavenly places in Christ. REUBEN T. NICHOLS.

THE PHONETIC ADVOCATE.

For a few months past we have been in the regular receipt of this able "Advocate" of the spelling reform. We take much pleasure in perusing its columns, and admire the beauty and simplicity of the system. What an amount of time and labor it would save the rising generation were it generally adopted! Children, instead of going to school ten or twelve years to learn to read and spell, could acquire these accomplishments in three or four months; and by this means devote a great deal more time to other studies. In the Phonetic Alphabet every letter has one unvarfable sound, consequently no one will hesitate as to the proper pronunciation of any word spelled Phonetically, that may meet his eye. With this alphabet there is no difficulty in spelling correctly every word that may be spoken, it being "only necessary to arrange the letters representing the sounds heard in the order they are spoken in the word"

The "Advocate" has lately commenced the publication of a series of articles on Phonography, by which any one may instruct himself in this useful art without the aid of a teacher. Those who wish, can avail themselves of this rare opportunity of making themselves good Phonographers, and have the reading of a good family paper for one year "to boot," by sending one dollar to the publishers, Longley and Brother, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"A LITTLE MORE."

Two gentlemen were once earnestly discussing in the streets of Boston the question as to the sum of money requsite to make one happy in life. They could not agree, and determined to refer it to Mr. Gray, the richest man in the city, whom they saw approaching. The question was accordingly put as Mr. G. came up. Without stopping in his course he simply said in passing "a little more." Yes, a little more. It matters not how much money a man has—it matters not if he possesses the wealth of an Astor or a Girard, he wants a little more. The soul cannot be satisfied with gold. If its desires turn to it—if it seeks it as its chief good it can never possess a sufficiency. The wishes expand with every new attainment, so that when millions are secured the wishes are as far from being gratified as at the beginning. Gold is a very good thing. It has its uses. It is very inconvenient to be without it, but it is not a portion for the heart of man. It cannot fill the aching void—it cannot satisfy the large desire of a single mind. And yet though most men acknowledge all this, they act as if gold were the great—yea the only desideratum of life.

DISHONESTY.

Iniquities whose end is dark as midnight, are permitted to open as bright as the morning; the most poisonous bud unfolds with brilliant colors. So the threshold of perdition is burnished till it glows like the gate of paradise. "There is a way which seemeth right unto man, but the ends thereof are the ways of death." This is dishonesty described to the life. At first you look down upon a smooth and verdant path, covered with flowers, perfumed with odors, and overhung with fruits of grateful shade. Its long perspective is illusive, for it ends quickly in a precipice over which you pitch into inevitable ruin.

THE BEST FRIEND.

The most agreeable of all companions is a simple, frank man, without any high pretensions to an oppressive greatness; one who loves life, and understands the use of it; obliging alike at all hours; above all, golden temper, and steadfast as an anchor. For such a one we gladly exchange the greatest genius, the most brilliant wit, the profoundest thinker.

THE FARMER'S CREED.—We believe in small farms and thorough cultivation. We believe in large crops, which leave the land better than they found it. We believe in going to the bottom of things, and therefore in deep ploughing. We believe that the best fertilizer of the soil is the spirit of industry, enterprise, and intelligence, without this, lime, marl, plaster, bones, and green manures will be of little use. N. Y. Independent.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

Rodolph G. Steele,	$2,00 to Vol. V. No. 52
Daniel Fillmore,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 3
Newman Fillmore,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Samuel Bills,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
A. H. Patterson,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Milan Fillmore,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
John A. Fillmore,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26

SCRAPS.

Never lean on the world, for if you do, the world will jump aside, and you will get a tumble.

A lie will travel a hundred miles while truth is putting on its boots.

When you see a person continually barking at and abusing those possessed of influence, you may know that he is like a dog at the foot of a tree, he barks because he cannot climb.

☞ The best cure for low spirits is business. One half of the melancholy that you run against is caused by indolence and feather beds. The best fun in the world is activity.

For the Gospel Herald.

BRO. COOPER:—I was somewhat amused in reading a sermon in the "Primitive Expounder," Vol. 7, No. 2 and 3, from a text found in 2d Sam. xiv. 14: "For we must needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again: neither doth God respect any person; yet doth he devise means, that his banished be not expelled from him." The writer, after a lengthy introduction, says: "If God had a purpose in creation commensurate with the eternal perfections, character and the attributes of his eternal wisdom, power, &c., we may look for that purpose in the first and highest order of creation, the next below the angels, and that man fills that place, and consequently that purpose is connected with man's existence."

He says: "If God designs to bestow immortality upon man in his purpose, and fill the realms of immortal purity from the human family, then death is a means to bring it to pass. And that the text is right, in saying that we must throw off this earthly mantle, a house of clay." For, says he, "the text cannot be read to agree with the fact that God deviseth means that his banished be not expelled from him in no other way without contradiction." Again he says, "man has become mortal, but all do not agree as to how he came so; whether God made him so, or whether he made himself so; and that the idea will continue to be an important point of faith with certain sects; that is, what God made immortal man made mortal."

Then if this be true, an immortal state is not an exemption from death. And he introduces as proof the saying of Paul, that man was made subject to vanity, not willingly. Rom. viii. 20. He carries the idea here that death is the vanity spoken of, (as that alone is the only thing called in question that it could be applied to with any sense,) and thanks God for his unspeakable gift. Now death cannot be an "unspeakable" thing, as we know what it is; neither immortality, as it is made plain in the gospel. Then, to make the idea still stronger, he says, "we needed a revelation to show us that death was a means which God employed to manifest his glory and the fullest fruition of mortal joys;" and that "if the power of God in relation to our mortal bodies is truly represented in the text, who will say the ashes of the dead will be reanimated and immortalized?"

To strengthen his position still more, he asks gravely, who ordained the dissolution of all created things? And answers, it was God, the judge of the quick and the dead. "Again," he continues, "you ask me what has death to do in delivering us from our banished state of sin?" And answers, emphatically, just what it is appointed to do in the hands of a mediator. Where does he find this gospel? He says, in his application, "God's full purpose is not accomplished in our earthly existence; and to accomplish this purpose we must needs die, or of necessity this mortal must put on immortality;" as though by our spirits' becoming disembodied or unclothed we should then be in the immortal state; showing himself to be entirely ignorant of what immortality is, although it "is brought to light by the gospel," as quoted by him. He says God is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him, in the spirit state, and are like the angels of heaven, which he says were not once earthly bodies as we are. Let us for a moment compare the state of an angel with that of a spirit, and see if such statements are true.

John the Revelator, who was carried away by the angel in the spirit to the new Jerusalem, fell at the angel's feet to worship him. The angel said, see thou do it not; for, said he, "I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets;" which shows positively that he once had a body that was earthly, and was a prophet, but which of them he does not say. It appears he had a body, for he talked, showed the city, and measured the foundation of it. Again, when three MEN appeared to Abraham, he fed them, who proved to be the Lord and two angels. The two last went to Sodom, and were entertained by Lot, who went out of the door to appease the multitude who had gathered to abuse the strangers, and were about to break the door, when they put forth their HANDS and drew him into the house and shut the door.

These, with numerous other scriptures, show plainly that they have bodies; for they eat, talk, walk, handle with hands, and even forced Lot into the house. But, on the other hand, a disembodied spirit, being unclothed, having neither hands nor feet like the angels of God, or like men, cannot act upon us in a physical manner as did the angels, for spirit can only act upon spirit. Again, the author in his arguments to sustain the position that it is impos-

For the Gospel Herald.

BRO. COOPER:—I was somewhat amased in reading a sermon in the "Primitive Expounder," Vol. 7, No. 2 and 3, from a text found in 2d Sam. xiv. 14: "For we must needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again: neither doth God respect any person; yet doth he devise means, that his banished be not expelled from him." The writer, after a lengthy introduction, says: "If God had a purpose in creation commensurate with the eternal perfections, character and the attributes of his eternal wisdom, power, &c., we may look for that purpose in the first and highest order of creation, the next below the angels, and that man fills that place, and consequently that purpose is connected with man's existence."

He says: "If God designs to bestow immortality upon man in his purpose, and fill the realms of immortal purity from the human family, then death is a means to bring it to pass. And that the text is right, in saying that we must throw off this earthly mantle, a house of clay." For, says he, "the text cannot be read to agree with the fact that God deviseth means that his banished be not expelled from him in no other way without contradiction." Again he says, "man has become mortal, but all do not agree as to how he came so; whether God made him so, or whether he made himself so; and that the idea will continue to be an important point of faith with certain sects; that is, what God made immortal man made mortal."

Then if this be true, an immortal state is not an exemption from death. And he introduces as proof the saying of Paul, that man was made subject to vanity, not willingly. Rom. viii. 20. He carries the idea here that death is the vanity spoken of, (as that alone is the only thing called in question that it could be applied to with any sense,) and thanks God for his unspeakable gift. Now death cannot be an "unspeakable" thing, as we know what it is; neither immortality, as it is made plain in the gospel. Then, to make the idea still stronger, he says, "we needed a revelation to show us that death was a means which God employed to manifest his glory and the fullest fruition of mortal joys;" and that "if the power of God in relation to our mortal bodies is truly represented in the text, who will say the ashes of the dead will be reanimated and immortalized?"

To strengthen his position still more, he asks gravely, who ordained the dissolution of all created things? And answers, it was God, the judge of the quick and the dead. "Again," he continues, "you ask me what has death to do in delivering us from our banished state of sin?" And answers, emphatically, just what it is appointed to do in the hands of a mediator. Where does he find this gospel? He says, in his application, "God's full purpose is not accomplished in our earthly existence; and to accomplish this purpose we must needs die, or of necessity this mortal must put on immortality;" as though by our spirits becoming disembodied or unclothed we should then be in the immortal state; showing himself to be entirely ignorant of what immortality is, although it "is brought to light by the gospel," as quoted by him. He says God is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him, in the spirit state, and are like the angels of heaven, which he says were not once earthly bodies as we are. Let us for a moment compare the state of an angel with that of a spirit, and see if such statements are true.

John the Revelator, who was carried away by the angel in the spirit to the new Jerusalem, fell at the angel's feet to worship him. The angel said, see thou do it not; for, said he, "I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets;" which show positively that he once had a body that was earthly, and was a prophet, but which of them he does not say. It appears he had a body, for he talked, showed the city, and measured the foundation of it. Again, when three MEN appeared to Abraham, he fed them, who proved to be the Lord and two angels. The two last went to Sodom, and were entertained by Lot, who went out of the door to appease the multitude who had gathered to abuse the strangers, and were about to break the door, when they put forth their HANDS and drew him into the house and shut the door.

These, with numerous other scriptures, show plainly that they have bodies: for they eat, talk, walk, handle with hands, and even forced Lot into the house. But, on the other hand, a disembodied spirit, being unclothed, having neither hands nor feet like the angels of God, or like men, cannot act upon us in a physical manner as did the angels, for spirit can only act upon spirit. Again, the author in his arguments to sustain the position that it is impossible for the body after it returns to the dust to be again gathered reanimated and immortalized, but is like water spilt on the ground, asks, "why should I debate this subject, when it is so plainly stated in the word of God?"—And says, "it was only needful to show how unreasonable it is to believe that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, or the spirit world."

Then, to prove his position in the strongest manner, quotes from 2d Cor. v. 1–4: "For we know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed, we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." Now as the gospel is a thing of God, and cannot be known but by the spirit of God, for the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, neither can he know them, for they are foolishness to him, (1st Cor. ii. 14,) it plainly shows the reason why so many foolish theories have been introduced; for all men are natural until born of the spirit.

As the spirit of God is a spirit of intelligence above the natural man, and if any man have not the spirit of God he is none of his, it then follows that they belong to some other being, it is not to be wondered at that a man should take a text spoken by an uninspired woman, on a subject that had nothing whatever to do with death or the immortal state, as a foundation to build a theory so entirely unfounded in the gospel as is that of the author. It is no wonder that his sermon is original with him, or that he should quote such texts as he does as proof of such a position.

In the first place, Paul directs his letters to the church of God, and not to those who are without. And as is done in all scripture, he keeps up a distinction between the saints and those who are not. The text last quoted, as well as the one in Romans, so far from proving his position, proves directly to the contrary; that is, that the body is to be reanimated, and the spirit reunited to the body, and thus become immortal. Paul says, Rom. viii. 22, 23: "We know that all creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now: and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the spirit; even we ourselves groan (what for, Paul?) waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

Well, Paul, what does that mean? It means we, which have the first fruits of the spirit, are waiting to have our bodies redeemed. It appears that Paul, in this, had reference to the resurrection of his body, as he acknowledges he is alive to God already. "For," says he, "we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, an eternal house in the heavens, (not eternally in the heavens:) "for in this," (that is, in the house we now have,) "we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed, we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." 2d Cor. v. 1–4.

Now this is the plain doctrine taught by Paul, as is also shown in chapt. iv. 14, which says: "Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you." And in the last verse he says, "the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." Evidently speaking of this body we now have, and the body which is eternal, as the next verse is the text referred to, and explains it thoroughly. These, with a number of other texts, he has presented to prove his position, which are equally as foreign from the position as the two last.

And as to death being the means to bring us to a state of immortality or eternal life, all that is necessary to say is, that that principle is no where taught in the Bible, neither is it hinted at, but is the penalty God pronounced upon man for breaking his law, and is passed upon all men unavoidably. It neither expelled him from the presence of God, nor will it bring him back again into his presence. But man in the beginning was in the presence of God, and would have continued so if he had not eaten of the fruit of the tree of knowledge, producing (blood) corruption. By this means Satan, a fallen spirit, held power over Adam, as also over the whole human family; which, by Christ's keeping the law, he got that power he spoke of when he said, "the hour is coming,

sible for the body after it returns to the dust to be again gathered reanimated and immortalized, but is like water spilt on the ground. asks, "why should I debate this subject, when it is so plainly stated in the word of God?"—And says, "it was only needful to show how unreasonable it is to believe that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, or the spirit world."

Then, to prove his position in the strongest manner, quotes from 2d Cor. v. 1–4: "For we know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed, we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." Now as the gospel is a thing of God, and cannot be known but by the spirit of God, for the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, neither can he know them, for they are foolishness to him. (1st Cor ii. 14.) it plainly shows the reason why so many foolish theories have been introduced; for all men are natural until born of the spirit.

As the spirit of God is a spirit of intelligence above the natural man, and if any man have not the spirit of God he is none of his, it then follows that they belong to some other being, it is not to be wondered at that a man should take a text spoken by an uninspired woman, on a subject that had nothing whatever to do with death or the immortal state, as a foundation to build a theory so entirely unfounded in the gospel as is that of the author. It is no wonder that his sermon is original with him, or that he should quote such texts as he does as proof of such a position.

In the first place, Paul directs his letters to the church of God, and not to those who are without. And as is done in all scripture, he keeps up a distinction between the saints and those who are not. The text last quoted, as well as the one in Romans, so far from proving his position, proves directly to the contrary; that is, that the body is to be reanimated, and the spirit reunited to the body, and thus become immortal. Paul says, Rom. viii. 22, 23: "We know that all creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now: and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the spirit; even we ourselves groan (what for, Paul?) waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

Well, Paul, what does that mean? It means we, which have the first fruits of the spirit, are waiting to have our bodies redeemed. It appears that Paul, in this, had reference to the resurrection of his body, as he acknowledges he is alive to God already. "For," says he, "we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God a house not made with hands, an eternal house in the heavens, (not eternally in the heavens:) "for in this," (that is, in the house we now have,) "we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed, we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." 2d Cor. v. 1–4.

Now this is the plain doctrine taught by Paul, as is also shown in chapt. iv. 14, which says: "Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you." And in the last verse he says, "the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." Evidently speaking of this body we now have, and the body which is eternal, as the next verse is the text referred to, and explains it thoroughly. These, with a number of other texts, he has presented to prove his position, which are equally as foreign from the position as the two last.

And as to death being the means to bring us to a state of immortality or eternal life, all that is necessary to say is, that that principle is no where taught in the Bible, neither is it hinted at, but is the penalty God pronounced upon man for breaking his law, and is passed upon all men unavoidably. It neither expelled him from the presence of God, nor will it bring him back again into his presence. But man in the beginning was in the presence of God, and would have continued so if he had not eaten of the fruit of the tree of knowledge, producing (blood) corruption. By this means Satan, a fallen spirit, held power over Adam, as also over the whole human family; which, by Christ's keeping the law, he got that power he spoke of when he said, "the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live;" which saying was fully proven by the resurrection of Lazarus; and gives the reason why they shall hear. "For," said he, "as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given the Son to have life in himself;" (that is, the same life that the Father had, which of course was eternal.) As he says in another place, "he hath power over all flesh, that he might give eternal life to as many as thou hath given me."

So we see he had power given him of the Father to give the same life to others that his Father gave to him. By this he had power to lay down his life and take it up again; for no man took it from him. He tells them again, not to marvel at this, his power; "for the hour is coming that all that are in their graves shall hear my voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good to (in) the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to (in) the resurrection of damnation."

As there is to be a restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets, (that is, to restore something that has been lost by some means,) we can then search and see what is to be restored, and whether the body is to be reanimated or not. Job says, "O that my words were graven with a pen of iron and lead, in a rock forever;" and gives the reason why he wishes it, by saying, "for I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter days upon the earth." He still goes on to state, "though worms devour this body, yet in my flesh (that is, after they have destroyed it) I shall see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes behold, and not another, though my reins are consumed within me."—Job xix. 23-28.

These words are plain, and need no comment; for he would stand on the earth in the latter days, and though his flesh should be destroyed by worms, yet he should see God; and, as a matter of course, in the place where he should stand, himself also being in the flesh to see him. This is in perfect accordance with the saying, "repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come, when he shall send Jesus, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution." Acts iii. 19, 20, 21. And it also agrees with the saying of Ezekiel in giving a description of the reanimation of the bones of the house of Israel. The Lord says, "I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves;" and tells them where he will bring them to, and what land he will place them in when he has done this; that is, bring them to the land of Israel. Any one reading the Bible must know what land God promised to him.

"Then," says the Lord, "ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land." Ezek. xxxvii. 12, 13, 14. Here we find a plain declaration of what God will do with the bones of the house of Israel, and where he will put them. One thing is, he will put his spirit, not blood, in them, and they shall live.

If we needed plainer proof of what a state of immortality is, we might refer to the same being who laid down his life and took it up again, having spilt his blood, being reanimated by that same spirit that has creative power, had moved upon the waters in the beginning, and which will be put in the house of Israel, not only the dead, but also the living, when they ("his elect") shall be gathered from the four winds; for they are all to be restored to their own lands in the restitution. This Jesus showed himself to Thomas, who thrust his hand into his side; and who ate with his disciples, having an immortal life, with the same body that once possessed mortal life, which afterwards ascended to heaven, there to remain until the times of restitution, when God's will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven; when many will come from the east, west, north and south and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, which the God of heaven will set up, and "the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ."

Abraham is in possession for the first time of the promise God made to him, which he has never realized, when the earth will be restored and yield its increase, and the Lord God will wipe tears from all faces who will attain to that immortal state. This is a state of immortality worthy of a God. This is what all the prophets looked for, and all spoke of. But departing from this body, that is, the spirit, is no where spoken of as a state of immortality, and cannot be shown. But the redemption of the body, which means the same thing, and is

and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live;" which saying was fully proven by the resurrection of Lazarus; and gives the reason why they shall hear. "For," said he, "as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given the Son to have life in himself;" (that is, the same life that the Father had, which of course was eternal.) As he says in another place, "he hath power over all flesh, that he might give eternal life to as many as thou hath given me."

So we see he had power given him of the Father to give the same life to others that his Father gave to him. By this he had power to lay down his life and take it up again; for no man took it from him. He tells them again, not to marvel at this, his power; "for the hour is coming that all that are in their graves shall hear my voice, and shall come forth: they that have done good to (in) the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to (in) the resurrection of damnation."

As there is to be a restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets, (that is, to restore something that has been lost by some means,) we can then search and see what is to be restored, and whether the body is to be reanimated or not. Job says, "O that my words were graven with a pen of iron and lead, in a rock forever;" and gives the reason why he wishes it, by saying, "for I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter days upon the earth." He still goes on to state, "though worms devour this body, yet in my flesh (that is, after they have destroyed it) I shall see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes behold, and not another, though my reins are consumed within me."—Job xix. 23-28.

These words are plain, and need no comment; for he would stand on the earth in the latter days, and though his flesh should be destroyed by worms, yet he should see God; and, as a matter of course, in the place where he should stand, himself also being in the flesh to see him. This is in perfect accordance with the saying, "repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come, when he shall send Jesus, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution." Acts iii. 19, 20, 21. And it also agrees with the saying of Ezekiel in giving a description of the reanimation of the bones of the house of Israel. The Lord sa "I will open your graves, and cause yo come up out of your graves;" and tells th where he will bring them to, and what land will place them in when he has done this; th is, bring them to the land of Israel. Any o reading the Bible must know what land G promised to him.

"Then," says the Lord, "ye shall know th I am the Lord, when I have opened your grav O my people, and brought you up out of ye graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and shall live, and I shall place you in your own land Ezek. xxxvii. 12, 13, 14. Here we find a pla declaration of what God will do with the bon of the house of Israel, and where he will p them. One thing is, he will put his spirit, blood, in them, and they shall live.

If we needed plainer proof of what a state immortality is, we might refer to the same b ing who laid down his life and took it up agai having spilt his blood, being reanimated by th same spirit that has creative power, had mo ed upon the waters in the beginning, and whi will be put in the house of Israel, not only th dead, but also the living, when they ("h elect") shall be gathered from the four winds for they are all to be restored to their ow lands in the restitution. This Jesus showe himself to Thomas, who thrust his hand in his side; and who ate with his disciples, ha ing an immortal life, with the same body th once possessed mortal life, which afterwar ascended to heaven, there to remain until ti times of restitution, when God's will shall b done on earth as it is in heaven; when man will come from the east, west, north and sout and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jac in the kingdom of heaven, which the God heaven will set up, and "the kingdoms of th world will become the kingdom of our Lor and his Christ."

Abraham is in possession for the first time the promise God made to him, which he ha never realized, when the earth will be resto ed and yield its increase, and the Lord Go will wipe tears from all faces who will attai to that immortal state. This is a state of im mortality worthy of a God. This is what a the prophets looked for, and all spoke of. Bu departing from this body, that is, the spirit, i no where spoken of as a state of immortality and cannot be shown. But the redemption o the body, which means the same thing, and synonymous with restitution, is spoken of, or that the body will be made like Christ's glorious body.

The drama which called forth the words of the text occurred between Absalom and Amnon, two sons of David, Absalom having killed Amnon for abusing his sister Tamar, who had fled from his father for fear. It appears that a woman who was deeply interested in the matter, to whom Joab, captain of Israel, gave the very words of the text, in order to get permission of the king for his return; and after having feigned herself a widow, who had two sons who strove together, and one had killed the other and fled, whom the people requested her to deliver up, that they might kill him. By this means she got a firm promise from the king that neither she nor her son should be hurt. She then told him that he was the one who was in the fault; that he had not brought back his banished, (Absalom.) Then comes the words of the text, used only to influence the king to bring Absalom again.

Now if this is an allegory, and represents that we are banished from God, and death is the means to bring us back to him, it is certainly a most singular one. And if it is so, then David, Absalom, Joab and the woman are the likeness of something connected with our return, as well as the text, and also his return and his proceedings with his father afterwards, which certainly is far from showing signs of penitence, or that we shall be inclined to enjoy that beatific rest that God has promised.—Nay, it would most certainly show, if there is any likeness, that instead of enjoying his presence, we should be forbidden that privilege; and instead of being obedient and dutiful sons, we should be seeking by deception and intrigue to take away our heavenly Father's kingdom, having been brought back by his command, instead of our asking the boon of him.

There is, then, as the author remarks, danger of making a wrong application of scripture. And if he is the man whose duty it is to enforce such ideas upon the people, then it is the duty of some one to follow and correct his errors. By the way, if, as he says, the word of God authorizes him, nay, makes it his duty to teach and enforce such truth, I for one should like to know what portion of God's word it is. I am not aware that God ever, at any time, had but two classes of priests to teach the people: one the Levitical, to teach and enforce the law of Moses, and the other to teach and officiate in the law of grace. And I have yet to learn that there is, ever has been, or ever will be any necessity of any other than those that were appointed of God for that very purpose, as there never has been nor never will be a change of the law to call for a different set of officers; neither is there but one other kind named in the Bible, viz., priests of Baal, who, of course, had no legal right whatever to officiate in either law, and were not recognized of God.

And why any man (especially they that are honest) should rise up as a teacher to enforce the laws of God must always remain a mystery to me, unless he can show that he is legally appointed, and holds one of those two priesthoods, or that God has appointed another in their stead, making one or both of the first null and void, or that he has changed the law so as to make another necessary, and more especially as the law of grace is perfect, and, as a matter of course, the priesthood must be perfect also; if not, then the law would be liable to a wrong application. And as the priesthood is after the order of an endless life, I cannot conceive how another could be introduced. As well might a man rise up and say he has a right to teach, construe and enforce the laws of the land without being appointed according to the order of the law, as to pretend to a priesthood without God's law.

A. HALE.

DIED,

In Bennington, Wyoming Co., N. Y., on the 11th of Oct., 1849, Bro. BENJAMIN SHOOK, after a painful illness of three weeks and three days, in the 56th year of his age.

He fell asleep in the hope of a glorious resurrection of the just. Funeral service by Elder R. T. Nichols. Text, Job xiv. 14: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

ynonymous with restitution, is spoken of, or at the body will be made like Christ's glorious body.

The drama which called forth the words of e text occurred between Absalom and Amon, two sons of David, Absalom having killd Amnon for abusing his sister Tamar, who d fled from his father for fear. It appears at a woman who was deeply interested in e matter, to whom Joab, captain of Israel, ve the very words of the text, in order to permission of the king for his return; and ter having feigned herself a widow, who had o sons who strove together, and one had illed the other and fled, whom the people requested her to deliver up, that they might kill im. By this means she got a firm promise om the king that neither she nor her son hould be hurt. She then told him that he was e one who was in the fault; that he had not rought back his banished, (Absalom.) Then omes the words of the text, used only to influence the king to bring Absalom again.

Now if this is an allegory, and represents at we are banished from God, and death is e means to bring us back to him, it is certainly a most singular one. And if it is so, en David, Absalom, Joab and the woman are e likeness of something connected with our eturn, as well as the text, and also his return d his proceedings with his father afterwards, hich certainly is far from showing signs of enitence, or that we shall be inclined to enoy that beatific rest that God has promised.—ay, it would most certainly show, if there is y likeness, that instead of enjoying his presnce, we should be forbidden that privilege; nd instead of being obedient and dutiful sons, e should be seeking by deception and inrigue to take away our heavenly Father's ingdom, having been brought back by his ommand, instead of our asking the boon of im.

There is, then, as the author remarks, danger of making a wrong application of scripture. nd if he is the man whose duty it is to enorce such ideas upon the people, then it is he duty of some one to follow and correct his rrors. By the way, if, as he says, the word f God authorizes him, nay, makes it his duty to teach and enforce such truth, I for one should like to know w at portion of God's word it is. I am not aware that God ever, at any time, had but two classes of priests to teach the people: one the Levitical, to teach and enforce the law of Moses, and the other to teach and officiate in the law of grace. And I have yet to learn that there is, ever has been, or ever will be any necessity of any other than those that were appointed of God for that very purpose, as there never has been nor never will be a change of the law to call for a different set of officers; neither is there but one other kind named in the Bible, viz., priests of Baal, who, of course, had no legal right whatever to officiate in either law, and were not recognized of God.

And why any man (especially they that are honest) should rise up as a teacher to enforce the laws of God must always remain a mystery to me, unless he can show that he is legally appointed, and holds one of those two priesthoods, or that God has appointed another in their stead, making one or both of the first null and void, or that he has changed the law so as to make another necessary, and more especially as the law of grace is perfect, and, as a matter of course, the priesthood must be perfect also; if not, then the law would be liable to a wrong application. And as the priesthood is after the order of an endless life, I cannot conceive how another could be introduced. As well might a man rise up and say he has a right to teach, construe and enforce the laws of the land without being appointed according to the order of the law, as to pretend to a priesthood without God's law.

A. HALE.

DIED,

In Bennington, Wyoming Co., N. Y., on the 11th of Oct., 1849, Bro. BENJAMIN SHOOK, after a painful illness of three weeks and three days, in the 56th year of his age.

He fell asleep in the hope of a glorious resurrection of the just. Funeral service by Elder R. T. Nichols. Text, Job xiv. 14: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

KINDNESS.

Is there one being, stubborn as the rock to misfortune, whom kindness does not affect? For my part, it seems to come with double grace and tenderness from the old; it seems in them the hoarded and long purified benevolence of years; as if it had survived and conquered the baseness and selfishness of the ordeal it had passed; as if the winds, which had broken the form, had swept in vain across the heart, and the frosts which had chilled the blood and whitened the thin locks, had possessed no power over the warm tide of affections. It is the triumph of nature over art: it is the voice of the angel which is yet within us. Nor is this all: the tenderness of age is twice blessed—blessed in its trophies over the obduracy of incrusting and withering years, blessed because it is tinged with the sanctity of the grave; because it tells us that the heart will blossom even upon the precincts of the tomb, and flatters us with the inviolacy and immortality of love.—Ex. paper.

☞ "My son," said an old turbaned Turk one day, taking his child by the hand, in the streets of Cairo, and pointing out to him on the opposite side a Frenchman, just imported, in all the elegance of Parisian costume, "my son look there! if you ever forget God and his Prophet, you may come to look like that!"

DEAL JUSTLY.

One of our religious exchanges has the follo wing strong remarks on this subject. They drive the nail in to the head and clinch it:—

"Men may sophisticate as they please, they can never make it right, and all the laws in the universe cannot make it right for them not to pay their debts. There is sin in this neglect as clear and as deserving church discipline, as is in stealing or false swearing. He who violates his promises to pay, or withholds the payments of a debt, when it is in his power to meet his engagements, ought to be made to feel that, in the sight of all honest men, he is a swindler. Religion may be a very comfortable cloak under which to hide; but if religion does not make a man 'deal justly,' it is not worth having."

LIFE.

In any adversity that happens to us in the world, we ought to consider that misery and affliction are not less natural than hail or snow, storm and tempest; and that it was as reasonable to hope for a year without winter as for a life without trouble. Do well while thou livest, but regard not what is said of it. The humble current of little kindnesses, which, though but a creeping streamlet incessantly flows, although it glides in silent secrecy within the domestic walls, and along the walks of private life, and makes neither noise nor appearances in the world, pours in the end a more beautiful tribute into the store of human felicity than any sudden and transient flood of detached bounty, however ample, that may rush into it with a mighty sound.

GOOD ADVICE.

Be just, because equity is the support of the human species! Be good, because goodness connects all hearts! Be indulgent, because feeble thyself, thou livest with beings as feeble as thou art! Be gentle, because gentleness attracts affection! Be grateful, because gratitude feeds and nourishes benevolence! Be modest, because haughtiness is disgusting to beings smitten with themselves! Forgive injuries, because revenge perpetuates hatred! Do good to him that injureth thee, in order to show thyself more noble than he is, and to make a friend of him! Be reserved, temperate, and chaste, because voluptuousness, intemperance, and excess, will destroy thy being, and render thee contemptible! In short, be a man; be a sensible and rational being; be a faithful husband; a tender father; an equitable master; a zealous citizen; labor to serve the Lord by thy powers, thy talents, thine industry, and thy virtues; participate with thine associates those gifts which nature hath bestowed on thee; diffuse happiness, contentment, and joy, over all those who approach thee, that the sphere of thine actions, enlivened by thy kindness, may react upon thyself; be assured that the man who makes others happy, cannot be unhappy himself.

☞ It is in the earlier periods of life that thought and imagination are most active and vigorous; and in its decline, when the active principle becomes feeble, that memory acquires new strength, and often continues healthful to the latest period. This in some measure accounts for the fact that old persons rarely approve of modern inventions or allow that their own discoveries admit of improvement. They have a perfect recollection of the utility of every thing that obtained popular favor in their own day, but do not sufficiently investigate any new theory, to see and acknowledge its superiority.

☞ The human heart is a strange thing; but very often, for visible effects which seems unaccountable, there are secret causes sufficient for all. In our dealing with the world, and with each of our fellow men we are too often unjust, and not so much from judging wrongly as from judging at all. "Man can but judge from what he knows," is the common cry of those who find themselves fearfully wrong when all is explained; but the question which each should ask himself is, "Am I called upon to judge at all!" and too often the reply would be, "Judge not, and thou shalt not be judged; condemn not and thou shalt not be condemned;" and yet we do it every day and every hour, in our deeds, in our words, and in our thoughts, lacking that true charity of heart that "thinketh no evil."

SOUND ADVICE.

Never marry a girl who is fond of being always in the street—who is fond of running to night meetings—who has a jeweled hand and an empty head—who will see her mother work and toil while she lies in bed and reads novels, and feigns sickness.—Ex. Paper.

☞ A coquette is a young lady of more beauty than sense; more accomplishments than learning; more charms of person than graces of mind; more admirers than friends; more fools than wise men for attendants.

KINDNESS.

Is there one being, stubborn as the rock to misfortune, whom kindness does not affect! For my part, it seems to come with double grace and tenderness from the old: it seems in them the hoarded and long purified benevolence of years; as if it had survived and conquered the baseness and selfishness of the ordeal it had passed; as if the winds, which had broken the form, had swept in vain across the heart, and the frosts which had chilled the blood and whitened the thin locks, had possessed no power over the warm tide of affections. It is the triumph of nature over art: it is the voice of the angel which is yet within us. Nor is this all: the tenderness of age is twice blessed—blessed in its trophies over the obduracy of incrusting and withering years, blessed because it is tinged with the sanctity of the grave; because it tells us that the heart will blossom even upon the precincts of the tomb, and flatters us with the inviolacy and immortality of love.—Ex. paper.

☞ "My son," said an old turbaned Turk one day, taking his child by the hand, in the streets of Cairo, and pointing out to him on the opposite side a Frenchman, just imported, in all the elegance of Parisian costume, "my son look there! if you ever forget God and his Prophet, you may come to look like that!"

DEAL JUSTLY.

One of our religious exchanges has the following strong remarks on this subject. They drive the nail in to the head and clinch it:—

"Men may sophisticate as they please, they can never make it right, and all the laws in the universe cannot make it right for them not to pay their debts. There is sin in this neglect as clear and as deserving church discipline, as is in stealing or false swearing. He who violates his promises to pay, or withholds the payments of a debt, when it is in his power to meet his engagements, ought to be made to feel that, in the sight of all honest men, he is a swindler. Religion may be a very comfortable cloak under which to hide; but if religion does not make a man 'deal justly,' it is not worth having."

LIFE.

In any adversity that happens to us in the world, we ought to consider that misery and affliction are not less natural than hail or snow, storm and tempest; and that it was as reasonable to hope for a year without winter as for a life without trouble. Do well while thou livest, but regard not what is said of it. The humble current of little kindnesses, which, though but a creeping streamlet incessantly flows, although it glides in silent secrecy within the domestic walls, and along the walks of private life, and makes neither noise nor appearances in the world, pours in the end a more beautiful tribute into the store of human felicity than any sudden and transient flood of detached bounty, however ample, that may rush into it with a mighty sound.

GOOD ADVICE.

Be just, because equity is the support of the human species! Be good, because goodness connects all hearts! Be indulgent, because feeble thyself, thou livest with beings as feeble as thou art! Be gentle, because gentleness attracts affection! Be grateful, because gratitude feeds and nourishes benevolence! Be modest, because haughtiness is disgusting to beings smitten with themselves! Forgive injuries, because revenge perpetuates hatred! Do good to him that injureth thee, in order to show thyself more noble than he is, and to make a friend of him! Be reserved, temperate, and chaste, because voluptuousness, intemperance, and excess, will destroy thy being, and render thee contemptible! In short, be a man; be a sensible and rational being; be a faithful husband; a tender father; an equitable master; a zealous citizen; labor to serve the Lord by thy powers, thy talents, thine industry, and thy virtues; participate with thine associates those gifts which nature hath bestowed on thee; diffuse happiness, contentment, and joy, over all those who approach thee, that the sphere of thine actions, enlivened by thy kindness, may react upon thyself; be assured that the man who makes others happy, cannot be unhappy himself.

☞ It is in the earlier periods of life that thought and imagination are most active and vigorous; and in its decline, when the active principle becomes feeble, that memory acquires new strength, and often continues healthful to the latest period. This in some measure accounts for the fact that old persons rarely approve of modern inventions or allow that their own discoveries admit of improvement. They have a perfect recollection of the utility of every thing that obtained popular favor in their own day, but do not sufficiently investigate any new theory, to see and acknowledge its superiority.

☞ The human heart is a strange thing; but very often, for visible effects which seems unaccountable, there are secret causes sufficient for all. In our dealing with the world, and with each of our fellow men we are too often unjust, and not so much from judging wrongly as from judging at all. "Man can but judge from what he knows," is the common cry of those who find themselves fearfully wrong when all is explained; but the question which each should ask himself is, "Am I called upon to judge at all?" and too often the reply would be, "Judge not, and thou shalt not be judged; condemn not and thou shalt not be condemned;" and yet we do it every day and every hour, in our deeds, in our words, and in our thoughts, lacking that true charity of heart that "thinketh no evil."

SOUND ADVICE.

Never marry a girl who is fond of being always in the street—who is fond of running to night meetings—who has a jeweled hand and an empty head—who will see her mother work and toil while she lies in bed and reads novels, and feigns sickness.—Ex. Paper.

☞ A coquette is a young lady of more beauty than sense; more accomplishments than learning; more charms of person than graces of mind; more admirers than friends; more fools than wise men for attendants.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 5.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1850. [WHOLE No. 173.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

ZION BUILT AND ESTABLISHED FOR THE MILLENIUM.

This is a subject as little understood by the community at large, perhaps, as any one that we could mention; yet we consider it a glorious one, and one of great importance to the world; but before we proceed any farther, we will here take the opportunity to state that it is somewhat difficult to separate the various subjects strewed over the face of prophecy, in consequence of their amalgamation with each other. The subjects of the gathering of Israel, building of Zion, second coming of Christ, and the Millenium, are in some instances all mentioned in the same chapter; therefore, it is not an easy matter to treat upon one, without interfering with the others. In treating upon this subject, we shall, for the sake of brevity, dispense with much comment that might be made: for, indeed, the scriptures are plain of themselves, so much so, that they even point out the materials of which Zion shall be built.

But to hasten, we will commence with the prediction of Joel upon this subject, speaking of the great and notable day of the Lord, when there shall appear signs and wonders in the heavens, and on the earth, blood and fire, and pillars of smoke, the sun darkened and the moon turned into blood, he says: "And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered: for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call." Joel ii. 32. Obadiah says, verse 17th: "But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and the House of Jacob shall possess their possessions." Thus Mount Zion and Jerusalem are to be places of deliverance for those that call on the name of the Lord, at the great and notable day, when he shall cause destruction to come upon the wicked. Hence, we see the importance of a knowledge of this work. Isaiah in the lx. chapter of his prophecy describes the materials for the building of Zion; we insert the whole chapter.

"Arise, and shine; for thy light has come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: all they gather themselves together, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged; because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee. The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; all they from Sheba shall come: they shall bring gold and incense; and they shall shew forth the praises of the Lord. All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee: they shall come up with acceptance on mine altar, and I will glorify the house of my glory.

"Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows? Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 5.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1850. [WHOLE No. 173.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

ZION BUILT AND ESTABLISHED FOR THE MILLENIUM.

This is a subject as little understood by the community at large, perhaps, as any one that we could mention; yet we consider it a glorious one, and one of great importance to the world; but before we proceed any farther, we will here take the opportunity to state that it is somewhat difficult to separate the various subjects strewed over the face of prophecy, in consequence of their amalgamation with each other. The subjects of the gathering of Israel, building of Zion, second coming of Christ, and the Millenium, are in some instances all mentioned in the same chapter; therefore, it is not an easy matter to treat upon one, without interfering with the others. In treating upon this subject, we shall, for the sake of brevity, dispense with much comment that might be made: for, indeed, the scriptures are plain of themselves, so much so, that they even point out the materials of which Zion shall be built.

But to hasten, we will commence with the prediction of Joel upon this subject, speaking of the great and notable day of the Lord, when there shall appear signs and wonders in the heavens, and on the earth, blood and fire, and pillars of smoke, the sun darkened and the moon turned into blood, he says: "And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered: for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call." Joel ii. 32. Obadiah says, verse 17th: "But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and the House of Jacob shall possess their possessions." Thus Mount Zion and Jerusalem are to be places of deliverance for those that call on the name of the Lord, at the great and notable day, when he shall cause destruction to come upon the wicked. Hence, we see the importance of a knowledge of this work. Isaiah in the lx. chapter of his prophecy describes the materials for the building of Zion; we insert the whole chapter.

"Arise, and shine; for thy light has come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: all they gather themselves together, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged; because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee. The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; all they from Sheba shall come: they shall bring gold and incense; and they shall shew forth the praises of the Lord. All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee: they shall come up with acceptance on mine altar, and I will glorify the house of my glory.

"Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows? Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy

God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee. And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favor have I had mercy on thee: Therefore thy gates shall be open continually: they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought. For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted. The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious. The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the LORD, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.

"Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shalt suck the breasts of kings: and thou shalt know that I the Lord am thy Savior and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob. For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron: I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness. Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction in thy borders: but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates praise. The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory; thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time."

In the above it is said that the ships of Tarshish are to be engaged in bringing the people from far; also that the Gentiles shall come unto it, and that the Lord shall make it an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. Isaiah says in another place: "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel. And it shall come to pass, that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem: when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof, by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning. And the Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night: for upon all the glory shall be a defence. And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain."—Isa. iv. 4-6.

Again, Isaiah says: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Isa. ii. 2, 3. From this latter quotation, we learn that Zion is to be a place where people shall gather to from all nations; and that the law of God shall go forth from Zion to all nations. Christ, speaking to the Nephites, is very plain upon this subject: Book of Mormon, page 185, third edition.

"Verily, verily I say unto you, all these

God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee. And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favor have I had mercy on thee: Therefore thy gates shall be open continually: they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought. For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted. The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious. The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the LORD, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.

"Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shalt suck the breasts of kings: and thou shalt know that I the Lord am thy Savior and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob. For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron: I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness. Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction in thy borders: but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates praise. The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory; thy sun shall no more go down: neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time."

In the above it is said that the ships of Tarshish are to be engaged in bringing the people from far; also that the Gentiles shall come unto it, and that the Lord shall make it an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. Isaiah says in another place: "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel. And it shall come to pass, that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem: when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof, by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning. And the Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night: for upon all the glory shall be a defence. And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain."—Isa. iv. 4-6.

Again, Isaiah says: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Isa. ii. 2, 3. From this latter quotation we learn that Zion is to be a place where people shall gather to from all nations; and that the law of God shall go forth from Zion to all nations. Christ, speaking to the Nephites, is very plain upon this subject: Book of Mormon, page 485, third edition.

"Verily, verily I say unto you, all these things shall surely come, even as the Father hath commanded me. Then shall this covenant which the Father hath covenanted with his people, be fulfilled; and then shall Jerusalem be inhabited again with my people, and it shall be the land of their inheritance. And verily, I say unto you, I give unto you a sign, that ye may know the time when these things shall be about to take place, that I shall gather in from their long dispersion, my people, O house of Israel, and shall establish again among them, my Zion. And behold, this is the thing which I will give unto you for a sign, for verily, I say unto you, that when these things which I declare unto you, and which I shall declare unto you hereafter of myself, and by the power of the Holy Ghost, which shall be given unto you of the Father, shall be made known unto the Gentiles, that they may know concerning this people who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, and concerning this my people who shall be scattered by them; verily, verily I say unto you, when these things shall be made known unto them of the Father, and shall come forth of the Father, from them unto you, for it is wisdom in the Father that they should be established in this land, and be set up as a free people by the power of the Father, that these things might come forth from them unto a remnaut of your seed, that the covenant of the Father may be fulfilled which he hath covenanted with his people, O house of Israel; therefore, when these works, and the works which shall be wrought among you hereafter, shall come forth from the Gentiles unto your seed, which shall dwindle in unbelief because of iniquity: for thus it behooveth the Father that it should come forth from the Gentiles, that he may shew forth his power unto the Gentiles, for this cause, that the Gentiles, if they will not harden their hearts, that they may repent and come unto me, and be baptized in my name, and know of the true points of my doctrine, that they may be numbered among my people, O house of Israel; and when these things come to pass, that thy seed shall begin to know these things, it shall be a sign unto them, that they may know that the work of the Father hath already commenced unto the fulfilling of the covenant which he hath made unto the people who are of the house of Israel. And when that day shall come, it shall come to pass that kings shall shut their mouths; for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider. For in that day, for my sake shall the Father work a work, which shall be a great and a marvelous work among them; and there shall be among them those who will not believe it, although a man shall declare it unto them."

Much more might be said upon this subject; but we think it unnecessary at present: for enough has already been said to convince every candid mind that a Zion or New Jerusalem will be built and prepared for the Millenium; also, that the ancient city of Jerusalem will be rebuilt.

DIED,

In Lockport, Niagara Co., N. Y., on the 7th of March, 1850, of consumption, Bro. Wm. M. DeLaMater, in the 28th year of his age.

He died strong in the faith of the work of God in the latter days, and in God's prophet. When I first saw him he was a stanch and honest Deist; and being attacked by sectarian priests, had every time come off victorious in argument against their pretensions to christianity. But when he heard me proclaim the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, showing that the same cause would produce the same effects under like circumstances, when he heard me challenge five Brighamite Elders to discuss Bro. Strang's claims to the Presidency of the church, and they dare not, when he heard me prove to a demonstration that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and also God appointed James J. Strang through him, he, as an honest man, acknowledged the truth of revelation, and God's prophets, and the work of the latter days, was baptized and ordained a Priest; and, being prepared, he has gone home to work "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the bands of the prisoner fall off." "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." Rev. xiv. 13.

H. P. B.

things shall surely come, even as the Father hath commanded me. Then shall this covenant which the Father hath covenanted with his people, be fulfilled; and then shall Jerusalem be inhabited again with my people, and it shall be the land of their inheritance. And verily, I say unto you, I give unto you a sign, that ye may know the time when these things shall be about to take place, that I shall gather in from their long dispersion, my people, O house of Israel, and shall establish again among them, my Zion. And behold, this is the thing which I will give unto you for a sign, for verily, I say unto you, that when these things which I declare unto you, and which I shall declare unto you hereafter of myself, and by the power of the Holy Ghost, which shall be given unto you of the Father, shall be made known unto the Gentiles, that they may know concerning this people who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, and concerning this my people who shall be scattered by them; verily, verily I say unto you, when these things shall be made known unto them of the Father, and shall come forth of the Father, from them unto you, for it is wisdom in the Father that they should be established in this land, and be set up as a free people by the power of the Father, that these things might come forth from them unto a remnant of your seed, that the covenant of the Father may be fulfilled which he hath covenanted with his people, O house of Israel; therefore, when these works, and the works which shall be wrought among you hereafter, shall come forth from the Gentiles unto your seed, which shall dwindle in unbelief because of iniquity: for thus it behooveth the Father that it should come forth from the Gentiles, that he may shew forth his power unto the Gentiles, for this cause, that the Gentiles, if they will not harden their hearts, that they may repent and come unto me, and be baptized in my name, and know of the true points of my doctrine, that they may be numbered among my people, O house of Israel; and when these things come to pass, that thy seed shall begin to know these things, it shall be a sign unto them, that they may know that the work of the Father hath already commenced unto the fulfilling of the covenant which he hath made unto the people who are of the house of Israel. And when that day shall come, it shall come to pass that kings shall shut their mouths; for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider. For in that day, for my sake shall the Father work a work, which shall be a great and a marvelous work among them; and there shall be among them those who will not believe it, although a man shall declare it unto them."

Much more might be said upon this subject; but we think it unnecessary at present: for enough has already been said to convince every candid mind that a Zion or New Jerusalem will be built and prepared for the Millenium; also, that the ancient city of Jerusalem will be rebuilt.

DIED,

In Lockport, Niagara Co., N. Y., on the 7th of March, 1850, of consumption, Bro. Wm. M. DeLaMater, in the 28th year of his age.

He died strong in the faith of the work of God in the latter days, and in God's prophet. When I first saw him he was a stanch and honest Deist; and being attacked by sectarian priests, had every time come off victorious in argument against their pretensions to christianity. But when he heard me proclaim the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, showing that the same cause would produce the same effects under like circumstances, when he heard me challenge five Brighamite Elders to discuss Bro. Strang's claims to the Presidency of the church, and they dare not, when he heard me prove to a demonstration that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and also God appointed James J. Strang through him, he, as an honest man, acknowledged the truth of revelation, and God's prophets, and the work of the latter days, was baptized and ordained a Priest; and, being prepared, he has gone home to work "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the bands of the prisoner fall off." "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." Rev. xiv. 13.

H. P. B.

Prattsburg, N. Y., March 30th, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—I think perhaps a few lines to the saints through the Herald might not be amiss. So I write, however it is at your disposal. Insert it if you think proper. I have heard but little from Voree lately. I preached in Madison Co. some time, in different towns, where the fullness of the gospel had never been heard; finding, as usual, the influence of all orthodox teachers setting against me, I went directly to their synagogues, and offered to compare or measure strength with them. But they seem to think that "error" may be stronger than (their) truth; for they studiously avoid an encounter. But the "rulers" very piously cast me out of their synagogues.

A very good influence, however, is felt in that region, and many testify of a truth that "this is indeed the gospel." I baptized some half a dozen just before I left, and among them an uncle, who was ordained an Elder. There is every prospect of a large branch being raised up in that place. There seems to be a general blight upon the sects in this State, at least as far as my observation has extended. They are converting their churches into boarding-houses, hay-barns and play houses. One of the largest class of churches in Syracuse is used for a theatre, while others are literally the habitations of moles and bats, (or rats,) and the cricket chants forth his grating note where the choir used to sing their "sacred songs."

This reminds me of a certain passage in Pliny's letter to Trajan, wherein he deplores the forsaking of "the temples of the Roman gods, caused by the teaching of the disciples of Christ." If there is a parallel in the cases, what a sweeping inference flows from it! Are these heathen temples? Must they be abandoned to become saints? Who will answer? What are "synagogues of Satan?" Does any act the part of Pliny and Trajan now? Call up Joseph and Hyrum, and David Patten, and a score of others who were as "inflexible" and "obstinate" in adhering to their faith as those Pliny dealt with, and were deemed equally "deserving to be punished," (that is, killed.) And have not the patrons of these "churches" (now desolated) sat in council with the shedders of innocent blood? The very breath inhaled in these pulpits has served to blow the flame of prejudice—to inflate all the angry passions of the "baser sort," who have acted out as did their "fathers when they killed the prophets, and those that were sent unto them," and the desolation of their "houses" is but the foretaste of that "utter desolation which is determined" upon the earth and the inhabitants, who "know not the truth," and "obey not the gospel."

This has emphatically been called a day of wonders. The power of steam, as recently developed and applied, is truly a wonder. The taming the "fierce lightning" to do our bidding is wonderful. The coming forth of the "Book of Mormon," and its translation by the "unlearned," and the subsequent gathering of so many ten thousands through the ministry of that "unlearned" man is a common wonder. And that he should, just before his death, while surrounded with threatning and menace "foreboding of evil," and consternation of friends, with the solicitude for those ties endeared by blood and the common instinct of self-preservation, that he should quietly sit down and "appoint another in his stead," knowing that this "other" could not act until he was "offered up," is also a wonder.

This is too wonderful for many, who said, as they did in David's time, (see Psa. lxxiv. 9,) "There is no more any prophet, neither is there any among us that knoweth how long," (before we will have a prophet,) "to the end of these wonders." If none can reach the "end" of wonders, who (but the wicked) will stumble or mock because of wonders? But here is a new wonder presenting itself, claiming to be "heard," and many cannot avoid obeying the mandate "to hear."

I refer to the "mysterious rappings" in this State, more especially at Rochester and Auburn. You have doubtless heard of them, that the rappings purport to be caused by spirits of the departed, and they spell out by the alpha-

Prattsburg, N. Y., March 30th, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—I think perhaps a few lines to the saints through the Herald might not be amiss. So I write, however it is at your disposal. Insert it if you think proper. I have heard but little from Voree lately. I preached in Madison Co. some time, in different towns, where the fullness of the gospel had never been heard; finding, as usual, the influence of all orthodox teachers setting against me, I went directly to their synagogues, and offered to compare or measure strength with them. But they seem to think that "error" may be stronger than (their) truth; for they studiously avoid an encounter. But the "rulers" very piously cast me out of their synagogues.

A very good influence, however, is felt in that region, and many testify of a truth that "this is indeed the gospel." I baptized some half a dozen just before I left, and among them an uncle, who was ordained an Elder. There is every prospect of a large branch being raised up in that place. There seems to be a general blight upon the sects in this State, at least as far as my observation has extended. They are converting their churches into boarding-houses, hay-barns and play houses. One of the largest class of churches in Syracuse is used for a theatre, while others are literally the habitations of moles and bats, (or rats,) and the cricket chants forth his grating note where the choir used to sing their "sacred songs."

This reminds me of a certain passage in Pliny's letter to Trajan, wherein he deplores the forsaking of "the temples of the Roman gods, caused by the teaching of the disciples of Christ." If there is a parallel in the cases, what a sweeping inference flows from it! Are these heathen temples? Must they be abandoned to become saints? Who will answer? What are "synagogues of Satan?" Does any act the part of Pliny and Trajan now? Call up Joseph and Hyrum, and David Patten, and a score of others who were as "inflexible" and "obstinate" in adhering to their faith as those Pliny dealt with, and were deemed equally "deserving to be punished," (that is, killed.) And have not the patrons of these "churches" (now desolated) sat in council with the shedders of innocent blood? The very breath inhaled in these pulpits has served to blow the flame of prejudice—to inflate all the angry passions of the "baser sort," who have acted out as did their "fathers when they killed the prophets, and those that were sent unto them," and the desolation of their "houses" is but the foretaste of that "utter desolation which is determined" upon the earth and the inhabitants, who "know not the truth," and "obey not the gospel."

This has emphatically been called a day of wonders. The power of steam, as recently developed and applied, is truly a wonder. The taming the "fierce lightning" to do our bidding is wonderful. The coming forth of the "Book of Mormon," and its translation by the "unlearned," and the subsequent gathering of so many ten thousands through the ministry of that "unlearned" man is a common wonder. And that he should, just before his death, while surrounded with threatning and menace "foreboding of evil," and consternation of friends, with the solicitude for those ties endeared by blood and the common instinct of self-preservation, that he should quietly sit down and "appoint another in his stead," knowing that this "other" could not act until he was "offered up," is also a wonder.

This is too wonderful for many, who said, as they did in David's time, (see Psa. lxxiv. 9,) "There is no more any prophet, neither is there any among us that knoweth how long," (before we will have a prophet,) "to the end of these wonders." If none can reach the "end" of wonders, who (but the wicked) will stumble or mock because of wonders? But here is a new wonder presenting itself, claiming to be "heard," and many cannot avoid obeying the mandate "to hear."

I refer to the "mysterious rappings" in this State, more especially at Rochester and Auburn. You have doubtless heard of them, that the rappings purport to be caused by spirits of the departed, and they spell out by the alphabet what they wish to communicate. Hundreds, perhaps thousands in this State, have tested this matter to their satisfaction, and verily believe them bona fide spirits, and their communications they regard as truth. So by putting on record the following questions and answers this class of persons might be benefited.

I heard the questions asked, (and asked part of them myself,) and the answers given by the "rappings." Question. Do you know (addressing the spirit) anything about the "Book of Mormon?" Answer. Yes. Ques. Did Joseph Smith translate that Book? Ans. Yes. Ques. Is it a true record? Ans. Yes. Ques. Record of what? Ans. O-n-e e-v-e-n-t. I had some questions answered seemingly too hard for strangers or men to answer, unless they could read the mind. I took from my pocket the "Diamond" unknown to any in the house or the city, (Auburn,) put my finger on the letter of appointment and asked, is this document what it purports to be? Ans. Yes. Ques. Who wrote this? The answer was, Joseph Smith. The admonition of the Apostle, "try the spirits," will most assuredly commend itself to this generation. There are many in this place believing. Yours in the faith of the Son of God, J. W. BRIGGS.

Leeds, C. W., March 27th, 1850,

DEAR FRANK:—Knowing that the saints feel an interest in the cause of truth, I sit down this morning to inform them of the work in Canada. The work is rolling on. There are calls for preaching on every side of us. Things wear a different aspect at this time than when I first came here. Last fall, in the month of September, I commenced preaching; some believed, some disbelieved. Some said I had better be at work, some threatened to mob me, and some threatened to tar and feather me. But I put my trust in God. I was here alone, without money, poorly clad, and cold weather coming on. I prayed to God continually to commence a work here. God heard my prayers, and I commenced to baptize some. The hireling priests began to howl. They knew their craft was in danger.

At this time the Lord in his kindness sent Bro. Gurley. We preached in this place, Crosby, and Lansdown till in the month of January, when Bro. Savage came, and he backed up our testimony, that the word of God might be true, and out of the mouths of two or three witnesses every word might be established.—We commenced baptizing, and, through the blessing of God, we have a church built up here of twenty-six members, including two Elders, one Priest, one Teacher, and one Deacon. Besides this there are several members scattered about over the country, in one place and another, and a great many more believing the word, who I expect will be baptized before we go west.

Bro. Savage has gone to the Indian woods to preach to the Lamanites. He has been gone five weeks. We have not heard from him since he went away, but I expect he has had good success, or he would have been back before this time. Bro. Gurley has gone to York State, to help the saints to gather up to the Island. The spirit of gathering prevails among the saints every where I have been. In this place all the talk is about Beaver and preaching the gospel. They are willing to do all they can to roll on the work. Sometime since I went on a short mission to the front end of Lansdown, and took Bro. Andrew Cairns with me. He is a brother to John Cairns, and I think he will fill his place in preaching. On the 20th of this month I had the pleasure of hearing him preach to a congregation, who believed what he said to be true. He has a great desire to go to Scotland, his native land. I think he would be just the man, for he is a well informed man, of good sound judgment; and, what is more than all, he has a testimony of the work through the gifts of the gospel.

We returned to Leeds on Saturday, the 24th. When I heard where the meeting was, I hurried to the place; the meeting had commenced. A young Elder, who, when I came here, was in the vanities of the world, but now a preach-bet what they wish to communicate. Hundreds, perhaps thousands in this State, have tested this matter to their satisfaction, and verily believe them bona fide spirits, and their communications they regard as truth. So by putting on record the following questions and answers this class of persons might be benefited.

I heard the questions asked, (and asked part of them myself,) and the answers given by the "rappings." Question. Do you know (addressing the spirit) anything about the "Book of Mormon?" Answer. Yes. Ques. Did Joseph Smith translate that Book? Ans. Yes. Ques. Is it a true record? Ans. Yes. Ques. Record of what? Ans. O-n-e e-v-e-n-t. I had some questions answered seemingly too hard for strangers or men to answer, unless they could read the mind. I took from my pocket the "Diamond" unknown to any in the house or the city, (Auburn.) put my finger on the letter of appointment and asked, is this document what it purports to be? Ans. Yes. Ques. Who wrote this? The answer was, Joseph Smith. The admonition of the Apostle, "try the spirits," will most assuredly commend itself to this generation. There are many in this place believing. Yours in the faith of the Son of God, J. W. BRIGGS.

Leeds, C. W., March 27th, 1850,

DEAR FRANK:—Knowing that the saints feel an interest in the cause of truth, I sit down this morning to inform them of the work in Canada. The work is rolling on. There are calls for preaching on every side of us. Things wear a different aspect at this time than when I first came here. Last fall, in the month of September, I commenced preaching; some believed, some disbelieved. Some said I had better be at work, some threatened to mob me, and some threatened to tar and feather me. But I put my trust in God. I was here alone, without money, poorly clad, and cold weather coming on. I prayed to God continually to commence a work here. God heard my prayers, and I commenced to baptize some. The hireling priests began to howl. They knew their craft was in danger.

At this time the Lord in his kindness sent Bro. Gurley. We preached in this place, Crosby, and Lansdown till in the month of January, when Bro. Savage came, and he backed up our testimony, that the word of God might be true, and out of the mouths of two or three witnesses every word might be established.—We commenced baptizing, and, through the blessing of God, we have a church built up here of twenty-six members, including two Elders, one Priest, one Teacher, and one Deacon. Besides this there are several members scattered about over the country, in one place and another, and a great many more believing the word, who I expect will be baptized before we go west.

Bro. Savage has gone to the Indian woods to preach to the Lamanites. He has been gone five weeks. We have not heard from him since he went away, but I expect he has had good success, or he would have been back before this time. Bro. Gurley has gone to York State, to help the saints to gather up to the Island. The spirit of gathering prevails among the saints every where I have been. In this place all the talk is about Beaver and preaching the gospel. They are willing to do all they can to roll on the work. Sometime since I went on a short mission to the front end of Lansdown, and took Bro. Andrew Cairns with me. He is a brother to John Cairns, and I think he will fill his place in preaching. On the 20th of this month I had the pleasure of hearing him preach to a congregation, who believed what he said to be true. He has a great desire to go to Scotland, his native land. I think he would be just the man, for he is a well informed man, of good sound judgment; and, what is more than all, he has a testimony of the work through the gifts of the gospel.

We returned to Leeds on Saturday, the 24th. When I heard where the meeting was, I hurried to the place; the meeting had commenced. A young Elder, who, when I came here, was in the vanities of the world, but now a preacher, was addressing the congregation. He spoke about one hour and a half, to the astonishment of all that heard him. So you see the power of God is with us. The sick are healed. The gifts of the gospel that were spoken of by the Savior and also by the Apostles are made manifest. Such as speaking in tongues, interpreting tongues, &c. I expect to start for Voree the first of May. There are several families that intend to go with me. I expect Bro. Gurley will go with a company about the same time from Jefferson Co., N. Y. Bro. Savage expects to go about the first of June, and take some up with him. I remain as ever a minister of the new covenant, PHINEAS WRIGHT.

"OTHER SACRED RECORDS."

Here is rather a rich idea from J. C. Brewster's "Burlington, Wis., correspondent, Dec. 10th, 1849," page 107, Vol. 2, Olive Branch. Hear it, ye wise men of the "dispensation of the fullness of times:" "Our meetings (at Voree) continue to be interesting; in which we read the Olive Branch and OTHER sacred records." From these words, "the Olive Branch and other sacred records," we are as much as told the "Olive Branch" is a "sacred record."

What is it a record of? And what makes it any more "sacred" than a Baptist or Presbyterian journal of their church, doctrines, events? &c., &c. If it is a sacred record, is it one of the "two hundred and four" books of Esdras, or, as the marginal reading has it, "nine hundred and four books," which gives it the sacredness of which the "Burlington, Wis., correspondent" speaks? I never mistrusted the Olive Branch was ranked by the Brewsterites with the "other sacred records" before. But perhaps this writer was afraid Brewster would fail in his life time to write the "two hundred and four books," or, as the marginal reading has it, "nine hundred and four books," and he wants to help him get them out to the world by ranking the Olive Branch among "the other sacred records." H. P. BROWN.

LIFE.

"My life is a lovely story, happy, and full of incident." This is the first sentence in Hans Christian Andersen's "True Story of my Life," and the sequel fully bears out the observation. Romance and beauty are shed in endless variety around his path; a loving genius seems always to accompany him. But of how few, comparatively, who have lived, or are now living, can this remark truthfully be said? The fact is, that human life, in all its forms, and, taken in the aggregate, presents a preponderance of sorrow and misery over real and genuine happiness. The uncertainty of friendship, the frequent disappointment, the physical ills, and the accident of death, serve to shroud this life in a mourning dress as it were; and the folly of man himself, expending itself in vice, reaps for him an abundant harvest of trouble and perplexity.

His is a general view of life, but in its details we notice every variety of difference.—Like the chameleon, it possesses its own true and proper complexion, but varies according to the light in which it is viewed. The sanguine man sees all things in the "rosy light" of hope and promise; to the misanthrope everybody and everything "goes contrary." To the one life is a constantly glowing sunshine, to the other it is a dreary and cloudy landscape. The wicked collect from life all that is ignoble and impure, and may be said to live in the dungeons of the world, shut in from the healthy atmosphere without; the good see in life all that can create thankfulness, and lead men to God.

The homely farmer, who seldom leaves his chair in the chimney corner long enough to get cold, may be said to live at the bottom of a deep valley, shut out from the mighty prospect beyond. A prominent statesman, who takes part in the greatest events of the day, may, in like manner, be said to stand on a lofty hill, whence he beholds the vast landscape of the world, spreading around and beneath him. To these two men what a different thing life is! both possessing similar faculties, their lives are as widely sundered as the poles. Some people devote themselves to one pursuit and some to er, was addressing the congregation. He spoke about one hour and a half, to the astonishment of all that heard him. So you see the power of God is with us. The sick are healed. The gifts of the gospel that were spoken of by the Savior and also by the Apostles are made manifest. Such as speaking in tongues, interpreting tongues, &c. I expect to start for Voree the first of May. There are several families that intend to go with me. I expect Bro. Gurley will go with a company about the same time from Jefferson Co., N. Y. Bro. Savage expects to go about the first of June, and take some up with him. I remain as ever a minister of the new covenant, PHINEAS WRIGHT.

"OTHER SACRED RECORDS."

Here is rather a rich idea from J. C. Brewster's "Burlington, Wis., correspondent, Dec. 10th, 1849," page 107, Vol. 2, Olive Branch. Hear it, ye wise men of the "dispensation of the fullness of times:" "Our meetings (at Voree) continue to be interesting; in which we read the Olive Branch and OTHER sacred records." From these words, "the Olive Branch and other sacred records," we are as much as told the "Olive Branch" is a "sacred record."

What is it a record of? And what makes it any more "sacred" than a Baptist or Presbyterian journal of their church, doctrines, events? &c., &c. If it is a sacred record, is it one of the "two hundred and four" books of Esdras, or, as the marginal reading has it, "nine hundred and four books," which gives it the sacredness of which the "Burlington, Wis., correspondent" speaks? I never mistrusted the Olive Branch was ranked by the Brewsterites with the "other sacred records" before. But perhaps this writer was afraid Brewster would fail in his life time to write the "two hundred and four books," or, as the marginal reading has it, "nine hundred and four books," and he wants to help him get them out to the world by ranking the Olive Branch among "the other sacred records." H. P. BROWN.

LIFE.

"My life is a lovely story, happy, and full of incident." This is the first sentence in Hans Christian Andersen's "True Story of my Life," and the sequel fully bears out the observation. Romance and beauty are shed in endless variety around his path; a loving genius seems always to accompany him. But of how few comparatively, who have lived, or are now living, can this remark truthfully be said? The fact is, that human life, in all its forms, and taken in the aggregate, presents a preponderance of sorrow and misery over real and genuine happiness. The uncertainty of friendship, the frequent disappointment, the physical ills, and the accident of death, serve to shroud this life in a mourning dress as it were; and the folly of man himself, expending itself in vice, reaps for him an abundant harvest of trouble and perplexity.

His is a general view of life, but in its details we notice every variety of difference.—Like the chameleon, it possesses its own true and proper complexion, but varies according to the light in which it is viewed. The sanguine man sees all things in the "rosy light" of hope and promise; to the misanthrope everybody and everything "goes contrary." To the one life is a constantly glowing sunshine, to the other it is a dreary and cloudy landscape. The wicked collect from life all that is ignoble and impure, and may be said to live in the dungeons of the world, shut in from the healthy atmosphere without; the good see in life all that can create thankfulness, and lead men to God.

The homely farmer, who seldom leaves his chair in the chimney corner long enough to get cold, may be said to live at the bottom of a deep valley, shut out from the mighty prospect beyond. A prominent statesman, who takes part in the greatest events of the day, may, in like manner, be said to stand on a lofty hill, whence he beholds the vast landscape of the world, spreading around and beneath him. To these two men what a different thing life is! both possessing similar faculties, their lives are as widely sundered as the poles. Some people devote themselves to one pursuit and some to another, each regarding life as the means to his own particular end. Thus does the warrior look upon the world as one grand battle field, and life as time given for martial employment.

The scholar sees "books in the running brooks;" to him life is one great book. The man of fashion treats life as a circle, to be made up continually of opera, ball and rout; and, accordingly, he lives for these things. The philosopher deems life a period to be devoted to contemplation; his existence is a long continued study. How different is life to the rich and the poor; the healthy and the sick! To a merry girl, surrounded by affluence and the comforts of home, life laughs; to the poor orphan it is dressed in tears. Life has many faces; various as those that look at it. The world contains much happiness, it also contains much misery; there is the happy home and likewise the desolate hearth. There are kind angels scattered about the earth here and there, but we often meet with demons in human form.—Some people use life as it should be used; the majority, alas! abuse it. Many live merely to enjoy themselves, happy if they succeed in being wafted down the stream of existence without much obstruction to their personal comfort—this is abusing life. Others, happily, regard life as a discipline, and an opportunity of improvement and progression—these use it. To meet the responsibilities and duties of life manfully; to seek to "grow wiser and better as time wears away" should be our grand aim, and in proportion as we carry this out, so shall we reap from life more and more treasures, and assimilate it more to that which Hans Christian Andersen described his to be.—Ex. Paper.

ATTEMPTING TOO MUCH.

There is such a thing in this world as attempting too much.—With all the haste to get rich, there is still more haste to "show off" what one is really not worth. If people could conceive the ridiculous attitude which they place themselves in by attempting an appearance which nothing short of the most exorbitant hopes could justify, they would be prone to draw their horns in a bit, and to practice a little more contentment and a little more honesty. They remind us of the villa of a gentleman, which though its rooms were but closets, presented such a gallant outside, that we will hastily describe it. It has turrets two feet in breadth, with battlements like the side crust of a Christmas goose pie. To complete the appearance of a castle, you enter by a drawbridge, which exactly resembles the lid of a traveling trunk. To the right of the house is a puddle, dignified with the name of a harbor, and defended by two redoubts, under cover of which lies a vessel of the size of an ordinary bathing tub. We might put more in the picture, but we have said enough to show that the gentleman of the villa, like a great many others, makes too much outside show. Of course no one can help smiling at this weak assumption of importance. Cut your coat according to your cloth, is a homely but common-sense adage. The man who is honest with himself, who assumes nothing but what is just, will not be apt to assume too much.

PLEASURE OF READING.

Of all the amusements that one can possibly imagine for a working man, after daily toils or in the intervals, there is nothing like reading a newspaper or book. It calls for no bodily exertion, of which already he has had enough, perhaps too much. It relieves his home of dullness and sameness. Nay, it accompanies him to his day's work, and gives him something to think of besides the mere mechanical drudgery of his every day occupation; something he can enjoy while absent, and look forward to with pleasure. If I were to pray for a taste which would stand by me under every variety of circumstances, and be a source of happiness and cheerfulness to me through life, and a shield against all its ills, however things might go amiss, and the world frown upon me, it would be a taste for reading.—Herschel.

THEY SAY.

Whenever anybody comes to you with a story concerning somebody or anything, and prefaces it with the stereotype phrase, "they say," you may rest assured that nine times out of ten, that report, remark, or story, is a lie. When the author of a report must be suppressed, there is something wrong in "Denmark." No story, true in all its parts, need be prefaced with "they say." Let those who know it report it boldly, or keep it an entire secret. We could bring some illustrations of this subject did we deem it at all necessary. No doubt every man will readily apply it to himself.—Columbia Democrat.

News from Beaver Island.—Just as we were going to press we received the mail from Beaver Island for the first time this season. The news was cheering indeed. The winter has been very mild. The propeller Montecello arrived there on the 6th inst., being six days earlier than the earliest arrival last year. The saints are in good health and spirits, and have spent the winter agreeably. Particulars next week.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

William G. Harris,	$2,00	to Vol. V. No. 30
Stephen Post,	3,00	to Vol. V. No. 28
Mrs. H. Wooster,	2,00	to Vol. V. No. 52
George W. Duncan,	1,00	to Vol. V. No. 26

another, each regarding life as the means to his own particular end. Thus does the warrior look upon the world as one grand battle field, and life as time given for martial employment.

The scholar sees "books in the running brooks;" to him life is one great book. The man of fashion treats life as a circle, to be made up continually of opera, ball and rout; and, accordingly, he lives for these things. The philosopher deems life a period to be devoted to contemplation; his existence is a long continued study. How different is life to the rich and the poor; the healthy and the sick! To a merry girl, surrounded by affluence and the comforts of home, life laughs; to the poor orphan it is dressed in tears. Life has many faces; various as those that look at it. The world contains much happiness, it also contains much misery; there is the happy home and likewise the desolate hearth. There are kind angels scattered about the earth here and there, but we often meet with demons in human form.—Some people use life as it should be used; the majority, alas! abuse it. Many live merely to enjoy themselves, happy if they succeed in being wafted down the stream of existence without much obstruction to their personal comfort—this is abusing life. Others, happily, regard life as a discipline, and an opportunity of improvement and progression—these use it. To meet the responsibilities and duties of life manfully; to seek to "grow wiser and better as time wears away" should be our grand aim, and in proportion as we carry this out, so shall we reap from life more and more treasures, and assimilate it more to that which Hans Christian Andersen described his to be.—Ex. Paper.

ATTEMPTING TOO MUCH.

There is such a thing in this world as attempting too much.—With all the haste to get rich, there is still more haste to "show off" what one is really not worth. If people could conceive the ridiculous attitude which they place themselves in by attempting an appearance which nothing short of the most exorbitant hopes could justify, they would be prone to draw their horns in a bit, and to practice a little more contentment and a little more honesty. They remind us of the villa of a gentleman, which though its rooms were but closets, presented such a gallant outside, that we will hastily describe it. It has turrets two feet in breadth, with battlements like the side crust of a Christmas goose pie. To complete the appearance of a castle, you enter by a drawbridge, which exactly resembles the lid of a traveling trunk. To the right of the house is a puddle, dignified with the name of a harbor, and defended by two redoubts, under cover of which lies a vessel of the size of an ordinary bathing tub. We might put more in the picture, but we have said enough to show that the gentleman of the villa, like a great many others, makes too much outside show. Of course no one can help smiling at this weak assumption of importance. Cut your coat according to your cloth, is a homely but common-sense adage. The man who is honest with himself, who assumes nothing but what is just, will not be apt to assume too much.

PLEASURE OF READING.

Of all the amusements that one can possibly imagine for a working man, after daily toils or in the intervals, there is nothing like reading a newspaper or book. It calls for no bodily exertion, of which already he has had enough, perhaps too much. It relieves his home of dullness and sameness. Nay, it accompanies him to his day's work, and gives him something to think of besides the mere mechanical drudgery of his every day occupation; something he can enjoy while absent, and look forward to with pleasure. If I were to pray for a taste which would stand by me under every variety of circumstances, and be a source of happiness and cheerfulness to me through life, and a shield against all its ills, however things might go amiss, and the world frown upon me, it would be a taste for reading.—Herschel.

THEY SAY.

Whenever anybody comes to you with a story concerning somebody or anything, and prefaces it with the stereotype phrase, "they say," you may rest assured that nine times out of ten, that report, remark, or story, is a lie. When the author of a report must be suppressed, there is something wrong in "Denmark." No story, true in all its parts, need be prefaced with "they say." Let those who know it report it boldly, or keep it an entire secret. We could bring some illustrations of this subject did we deem it at all necessary. No doubt every man will readily apply it to himself.—Columbia Democrat.

NEWS FROM BEAVER ISLAND.—Just as we were going to press we received the mail from Beaver Island for the first time this season. The news was cheering indeed. The winter has been very mild. The propeller Montecello arrived there on the 6th inst., being six days earlier than the earliest arrival last year. The saints are in good health and spirits, and have spent the winter agreeably. Particulars next week.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

William G. Harris,	$2,00 to Vol. V. No. 30
Stephen Post,	3,00 to Vol. V. No. 28
Mrs. H. Wooster,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 52
George W. Duncan,	1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26

ODE TO SPRING.

BY MISS ELIZA R. SNOW.

Joyous spring! with joy I greet thee—
In thy smiles, I smile to meet thee,
Now stern winter's frown is gone:
Nature welcomes thy retiring—
Laying off her garb of mourning,
Puts her bridal tresses on.

Insects round my feet are humming—
Music on each gale is coming
With a soft, melodious sound:
Beauty wakens from its slumbers,
And in countless, flowing numbers
Pleasure's streams are eddying round.

Mingled flowrets gaily blooming,
With the twilight breeze perfuming,
Glade and glen: the woodland grow:
With unnumber'd speeches ringing—
There the sportive tribes are singing
Tender sonnets to their loves.

There the city's heart rejoices—
Business with her thousand voices,
With improvement steps apace:
Architecture is unfolding,
Specimens of richest moulding,
Rising up with lofty grace.

Welcome spring! estranged from sadness—
Paragon of nature's gladness!
Welcome to a heart like mine:
Other seasons have their pleasures—
Autumn has its dropping treasutes—
Hope's fair prospect, spring is thine.

ADVICE TO BOYS.

Be brisk, energetic, and prompt. The world is full of boys, and men too, who drawl through life, and decide on nothing for themselves, but just draggle one leg after the other, and let things take their own way. Such people are the dull stuff of the earth. They hardly deserve as much credit as the wooden trees, for the trees do all they can in merely growing, and bearing only leaves and seeds. But these poor, drawling, and draggling boys do not turn their capacities to profit half as far as they might be turned; they are unprofitable, like a rainy day in harvest time.

Now the brisk, energetic boy will be continually awake, not merely with his bodily eyes, but with his mind and attention during the hours of business. After he learns what he has to do, he will take pride in doing it punctually and well, and would be ashamed to be told what he ought to do without telling. The drawling boy loses in five minutes the most important advice; the prompt, wide-awake boy never has to be taught twice, but strains hard to make himself up to the mark, as far as possible out of his own energies. Third-rate boys are always depending on others; but first-rate boys depend upon themselves, and after a little teaching, just enough to know what is to be done, they ask no further favors of anybody. Besides, it is a glorious thing for a boy to get this noble way of self-reliance, activity, and energy.

CURIOUS SYMPATHY OF SOUND.

It is owing to the sympathetic communication of vibrations, that persons with a clear and powerful voice, have been able to break a large tumbler glass, by singing close to it its proper fundamental note. We have heard of a place where a person broke no fewer than twelve large glasses in succession. The sympathy of vibration, or tendency of one vibrating body to another in the very same state of vibration, shows itself remarkably in the case of the going of two clocks fixed to the same shelf or wall. It was known near a century ago, that two clocks set a going on the same shelf will affect each other. The pendulum of the one will stop that of the other, and the pendulum of the clock that is stopped, after a certain time will resume its vibrations, and in its turn, stop that of the other clock. Mr. John Ellicott, who first observed these effects, noticed that two clocks, which varied from each other ninety-six seconds a day, agreed, to a second, several days when they were placed on the same rail. The slowest of these two clocks, which had a slower pendulum, set the other in motion in sixteen minutes and a half. These effects are clearly produced by the small vibrations communicated from one pendulum to the other, through the shelf or rail, or plank on which they both rest. It has been found that two conflicting sounds produce silence, as two converging rays of light produce darkness.—Herschel on Sonnd.

MUSIC.

How many emotions are there indigenous to the human breast that can only find vent in song! Man could never have been without it else he would not have possessed the soul capable of such emotions. Our earliest knowledge of the first tribes of the earth show us that they were no strangers to the art divine. Music had found an early home through all the world: even the wild Indian has his chant, his war song, and his death song. Let us duly appreciate an art which is so peculiarly calculated to add to our happiness, to assist in the cultivation of the better feelings of the heart; let us cultivate an amusement so rational and innocent, thereby adding to the pure, quiet, fireside enjoyments of home.

☞ It has been observed, with much significance, that every morning we enter upon a new day, carrying still an unknown future in its bosom. How pregnant and stirring the reflection. Thoughts may be born to-day which will never die. Feelings may be awakened to-day which will never be extinguished. Hopes may be performed to-day, the consequences of which may be realized during eternity.

☞ How mean a thing is a man with little motive power!—All the abilities nature has given him lie useless, like a great and beautiful machine, ready at every point for useful action, but not a wheel turns for want of a starting power! And the true and indispensable power is energy.

☞ A false friend is like a shadow on a dial which appears in fine weather, but vanishes at the approach of a cloud.

ODE TO SPRING.

BY MISS ELIZA R. SNOW.

Joyous spring! with joy I greet thee—
In thy smiles, I smile to meet thee,
Now stern winter's frown is gone:
Nature welcomes thy retiring—
Laying off her garb of mourning,
Puts her bridal tresses on.

Insects round my feet are humming—
Music on each gale is coming
With a soft, melodious sound:
Beauty wakens from its slumbers,
And in countless, flowing numbers
Pleasure's streams are eddying round.

Mingled flowrets gaily blooming,
With the twilight breeze perfuming,
Glade and glen: the woodland grow:
With unnumber'd speeches ringing—
There the sportive tribes are singing
Tender sonnets to their loves.

There the city's heart rejoices—
Business with her thousand voices,
With improvement steps apace:
Architecture is unfolding,
Specimens of richest moulding,
Rising up with lofty grace.

Welcome spring! estranged from sadness—
Paragon of nature's gladness!
Welcome to a heart like mine:
Other seasons have their pleasures—
Autumn has its dropping treasures—
Hope's fair prospect, spring is thine.

ADVICE TO BOYS.

Be brisk, energetic, and prompt. The world is full of boys, and men too, who drawl through life, and decide on nothing for themselves, but just draggle one leg after the other, and let things take their own way. Such people are the dull stuff of the earth. They hardly deserve as much credit as the wooden trees, for the trees do all they can in merely growing, and bearing only leaves and seeds. But these poor, drawling, and draggling boys do not turn their capacities to profit half as far as they might be turned; they are unprofitable, like a rainy day in harvest time.

Now the brisk, energetic boy will be continually awake, not merely with his bodily eyes, but with his mind and attention during the hours of business. After he learns what he has to do, he will take pride in doing it punctually and well, and would be ashamed to be told what he ought to do without telling. The drawling boy loses in five minutes the most important advice; the prompt, wide-awake boy never has to be taught twice, but strains hard to make himself up to the mark, as far as possible out of his own energies. Third-rate boys are always depending on others; but first-rate boys depend upon themselves, and after a little teaching, just enough to know what is to be done, they ask no further favors of anybody. Besides, it is a glorious thing for a boy to get this noble way of self-reliance, activity, and energy.

CURIOUS SYMPATHY OF SOUND.

It is owing to the sympathetic communication of vibrations, that persons with a clear and powerful voice, have been able to break a large tumbler glass, by singing close to it its proper fundamental note. We have heard of a place where a person broke a fewer than twelve large glasses in succession. The sympathy vibration, or tendency of one vibrating body to another in the ve same state of vibration, shows itself remarkably in the case of going of two clocks fixed to the same shelf or wall. It was kn near a century ago, that two clocks set a going on the same sh will affect each other. The pendulum of the one will stop that the other, and the pendulum of the clock that is stopped, after certain time will resume its vibrations, and in its turn, stop that the other clock. Mr. John Ellicott, who first observed these fects, noticed that two clocks, which varied from each other nine six seconds a day, agreed, to a second, several days when th were placed on the same rail. The slowest of these two clocks which had a slower pendulum, set the other in motion in sixte minutes and a half. These effects are clearly produced by the sma vibrations communicated from one pendulum to the other, throu the shelf or rail, or plank on which they both rest. It has be found that two conflicting sounds produce silence, as two conver ing rays of light produce darkness.—Herschel on Sonnd.

MUSIC.

How many emotions are there indigenous to the human breast that can only find vent in song! Man could never have been without it else he would not have possessed the soul capable of such emotions. Our earliest knowledge of the first tribes of the earth show us that they were no strangers to the art divine. Music had found an early home through all the world: even the wild Indian has his chant, his war song, and his death song. Let us duly appreciate an art which is so peculiarly calculated to add to our happiness, to assist in the cultivation of the better feelings of the heart; let us cultivate an amusement so rational and innocent, thereby adding to the pure, quiet, fireside enjoyments of home.

☞ It has been observed, with much significance, that every morning we enter upon a new day, carrying still an unknown future in its bosom. How pregnant and stirring the reflection. Thoughts may be born to-day which will never die. Feelings may be awakened to-day which will never be extinguished. Hopes may be performed to-day, the consequences of which may be realized during etĕrnity.

☞ How mean a thing is a man with little motive power!—All the abilities nature has given him lie useless, like a great and beautiful machine, ready at every point for useful action, but not a wheel turns for want of a starting power! And the true and indispensable power is energy.

☞ A false friend is like a shadow on a dial which appears in fine weather, but vanishes at the approach of a cloud.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 6.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, APRIL 25, 1850. [WHOLE No. 174.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ An edition of the following revelation was published a little over three years ago, but it being now nearly out of print we republish it for the benefit of all, and also to supply the numerous calls for the Nos. of the Herald containing the recent revelations.

A Revelation and Vision of the Indian Mission.

I, James J. Strang, was at Elizabeth, on the Monongahela River, on the twenty-fifth day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, and had a vision, and lo I beheld a land amidst wide waters, and covered with large timber, with a deep broad bay on one side of it. And I wandered over it upon little hills and among rich vallies, where the air was pure and serene, and the unfading foliage, with its fragrant shades, attracted me till I wandered to bright clear waters, scarcely ruffled by the breeze. And Indians in canoes glided about, and caught fish, and sat down to eat; and they gathered in assemblies, and were taught words of truth and ways of holiness, and they hearkened. And I beheld many wonders there.

And one came near unto me, and I said what meaneth this? And he answered and said, behold, here shall God establish his people, even the sons of Joseph, on an everlasting foundation, and from hence shall the gospel of the kingdom go unto the tribes, and they shall not any more be despised, for the nations that set the foot upon their necks will be cut off that they be no more a people. Behold he hath already begun it. The sword is already bathed in blood, which spareth not their destroyers. And blood shall not cease till their most haughty oppressor is laid low to rise no more. And he hath chosen this nation to begin vengeance for them. And if this people will turn unto him, and repent of all their evil deeds, and no more slay the prophets, which he sendeth unto them, but will hearken unto them to do the things which they shall speak unto them, and keep the words of the Lord, and his commandments to do them, then will he exalt the nation and establish it, for he hath raised it up by the hands of wise men, whom he set up for that very purpose, to be the instrument of his purpose in the last days.

And upon this land where thou standest shall the gospel of the kingdom be established among the Lamanites, and from thence shall it go forth to their tribes. And blessing, and honor, and great glory shall be on those that teach them, for he will make their arm strong, and their bow shall abide in strength, and they shall not bow to the oppressor, and the power of the Gentile shall not be on them, for the arm of God shall be with them to support.

And here shall the Lamanites come to learn the law of the Lord their God, who hath preserved them, that they be not utterly destroyed. And other barbarians shall come also, and shall learn ways of holiness; for the Lord their God shall teach them, and his people shall instruct them, and shall go forth as ministers of truth unto all people.

And I asked him what meaneth all this? and he said unto me, thou art carried away in the spirit, and brought to this land in the midst of waters, in the north country, that the Lord might show thee what he will do hereafter. For here shall be a stake and a corner stone of Zion, for the strengthening of her curtains

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 6.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, APRIL 25, 1850. [WHOLE No. 174.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ An edition of the following revelation was published a little over three years ago, but it being now nearly out of print we republish it for the benefit of all, and also to supply the numerous calls for the Nos. of the Herald containing the recent revelations.

A Revelation and Vision of the Indian Mission.

I, James J. Strang, was at Elizabeth, on the Monongahela River, on the twenty-fifth day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, and had a vision, and lo I beheld a land amidst wide waters, and covered with large timber, with a deep broad bay on one side of it. And I wandered over it upon little hills and among rich vallies, where the air was pure and serene, and the unfading foliage, with its fragrant shades, attracted me till I wandered to bright clear waters, scarcely ruffled by the breeze. And Indians in canoes glided about, and caught fish, and sat down to eat; and they gathered in assemblies, and were taught words of truth and ways of holiness, and they hearkened. And I beheld many wonders there.

And one came near unto me, and I said what meaneth this? And he answered and said, behold, here shall God establish his people, even the sons of Joseph, on an everlasting foundation, and from hence shall the gospel of the kingdom go unto the tribes, and they shall not any more be despised, for the nations that set the foot upon their necks will be cut off that they be no more a people. Behold he hath already begun it. The sword is already bathed in blood, which spareth not their destroyers. And blood shall not cease till their most haughty oppressor is laid low to rise no more. And he hath chosen this nation to begin vengeance for them. And if this people will turn unto him, and repent of all their evil deeds, and no more slay the prophets, which he sendeth unto them, but will hearken unto them to do the things which they shall speak unto them, and keep the words of the Lord, and his commandments to do them, then will he exalt the nation and establish it, for he hath raised it up by the hands of wise men, whom he set up for that very purpose, to be the instrument of his purpose in the last days.

And upon this land where thou standest shall the gospel of the kingdom be established among the Lamanites, and from thence shall it go forth to their tribes. And blessing, and honor, and great glory shall be on those that teach them, for he will make their arm strong, and their bow shall abide in strength, and they shall not bow to the oppressor, and the power of the Gentile shall not be on them, for the arm of God shall be with them to support.

And here shall the Lamanites come to learn the law of the Lord their God, who hath preserved them, that they be not utterly destroyed. And other barbarians shall come also, and shall learn ways of holiness; for the Lord their God shall teach them, and his people shall instruct them, and shall go forth as ministers of truth unto all people.

And I asked him what meaneth all this? and he said unto me, thou art carried away in the spirit, and brought to this land in the midst of waters, in the north country, that the Lord might show thee what he will do hereafter. For here shall be a stake and a corner stone of Zion, for the strengthening of her curtains round about. Here shall the house of Manasseh and the house of Ephraim, and the Gentiles build a house unto and bow down to me therein. For the sons of Jacob shall lay the foundations thereof, and therein shall they worship their God. And to this house shall the thousands of the house of Israel come, when the ice melts at the north. And there shall they meet their brethren in peace, and God shall be in the midst of them.

Behold thou shalt see this land with thine own eyes before thou returnest to thine house, and shalt long to set thy foot upon it. Nevertheless when the children of the household of faith have peace, then thou shalt go there and minister in the work of the Lord thy God. Spy it out, therefore, and let the servants of God dwell there to do his work, for it hath abundance in the riches of the forest, and in the riches of the earth, and in the riches of the waters; and there shall the children of God learn his law to do it.

And the Lord God shall add possessions unto the faithful, and give good gifts unto them that keep his law, and he will establish them therein forever. And their possession shall become as a paradise, yielding fruits every month, and the strength of Zion shall be there to do the work of the Lord, to work deliverance to the captive and judgments upon the ungodly, in the day of the Lord. For he will exalt his people in righteousness, and deliver them in judgments. And the Gentiles shall be made the instruments of his purposes and by them will he work deliverance. The Lord will show thee all things in his time.

For the day is near when thou shalt meet many Lamanites, and shalt talk with them of these things. And with them shalt thou behold this land, and then shalt thou begin this work. If Satan hinder thee strive against him, and thou shalt overcome, and shalt prevail, for the Lord God hath spoken it.

CHARITIES.

To diffuse immediate happiness upon those near at hand, without reference to future and more permanent good, is the shortsighted object of the uncultivated feeling of benevolence. When cultivated, but with a wrong direction, its operation is still of the same kind, but more mischievous, as it is exerted through a wider sphere. Many of the wide-spread charities of the present day furnish examples of this.—They seek to remedy a present evil—to relieve a present suffering, by means which multiply for the future these pains and sufferings many fold. A late writer on the principles of charitable institutions remarks, that they are more numerous—that more exertions are made for the relief of the poor now than at any former period—yet poverty and crime are on the increase.

What is the reason of this? The writer alluded to goes on to prove that it is to be found in the fact, that remedies are often applied without discriminating between the different causes which produce these evils, and therefore perpetuate and increase them, or at best only palliate them. But the real cause of this want of discrimination and consequent failure, is the fact that it is not real benevolence at work, but a something between the seeming of love of approbation and a bargain to get as cheaply as possible to heaven. People wish to stand well in the opinion of their neighbors, and they have likewise heard that "he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord," and they approve of the security and invest a small sum, but never more than they can conveniently spare; to do that would be imprudence.—They do their charities, that is, give annual guineas, the press generally blowing a trumpet before them; but they neither watch the spending of the money, or care much what becomes of it—consequently, the more remote the sphere of operation—if to build a church at Jerusalem for converted Jews, or to make christians of Caribs—the more liberal the donation.

Children should be early taught to distinguish between seeming and real benevolence—between generosity that costs nothing, that is, involves no self-sacrifice or even self-denial, round about. Here shall the house of Manasseh and the house of Ephraim, and the Gentiles build a house unto and bow down to me therein. For the sons of Jacob shall lay the foundations thereof, and therein shall they worship their God. And to this house shall the thousands of the house of Israel come, when the ice melts at the north. And there shall they meet their brethren in peace, and God shall be in the midst of them.

Behold thou shalt see this land with thine own eyes before thou returnest to thine house, and shalt long to set thy foot upon it. Nevertheless when the children of the household of faith have peace, then thou shalt go there and minister in the work of the Lord thy God. Spy it out, therefore, and let the servants of God dwell there to do his work, for it hath abundance in the riches of the forest, and in the riches of the earth, and in the riches of the waters; and there shall the children of God learn his law to do it.

And the Lord God shall add possessions unto the faithful, and give good gifts unto them that keep his law, and he will establish them therein forever. And their possession shall become as a paradise, yielding fruits every month, and the strength of Zion shall be there to do the work of the Lord, to work deliverance to the captive and judgments upon the ungodly, in the day of the Lord. For he will exalt his people in righteousness, and deliver them in judgments. And the Gentiles shall be made the instruments of his purposes and by them will he work deliverance. The Lord will show thee all things in his time.

For the day is near when thou shalt meet many Lamanites, and shalt talk with them of these things. And with them shalt thou behold this land, and then shalt thou begin this work. If Satan hinder thee strive against him, and thou shalt overcome, and shalt prevail, for the Lord God hath spoken it.

CHARITIES.

To diffuse immediate happiness upon those near at hand, without reference to future and more permanent good, is the shortsighted object of the uncultivated feeling of benevolence. When cultivated, but with a wrong direction, its operation is still of the same kind, but more mischievous, as it is exerted through a wider sphere. Many of the wide-spread charities of the present day furnish examples of this.—They seek to remedy a present evil—to relieve a present suffering, by means which multiply for the future these pains and sufferings many fold. A late writer on the principles of charitable institutions remarks, that they are more numerous—that more exertions are made for the relief of the poor now than at any former period—yet poverty and crime are on the increase.

What is the reason of this? The writer alluded to goes on to prove that it is to be found in the fact, that remedies are often applied without discriminating between the different causes which produce these evils, and therefore perpetuate and increase them, or at best only palliate them. But the real cause of this want of discrimination and consequent failure, is the fact that it is not real benevolence at work, but a something between the seeming of love of approbation and a bargain to get as cheaply as possible to heaven. People wish to stand well in the opinion of their neighbors, and they have likewise heard that "he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord," and they approve of the security and invest a small sum, but never more than they can conveniently spare; to do that would be imprudence.—They do their charities, that is, give annual guineas, the press generally blowing a trumpet before them; but they neither watch the spending of the money, or care much what becomes of it—consequently, the more remote the sphere of operation--if to build a church at Jerusalem for converted Jews, or to make christians of Caribs--the more liberal the donation.

Children should be early taught to distinguish between seeming and real benevolence --between generosity that costs nothing, that is, involves no self-sacrifice or even self-denial, or that which proceeds from love and duty.—When the higher classes are really in earnest about raising the condition of the lower—when they cease to consider them as mere objects to perform their charities upon, as convenient stepping-stones to heaven, as so much raw material out of which they are to work their own salvation, as the poor "whom we are always to have with us," and therefore are to be kept poor, or at least in their present position---then there will be found little difficulty, and certainly no natural barriers to their success. A little well-directed effort to do good is better than a large and expensive beneficence on a wrong principle.---Education of the Feelings, by Charles Bray.

"PROVE ALL THINGS."—PAUL.

How shall we prove them, says one? The same Apostle gives us the criterion, in the following words: "The church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth." This being the case, it is an easy matter for the saints of God to test the truth or falsity of any principle or doctrine that may be advanced, by bringing it before the church. If the church approves of it, it is of God; if not, it is of the Devil. This agrees with the teachings of our Savior. Speaking of a brother overtaken in a fault, after the proper measures have been taken to reclaim him, without effect, he says: "If he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican."

This is an end of controversy concerning the matter. The church being founded on the rock, (revelation,) with Apostles and prophets for the work of the ministry, is infallible in her decisions. The saints in former days understood this principle. When a dispute arose among them concerning the necessity of the Gentiles keeping the law of Moses, it was submitted to the council of the church at Jerusalem for final settlement. Let this be a pattern to the saints in the last days. "Prove all things" by the church of the living God, the "pillar and ground of the truth."

EXPLORATION OF THE ARCTIC REGIONS.

The first attempt was made in 1553, by Willoughby and Chancellor, who were sent out with instructions to ascertain if there was a north-east passage, or if they could reach China by passing to the north of Europe and Asia. Willoughby reached Nova Zembla, but he and all his crew were frozen to death. Chancellor entered the White Sea, and thus opened a communication with Russia. Captain Cook reached the Icy Cape from the Pacific in 1778. In 1607 Captain Hudson was sent out to discover the north-west passage, and reached the latitude 81 degrees, but was under the necessity of putting back on account of the ice. In 1773 this experiment was again tried by an expedition under the command of Captain Phipps, who advanced about as far as Captain Hudson had previously done; and a similar attempt was made in 1818, which proved equally unfortunate, under Captain Buchan. In 1827, Captain Parry was sent out to reach the Pole in boats and sledges over the ice, and he attained about 82 degrees 40 minutes, and was obliged to return by the motion of the fields of ice to the south. In 1818 Captain Ross attempted a north-west passage, and passed through Lancaster Sound. In 1819 Captain Parry reached 110 degrees west longitude, and in 1821-23 examined the coast to the northward of Hudson Bay. In 1824 he reached Prince Regent's Inlet. In 1826 Captain Franklin was sent overland to explore the northern coast of America to the west of Mackenzie River; and at the same time Captain Beechey was dispatched to meet him in Bhering's Straits. The two expeditions approached each other to within a distance of 146 miles, but returned without meeting. In 1829-33 Captain Ross sailed up Prince Regent's Inlet, and ascertained that there is no communication between the Artic Ocean and the Atlantic, south of Barrow's Straits.

THE POLITE AND THE INTELLECTUAL AMONG MEN.

Polite men frequently take precedence of the intellectual, or of original-minded men, in point of success. Their manner is their genius. They sustain the very necessary conditions of society, and are rewarded accordingly. Their province is to smooth the way of life, and if not selfish, they do so. In a state of high civilization, where men are brought into constant intercourse on different occasions, a mutual regard and common understanding is indispensable. And possibly the more this is under conventional forms the better. Politeness becomes the atmosphere of some men. They carry through the most trivial, as well as the most important, affairs in the same fashion.

ENDURE HARDSHIP.

As a gladiator trains the body, so must we train the mind to self-sacrifice, "to endure all things," to meet and overcome difficulty and danger. We must take the rough and thorny road as well as the smooth and pleasant; and a portion at least of our daily duty must be hard and disagreeable; for the mind cannot be kept strong and healthy in perpetual sunshine only, and the most dangerous of all states is that of constantly recurring pleasure, ease, and prosperity. Most persons will find difficulties and hardships enough without ought seeking them; let them not repine, but take them as a part of that educational discipline necessary to fit the mind to arrive at its highest good.—Education of the Feelings, by Chas. Bray.

☞ The future is always fairy-land to the young. Life is like a beautiful and winding lane, on either side bright flowers and beautiful butterflies, and tempting fruits, which we scarcely pause to admire and to taste, so eager are we to hasten to an opening, which we imagine will be more beautiful still. But by degrees, as we advance, the trees grow bleak—the flowers and butterflies fail, the fruits disappear, and we find we have arrived at a desert waste, in the centre a stagnant and lethean lake, over which wheel and shriek the dark-winged birds, the embodied memories of the past.

or that which proceeds from love and duty.—When the higher classes are really in earnest about raising the condition of the lower—when they cease to consider them as mere objects to perform their charities upon, as convenient stepping-stones to heaven, as so much raw material out of which they are to work their own salvation, as the poor "whom we are always to have with us," and therefore are to be kept poor, or at least in their present position—then there will be found little difficulty, and certainly no natural barriers to their success. A little well-directed effort to do good is better than a large and expensive beneficence on a wrong principle.—Education of the Feelings, by Charles Bray.

"PROVE ALL THINGS."—PAUL.

How shall we prove them, says one? The same Apostle gives us the criterion, in the following words: "The church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth." This being the case, it is an easy matter for the saints of God to test the truth or falsity of any principle or doctrine that may be advanced, by bringing it before the church. If the church approves of it, it is of God; if not, it is of the Devil. This agrees with the teachings of our Savior. Speaking of a brother overtaken in a fault, after the proper measures have been taken to reclaim him, without effect, he says: "If he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican."

This is an end of controversy concerning the matter. The church being founded on the rock, (revelation,) with Apostles and prophets for the work of the ministry, is infallible in her decisions. The saints in former days understood this principle. When a dispute arose among them concerning the necessity of the Gentiles keeping the law of Moses, it was submitted to the council of the church at Jerusalem for final settlement. Let this be a pattern to the saints in the last days. "Prove all things" by the church of the living God, the "pillar and ground of the truth."

EXPLORATION OF THE ARCTIC REGIONS.

The first attempt was made in 1553, by Willoughby and Chancellor, who were sent out with instructions to ascertain if there was a north-east passage, or if they could reach China by passing to the north of Europe and Asia. Willoughby reached Nova Zembla, but he and all his crew were frozen to death. Chancellor entered the White Sea, and thus opened a communication with Russia. Captain Cook reached the Icy Cape from the Pacific in 1778. In 1607 Captain Hudson was sent out to discover the north-west passage, and reached the latitude 81 degrees, but was under the necessity of putting back on account of the ice. In 1773 this experiment was again tried by an expedition under the command of Captain Phipps, who advanced about as far as Captain Hudson had previously done; and a similar attempt was made in 1818, which proved equally unfortunate, under Captain Buchan. In 1827, Captain Parry was sent out to reach the Pole in boats and sledges over the ice, and he attained about 82 degrees 40 minutes, and was obliged to return by the motion of the fields of ice to the south. In 1818 Captain Ross attempted a north-west passage, and passed through Lancaster Sound. In 1819 Captain Parry reached 110 degrees west longitude, and in 1821-23 examined the coast to the northward of Hudson Bay. In 1824 he reached Prince Regent's Inlet. In 1826 Captain Franklin was sent overland to explore the northern coast of America to the west of Mackenzie River; and at the same time Captain Beechey was dispatched to meet him in Bhering's Straits. The two expeditions approached each other to within a distance of 146 miles, but returned without meeting. In 1829-33 Captain Ross sailed up Prince Regent's Inlet, and ascertained that there is no communication between the Artic Ocean and the Atlantic, south of Barrow's Straits.

THE POLITE AND THE INTELLECTUAL AMONG MEN.

Polite men frequently take precedence of the intellectual, or of original-minded men, in point of success. Their manner is their genius. They sustain the very necessary conditions of society, and are rewarded accordingly. Their province is to smooth the way of life, and if not selfish, they do so. In a state of high civilization, where men are brought into constant intercourse on different occasions, a mutual regard and common understanding is indispensable. And possibly the more this is under conventional forms the better. Politeness becomes the atmosphere of some men. They carry through the most trivial, as well as the most important, affairs in the same fashion.

ENDURE HARDSHIP.

As a gladiator trains the body, so must we train the mind to self-sacrifice, "to endure all things," to meet and overcome difficulty and danger. We must take the rough and thorny road as well as the smooth and pleasant; and a portion at least of our daily duty must be hard and disagreeable; for the mind cannot be kept strong and healthy in perpetual sunshine only, and the most dangerous of all states is that of constantly recurring pleasure, ease, and prosperity. Most persons will find difficulties and hardships enough without seeking them; let them not repine, but take them as a part of that educational discipline necessary to fit the mind to arrive at its highest good.—Education of the Feelings, by Chas. Bray.

☞ The future is always fairy-land to the young. Life is like a beautiful and winding lane, on either side bright flowers and beautiful butterflies, and tempting fruits, which we scarcely pause to admire and to taste, so eager are we to hasten to an opening, which we imagine will be more beautiful still. But by degrees, as we advance, the trees grow bleak—the flowers and butterflies fail, the fruits disappear, and we find we have arrived at a desert waste, in the centre a stagnant and lethean lake, over which wheel and shriek the dark-winged birds, the embodied memories of the past.

TRIALS.

In reviewing the history of those who are led by the guidance of revelation, we find that they were subjected to a great variety of trials, disappointments and difficulties, which causes the mind to reflect back upon the scenes which are past. And often when reflecting we are led to exclaim, like the Israelites when they were hemmed in by the hosts of Pharaoh and the Red Sea before them, "Because there were no graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness?" Ex. iv. 11.

It appears that the children of Israel had set out to follow the prophet which God had sent to lead them, and until this extremity their trials had not caused them much reflection, and they were very sore afraid of the Egyptians, and seeing nothing but instant destruction before them, and no way of escape, they said to Moses, "For it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the wilderness."

Here is an instance of severe trial, and the sequel was God's power displayed in their deliverance. How much do we often complain of trials, and hardly know what trials are.—Perhaps we should learn something of trials should we but read the history of Lehi and his family when journeying through the wilderness, following a prophet, (for Lehi was one,) and obeying direct revelation. In the history of their journey we find that a part of those who accompanied Lehi were often rebelling and murmuring against God (for it was God who commanded them to go) at almost every little discouraging circumstance; but, nevertheless, Lehi stood firm to the thing which he had been commanded to do, turning neither to the right nor left for the threats of those who saw fit to accuse him of bringing them from Jerusalem to perish in the wilderness.

Having cast a simple glance at the trials of the ancients, let us see how those of modern date stand the test of trials. In the early days of the church God gave a command that the church should obey the teachings and commandments of none as a law to the church but those which were received through the way which he had appointed unto them. Now, how well has this command been heeded? By referring to the events which have taken place since this command was given, we find that various persons have supposed themselves endued with some superior wisdom, and have tried to make their ideas of right and wrong, as it were a law unto the church, by finding something that did not agree with their theory; which deviation from the law of God caused darkness instead of light to all who heeded the admonition of such as asserted that Joseph transgressed, and done this or that which is not right, or that James has done so and so, and is a fallen prophet, and must not be looked to as the one to lead the flock.

Well, if we have any notion of believing God we had better look about ourselves before we have the faint-heartedness to draw back and give up all, because of those very grave accusations, remembering that, although we may consider things very much out of the path which we had marked out, yet it nevertheless may be that we ourselves have marked the road, instead of God; that we may be in a severe trial of our patience and faith, and by this means be drawing wrong conclusions. In the third paragraph of a revelation given to James on the 17th of January, 1845, we read: "I have given you a trial of your faith, in that you are few in number, that you might have a witness before the world that your hearts are single towards me, and that ye ask not your own advantages."

Here God has told us of our trial, and yet how many has there been who have entirely forgotten it, when they saw but little, as it were, to encourage them in helping to do what God has commanded, but have sunk into a kind of lethargy, and have not lifted even so much as one of their fingers to help. Know ye not that this has been, and now is, a trial which is hard to account for? The mind grows dark, and a spirit of murmuring takes hold, which soon works out in open rebellion to the laws of the church. When once in the dark, doubt

TRIALS.

In reviewing the history of those who are led by the guidance of revelation, we find that they were subjected to a great variety of trials, disappointments and difficulties, which causes the mind to reflect back upon the scenes which are past. And often when reflecting we are led to exclaim, like the Israelites when they were hemmed in by the hosts of Pharaoh and the Red Sea before them, "Because there were no graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness?" Ex. iv. 11.

It appears that the children of Israel had set out to follow the prophet which God had sent to lead them, and until this extremity their trials had not caused them much reflection, and they were very sore afraid of the Egyptians, and seeing nothing but instant destruction before them, and no way of escape, they said to Moses, "For it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the wilderness."

Here is an instance of severe trial, and the sequel was God's power displayed in their deliverance. How much do we often complain of trials, and hardly know what trials are.—Perhaps we should learn something of trials should we but read the history of Lehi and his family when journeying through the wilderness, following a prophet, (for Lehi was one,) and obeying direct revelation. In the history of their journey we find that a part of those who accompanied Lehi were often rebelling and murmuring against God (for it was God who commanded them to go) at almost every little discouraging circumstance; but, nevertheless, Lehi stood firm to the thing which he had been commanded to do, turning neither to the right nor left for the threats of those who saw fit to accuse him of bringing them from Jerusalem to perish in the wilderness.

Having cast a simple glance at the trials of the ancients, let us see how those of modern date stand the test of trials. In the early days of the church God gave a command that the church should obey the teachings and commandments of none as a law to the church but those which were received through the way which he had appointed unto them. Now, how well has this command been heeded? By referring to the events which have taken place since this command was given, we find that various persons have supposed themselves endued with some superior wisdom, and have tried to make their ideas of right and wrong, as it were a law unto the church, by finding something that did not agree with their theory; which deviation from the law of God caused darkness instead of light to all who heeded the admonition of such as asserted that Joseph transgressed, and done this or that which is not right, or that James has done so and so, and is a fallen prophet, and must not be looked to as the one to lead the flock.

Well, if we have any notion of believing God we had better look about ourselves before we have the faint-heartedness to draw back and give up all, because of those very grave accusations, remembering that, although we may consider things very much out of the path which we had marked out, yet it nevertheless may be that we ourselves have marked the road, instead of God; that we may be in a severe trial of our patience and faith, and by this means be drawing wrong conclusions. In the third paragraph of a revelation given to James on the 17th of January, 1845, we read: "I have given you a trial of your faith, in that you are few in number, that you might have a witness before the world that your hearts are single towards me, and that ye ask not your own advantages."

Here God has told us of our trial, and yet how many has there been who have entirely forgotten it, when they saw but little, as it were, to encourage them in helping to do what God has commanded, but have sunk into a kind of lethargy, and have not lifted even so much as one of their fingers to help. Know ye not that this has been, and now is, a trial which is hard to account for? The mind grows dark, and a spirit of murmuring takes hold, which soon works out in open rebellion to the laws of the church. When once in the dark, doubts soon arise, and one thing after another, till at length the darkness seems to have swallowed up the light they once possessed. Should we not, then, bear with these things, and not so quickly mistrust the word of the Lord, but strive to be ready and willing to keep the commands of God, and not to condemn what we do not have the authority to do, but stand steadfast, relying upon the word of the Lord through his prophet, and not do wrong because some one else has, but keep the law of God in all things? "He that endureth unto the end shall be saved." X.

Propeller Illinois, Detroit River, April 10th, 1850.

DEAR BRO. BENJAMIN:—Yours reached me at Buffalo on Monday evening, just as we were ready to leave port. As we are making a steerage passage, and the boat crowded, it is difficult to write, and you must be content with a brief line. I was in Buffalo from Friday morning till Monday evening. Had I been at Buffalo two days earlier I could have come through without delay. But the boats have hardly got on their regular trips. I am accompanied by a small party of saints from Washington. A large company will be on by the next boat from Baltimore and other places, all bound for Beaver. It will be necessary for me to stop there a short time to make arrangements for the location, &c., of the emigrants.

While at Buffalo I heard rumors from Bros. Wright, Savage and Gurley, from which I infer that their missions have been successful, like those who labored south and east. I mean those who really did labor, for I am aware that several left their fields, and have accomplished nothing. But all, without exception, who remained at the work whereunto they were called, were evidently prospered; most of them in winning souls unto Christ, some in casting out Devils, and removing stumbling blocks. Some young preachers just called to the ministry begin to be accounted as pillars in the cause. You will remember one man who has driven himself out of the church in trying to drive the church to pay him an extra price for his extra preaching. We have one about the same size, nearly as rough and uncouth in his manners, and every way his match as a preacher, added to the church in August last. And he has brought considerable additions to the church, where the former failed entirely. Be of good cheer, for this is the time when it is the pleasure of our Father to give us the kingdom.—The boat shakes so I can hardly make this readable: so God bless you. Truly and sincerely, J. J. STRANG.

THE TRUE LIFE.—The mere lapse of years is not life. To eat, and drink, and sleep; to be exposed to darkness and the light; to pace round in the mill of habit, and turn the wheel of wealth; to make reason our door-keeper, and turn thought into an implement of trade—this is not life. In all this but a poor fraction of the consciousness of humanity is awakened; and the sanctities still slumber which make it most worth while to live. Knowledge, truth, love, beauty, goodness, faith, alone can give vitality to the mechanism of existence; the laugh of mirth which vibrates through the heart, the tears that freshen the dry wastes within, the music that brings childhood back, the prayer that calls the future near, the doubt which makes us meditate, the death that startles us with mystery, the hardship that forces us to struggle, the anxiety that ends in trust—are the true nourishment of our natural being.—Anon.

☞ The first divine law of nature, by virtue of which labor and struggle become from the beginning, the destiny of man, has retained its full force through all succeeding ages, and is applicable alike to every class and every nation, to each individual as well as to mankind in general, to the most important as to the most insignificant relations of life. He who weakly shrinks from the struggle, who will offer no resistance, who will endure no labor or fatigue, can neither fulfill his own vocation, whatever it be, nor contribute aught to the general welfare of mankind.

soon arise, and one thing after another, till at length the darkness seems to have swallowed up the light they once possessed. Should we not, then, bear with these things, and not so quickly mistrust the word of the Lord, but strive to be ready and willing to keep the commands of God, and not to condemn what we do not have the authority to do, but stand steadfast, relying upon the word of the Lord through his prophet, and not do wrong because some one else has, but keep the law of God in all things? "He that endureth unto the end shall be saved." X.

Propeller Illinois, Detroit River,
April 10th, 1850.

DEAR BRO. BENJAMIN:—Yours reached me at Buffalo on Monday evening, just as we were ready to leave port. As we are making a steerage passage, and the boat crowded, it is difficult to write, and you must be content with a brief line. I was in Buffalo from Friday morning till Monday evening. Had I been at Buffalo two days earlier I could have come through without delay. But the boats have hardly got on their regular trips. I am accompanied by a small party of saints from Washington. A large company will be on by the next boat from Baltimore and other places, all bound for Beaver. It will be necessary for me to stop there a short time to make arrangements for the location, &c., of the emigrants.

While at Buffalo I heard rumors from Bros. Wright, Savage and Gurley, from which I infer that their missions have been successful, like those who labored south and east. I mean those who really did labor, for I am aware that several left their fields, and have accomplished nothing. But all, without exception, who remained at the work whereunto they were called, were evidently prospered; most of them in winning souls unto Christ, some in casting out Devils, and removing stumbling blocks. Some young preachers just called to the ministry begin to be accounted as pillars in the cause. You will remember one man who has driven himself out of the church in trying to drive the church to pay him an extra price for his extra preaching. We have one about the same size, nearly as rough and uncouth in his manners, and every way his match as a preacher, added to the church in August last. And he has brought considerable additions to the church, where the former failed entirely. Be of good cheer, for this is the time when it is the pleasure of our Father to give us the kingdom.—The boat shakes so I can hardly make this readable: so God bless you. Truly and sincerely, J. J. STRANG.

THE TRUE LIFE.—The mere lapse of years is not life. To eat, and drink, and sleep; to be exposed to darkness and the light; to pace round in the mill of habit, and turn the wheel of wealth; to make reason our door-keeper, and turn thought into an implement of trade—this is not life. In all this but a poor fraction of the consciousness of humanity is awakened; and the sanctities still slumber which make it most worth while to live. Knowledge, truth, love, beauty, goodness, faith, alone can give vitality to the mechanism of existence; the laugh of mirth which vibrates through the heart, the tears that freshen the dry wastes within, the music that brings childhood back, the prayer that calls the future near, the doubt which makes us meditate, the death that startles us with mystery, the hardship that forces us to struggle, the anxiety that ends in trust—are the true nourishment of our natural being.—Anon.

☞ The first divine law of nature, by virtue of which labor and struggle become from the beginning, the destiny of man, has retained its full force through all succeeding ages, and is applicable alike to every class and every nation, to each individual as well as to mankind in general, to the most important as to the most insignificant relations of life. He who weakly shrinks from the struggle, who will offer no resistance, who will endure no labor or fatigue, can neither fulfill his own vocation, whatever it be, nor contribute aught to the general welfare of mankind.

SPIRITUALIZING THE SCRIPTURES.

The idea of spiritualizing the writings of the prophets and apostles, and considering them the same as allegories, or so highly figurative that none but the learned can understand them, is certainly repugnant to the word of God; and has involved communities in darkness, and led thousands of precious souls who had but a common education astray, and caused them to say "great is the mystery of the scriptures, and who can understand them except the learned." They peruse the scriptures, but in vain, for tradition and popular opinions have established the above mentioned system of interpretation, and they never dreamed that the contents of the Bible were to be as literally understood as those of any other book.

Some mystify the whole of the sacred volume, others such part as does not suit their particular tenets. Indeed, I must confess that this system above mentioned, which has been carried into effect, and practiced for the last several hundred years, has been the most effectual scheme for the propagation of the modern systems of religion, that has ever been invented. For who would have ever thought that the church of Christ in this age of the world was to be organized different from what it was in the days of the Apostles, had it not been for the spiritualizing system? Who would have dreamed this when the scriptures are so plain on this subject, if all had believed them as they read? This evil practice which the clergy are guilty of has thrown a mist of darkness over the plain and simple truths that are in the Bible: and they have also used it as a cloak for their iniquities. It also has given the wild and enthusiastic too much latitude for their enthusiasms: it has caused splits in societies, and has been the means of many controversies.

Again, there are thousands of individuals to this day who believe they cannot understand the scriptures when they read them, because they do not believe they mean what they say. Therefore, books of commentaries have been written interpreting the scriptures, and indeed bending them to suit their different religious tenets, instead of arranging their tenets to agree with the scriptures. I do not pretend to say that parables are to be considered anything else but parables; but the explanations that Christ gave of his parables are to be taken literally. Neither do I pretend to say but what there are figurative expressions in the Bible, as well as in any other book. We often express our views by figurative expressions, and we often illustrate subjects by comparisons; but, who ever thought of mystifying our literal relation of facts. When we read other works we do not think that the author said one thing and meant another, and why should we have such a conjecture with regard to the scriptures? I leave the reader to answer this question for himself.

Again, it is a very singular thing and a very unreasonable one too, that God should make known his will, and cause it to be written to the human family and command all to obey it, and at the same time in so mysterious a way that none but the learned can understand it. Christ chose illiterate men for his Apostles, and Paul says, "not many wise men were called, but God had chosen the weak things of this world to confound the wisdom of the wise:" and it is a strange thing that they have preached the law of God, and written the same for the benefit of future generations, and that none but the wise of this world can comprehend it. Furthermore, admitting the scriptures are to be spiritualized, it is unreasonable to suppose that uninspired men are capable to interpret them, and give the true meaning; for it most certainly will require the same spirit of inspiration to interpret, that dictated the writer to write them.

Peter says, "we have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts; knowing this first, that no prophecy of scripture is of any private interpretation." 2d Peter i. 19, 20. A light in a dark place is an excellent thing to enable any person to guide his footsteps in the right path: so are the scriptures a sure guide in the path

SPIRITUALIZING THE SCRIPTURES.

The idea of spiritualizing the writings of the prophets and apostles, and considering them the same as allegories, or so highly figurative that none but the learned can understand them, is certainly repugnant to the word of God; and has involved communities in darkness, and led thousands of precious souls who had but a common education astray, and caused them to say "great is the mystery of the scriptures, and who can understand them except the learned." They peruse the scriptures, but in vain, for tradition and popular opinions have established the above mentioned system of interpretation, and they never dreamed that the contents of the Bible were to be as literally understood as those of any other book.

Some mystify the whole of the sacred volume, others such part as does not suit their particular tenets. Indeed, I must confess that this system above mentioned, which has been carried into effect, and practiced for the last several hundred years, has been the most effectual scheme for the propagation of the modern systems of religion, that has ever been invented. For who would have ever thought that the church of Christ in this age of the world was to be organized different from what it was in the days of the Apostles, had it not been for the spiritualizing system? Who would have dreamed this when the scriptures are so plain on this subject, if all had believed them as they read? This evil practice which the clergy are guilty of has thrown a mist of darkness over the plain and simple truths that are in the Bible: and they have also used it as a cloak for their iniquities. It also has given the wild and enthusiastic too much latitude for their enthusiasms: it has caused splits in societies, and has been the means of many controversies.

Again, there are thousands of individuals to this day who believe they cannot understand the scriptures when they read them, because they do not believe they mean what they say. Therefore, books of commentaries have been written interpreting the scriptures, and indeed bending them to suit their different religious tenets, instead of arranging their tenets to agree with the scriptures. I do not pretend to say that parables are to be considered anything else but parables; but the explanations that Christ gave of his parables are to be taken literally. Neither do I pretend to say but what there are figurative expressions in the Bible, as well as in any other book. We often express our views by figurative expressions, and we often illustrate subjects by comparisons; but, who ever thought of mystifying our literal relation of facts. When we read other works we do not think that the author said one thing and meant another, and why should we have such a conjecture with regard to the scriptures? I leave the reader to answer this question for himself.

Again, it is a very singular thing and a very unreasonable one too, that God should make known his will, and cause it to be written to the human family and command all to obey it, and at the same time in so mysterious a way that none but the learned can understand it. Christ chose illiterate men for his Apostles, and Paul says, "not many wise men were called, but God had chosen the weak things of this world to confound the wisdom of the wise:" and it is a strange thing that they have preached the law of God, and written the same for the benefit of future generations, and that none but the wise of this world can comprehend it. Furthermore, admitting the scriptures are to be spiritualized, it is unreasonable to suppose that uninspired men are capable to interpret them, and give the true meaning; for it most certainly will require the same spirit of inspiration to interpret, that dictated the writer to write them.

Peter says, "we have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts; knowing this first, that no prophecy of scripture is of any private interpretation." 2d Peter i. 19, 20. A light in a dark place is an excellent thing to enable any person to guide his footsteps in the right path: so are the scriptures a sure guide in the path of holiness, when we read and apply them according to Peter's rule of interpretation: "no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation." We shall now examine the literal fulfillment of prophecy that is already fulfilled, that the reader may see the propriety, and necessity of adopting the above rule for the application, and interpretation of prophecy yet future. We will commence with the Lord's prophecy to Noah.

In the days of Noah the inhabitants of the earth were very wicked, and the Lord in his just wrath resolved to destroy them, if they would not repent and forsake their evil ways. Therefore, he prophesied to Noah that he would bring a flood of waters upon the earth and destroy all flesh: he also commanded Noah to build an ark for the saving of himself and family. Now if Noah had considered this anything else than a literal relation of facts, and considered it the figure of some spiritual event, and the ark a spiritual one, he most certainly would have perished with the antediluvians.—He had no knowledge of the modern spiritualizing system, therefore he moved forward and prepared the ark to the saving of himself and family.

The next prediction we will notice is the Lord's to Abraham, telling him that his seed shall remain in bondage four hundred years. See Gen. xv. 13, 14. Moses says, the children of Israel were in bondage four hundred years.---See Ex. xii. 40. Indeed, Joseph's interpretation of Pharaoh's dream, and prediction of the seven years' famine, and Moses' predictions to the children of Israel in the wilderness, were all literally fulfilled. Isaiah's prophecy to Hezekiah that his days should be lengthened fifteen years, and also his prophecy concerning the destruction of Babylon were literally fulfilled. Also Jeremiah's prophecy that the Jews should be taken to Babylon and there remain in bondage seventy years, which was literally fulfilled. We might cite the reader to passages of this kind and their literal fulfillment, till he would be weary reading them; but we forbear, knowing that the honest in heart are willing to accept of a few as a sample of the literal fulfillment of prophecy.

It sufficeth to say that all true prophecies, when the prophet's said thus and thus saith the Lord, were literally fulfilled. For instance, the predictions concerning the first coming of Christ, and the important events connected with the history of his life, were all fulfilled to the very letter: and the fact that the Apostles, whenever they quoted a prophecy from the Old Testament, applied it as a literal relation of facts without making any comments upon it whatever, is sufficient proof that the predictions of the prophets generally were designed as literal relations of facts not to be spiritualized.—I always take it for granted when I hear any person spiritualizing the scriptures, that he is an unbeliever, and is trying to modify, or convert them into something else, to suit his notions or tenets. At the same time he professes to be a believer; but when we sum up the whole of his spiritualizing, we discover that he disbelieves what the prophets and Apostles said, but believes what they meant.

The infidels would be willing to believe the Bible if they could have the privilege of manufacturing it over to suit themselves. And I conclude by saying that it is time that this evil practice of spiritualizing the scriptures, which is so closely connected with priestcraft, was done away, that the noble and the ignoble, the learned and the unlearned, may read the sacred book and understand it, and no longer trust to others to interpret for them. "Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm." PAUL.

☞ Our readers must excuse us for not giving them the particulars from Beaver which we promised in our last, for the reason that the communications we received from there are not readable. We hope "Greeley" will endeavor to write legibly hereafter.

☞ By letter from Pres. Strang we learn that he and his family, together with a small company of saints from Washington, arrived at Beaver on the evening of the 13th inst. in a fierce storm.—A large company was expected from Baltimore by the next boat.

of holiness, when we read and apply them according to Peter's rule of interpretation: "no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation." We shall now examine the literal fulfillment of prophecy that is already fulfilled, that the reader may see the propriety, and necessity of adopting the above rule for the application, and interpretation of prophecy yet future. We will commence with the Lord's prophecy to Noah.

In the days of Noah the inhabitants of the earth were very wicked, and the Lord in his just wrath resolved to destroy them, if they would not repent and forsake their evil ways. Therefore, he prophesied to Noah that he would bring a flood of waters upon the earth and destroy all flesh: he also commanded Noah to build an ark for the saving of himself and family. Now if Noah had considered this anything else than a literal relation of facts, and considered it the figure of some spiritual event, and the ark a spiritual one, he most certainly would have perished with the antediluvians.—He had no knowledge of the modern spiritualizing system, therefore he moved forward and prepared the ark to the saving of himself and family.

The next prediction we will notice is the Lord's to Abraham, telling him that his seed shall remain in bondage four hundred years. See Gen. xv. 13, 14. Moses says, the children of Israel were in bondage four hundred years.---See Ex. xii. 40. Indeed, Joseph's interpretation of Pharaoh's dream, and prediction of the seven years' famine, and Moses' predictions to the children of Israel in the wilderness, were all literally fulfilled. Isaiah's prophecy to Hezekiah that his days should be lengthened fifteen years, and also his prophecy concerning the destruction of Babylon were literally fulfilled. Also Jeremiah's prophecy that the Jews should be taken to Babylon and there remain in bondage seventy years, which was literally fulfilled. We might cite the reader to passages of this kind and their literal fulfillment, till he would be weary reading them; but we forbear, knowing that the honest in heart are willing to accept of a few as a sample of the literal fulfillment of prophecy.

It sufficeth to say that all true prophecies, when the prophet's said thus and thus saith the Lord, were literally fulfilled. For instance, the predictions concerning the first coming of Christ, and the important events connected with the history of his life, were all fulfilled to the very letter: and the fact that the Apostles, whenever they quoted a prophecy from the Old Testament, applied it as a literal relation of facts without making any comments upon it whatever, is sufficient proof that the predictions of the prophets generally were designed as literal relations of facts not to be spiritualized.—I always take it for granted when I hear any person spiritualizing the scriptures, that he is an unbeliever, and is trying to modify, or convert them into something else, to suit his notions or tenets. At the same time he professes to be a believer; but when we sum up the whole of his spiritualizing, we discover that he disbelieves what the prophets and Apostles said, but believes what they meant.

The infidels would be willing to believe the Bible if they could have the privilege of manufacturing it over to suit themselves. And I conclude by saying that it is time that this evil practice of spiritualizing the scriptures, which is so closely connected with priestcraft, was done away, that the noble and the ignoble, the learned and the unlearned, may read the sacred book and understand it, and no longer trust to others to interpret for them. "Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm." PAUL.

☞ Our readers must excuse us for not giving them the particulars from Beaver which we promised in our last, for the reason that the communications we received from there are not readable. We hope "Greeley" will endeavor to write legibly hereafter.

☞ By letter from Pres. Strang we learn that he and his family, together with a small company of saints from Washington, arrived at Beaver on the evening of the 13th inst. in a fierce storm.—A large company was expected from Baltimore by the next boat.

OBEDIENCE TO GOD.

BY H. P. BROWN.

"To obey is better than sacrifices." 1st Sam. xv. 22.

The prophets whom the Lord did send
To wicked men, their ways to mend,
Who, holding priesthood, power and might,
Were qualified to teach them right.
And having power, they did command,
While Jordan, sun and moon did stand,
All motionless. While all God's will
Was executed: and never till
The word came forth to onward go,
The moon did move, or Jordan flow.
So thus we see all nations bend
To keep God's words; and should not men,
Who are but worms, composed of dust,
And with earth's nature have been cursed?
Should not they remember well
That by transgression Adam fell,
And left the garden, once so grand,
But cursed for sin with other land?
Do you remember old king Saul,
Who, not obeying God, did fall
From being king in Israel, and
The Lord chose David, by command,
From being shepherd over sheep
To redeem Israel, and to keep
His "Law," "commandments," which "are truth,"
To hoary age, from very youth?
O would you glance your eye with me
On sacred writ, and then you'll see
Destruction followed the rebel band
Of Korah, Dathan and Abiram,
With hundreds more, who did rebel
Against their God, and went to hell.
You'd see the spirit to dictate
The Lord,s anointed; and not to wait
For God to call and then obey,
But like all pseudoes, want their way,
And offer God, like king Uzziah,
An offering; and whose very prayer
Was sin. But still they ne'er
Supposed that Abram's God
Would plead with them with chast'ning rod,
And thus they're lifted up in pride,
And God's anointed they deride.
O mortal man, wilt thou awake,
And from these words a lesson take
Of obeying God. Raise not a hand
Against thy God, thou canst not stand,
For when loud thunders shake earth's pole,
And lightnings flash, your very soul
Will cry, "O thou God of love,
Have mercy on me from above,
And I thy sacred name will praise
Throughout my life; through endless days."
Now saints of God, a warning take,
Ne'er raise an arm for your soul's sake
Against our God, nor prophet James,
For either one it's all the same,
In truth and right. For God did set in Joseph's stead
Our brother James to be the head,
To teach the law of God to man
By revelation and command.
Therefore obey all revelation
That does pertain to your salvation,
And in redemption you shall stand
Among the saints on Zion's land.

Porter, Wis., April 2d, 1850.

SOURCE OF ELECTRICITY.

The earth is the great reservoir of electricity, from which the atmosphere and clouds receive their portion of this fluid. It is during the process of evaporation that it is principally excited, silently conveyed to the regions above: and also during the condensation of this vapor the grand and terrific phenomena of thunder and lightning are made manifest to our senses. In order to form a correct estimate of the immense power of this agent in the production of electricity, we must bring to our view the quantity of water evaporated from the surface of the earth, and also the amount of electricity that may be developed from a single grain of this liquid. According to the calculations of Cavallo, about five thousand two hundred and eight million tons of water are probably evaporated from the Mediterranean Sea in a single summer's day. To obtain some idea of the vast volume of water thus daily taken up by the thirsty heavens, let us compare it with something rendered more apparent than this invisible process. President Dwight and Prof. Darby have both estimated the quantity of water precipitated over the Falls of Niagara at more than eleven million tons per hour. Yet all the water passing over the cataract in twenty days would amount only to that ascending from the Mediterranean in one day.

☞ The annexed extract is not only beautifully written, but it contains much truth, which should be indelibly impressed upon the minds of readers:—

DECEIT.—When once a concealment or deceit has been practiced in matters where all should be fair and open as the day, confidence can never be restored, any more than you can restore the white bloom to the grape or plume which you have once pressed in your hand. How true is this, and what a neglected truth by a great portion of mankind! Falsehood is not only one of the most humilitating vices, but sooner or later it is most certain to lead to the most serious crimes. With partners in trade, with partners in life, with friends, with lovers, how important is confidence! How essential that all guile and hypocrisy should be guarded against in the intercourse between such parties! How much misery would be avoided in the history of many lives, had truth and scincerity been the guiding and controlling motives, instead of prevarication and deceit. "Any vice," said a parent to a child, "any vice, at least, among the frailties of a milder character, but falsehood! Far better that my child should commit an error, or do a wrong and confess it, than escape the penalty, however severe, by falsehood and hypocrisy. Let me know the worst, and a remedy may possibly be applied. But keep me in the dark, let me be misled and deceived, and it is impossible to tell at what unprepared hour a crushing blow, an overwhelming exposure, may come."

HOW TO PRESERVE HEALTH.

Medicine will never remedy bad habits. It is utterly futile to think of living in gluttony, intemperance, and every excess, and keeping the body in health by medicine. Indulgence of the appetite, indiscriminate dosing and drugging, have ruined the health, and destroyed the lives of more persons than famine or pestilence. If you will take advice, you will become regular in your habits, eat and drink only wholesome things, sleep on a mattrass, and retire and rise very regularly. Make a free use of water to purify the skin, and when sick take counsel of the best friend you know, and follow nature.

OBEDIENCE TO GOD.

BY H. P. BROWN.

"To obey is better than sacrifices." 1st Sam. xv. 22.

The prophets whom the Lord did send
To wicked men, their ways to mend,
Who, holding priesthood, power and might,
Were qualified to teach them right.
And having power, they did command,
While Jordan, sun and moon did stand,
All motionless. While all God's will
Was executed: and never till
The word came forth to onward go,
The moon did move, or Jordan flow.
So thus we see all nations bend
To keep God's words; and should not men,
Who are but worms, composed of dust,
And with earth's nature have been cursed?
Should not they remember well
That by transgression Adam fell,
And left the garden, once so grand,
But cursed for sin with other land?
Do you remember old king Saul,
Who, not obeying God, did fall
From being king in Israel, and
The Lord chose David, by command,
From being shepherd over sheep
To redeem Israel, and to keep
His "Law," "commandments," which "are truth,"
To hoary age, from very youth?
O would you glance your eye with me
On sacred writ, and then you'll see
Destruction followed the rebel band
Of Korah, Dathan and Abiram,
With hundreds more, who did rebel
Against their God, and went to hell.
You'd see the spirit to dictate
The Lord,s anointed; and not to wait
For God to call and then obey,
But like all pseudoes, want their way,
And offer God, like king Uzziah,
An offering; and whose very prayer
Was sin. But still they ne'er
Supposed that Abram's God
Would plead with them with chast'ning rod,
And thus they're lifted up in pride,
And God's anointed they deride.
O mortal man, wilt thou awake,
And from these words a lesson take
Of obeying God. Raise not a hand
Against thy God, thou canst not stand,
For when loud thunders shake earth's pole,
And lightnings flash, your very soul
Will cry, "O thou God of love,
Have mercy on me from above,
And I thy sacred name will praise
Throughout my life; through endless days."
Now saints of God, a warning take,
Ne'er raise an arm for your soul's sake
Against our God, nor prophet James,
For either one it's all the same,
In truth and right. For God did set in Joseph's stead
Our brother James to be the head,
To teach the law of God to man
By revelation and command.
Therefore obey all revelation
That does pertain to your salvation,
And in redemption you shall stand
Among the saints on Zion's land.

Porter, Wis., April 2d, 1850.

SOURCE OF ELECTRICITY.

The earth is the great reservoir of electricity, from which the atmosphere and clouds receive their portion of this fluid. It is during the process of evaporation that it is principally excited, silently conveyed to the regions above: and also during the condensation of this vapor the grand and terrific phenomena of thunder and lightning are made manifest to our senses. In order to form a correct estimate of the immense power of this agent in the production of electricity, we must bring to our view the quantity of water evaporated from the surface of the earth, and also the amount of electricity that may be developed from a single grain of this liquid. According to the calculations of Cavallo, about five thousand two hundred and eight million tons of water are probably evaporated from the Mediterranean Sea in a single summer's day. To obtain some idea of the vast volume of water thus daily taken up by the thirsty heavens, let us compare it with something rendered more apparent than this invisible process. President Dwight and Prof. Darby have both estimated the quantity of water precipitated over the Falls of Niagara at more than eleven million tons per hour. Yet all the water passing over the cataract in twenty days would amount only to that ascending from the Mediterranean in one day.

☞ The annexed extract is not only beautifully written, but it contains much truth, which should be indelibly impressed upon the minds of readers:—

DECEIT.—When once a concealment or deceit has been practiced in matters where all should be fair and open as the day, confidence can never be restored, any more than you can restore the white bloom to the grape or plume which you have once pressed in your hand. How true is this, and what a neglected truth by a great portion of mankind! Falsehood is not only one of the most humilitating vices, but sooner or later it is most certain to lead to the most serious crimes. With partners in trade, with partners in life, with friends, with lovers, how important is confidence! How essential that all guile and hypocrisy should be guarded against in the intercourse between such parties! How much misery would be avoided in the history of many lives, had truth and scincerity been the guiding and controlling motives, instead of prevarication and deceit. "Any vice," said a parent to a child, "any vice, at least, among the frailties of a milder character, but falsehood! Far better that my child should commit an error, or do a wrong and confess it, than escape the penalty, however severe, by falsehood and hypocrisy. Let me know the worst, and a remedy may possibly be applied. But keep me in the dark, let me be misled and deceived, and it is impossible to tell at what unprepared hour a crushing blow, an overwhelming exposure, may come."

HOW TO PRESERVE HEALTH.

Medicine will never remedy bad habits. It is utterly futile to think of living in gluttony, intemperance, and every excess, and keeping the body in health by medicine. Indulgence of the appetite, indiscriminate dosing and drugging, have ruined the health, and destroyed the lives of more persons than famine or pestilence. If you will take advice, you will become regular in your habits, eat and drink only wholesome things, sleep on a mattrass, and retire and rise very regularly. Make a free use of water to purify the skin, and when sick take counsel of the best friend you know, and follow nature.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 7] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1850. [WHOLE No. 175

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Athens, April 8th, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—I take this opportunity of addressing a few lines unto you, to let you know what I have been about for some time past, and also my designs for the future. Circumstances were such, that I could not attend the Conference in Michigan, where matters might have been arranged so that I could have acted in concert with those of the eastern mission. I however determined not to be an idler in the Lord's vineyard; but to labor according to circumstances, and trust to God to give the increase.

I went the latter part of October last to see Bro. Ara Wade, (an Elder,) and we concluded, that, under our present circumstances, we might as well labor in the adjacent country to where Bro. Wade resides. Our labors were chiefly in French Creek, Clymer, and Mina township, Chautauque Co., N. Y. We have not as yet been blessed with any accessions to our numbers; but humbly trust that there will be some fruit gathered ere long from that part of the Lord's vineyard. In most cases we found the people willing to hear, and some seemed to be almost persuaded to become christians. Doubtless had it not been for the gathering, tithing, &c., many would have been baptized.

I have always viewed the gathering and tithing very essential parts of our religion, and have frequently thought that the Elders were too negligent in teaching those points of doctrine. It seems to me that it would be better not to obey, than to attempt to serve God at the halves, and cause so much trouble as has already been brought upon the church by false brethren. I think that one person who first counts the cost, and fully understands all things necessarily belonging to this latter day work, and who obeys God rather than man, and makes no attempt to serve the mammon of unrighteousness, is a greater ornament in the church, than ten thousand persons who are constantly stumbling at everything that looks like taxing their purses for the building up of Zion. When anything like the Order of Enoch comes along to try those who are called saints, we find but a very few but what serve the creature more than the Creator.

I will now give some of my views concerning tithing and the Order of Enoch, and if my information is incorrect concerning these matters I wish to be corrected. The order of tithing seems to be plainly taught in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, and some think that the Order of Enoch requires nothing more than a faithful performance of this tithing; but I have not viewed it in this way. When we are willing to pay the one-tenth for the support of the poor, and for the building up of Zion, it looks as though we love ourselves nine times as much as we do our neighbors, and have the one-tenth of our affections only centred in heaven.

Whereas, on the other hand, it looks as though we believed the "earth to be the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," and ourselves nothing but stewards, expecting soon to give an account of our stewardship. In short, the Order of Enoch is like that which was practiced in the days of the Apostles of our Lord and Savior, as well as in the days of Enoch himself: when such as served God, and loved their neighbors as themselves, sold their possessions, and made equal distribution among those of their order, as ev-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 7] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1850. [WHOLE No. 175

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Athens, April 8th, 1850.

BRO. COOPER:—I take this opportunity of addressing a few lines unto you, to let you know what I have been about for some time past, and also my designs for the future. Circumstances were such, that I could not attend the Conference in Michigan, where matters might have been arranged so that I could have acted in concert with those of the eastern mission. I however determined not to be an idler in the Lord's vineyard; but to labor according to circumstances, and trust to God to give the increase.

I went the latter part of October last to see Bro. Ara Wade, (an Elder,) and we concluded, that, under our present circumstances, we might as well labor in the adjacent country to where Bro. Wade resides. Our labors were chiefly in French Creek, Clymer, and Mina township, Chautauque Co., N. Y. We have not as yet been blessed with any accessions to our numbers; but humbly trust that there will be some fruit gathered ere long from that part of the Lord's vineyard. In most cases we found the people willing to hear, and some seemed to be almost persuaded to become christians. Doubtless had it not been for the gathering, tithing, &c., many would have been baptized.

I have always viewed the gathering and tithing very essential parts of our religion, and have frequently thought that the Elders were too negligent in teaching those points of doctrine. It seems to me that it would be better not to obey, than to attempt to serve God at the halves, and cause so much trouble as has already been brought upon the church by false brethren. I think that one person who first counts the cost, and fully understands all things necessarily belonging to this latter day work, and who obeys God rather than man, and makes no attempt to serve the mammon of unrighteousness, is a greater ornament in the church, than ten thousand persons who are constantly stumbling at everything that looks like taxing their purses for the building up of Zion. When anything like the Order of Enoch comes along to try those who are called saints, we find but a very few but what serve the creature more than the Creator.

I will now give some of my views concerning tithing and the Order of Enoch, and if my information is incorrect concerning these matters I wish to be corrected. The order of tithing seems to be plainly taught in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, and some think that the Order of Enoch requires nothing more than a faithful performance of this tithing; but I have not viewed it in this way. When we are willing to pay the one-tenth for the support of the poor, and for the building up of Zion, it looks as though we love ourselves nine times as much as we do our neighbors, and have the one-tenth of our affections only centred in heaven.

Whereas, on the other hand, it looks as though we believed the "earth to be the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," and ourselves nothing but stewards, expecting soon to give an account of our stewardship. In short, the Order of Enoch is like that which was practiced in the days of the Apostles of our Lord and Savior, as well as in the days of Enoch himself: when such as served God, and loved their neighbors as themselves, sold their possessions, and made equal distribution among those of their order, as every man had need: so that the man who had but ten talents would be equal with him who had ten thousand: "for no man called aught of the things he possessed his own, for they had all things common."

It looks to me to be utterly impossible for a society of saints to exist, or "for brethren to dwell together in unity," except they observe this law of equality. The law saith, "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This does not look like coveting all that is near us, and oppressing the hireling in his wages, for the sake of aggrandizing ourselves, so that we by the silly multitude might be called rich. Our Savior taught us that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. Then a man should not look upon his own, but anothers wealth, and learn to esteem others better than himself, and evince unto the world that they have passed from death unto life, because they love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

We expect some four or five families from this vicinity to go to Voree or Beaver this fall. I some expect to visit that desirable country about the first of June next, in company with my brother Leonard, to secure an inheritance. Yours in the bonds of the covenant,

WARREN POST.

"GRIEVE NOT THE HOLY SPIRIT."—PAUL.

The beloved disciple has written, that "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. * * There is no fear in love: perfect love casteth out fear:" and every soul, who is in covenant with God, and keeping his commandments, feels this, and is ready to testify to this truth, that, as the love of God increases, the love of the world, its riches, honors, and pleasures diminish, and its fear also: so that one principle of fear alone remains with the Saints when they have arrived at that degree of love which it is their privilege to possess, and that is, the fear of displeasing their heavenly Father, and of grieving his Holy Spirit.

When the spirit of prophecy, revelation, visions, tongues, interpretation, healing, &c., is made manifest among the brethren, and especially on the first reception of these gifts by an individual, or any particular branch of the Church, and the souls of the Saints are expanded by the spirit of these gifts, and their hearts almost ready to burst with gratitude for the blessings they enjoy, and they are anxiously desiring that all should become partakers of the same blessings which they possess: it is very easy for them to give way to their feelings in the extacy of their joy, and attempt to give some sign or token of the power of God to those around them; and they feel that it is the Spirit of God moving them thus to act, and if they keep silence, they fear they grieve the Spirit.

When Satan can no longer prevent the Saints from coming directly up to the line which God has marked out for them, he is ever ready to step behind, and push them beyond the mark, thus causing them to err in spirit; and in this situation they are liable to do those things which they themselves know are not according to the oracles of truth. He tries to persuade the honest in heart not to believe the Gospel, to refrain from repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, so that they may not receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, knowing that the office of the Spirit is to expose his subtle devices, and guide those who possess it into all truth; and when he can prevent them no longer from obedience to those requirements of the Most High, he turns into a preacher of righteousness, and tries to persuade them that they cannot do enough for God. If any one has been healed by the power of faith, in the name of Jesus Christ, this counterfeit preacher will try to persuade them to publish it to every one they see, and tell what great things God has wrought; and they set themselves at work to do it with all possible speed, for fear they should grieve the Spirit, forgetting that when Jesus healed the sick, he told them to hold their peace and tell no man.

When the spirit of prophecy rests upon the

ery man had need: so that the man who had but ten talents would be equal with him who had ten thousand: "for no man called aught of the things he possessed his own, for they had all things common."

It looks to me to be utterly impossible for a society of saints to exist, or "for brethren to dwell together in unity," except they observe this law of equality. The law saith, "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This does not look like coveting all that is near us, and oppressing the hireling in his wages, for the sake of aggrandizing ourselves, so that we by the silly multitude might be called rich. Our Savior taught us that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. Then a man should not look upon his own, but anothers wealth, and learn to esteem others better than himself, and evince unto the world that they have passed from death unto life, because they love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

We expect some four or five families from this vicinity to go to Voree or Beaver this fall. I some expect to visit that desirable country about the first of June next, in company with my brother Leonard, to secure an inheritance. Yours in the bonds of the covenant,

WARREN POST.

"GRIEVE NOT THE HOLY SPIRIT."—PAUL.

The beloved disciple has written, that "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. * * There is no fear in love: perfect love casteth out fear:" and every soul, who is in covenant with God, and keeping his commandments, feels this, and is ready to testify to this truth, that, as the love of God increases, the love of the world, its riches, honors, and pleasures diminish, and its fear also: so that one principle of fear alone remains with the Saints when they have arrived at that degree of love which it is their privilege to possess, and that is, the fear of displeasing their heavenly Father, and of grieving his Holy Spirit.

When the spirit of prophecy, revelation, visions, tongues, interpretation, healing, &c., is made manifest among the brethren, and especially on the first reception of these gifts by an individual, or any particular branch of the Church, and the souls of the Saints are expanded by the spirit of these gifts, and their hearts almost ready to burst with gratitude for the blessings they enjoy, and they are anxiously desiring that all should become partakers of the same blessings which they possess: it is very easy for them to give way to their feelings in the extacy of their joy, and attempt to give some sign or token of the power of God to those around them; and they feel that it is the Spirit of God moving them thus to act, and if they keep silence, they fear they grieve the Spirit.

When Satan can no longer prevent the Saints from coming directly up to the line which God has marked out for them, he is ever ready to step behind, and push them beyond the mark, thus causing them to err in spirit; and in this situation they are liable to do those things which they themselves know are not according to the oracles of truth. He tries to persuade the honest in heart not to believe the Gospel, to refrain from repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, so that they may not receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, knowing that the office of the Spirit is to expose his subtle devices, and guide those who possess it into all truth; and when he can prevent them no longer from obedience to those requirements of the Most High, he turns into a preacher of righteousness, and tries to persuade them that they cannot do enough for God. If any one has been healed by the power of faith, in the name of Jesus Christ, this counterfeit preacher will try to persuade them to publish it to every one they see, and tell what great things God has wrought; and they set themselves at work to do it with all possible speed, for fear they should grieve the Spirit, forgetting that when Jesus healed the sick, he told them to hold their peace and tell no man.

When the spirit of prophecy rests upon the inexperienced Saints, the adversary would gladly prompt them to cry aloud, and declare all they know, and tell what judgments, &c., are coming on the nations or indviduals; and, fearing lest they should grieve the Spirit, they cry aloud, and tell of the fire that is going to devour the city, or of a neighbor who is to be murbered, forgetting that the spirits of the prophets must be subject to the prophets,--not understanding that the spirit which prompted them to prophesy such things was seeking their destruction, by making them answerable to the laws of the land for the burning and the murder of which they had prophesied, when the same shall be fulfilled.

In no one thing, perhaps, are the Saints more afraid of grieving the Spirit than in keeping silence when the spirit of tongues is upon them, and especially when they have recently received this gift. As the Saints, many times, are so fearful of grieving the Spirit by refraining from speaking, we would recommend them to give heed to the admonitions written by Paul concerning this matter, so that their understandings may become enlightened, and thus, acting in wisdom, they may be delivered from this fear. 1 Cor. xiv. 14. "If I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful." 19. "I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." 27. "If any man speak in an unknow tongue, let one interpret." 28. "And if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak unto himself, and unto God." 23. "If the church be come together, and all speak with tongues, will not the unlearned, or unbelievers say ye are mad." 22. "Tongues are for a sign to them that believe not." True, but to whom is the sign; those of their own tongue or nation, or of some other nation? In the 21st of the same chapter the law is quoted: "with men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people," by foreigners or those of other languages; and this is the great and important use of tongues, that the Elders of Israel may preach the gospel to the nations of the earth, so that all men may hear in their own tongue or language of the wonderful works of God, as some few did on the day of Pentecost. But will all believe the sign? Let the Lord answer, for he saith, in the same verse, "for all that, they will not hear me;" and this agrees with what Abraham told the rich man in torment, "If they believe not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead;" and no one will suppose the speaking in tongues a greater miracle, or more likely to convince the unbeliever, than the resurrection of a dead man.

With these few hints, we counsel the Saints to strive earnestly for the best gifts--the gifts of charity, wisdom, and knowledge--and seek to edify and comfort each other in your own tongue generally; and if you speak at all in an unknown tongue, pray for the interpretation thereof, that all things may be done to edification; but never give out appointments for speaking in tongues, for the purpose of calling the people together; neither speak in tongues to an assembly who have come together for the purpose of hearing you thus speak; neither speak to any one for a sign, on any occasion, for this is not pleasing in the sight of heaven. But let the sign remain with those to whom it belongs---to yourselves alone before God, and to nations of other languages; and by so doing, whatever may be your feelings, you will not quench the Spirit of the Lord, but the spirit of the Devil; and in this we will rejoice, and God will bless you.

☞ Bro. Adams and his company arrived at Beaver Island the fore part of last week, in good health and spirits. Almost every boat brings more or less emigrants. Pres. Strang was to hold a council with the Indians on Garden Island the latter part of the week. He is busily employed surveying their villages that are already building up, and locating the emigrants.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

J. S. Gibbins,	$1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Uriah U. Tyler,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 35
Lydia Bennett,	2,00 to Vol. VI. No. 12
Nelson Bower,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 52
Stephen Post,	2,00 to Vol. VI. No. 28
Hiram P. Brown,	1,00 to Vol. IV. No. 40

inexperienced Saints, the adversary would gladly prompt them to cry aloud, and declare all they know, and tell what judgments, &c., are coming on the nations or indviduals; and, fearing lest they should grieve the Spirit, they cry aloud, and tell of the fire that is going to devour the city, or of a neighbor who is to be murbered, forgetting that the spirits of the prophets must be subject to the prophets,--not understanding that the spirit which prompted them to prophesy such things was seeking their destruction, by making them answerable to the laws of the land for the burning and the murder of which they had prophesied, when the same shall be fulfilled.

In no one thing, perhaps, are the Saints more afraid of grieving the Spirit than in keeping silence when the spirit of tongues is upon them, and especially when they have recently received this gift. As the Saints, many times, are so fearful of grieving the Spirit by refraining from speaking, we would recommend them to give heed to the admonitions written by Paul concerning this matter, so that their understandings may become enlightened, and thus, acting in wisdom, they may be delivered from this fear. 1 Cor. xiv. 14. "If I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful." 19. "I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." 27. "If any man speak in an unknow tongue, let one interpret." 28. "And if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak unto himself, and unto God." 23. "If the church be come together, and all speak with tongues, will not the unlearned, or unbelievers say ye are mad." 22. "Tongues are for a sign to them that believe not." True, but to whom is the sign; those of their own tongue or nation, or of some other nation? In the 21st of the same chapter the law is quoted: "with men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people," by foreigners or those of other languages; and this is the great and important use of tongues, that the Elders of Israel may preach the gospel to the nations of the earth, so that all men may hear in their own tongue or language of the wonderful works of God, as some few did on the day of Pentecost. But will all believe the sign? Let the Lord answer, for he saith, in the same verse, "for all that, they will not hear me;" and this agrees with what Abraham told the rich man in torment, "If they believe not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead;" and no one will suppose the speaking in tongues a greater miracle, or more likely to convince the unbeliever, than the resurrection of a dead man.

With these few hints, we counsel the Saints to strive earnestly for the best gifts--the gifts of charity, wisdom, and knowledge--and seek to edify and comfort each other in your own tongue generally; and if you speak at all in an unknown tongue, pray for the interpretation thereof, that all things may be done to edification; but never give out appointments for speaking in tongues, for the purpose of calling the people together; neither speak in tongues to an assembly who have come together for the purpose of hearing you thus speak; neither speak to any one for a sign, on any occasion, for this is not pleasing in the sight of heaven. But let the sign remain with those to whom it belongs---to yourselves alone before God, and to nations of other languages; and by so doing, whatever may be your feelings, you will not quench the Spirit of the Lord, but the spirit of the Devil; and in this we will rejoice, and God will bless you.

☞ Bro. Adams and his company arrived at Beaver Island the fore part of last week, in good health and spirits. Almost every boat brings more or less emigrants. Pres. Strang was to hold a council with the Indians on Garden Island the latter part of the week. He is busily employed surveying their villages that are already building up, and locating the emigrants.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

J. S. Gibbins,	$1,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Uriah U. Tyler,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 35
Lydia Bennett,	2,00 to Vol. VI. No. 12
Nelson Bower,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 52
Stephen Post,	2,00 to Vol. VI. No. 28
Hiram P. Brown,	1,00 to Vol. IV. No. 40

TREASON.

Some of the apostates here accuse the saints of treason. Well, it is a grave charge, but it is no worse for us to be accused of this crime than it was for the ancients. Jesus Christ was looked upon as rather a treasonable character. The chief priests and scribes said of him: "If we let him alone all men will believe on him, and the Romans will come and take away both our place and nation." They were convinced that he claimed to be a king; and being afraid that he would finally succeed in establishing his kingdom, they hired Judas for thirty pieces of silver to deliver him into their hands. Had they lived in our day, they might have saved their money.

There are apostates here who would have done it gratis, and considered it a rare opportunity of displaying their talents. They brought him before Pilate, the Roman Governor, and accused him, saying: "We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cesar, saying that he himself is Christ, (anointed,) a king." Upon this accusation he was condemned and crucified. Many of his followers have been persecuted and put to death on similar accusations. The persecution under Domitian was occasioned, if we may give credit to Hegesippus, by the fears he was under of losing the empire, being informed that among the relations of Christ a man should arise possessed of a turbulent and ambitious spirit, who was to excite commotions in the state, and aim at supreme dominion.

As it was the lot of the former day saints to be thus accused, so it has been the lot of the latter day saints. Joseph Smith, the prophet of God, was in his life time repeatedly tried for treason; but being honorably acquited every time, the "scribes" and "pharisees" concluded to put an end to his existence by mob violence. Accordingly, on the 27th of June, 1844, the "scribes and pharisees" of Warsaw, Ill., with the assistance of a few apostates, murdered him and his brother Hyrum in Carthage jail while yielding obedience to the laws of their country. In 1833 some two thousand saints were robbed, plundered and driven from the State of Missouri, and many others imprisoned and martyred because their religion was considered dangerous to the commonwealth.

And why was this? Had they transgressed the laws of the land? No. It was because they believed the Bible; because they believed that God would fulfill his words which he spoke by the mouth of his servant Daniel, saying: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall break in pieces all other kingdoms, and stand forever," &c. "These texts and many others," says one of the sufferers, "were inquired into with all the eagerness and apparent alarm which characterized a Herod of old, who feared a rival in the person of Jesus Christ." Herod, after inquiring diligently into the prophecies concerning the birth of Christ, learned that Bethlehem was the honored place designated by the Jewish oracles for the birth place of Messiah; and on learning from the wise men of the east that he was already born, sent forth a cruel order for extirminating the children of Bethlehem from two years old and under.

In this way he thought to falsify the oracles of God—to destroy the king of Israel, and maintain his own usurpation of power. But he was disappointed. The sequel shows that he was the means of fulfilling the word of God, instead of falsifying it. The angel of the Lord had caused the father, mother and infant to flee to Egypt, "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the mouth of the Lord by the prophet, saying: Out of Egypt have I called my son." So it happened with Governor Boggs, the modern Herod; he decreed the destruction of the church and kingdom of God in the last days, but they fled into Illinois instead of Egypt; for the predictions of Daniel and others concerning the church and kingdom of God in the last days must be fulfilled now, as were those predictions concerning Christ, in spite of men or Devils.

As the accusers of the saints are not yet cast down, so they continue to be accused; but for our consolation the Lord has assured us that

TREASON.

Some of the apostates here accuse the saints of treason. Well, it is a grave charge, but it is no worse for us to be accused of this crime than it was for the ancients. Jesus Christ was looked upon as rather a treasonable character. The chief priests and scribes said of him: "If we let him alone all men will believe on him, and the Romans will come and take away both our place and nation." They were convinced that he claimed to be a king; and being afraid that he would finally succeed in establishing his kingdom, they hired Judas for thirty pieces of silver to deliver him into their hands. Had they lived in our day, they might have saved their money.

There are apostates here who would have done it gratis, and considered it a rare opportunity of displaying their talents. They brought him before Pilate, the Roman Governor, and accused him, saying: "We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cesar, saying that he himself is Christ, anointed, a king." Upon this accusation he was condemned and crucified. Many of his followers have been persecuted and put to death on similar accusations. The persecution under Domitian was occasioned, if we may give credit to Hegesippus, by the fears he was under of losing the empire, being informed that among the relations of Christ a man should arise possessed of a turbulent and ambitious spirit, who was to excite commotions in the state, and aim at supreme dominion.

As it was the lot of the former day saints to be thus accused, so it has been the lot of the latter day saints. Joseph Smith, the prophet of God, was in his life time repeatedly tried for treason; but being honorably acquited every time, the "scribes" and "pharisees" concluded to put an end to his existence by mob violence. Accordingly, on the 27th of June, 1844, the "scribes and pharisees" of Warsaw, Ill., with the assistance of a few apostates, murdered him and his brother Hyrum in Carthage jail while yielding obedience to the laws of their country. In 1833 some two thousand saints were robbed, plundered and driven from the State of Missouri, and many others imprisoned and martyred because their religion was considered dangerous to the commonwealth.

And why was this? Had they transgressed the laws of the land? No. It was because they believed the Bible; because they believed that God would fulfill his words which he spoke by the mouth of his servant Daniel, saying: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall break in pieces all other kingdoms, and stand forever," &c. "These texts and many others," says one of the sufferers, "were inquired into with all the eagerness and apparent alarm which characterized a Herod of old, who feared a rival in the person of Jesus Christ." Herod, after inquiring diligently into the prophecies concerning the birth of Christ, learned that Bethlehem was the honored place designated by the Jewish oracles for the birth place of Messiah; and on learning from the wise men of the east that he was already born, sent forth a cruel order for extirminating the children of Bethlehem from two years old and under.

In this way he thought to falsify the oracles of God—to destroy the king of Israel, and maintain his own usurpation of power. But he was disappointed. The sequel shows that he was the means of fulfilling the word of God, instead of falsifying it. The angel of the Lord had caused the father, mother and infant to flee to Egypt, "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the mouth of the Lord by the prophet, saying: Out of Egypt have I called my son." So it happened with Governor Boggs, the modern Herod, he decreed the destruction of the church and kingdom of God in the last days, but they fled into Illinois instead of Egypt; for the predictions of Daniel and others concerning the establishment of kingdom of God in the last days must be fulfilled now, as were those predictions concerning Christ, in spite of men or Devils.

As the accusers of the saints are not yet cast down, so they continue to be accused; but for our consolation the Lord has assured us that

"the time to favor Zion is at hand, and the day of her redemption draweth near," and has given us his word that "he that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword must perish with the sword. Here is the patience and faith of the saints."

Albion, Mich., April 19th, 1850.

DEAR BRO. COOPER:—As I have been detained here much longer than I expected when I came, I write to inform you that I am well, and expect soon to leave here for Beaver Island. Since my arrival in this place I have preached occasionally in Parma. I was well received, and had a respectable hearing, and have been solicited to remain here and preach all summer. But I think the most that are in favor of my staying are more anxious to witness the downfall of witchcraft (sectarianism) than to receive the truth in the love of it.

At Burlington I was well received, and preached two evenings, and left a good interest awakened in the minds of the honest of that place. At priest-ridden Albion I preached last evening to a miserable lot of empty benches. I shall never do the like again in that place. I go there again this evening, and if I find a house lit up, and a congregation there, I shall preach to them. If not, I shall feel satisfied to leave the people of Albion to enjoy their strong delusion until they are visited with judgments which will not long tarry, and when they come will surprise the hypocrites of that place, and make the scorner tremble.

I long to meet my brethren on the Island, far from the annoying influence of sectarian folly. I have good letters from Bro. L. D. Hickey. He is anxious to return to the Island. Bro. John S. Comstock has returned with his family to this place. But I think from what I can learn of him he would rather be somewhere else. I hope he may learn to have charity, and again gather to the bosom of the church of the living God, and escape the coming evils. I am anxious for the salvation of all good people from oppression and violence. But when will the church of God be able to overcome evil, if good men because of evil doers forsake God and his prophets and Apostles, and leave them to struggle with the enemies of God alone? When, I ask, will this be done? Let the prophet answer.

Zion shall be redeemed with judgments.—And it is to be feared that the judgments for the redemption of Zion will sorely afflict those who have left the truth; who have forsaken the fold of God, and gone to the ranks of the enemy. But in all that is passing I see good for those who will endure as good soldiers; for in the great work of God, now begun on earth, every great and noble spirit will act a part; and to those who overcome will he give to sit down with him on his throne, even as he overcame and sat down with his Father upon his throne. But to those who forsake the flock because the wolves prowl around, there appears to be another doom, and one that I pray to God for deliverance from.

Let me contend even against hypocrites in Zion, if they be there, (and we read that there will be some to be surprised shortly, even in Zion,) rather than to cowardly surrender the glorious gospel to the enemies of God, or the light given to us thereby. Yes, let me rather meet the fate of those who followed Christ in the days of his ministry; for when they met the strong arm of opposition, and sunk under it, even then they could rejoice in the hope of a better resurrection. Yes, far better than they could reasonably have hoped for had they forsaken God and the gospel because of evil doers.

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

☞ Without action, thought can never ripen into truth. Whilst the world hangs before the eye as a cloud of beauty, we cannot even see its beauty. Inaction is cowardice. The preamble of thought, the transition through which it passes from the unconscious to the conscious, is Action. Only so much do I know as I have lived. Instantly we know those whose words are loaded with life, and whose not.

"the time to favor Zion is at hand, and the day of her redemption draweth near," and has given us his word that "he that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword must perish with the sword. Here is the patience and faith of the saints."

Albion, Mich., April 19th, 1850.

DEAR BRO. COOPER:—As I have been detained here much longer than I expected when I came, I write to inform you that I am well, and expect soon to leave here for Beaver Island. Since my arrival in this place I have preached occasionally in Parma. I was well received, and had a respectable hearing, and have been solicited to remain here and preach all summer. But I think the most that are in favor of my staying are more anxious to witness the downfall of witchcraft (sectarianism) than to receive the truth in the love of it.

At Barlington I was well received, and preached two evenings, and left a good interest awakened in the minds of the honest of that place. At priest-ridden Albion I preached last evening to a miserable lot of empty benches. I shall never do the like again in that place. I go there again this evening, and if I find a house lit up, and a congregation there, I shall preach to them. If not, I shall feel satisfied to leave the people of Albion to enjoy their strong delusion until they are visited with judgments which will not long tarry, and when they come will surprise the hypocrites of that place, and make the scorner tremble.

I long to meet my brethren on the Island, far from the annoying influence of sectarian folly. I have good letters from Bro. L. D. Hickey. He is anxious to return to the Island. Bro. John S. Comstock has returned with his family to this place. But I think from what I can learn of him he would rather be somewhere else. I hope he may learn to have charity, and again gather to the bosom of the church of the living God, and escape the coming evils. I am anxious for the salvation of all good people from oppression and violence. But when will the church of God be able to overcome evil, if good men because of evil doers forsake God and his prophets and Apostles, and leave them to struggle with the enemies of God alone? When, I ask, will this be done? Let the prophet answer.

Zion shall be redeemed with judgments.—And it is to be feared that the judgments for the redemption of Zion will sorely afflict those who have left the truth; who have forsaken the fold of God, and gone to the ranks of the enemy. But in all that is passing I see good for those who will endure as good soldiers; for in the great work of God, now begun on earth, every great and noble spirit will act a part; and to those who overcome will he give to sit down with him on his throne, even as he overcame and sat down with his Father upon his throne. But to those who forsake the flock because the wolves prowl around, there appears to be another doom, and one that I pray to God for deliverance from.

Let me contend even against hypocrites in Zion, if they be there, (and we read that there will be some to be surprised shortly, even in Zion,) rather than to cowardly surrender the glorious gospel to the enemies of God, or the light given to us thereby. Yes, let me rather meet the fate of those who followed Christ in the days of his ministry; for when they met the strong arm of opposition, and sank under it, even then they could rejoice in the hope of a better resurrection. Yes, far better than they could reasonably have hoped for had they forsaken God and the gospel because of evil doers. SAMUEL GRAHAM.

☞ Without action, thought can never ripen into truth. Whilst the world hangs before the eye as a cloud of beauty, we cannot even see its beauty. Inaction is cowardice. The preamble of thought, the transition through which it passes from the unconscious to the conscious, is Action. Only so much do I know as I have lived. Instantly we know those whose words are loaded with life, and whose not.

☞ The following extract we copy from an article written by Mr. R. E. H. Levering, published in "Scott's Weekly Paper," Philadelphia, which will probably be read with interest by most of our readers:—

Seeing the barbarities and miseries occasioned by the kings and queens who have reigned and do reign in the Old World, it is evident that monarchs are the agents or representatives of his Satanic Majesty on earth. The Devil wished to make Christ a king in his dominions when he tempted him anciently. He showed him all the kingdoms of the world, which, as far as wickedness is concerned, are surely his own—saying that he would make the Savior universal king if he would fall down and worship him! Unsuccessful in that case, he has appointed his agents in other instances through succeeding ages, the most prominent being the Russian Nicholas, the Portuguese Miguel, the French Charles, the Spanish Carlos, and the exiled Louis Philippe.

Are not his royal representatives worshiping him, according to his wish, in sacrificing on his shrine the precious blood and dearest rights of those whom they are controlling?—They have the marks of the beast, both fair and foul, when disguised as angels of light, or as desolating demons. Is not one who is called "The Defender of the Faith" fully carrying out the Satanic principles?—the faith that the power should steal from the many to the few for better subjugating the human race?—Is not another, who is termed "His Most Apostolic Majesty," going about, like a true apostle, converting by the sword and wide-spread ruin the people to the opinion, that kings, no matter how they act, are the anointed of the Lord? Have not those called "Their Most Christian Majesties," banded themselves together, as a most unholy alliance, to crush the sooner any aspirations for liberty that may arise in the Old World? Is not their conduct the most christian, knowing that ignorance is bliss, and wishing to darken the understandings of the people that they may be happier and more contented?

Yea, surely and verily, they are "Their Most Religious Majesties," as by taxation they are stripping wealth from their subjects, that the latter may not ruin themselves by sinful excesses, knowing that the excessive love of money is the root of all evil. Certainly that unholy alliance comprises a brotherhood of demons! This is not a new invention to oppress and desolate our race. We read in scripture that five ungodly kings formed a holy alliance against the Israelites. Joshua prayed for deliverance. God heard and assisted him.—While their armies were being destroyed, the five kings fled and hid in a cave. Joshua soon brought them forth, and hanged them on five trees. Although the Israelites "committed a great wickedness in sight of the Lord in asking for a king," when they had selected one, depending on the tyranny of man instead of the good government of God, the king went out before them to fight their battles; but in our age the shackled subjects go out before the king to fight his battles, while the latter is reveling or breathing vengeance at a distance from the foe.

Although king help king, a stronger Power will dissolve the royal union, and set the prisoners free. Of old the hypocritical Saul's protected Agag, a king who had afflicted Saul's own people, the Israelites. Commissioned by the Lord, Samuel inquired respecting the matter, and said: "Bring out hither to me Agag, the king of the Amalekites, and Agag came to him delicately," (royally.) And Samuel said unto him: "As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be made childless among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord."

Another instance: The Lord commanded Ahab, king of Israel, to destroy Benhadad, king of Syria. After subduing him in battle, Ahab (royal brother loving royal brother) spared his life, and seating him at his side in his chariot, proclaimed he was his brother, as the kings of the holy alliance in our day brother each other. This aroused the anger of almighty God, who, through a speedy messenger, thus spoke

☞ The following extract we copy from an article written by Mr. R. E. H. Levering, published in "Scott's Weekly Paper," Philadelphia, which will probably be read with interest by most of our readers:—

Seeing the barbarities and miseries occasioned by the kings and queens who have reigned and do reign in the Old World, it is evident that monarchs are the agents or representatives of his Satanic Majesty on earth. The Devil wished to make Christ a king in his dominions when he tempted him anciently. He showed him all the kingdoms of the world, which, as far as wickedness is concerned, are surely his own—saying that he would make the Savior universal king if he would fall down and worship him! Unsuccessful in that case, he has appointed his agents in other instances through succeeding ages, the most prominent being the Russian Nicholas, the Portuguese Miguel, the French Charles, the Spanish Carlos, and the exiled Louis Philippe.

Are not his royal representatives worshiping him, according to his wish, in sacrificing on his shrine the precious blood and dearest rights of those whom they are controlling?--They have the marks of the beast, both fair and foul, when disguised as angels of light, or as desolating demons. Is not one who is called "The Defender of the Faith" fully carrying out the Satanic principles?--the faith that the power should steal from the many to the few for better subjugating the human race?---Is not another, who is termed "His Most Apostolic Majesty," going about, like a true apostle, converting by the sword and wide-spread ruin the people to the opinion, that kings, no matter how they act, are the anointed of the Lord? Have not those called "Their Most Christian Majesties," banded themselves together, as a most unholy alliance, to crush the sooner any aspirations for liberty that may arise in the Old World? Is not their conduct the most christian, knowing that ignorance is bliss, and wishing to darken the understandings of the people that they may be happier and more contented?

Yea, surely and verily, they are "Their Most Religious Majesties," as by taxation they are stripping wealth from their subjects, that the latter may not ruin themselves by sinful excesses, knowing that the excessive love of money is the root of all evil. Certainly that unholy alliance comprises a brotherhood of demons! This is not a new invention to oppress and desolate our race. We read in scripture that five ungodly kings formed a holy alliance against the Israelites. Joshua prayed for deliverance. God heard and assisted him.—While their armies were being destroyed, the five kings fled and hid in a cave. Joshua soon brought them forth, and hanged them on five trees. Although the Israelites "committed a great wickedness in sight of the Lord in asking for a king," when they had selected one, depending on the tyranny of man instead of the good government of God, the king went out before them to fight their battles; but in our age the shackled subjects go out before the king to fight his battles, while the latter is reveling or breathing vengeance at a distance from the foe.

Although king help king, a stronger Power will dissolve the royal union, and set the prisoners free. Of old the hypocritical Saul's protected Agag, a king who had afflicted Saul's own people, the Israelites. Commissioned by the Lord, Samuel inquired respecting the matter, and said: "Bring out hither to me Agag, the king of the Amalekites, and Agag came to him delicately," (royally.) And Samuel said unto him: "As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be made childless among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord."

Another instance: The Lord commanded Ahab, king of Israel, to destroy Benhadad, king of Syria. After subduing him in battle, Ahab (royal brother loving royal brother) spared his life, and seating him at his side in his chariot, proclaimed he was his brother, as the kings of the holy alliance in our day brother each other. This aroused the anger of almighty God, who, through a speedy messenger, thus spoke to Ahab: "Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I had appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people." Our God is unchangeable, and he will employ his Joshuas, his Samuels, and his messengers, in our age, to tell the dooms of monarchs, and bring them to certain and appointed destruction.

And those "Right Reverend Fathers in God," (as they are termed in England,) the bishops, with the Bible in their hands, twisting it to suit their purposes, are sanctioning the union of church and state, thereby manacling the double incubus to the bodies and souls of the people. While Christ, whom they profess to follow and serve, miraculously fed the people with loaves and fishes, they are aiding in enacting cruel laws, designed to starve that people. While Christ went about continually blessing the people in the first place, spurning tyrannical kings from his presence, those English bishops first sanction the vices of kings, that they may the better, secondly, for their own emolument, crush and ultimately destroy the people.

While Christ, in the synagogues fulminated curses against kings and others who oppressed the people, those bishops, in their splendid churches, built on the ruin of the poor, pray for those kings who trample upon the people, supplicating God to render them more successful in oblivionizing the rights of that people for whom Christ suffered and died! They can do such diabolical deeds, while, with hardened hearts, faces long as flour barrels, and angelic eyes sweetly raised to heaven, they repeat the following to a sympathizing congregation, the royal family in the royal pew at the same time laughing in their sleeves:—

"O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good to the people: for his mercy endureth forever, who caused the people of Israel to pass safely through the Red Sea, but overthrew Pharaoh and his host who were pursuing the people—who led the people through the wilderness—who smote great kings who oppressed the people, and slew famous kings who stole the rights of the people---who redeemeth the people from their enemies, and who giveth food to all flesh, especially to the people, when he is permitted to have his own way on earth!" and can say, "Amen!" as all the congregation are piously repeating it, although outraged conscience is plainly whispering—

"The fruit of the people's industry is rapaciously seized upon and carried off, (especially from beggared Ireland,) to gratify the avarice and maintain in profligacy and luxury the scions and dependents of an alien Hanover family and its titled and untitled participators, but God will rid and deliver the people from the hands of strange children, whose mouths speak vanity, and whose right hand is a right hand of falsehood, that our garners may be full, affording all manner of store for the people, whose rights and property, through successive ages, have been stolen, for happy is that people whose God is the Lord."

☞ The foregoing description of priestcraft in England is a fair sample of the practices already carried out among the pious sectarians of this reputed land of "liberty and equal rights!" O, shame!

TRUE MANHOOD.

Men of just and simple spirits do not undervalue anything in life. They shrink not from the wealth, the struggles, the distinctions, the enjoyments of the world; and they are willing to risk all the obligations, the vicissitudes, the mistakes, and the sufferings which attach to the pursuit of them. But they never confound the accessories of fortune with the essence of happiness, or the scale of station for the scale of dignity. They understand well how, from such things, to extract the noblest uses, but they never think of them as sources of lofty or lasting happiness. The highest gratifications are not those which money can procure, nor those which the want of it can hinder; the highest gratifications are those of which the means are given freely, and the means, so far as the dispensations of nature are concerned, are distributed with a most beautiful equality. We need but health and moderate subsistence; then with simple tastes, the world is to us a resplendent dwelling, a richly furnished home; we have then a vast property in the works of God, we are Lords of a magnificent possession; and to the utmost capacity of our faculties, the past, the present, the mighty universe, are our inheritance.

The stars give all their joys without a price to those who look up to them with a wakeful spirit, and when their beams meet in the clear eye a radiance from the soul within, to that soul the whole arch of heaven becomes a blaze of living Glory. Can art prepare so fair a show as these solemn heavens, which God himself stretcheth out as a curtain, which he spreadeth abroad as a tent to dwell in?—Henry Swift.

to Ahab: "Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I had appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people." Our God is unchangeable, and he will employ his Joshuas, his Samuels, and his messengers, in our age, to tell the dooms of monarchs, and bring them to certain and appointed destruction.

And those "Right Reverend Fathers in God," (as they are termed in England,) the bishops, with the Bible in their hands, twisting it to suit their purposes, are sanctioning the union of church and state, thereby manacling the double incubus to the bodies and souls of the people. While Christ, whom they profess to follow and serve, miraculously fed the people with loaves and fishes, they are aiding in enacting cruel laws, designed to starve that people. While Christ went about continually blessing the people in the first place, spurning tyrannical kings from his presence, those English bishops first sanction the vices of kings, that they may the better, secondly, for their own emolument, crush and ultimately destroy the people.

While Christ, in the synagogues fulminated curses against kings and others who oppressed the people, those bishops, in their splendid churches, built on the ruin of the poor, pray for those kings who trample upon the people, supplicating God to render them more successful in oblivionizing the rights of that people for whom Christ suffered and died! They can do such diabolical deeds, while, with hardened hearts, faces long as flour barrels, and angelic eyes sweetly raised to heaven, they repeat the following to a sympathizing congregation, the royal family in the royal pew at the same time laughing in their sleeves:—

"O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good to the people: for his mercy endureth forever, who caused the people of Israel to pass safely through the Red Sea, but overthrew Pharaoh and his host who were pursuing the people—who led the people through the wilderness—who smote great kings who oppressed the people, and slew famous kings who stole the rights of the people---who redeemeth the people from their enemies, and who giveth food to all flesh, especially to the people, when he is permitted to have his own way on earth!" and can say, "Amen!" as all the congregation are piously repeating it, although outraged conscience is plainly whispering—

"The fruit of the people's industry is rapaciously seized upon and carried off, (especially from beggared Ireland,) to gratify the avarice and maintain in profligacy and luxury the scions and dependents of an alien Hanover family and its titled and untitled participators, but God will rid and deliver the people from the hands of strange children, whose mouths speak vanity, and whose right hand is a right hand of falsehood, that our garners may be full, affording all manner of store for the people, whose rights and property, through successive ages, have been stolen, for happy is that people whose God is the Lord."

☞ The foregoing description of priestcraft in England is a fair sample of the practices already carried out among the pious sectarians of this reputed land of "liberty and equal rights!" O, shame!

TRUE MANHOOD.

Men of just and simple spirits do not undervalue anything in life. They shrink not from the wealth, the struggles, the distinctions, the enjoyments of the world; and they are willing to risk all the obligations, the vicissitudes, the mistakes, and the sufferings which attach to the pursuit of them. But they never confound the accessories of fortune with the essence of happiness, or the scale of station for the scale of dignity. They understand well how, from such things, to extract the noblest uses, but they never think of them as sources of lofty or lasting happiness. The highest gratifications are not those which money can procure, nor those which the want of it can hinder; the highest gratifications are those of which the means are given freely, and the means, so far as the dispensations of nature are concerned, are distributed with a most beautiful equality. We need but health and moderate subsistence; then with simple tastes, the world is to us a resplendent dwelling, a richly furnished home; we have then a vast property in the works of God, we are Lords of a magnificent possession; and to the utmost capacity of our faculties, the past, the present, the mighty universe, are our inheritance.

The stars give all their joys without a price to those who look up to them with a wakeful spirit, and when their beams meet in the clear eye a radiance from the soul within, to that soul the whole arch of heaven becomes a blaze of living Glory. Can art prepare so fair a show as these solemn heavens, which God himself stretcheth out as a curtain, which he spreadeth abroad as a tent to dwell in?—Henry Swift.

"EARLY TO BED AND EARLY TO RISE."

"Early to bed and early to rise"—
Aye, note it down in your brain,
For it helpeth to make the foolish wise,
And uproots the weeds of pain.
Ye who are waking on thorns of care,
Who sigh for a softer bower,
Try what can be done in the morning sun,
And make use of the early hour.

Full many a day forever is lost
By delaying its work till to-morrow;
Ten minutes of sloth have often cost
Long years of bootless sorrow.
And ye who would win the lasting wealth
Of content and peaceful power,
Ye who would couple Labor and Health,
Must begin at the early hour.

We make bold promises of Time,
Yet, alas! too often break them;
We mock at the wings of the King of Kings,
And think we can overtake them.
But why loiter away the prime of the day,
Knowing that clouds may lower?
Is it not safer to make Life's hay
In the beam of the early hour?

Nature herself ever shows her best
Of gems to the gaze of the lark,
When the spangles of light on Earth's green breast
Put out the stars of the dark.
If we love the purest pearl of the dew,
And the richest breath of the flower,
If our spirits would greet the fresh and the sweet,
Go forth in the early hour.

Oh! pleasure and rest are more easily found
When we start through the morning's gate,
To sum up our figures, or plough on the ground,
And weave out the threads of Fate.
The eye looketh bright and the heart keepeth light
And man holdeth the conqueror's power,
When, ready and brave, he claims Time as his slave,
By the help of the early hour.

NOTICE.

It is expected that all the members of the quorum of the Twelve will be at the next Conference held on Beaver Island, without fail. The time of its session will be duly noticed in the Herald. Also all the Elders in the quorum of the Seventies will be in attendance, and as many of the Elders as can, and all others report themselves and their circumstances by letter at that time.

SAMUEL GRAHAM,
Pres. of the Twelve.

☞ Fifteen dollars tithing received from E.

SCIENCE AND THE WORKING MAN.

In every trade and occupation there is science. Every laborer is a practical philosopher, though too often, like the bee or beaver, working in the dark, performing prodigies of science without having the least idea of his own skill. This ought not to be. Animals may work from instinct, but reason and science are the only proper guides for mankind; nor should the workman be a mere machine, moved by the skill or philosophy of others; his mind should be as well versed with the science of his trade as his hand is with the art; and to arrive at this degree of knowledge is not so hard as some suppose, because there are truth and philosophy in everything. The quarryman in hewing stones, the mason or statuary in shaping them, or the poor man in breaking them, have had volumes of facts before their eyes, which if registered, might have settled all the knotty points in mineralogy. And the same may be said of him who sinks mines, levels hills, cuts through the hearts of mountains, or even lays down the gravel or pebbles in the garden walk. How true the words, that the thinking find

"Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in everything."

Every worker in iron, brass, tin, copper, steel, silver, or gold, is perpetually experimenting in those metals, and therefore, has an immense sphere of natural science and philosophy glittering before him. What a physiologist the butcher ought to be! What a botanist, entomologist, and, indeed, naturalist, generally, every farmer's man and dairymaid might become! Many of these have ten thousand more advantages for study than Solomon. The philosopher walks miles in the pursuit of truth; but truth follows and environs the cowherds, shepherds, and ploughmen. The experimentalist has to put up forges, or furnish laboratories, at great trouble and expense; but the smelter, the blacksmith, the founder, the glass-blower, and a hundred other mechanics and operatives, have all this apparatus daily before them, and therefore, without any trouble, might sound the depths and scan the heights of knowledge. Nothing would be required but a little observation.—Working Man's Friend.

CHARACTER.

Men are to be estimated, as Johnson says, by the mass of character. A block of tin may have a grain of silver, but still it is tin; and a block of silver may have an alloy of tin, but still it is silver. The mass of Elijah's character was excellence, yet he was not without the alloy. The mass of Jehu's character was base: yet he had a portion of zeal which was directed by God's great ends. But men are made the same use of as scaffolds; they are employed as means to erect a building, and then are taken down and destroyed.

☞ Be true, if you will be believed. Let a man but speak forth with genuine earnestness, the thought, the emotion, the actual condition of his own heart, and other men—so strangely are we all knit together by the tie of sympathy—must and will give heed to him. In culture, in extent of view, we may stand above the speaker, or below him, but, in either case, his words, if they are earnest and sincere, will find some response within us; for in spite of all earnal varieties in outward rank or inward, as face answers to face, so does the heart of man to man. "

Carlyle on Burns

"EARLY TO BED AND EARLY TO RISE."

"Early to bed and early to rise"—
Aye, note it down in your brain,
For it helpeth to make the foolish wise,
And uproots the weeds of pain.
Ye who are waking on thorns of care,
Who sigh for a softer bower,
Try what can be done in the morning sun,
And make use of the early hour.

Full many a day forever is lost
By delaying its work till to-morrow;
Ten minutes of sloth have often cost
Long years of bootless sorrow.
And ye who would win the lasting wealth
Of content and peaceful power,
Ye who would couple Labor and Health,
Must begin at the early hour.

We make bold promises of Time,
Yet, alas! too often break them;
We mock at the wings of the King of Kings,
And think we can overtake them.
But why loiter away the prime of the day,
Knowing that clouds may lower?
Is it not safer to make Life's hay
In the beam of the early hour?

Nature herself ever shows her best
Of gems to the gazè of the lark,
When the spangles of light on Earth's green breast
Put out the stars of the dark.
If we love the purest pearl of the dew,
And the richest breath of the flower,
If our spirits would greet the fresh and the sweet,
Go forth in the early hour.

Oh! pleasure and rest are more easily found
When we start through the morning's gate,
To sum up our figures, or plough on the ground,
And weave out the threads of Fate.
The eye looketh bright and the heart keepeth light
And man holdeth the conqueror's power,
When, ready and brave, he claims Time as his slave,
By the help of the early hour.

NOTICE.

It is expected that all the members of the quorum of the Twelve will be at the next Conference held on Beaver Island, without fail. The time of its session will be duly noticed in the Herald. Also all the Elders in the quorum of the Seventies will be in attendance, and as many of the Elders as can, and all others report themselves and their circumstances by letter at that time.

SAMUEL GRAHAM,
Pres. of the Twelve.

☛ Fifteen dollars tithing received from E.

SCIENCE AND THE WORKING MAN.

In every trade and occupation there is science. Every laborer is a practical philosopher, though too often, like the bee or beaver, working in the dark, performing prodigies of science without having the least idea of his own skill. This ought not to be. Animals may work from instinct, but reason and science are the only proper guides for mankind; nor should the workman be a mere machine, moved by the skill or philosophy of others: his mind should be as well versed with the science of his trade as his hand is with the art; and to arrive at this degree of knowledge is not so hard as some suppose, because there are truth and philosophy in everything. The quarryman in hewing stones, the mason or statuary in shaping them, or the poor man in breaking them, have had volumes of facts before their eyes, which if registered, might have settled all the knotty points in mineralogy. And the same may be said of him who sinks mines, levels hills, cuts through the hearts of mountains, or even lays down the gravel or pebbles in the garden walk. How true the words, that the thinking find

"Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in everything."

Every worker in iron, brass, tin, copper, steel, silver, or gold, is perpetually experimenting in those metals, and therefore, has an immense sphere of natural science and philosophy glittering before him. What a physiologist the butcher ought to be! What a botanist, entomologist, and, indeed, naturalist, generally, every farmer's man and dairymaid might become! Many of these have ten thousand more advantages for study than Solomon. The philosopher walks miles in the pursuit of truth; but truth follows and environs the cowherds, shepherds, and ploughmen. The experimentalist has to put up forges, or furnish laboratories, at great trouble and expense; but the smelter, the blacksmith, the founder, the glass-blower, and a hundred other mechanics and operatives, have all this apparatus daily before them, and therefore, without any trouble, might sound the depths and scan the heights of knowledge. Nothing would be required but a little observation.—Working Man's Friend.

CHARACTER.

Men are to be estimated, as Johnson says, by the mass of character. A block of tin may have a grain of silver, but still it is tin; and a block of silver may have an alloy of tin, but still it is silver. The mass of Elijah's character was excellence, yet he was not without the alloy. The mass of Jehu's character was base: yet he had a portion of zeal which was directed by God's great ends. But men are made the same use of as scaffolds; they are employed as means to erect a building, and then are taken down and destroyed.

☛ Be true, if you will be believed. Let a man but speak forth with genuine earnestness; the thought, the emotion, the actual condition of his own heart, and other men—so strangely are we all knit together by the tie of sympathy—must and will give heed to him. In culture, in extent of view, we may stand above the speaker, or below him, but, in either case, his words, if they are earnest and sincere, will find some response within us; for in spite of all earnal varieties in outward rank or inward, as face answers to face, so does the heart of man to man." Carlyle on Burns.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 8.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. MAY 9, 1850. [WHOLE No. 176.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE SAINTS OF THE LAST DAYS.

Nothing can be more pleasing and delightful than to contemplate the situation of the Latter Day Saints; placed as it were on an eminence, and bringing within the compass of their vision, all the kingdoms of the world, not only those which now are, but those which are past, as well as those to come; favored with the light of heaven, by which they can contemplate the history of the world in its true light, understanding the situation of all who have preceded them: the light in which the great Jehovah viewed them, and their relation to the salvation of Jesus Christ.

Having before them the history of nearly six thousand years, where is written the names, the mighty works, and great faith of the former day saints, their God-like nobility of soul, their splendid achievements among the nations in their day and generation, their undaunted courage in the cause of truth, their holy boldness in defence of their master's honor; their toils, their perils, their sacrifices, their indefatigable zeal, their firmness, and their steadfastness in the truth, not regarding their life unto death, their abiding testimony by which they condemned the generation which then lived, and will be had amongst men until time is no more: their great faith by which they ascended into the heights, and descended into the depths, and searched out all things, yea, even the deep things of God, seeing the end from the beginning, and the beginning from the end.

Being diligent and faithful, while the world was stumbling in darkness, and the nations were strangers to the knowledge of God, and knew not him who created them, nor him who saved them; they in the midst of darkness burst forth into light, and among those who sat in the valley and shadow of death they caused light to spring up; their voices were heard among nations afar off, and their power was felt in the islands of the sea. The messengers of heaven watched them by the way, and rejoiced over them in their righteousness.

Wide is the field of contemplation which opens to the view of the saints of the latter days, while they read the history and meditate upon the events peculiar to the saints, as set forth in the account which we have of those of former days; not only the knowledge they had of the things which then existed, but also of the things which should take place until time should end. It might be said of them in truth, that in them there was light and no darkness at all; for their knowledge extended down the stream of time, until they beheld the winding-up scene of the world, and reached forth into eternity, to gaze upon things eternal, immortal, and invisible.

Truly their religion was a religion of intelligence, and their minds in consequence of their religion was richly laden with wisdom from on high. When we contemplate the height of their devotion, the depth of their humility, the extent of their knowledge, the greatness of their sufferings, the fervor of their zeal, the boldness of their enterprises, the dexterity of their stratagems, the splendor of their works, the grandeur of their conceptions, the richness of their communications, the purity of their affections, the holiness of their desires, the brilliance of their course, the nobleness of their minds, the benevolence of their hearts, the sincerity of

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 8.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, MAY 9, 1850. [WHOLE No. 176.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE SAINTS OF THE LAST DAYS.

Nothing can be more pleasing and delightful than to contemplate the situation of the Latter Day Saints; placed as it were on an eminence, and bringing within the compass of their vision, all the kingdoms of the world, not only those which now are, but those which are past, as well as those to come; favored with the light of heaven, by which they can contemplate the history of the world in its true light, understanding the situation of all who have preceded them: the light in which the great Jehovah viewed them, and their relation to the salvation of Jesus Christ.

Having before them the history of nearly six thousand years, where is written the names, the mighty works, and great faith of the former day saints, their God-like nobility of soul, their splendid achievements among the nations in their day and generation, their undaunted courage in the cause of truth, their holy boldness in defence of their master's honor; their toils, their perils, their sacrifices, their indefatigable zeal, their firmness, and their steadfastness in the truth, not regarding their life unto death, their abiding testimony by which they condemned the generation which then lived, and will be had amongst men until time is no more: their great faith by which they ascended into the heights, and descended into the depths, and searched out all things, yea, even the deep things of God, seeing the end from the beginning, and the beginning from the end.

Being diligent and faithful, while the world was stumbling in darkness, and the nations were strangers to the knowledge of God, and knew not him who created them, nor him who saved them; they in the midst of darkness burst forth into light, and among those who sat in the valley and shadow of death they caused light to spring up; their voices were heard among nations afar off, and their power was felt in the islands of the sea. The messengers of heaven watched them by the way, and rejoiced over them in their righteousness.

Wide is the field of contemplation which opens to the view of the saints of the latter days, while they read the history and meditate upon the events peculiar to the saints, as set forth in the account which we have of those of former days; not only the knowledge they had of the things which then existed, but also of the things which should take place until time should end. It might be said of them in truth, that in them there was light and no darkness at all; for their knowledge extended down the stream of time, until they beheld the winding-up scene of the world, and reached forth into eternity, to gaze upon things eternal, immortal, and invisible.

Truly their religion was a religion of intelligence, and their minds in consequence of their religion was richly laden with wisdom from on high. When we contemplate the height of their devotion, the depth of their humility, the extent of their knowledge, the greatness of their sufferings, the fervor of their zeal, the boldness of their enterprises, the dexterity of their stratagems, the splendor of their works, the grandeur of their conceptions, the richness of their communications, the purity of their affections, the holiness of their desires, the brilliance of their course, the nobleness of their minds, the benevolence of their hearts, the sincerity of their intentions, the correctness of their motives, the power of their faith, and their incessant communion with the heavenly hosts, being full of the Holy Spirit, and abounding in love and good works, while visions, dreams, revelations and prophecyings enlarged their minds, and prepared them for the society of the blessed.

In meditating upon these things the mind of the latter day saint struggles with the powers of darkness, like Jacob with the angel, until he prevails, bursts the vail which conceals futurity from his view, and launches forth into the light of heaven to contemplate the scenes of unborn time, and to mingle his lays with the heavenly hosts and shout hosanna in the midst of the throng which surrounds the throne of God.

Again, the mind of the latter day saint rolls over the face of the prophetic vision which inspired the hearts of the prophets, and caused them to sing their sweetest notes, gathers up the history of all generations, by which he can compare the present with the future, and bring the two ends of men's earthly existence together. Inspired by the same spirit which inspired the prophets, he can behold glories lying over the face of revelation that the eye of an uninspired man never can see; by this spirit he discovers the iniquities and apostacy of his own days, his mind being strengthened by the spirit of inspiration so as to enable him to understand the religion of Jesus Christ and believe it, he looks over the world with feelings peculiar to the saints, and through the light of revelation gazes upon the follies and wickedness of this generation: his ears are saluted with the Lo! heres, and the Lo! theres, attended with ceremonies and forms not only without power, but without the belief in it, so that indeed he sees a form of godliness, while those who have the form, deny the power thereof.

What a great contrast he beholds between the New Testament church and the churches of modern times. He views the former with its Apostles, its prophets, its evangelists, its pastors and teachers, all of them men inspired of God, men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, as well as its gifts, its power of healing, its miracles, tongues, its interpreters of tongues, with the power of getting revelations, the ministering of angels, the power of God which attended it;—the latter without apostles, or prophets, or gifts, or healings, or miracles, or tongues, or interpreters of tongues;—and yet the religious world will contend that they are both the same church, equally partakers of eternal life and the blessings of the Most High.

Such is the great contrast between the saints of the last days, and those who are strangers both to God and his ways; one sees, understands, and rejoices in the glory and order of the New Testament church, while the other tries to evade the force of the plainest facts set forth in it, defaces the glory of the church of Christ, neither understanding its nature, nor its beauty, nor yet comprehending its glory; but contents himself with a form of godliness, denying the power thereof.

In reviewing the history of his own times, as written by the prophets, the saint of the latter days sees fulfilling on the heads of this generation all that God has spoken by the mouth of the holy prophets, while they are insensible of it; and, in consequence of their great apostacy, he beholds the day of the Lord so coming upon them as a thief in the night, and sudden destruction coming upon them, and they know it not, because they know not God. He sees them eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, crying, All is well in Zion—Fear not, for all things are continuing as they were since the creation of the world—truly he sees that the generation among whom he lives are just such a people as there were in the days of Noah; while he beholds the heavens and earth big with events of an awful character, every nation preparing itself for the day of battle and the sacrifice of the great God.

He often fancies to himself that he is like one of the ancient prophets, who incessantly lifted his voice to backsliding Israel, warning them of the judgments of Almighty God which were coming upon them, but they would not their intentions, the correctness of their motives, the power of their faith, and their incessant communion with the heavenly hosts, being full of the Holy Spirit, and abounding in love and good works, while visions, dreams, revelations and prophecyings enlarged their minds, and prepared them for the society of the blessed.

In meditating upon these things the mind of the latter day saint struggles with the powers of darkness, like Jacob with the angel, until he prevails, bursts the vail which conceals futurity from his view, and launches forth into the light of heaven to contemplate the scenes of unborn time, and to mingle his lays with the heavenly hosts and shout hosanna in the midst of the throng which surrounds the throne of God.

Again, the mind of the latter day saint rolls over the face of the prophetic vision which inspired the hearts of the prophets, and caused them to sing their sweetest notes, gathers up the history of all generations, by which he can compare the present with the future, and bring the two ends of men's earthly existence together. Inspired by the same spirit which inspired the prophets, he can behold glories lying over the face of revelation that the eye of an uninspired man never can see; by this spirit he discovers the iniquities and apostacy of his own days, his mind being strengthened by the spirit of inspiration so as to enable him to understand the religion of Jesus Christ and believe it, he looks over the world with feelings peculiar to the saints, and through the light of revelation gazes upon the follies and wickedness of this generation: his ears are saluted with the Lo! heres, and the Lo! theres, attended with ceremonies and forms not only without power, but without the belief in it, so that indeed he sees a form of godliness, while those who have the form, deny the power thereof.

What a great contrast he beholds between the New Testament church and the churches of modern times. He views the former with its Apostles, its prophets, its evangelists, its pastors and teachers, all of them men inspired of God, men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, as well as its gifts, its power of healing, its miracles, tongues, its interpreters of tongues, with the power of getting revelations, the ministering of angels, the power of God which attended it;—the latter without apostles, or prophets, or gifts, or healings, or miracles, or tongues, or interpreters of tongues;—and yet the religious world will contend that they are both the same church, equally partakers of eternal life and the blessings of the Most High.

Such is the great contrast between the saints of the last days, and those who are strangers both to God and his ways; one sees, understands, and rejoices in the glory and order of the New Testament church, while the other tries to evade the force of the plainest facts set forth in it, defaces the glory of the church of Christ, neither understanding its nature, nor its beauty, nor yet comprehending its glory; but contents himself with a form of godliness, denying the power thereof.

In reviewing the history of his own times, as written by the prophets, the saint of the latter days sees fulfilling on the heads of this generation all that God has spoken by the mouth of the holy prophets, while they are insensible of it; and, in consequence of their great apostacy, he beholds the day of the Lord so coming upon them as a thief in the night, and sudden destruction coming upon them, and they know it not, because they know not God. He sees them eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, crying, All is well in Zion—Fear not, for all things are continuing as they were since the creation of the world—truly he sees that the generation among whom he lives are just such a people as there were in the days of Noah; while he beholds the heavens and earth big with events of an awful character, every nation preparing itself for the day of battle and the sacrifice of the great God.

He often fancies to himself that he is like one of the ancient prophets, who incessantly lifted his voice to backsliding Israel, warning them of the judgments of Almighty God which were coming upon them, but they would not hear; he saw them haste to destruction, and no power could prevent it. So the saint of the latter days sees this generation hastening to destruction, "while their judgment of a long time sleepeth not, and their damnation slumbreth not;" but their eyes are closed in sleep, and their eyelids in slumber, and they see not, neither do they know. Therefore he does know that all that God has spoken by the mouth of the holy prophets concerning them will be fulfilled; for the day of the Lord will most assuredly overtake them as a thief in the night; and at the time when they are crying peace and and safety, sudden destruction will come upon them, and they shall not escape.

Whose feelings can be like the latter day saints'? I answer, none; because there are no persons who do know the situation of this generation except those who are inspired of God to understand it; neither can any of them understand the signs of the times: there may be signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars, perplexity of nations, men's hearts failing them for fear, looking after those things which are coming upon the earth, while the uninspired, in the midst of these things understand them not, neither do they know them, but, like the ox fatted for the slaughter, they haste to destruction and know it not, neither will they know till they lift up their eyes in hell, being in torment; for, in the midst of the calamities which will come upon them, they will curse their King and their God and die. And yet, with all their abomination, they have a form of godliness, but it is only a form, for they deny and will deny the power thereof, in consequence of which they will go down to hell, and their eyes will be shut until they are opened in torment.

"How marvellous," cries the saint of God, "it is, that men have a Bible, and read it, and preach about it day after day and night after night, yet not believe one item of it, reject the entire religion thereof, and go down to hell holding the light of God in their hands; run from neighborhood to neighborhood, preach, proclaim, admonish, and warn, make proselytes in hundreds and thousands, and, when they have made them, only make their damnation more certain than it was before." Such is the light in which the latter day saint beholds all the works of the men of this generation, knowing by the spirit of inspiration that their religion is nothing more than a cunningly devised fable, a device of Satan to hold the world more firm in his chains, until he drags them down to perdition, and through this means obtains to himself a rich harvest of souls, who shall suffer the vengeance of eternal fire.

But there is something in this scene of darkness which cheers the heart of the saints exceedingly, it is that the truth has once more made its appearance, and light has began to shine in darkness, and the spirit of inspiration is returning to earth, the voice of the prophets is heard again in the land, and communion is again opened with the heavens, and babes begin to understand that which is hid from the eyes of the wise and the prudent, and the weak things of the earth begin to confound the mighty, and the foolish things of the earth put to shame those who are wise, and men are beginning again to follow after God, and multitudes are finding him to the everlasting joy and gratitude of their hearts, and God is again saying to men, build me places as I shall direct you, where I can manifest myself to you, and send my angels to minister to you as in days of old. Judges are returning as at the first, and counselors as at the beginning; and saints may well look for the time when the "wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall blossom as the rose."—Messenger and Advocate.

APHORISMS.

It is more noble to make yourself great than to be born so. Physic, for the most part, is nothing else but the substitute for exercise or temperance. Good listeners are like good housekeepers: they make use of everything. Science sees signs: poetry the thing signified. The human heart is like a feather bed; it must be roughly handled, well shaken, and exposed to a variety of turns, to prevent its becoming hard and knotty. To pray together, in whatever tongue or ritual, is the most tender brotherhood of hope and sympathy that men can contract in this life. In the natural history of insects, the grub turns into a butterfly; but it often occurs in the natural history of man, that the butterfly turns into a grub.

hear; he saw them haste to destruction, and no power could prevent it. So the saint of the latter days sees this generation hastening to destruction, "while their judgment of a long time sleepeth not, and their damnation slumbreth not;" but their eyes are closed in sleep, and their eyelids in slumber, and they see not, neither do they know. Therefore he does know that all that God has spoken by the mouth of the holy prophets concerning them will be fulfilled; for the day of the Lord will most assuredly overtake them as a thief in the night; and at the time when they are crying peace and and safety, sudden destruction will come upon them, and they shall not escape.

Whose feelings can be like the latter day saints'? I answer, none; because there are no persons who do know the situation of this generation except those who are inspired of God to understand it; neither can any of them understand the signs of the times: there may be signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars, perplexity of nations, men's hearts failing them for fear, looking after those things which are coming upon the earth, while the uninspired, in the midst of these things understand them not, neither do they know them, but, like the ox fatted for the slaughter, they haste to destruction and know it not, neither will they know till they lift up their eyes in hell, being in torment; for, in the midst of the calamities which will come upon them, they will curse their King and their God and die. And yet, with all their abomination, they have a form of godliness, but it is only a form, for they deny and will deny the power thereof, in consequence of which they will go down to hell, and their eyes will be shut until they are opened in torment.

"How marvellous," cries the saint of God, "it is, that men have a Bible, and read it, and preach about it day after day and night after night, yet not believe one item of it, reject the entire religion thereof, and go down to hell holding the light of God in their hands; run from neighborhood to neighborhood, preach, proclaim, admonish, and warn, make proselytes in hundreds and thousands, and, when they have made them, only make their damnation more certain than it was before." Such is the light in which the latter day saint beholds all the works of the men of this generation, knowing by the spirit of inspiration that their religion is nothing more than a cunningly devised fable, a device of Satan to hold the world more firm in his chains, until he drags them down to perdition, and through this means obtains to himself a rich harvest of souls, who shall suffer the vengeance of eternal fire.

But there is something in this scene of darkness which cheers the heart of the saints exceedingly, it is that the truth has once more made its appearance, and light has began to shine in darkness, and the spirit of inspiration is returning to earth, the voice of the prophets is heard again in the land, and communion is again opened with the heavens, and babes begin to understand that which is hid from the eyes of the wise and the prudent, and the weak things of the earth begin to confound the mighty, and the foolish things of the earth put to shame those who are wise, and men are beginning again to follow after God, and multitudes are finding him to the everlasting joy and gratitude of their hearts, and God is again saying to men, build me places as I shall direct you, where I can manifest myself to you, and send my angels to minister to you as in days of old. Judges are returning as at the first, and counselors as at the beginning; and saints may well look for the time when the "wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall blossom as the rose."—Messenger and Advocate.

APHORISMS.

It is more noble to make yourself great than to be born so. Physic, for the most part, is nothing else but the substitute for exercise or temperance. Good listeners are like good housekeepers: they make use of everything. Science sees signs: poetry the thing signified. The human heart is like a feather bed; it must be roughly handled, well shaken, and exposed to a variety of turns, to prevent its becoming hard and knotty. To pray together, in whatever tongue or ritual, is the most tender brotherhood of hope and sympathy that men can contract in this life. In the natural history of insects, the grub turns into a butterfly; but it often occurs in the natural history of man, that the butterfly turns into a grub.

For the Gospel Herald.

There is, in the progress of all pursuits, a touch-stone or crisis—a point to which all systems or theories are brought, and from which they either fade and wither, or beget new strength and vigor. This point is supposed to embrace the combined power of all opposition; and, when passed, all is safe—the heights are gained, and a new impetus is secured that gives an earnest of an ultimate triumph. Truth and error have warred against each other since the creation of our world, at least; and, from casual observations, one might conclude that error would triumph. But the crisis has not yet arrived. The great drama of human existence is not yet closed. Good men and bad men (and good and bad spirits) are still acting their several parts. Kingcraft and priestcraft have, however, made the principal moves on the great chess-board of time, while ambition and mammon have served as the stimulus.

In the sixteenth century, when the infallibility of the Pope was questioned, all Europe wondered, and whole kingdoms held their breath, in doubt whether opposition to such supreme authority would be permitted to exist. This was one crisis. But it was one of opinion only—whether these claims to infallibility were subject to examination. This decided in the affirmative, the result was what might have been expected. Protests followed, and reforms were loudly demanded, and creeds in endless variety were produced, and finding advocates and disciples, sects sprang up like mushrooms throughout the land, glorying in uncertainty, by discarding all infallibility, rearing high the temple of opinion.

When, in eighteen hundred and thirty, God set his hand to establish the gospel, through the preaching of which the kingdom might come, here were all these senseless creeds and lifeless forms or reforms (Popery formed over or renewed) to be met, their fallacy shown by contrasting with the fixed facts of heaven revealed to man, the living "form of godliness," "the pattern of heavenly things." This being done, what follows? Do we expect to contend forever with lifeless forms and senseless creeds? Such an idea implies, at least, a long march behind the times. We must advance to the motive power of all opposition.

St. Paul saw it, and described it as follows: (see Eph. vi. 12:) "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, (equals,) but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness (or wicked spirits) in high places," (or heavenly places.) (See marginal reading.)—"The prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." Eph. ii. 2. The men possessed with Devils, on being interrogated, the spirit said his name was legion, for they were many.—Here then is a princedom or principality, whose dominion is the darkness of this world. His subjects never did relish "light," but "choose darkness rather."

One characteristic of the time when the Book of Mormon should come forth was, they "erred in spirit." And Malachi says, "take heed to your spirit." The Apostle says, "believe not every spirit;" and again, "try the spirits." The Revelator saw three unclean spirits going out on purpose to deceive, "for they are the spirits of Devils, working miracles." Rev. xvi. 13, 14. To lead this array of wicked spirits, we are told that Satan, a prince of spirits, who "kept not their first estates," goeth about "seeking whom he may devour." Wicked men act in unison with this malignant influence; for this is "the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience." Of such Jesus said, "ye are of your father the Devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do."

Here then was, and is now, the true state of the opposition. Here are the champions and engines of error. How shall we contend with it, and where shall we meet? Jesus says, "I could pray to my Father, and he would give me more than twelve legions of angels," who, David says, "excel in strength;" and Paul says, "are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" and "ye are come unto mount

For the Gospel Herald.

There is, in the progress of all pursuits, a touch-stone or crisis--a point to which all systems or theories are brought, and from which they either fade and wither, or beget new strength and vigor. This point is supposed to embrace the combined power of all opposition: and, when passed, all is safe—the heights are gained, and a new impetus is secured that gives an earnest of an ultimate triumph. Truth and error have warred against each other since the creation of our world, at least; and, from casual observations, one might conclude that error would triumph. But the crisis has not yet arrived. The great drama of human existence is not yet closed. Good men and bad men (and good and bad spirits) are still acting their several parts. Kingcraft and priestcraft have, however, made the principal moves on the great chess-board of time, while ambition and mammon have served as the stimulus.

In the sixteenth century, when the infallibility of the Pope was questioned, all Europe wondered, and whole kingdoms held their breath, in doubt whether opposition to such supreme authority would be permitted to exist. This was one crisis. But it was one of opinion only—whether these claims to infallibility were subject to examination. This decided in the affirmative, the result was what might have been expected. Protests followed, and reforms were loudly demanded, and creeds in endless variety were produced, and finding advocates and disciples, sects sprang up like mushrooms throughout the land, glorying in uncertainty, by discarding all infallibility, rearing high the temple of opinion.

When, in eighteen hundred and thirty, God set his hand to establish the gospel, through the preaching of which the kingdom might come, here were all these senseless creeds and lifeless forms or reforms (Popery formed over or renewed) to be met, their fallacy shown by contrasting with the fixed facts of heaven revealed to man, the living "form of godliness," "the pattern of heavenly things." This being done, what follows? Do we expect to contend forever with lifeless forms and senseless creeds? Such an idea implies, at least, a long march behind the times. We must advance to the motive power of all opposition.

St. Paul saw it, and described it as follows: (see Eph. vi. 12:) "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, (equals,) but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness (or wicked spirits) in high places," (or heavenly places.) (See marginal reading.)--"The prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." Eph. ii. 2. The men possessed with Devils; on being interrogated, the spirit said his name was legion, for they were many.--Here then is a princedom or principality, whose dominion is the darkness of this world. His subjects never did relish "light," but "choose darkness rather."

One characteristic of the time when the Book of Mormon should come forth was, they "erred in spirit." And Malachi says, "take heed to your spirit." The Apostle says, "believe not every spirit;" and again, "try the spirits." The Revelator saw three unclean spirits going out on purpose to deceive, "for they are the spirits of Devils, working miracles." Rev. xvi. 13, 14. To lead this array of wicked spirits, we are told that Satan, a prince of spirits, who "kept not their first estates," goeth about "seeking whom he may devour." Wicked men act in unison with this malignant influence; for this is "the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience." Of such Jesus said, "ye are of your father the Devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do."

Here then was, and is now, the true state of the opposition. Here are the champions and engines of error. How shall we contend with it, and where shall we meet? Jesus says, "I could pray to my Father, and he would give me more than twelve legions of angels," who, David says, "excel in strength;" and Paul says, "are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" and "ye are come unto mount

Sion, and to an innumerable company of angels, and to the spirits of just men made perfect." To appreciate the force of this last clause, reflect upon the appearance of the spirits of Moses and Elias on the mount, for they were not yet resurrected; of the return of one of the old prophets to John, (whether in the body or not we cannot tell,) and of the spirit of Samuel, who came to king Saul to tell him, "to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me."

If the agency by which Samuel was brought "up" was evil, this did not change the character of Samuel. That it was him, is evident. See 1st Samuel xxviii. The instrument in this case would then be similar to that used by God to induce Ahab to go up to Ramoth-gilead that he might fall there, by sending a spirit to lie to all his (Ahab's) prophets. 1 Kings xxii. In addition to this, we are told there are "seven spirits of God," that are sent forth in all the earth, which are called "lamps," producing light, which wicked men and wicked spirits shun most studiously. Thus it is clear that we are surrounded with spiritual identities, both good and evil. That the evil act in unison with wicked men is certain. And that the good in like manner accompany and influence the good man is equally certain.

Here then is the battle ground, midway between the sensual and the spiritual. And to commune with the spiritual we must overcome, in some degree, the sensual. Hence the admonition to fast, as well as pray; to chasten and quicken the organ through which the spirit acts and is acted upon. Thus Daniel, for "three full weeks, ate no pleasant bread," and set his "face unto the Lord God to seek by prayer and supplications with fasting." The result was, Gabriel was sent to give him "skill and understanding." Although as we approach the confines of spirituality all our notions are vague and uncertain, yet we are sure there is but a vail between us.

This is the ordeal through which we must pass—the crisis that is fast approaching—to know "what manner of spirit" is manifested. If we are surrounded with "legions of Devils," we are promised the aid of an innumerable company of "angels and spirits of just men." If there are "three unclean spirits" perambulating the earth to deceive, there are "seven spirits of God" sent forth in all the earth to undeceive. If Satan, a prince and ruler of wicked spirits, is seeking "whom he may devour," there is "Michael, your (our) prince, that standeth for the children of thy people." And though there are more than twelve legions, or more than seventy-two thousand holy angels or spirits, yet there is one pre-eminently so, as the representative of the Father and the Son. And, consequently, is called "the Holy Spirit," contradistinguished from all other spirits, who bears record of the Father and the Son.

The tendency of the age in which we live is to Sadduceeism—to deny the existence of both "angel and spirit." We also often hear persons tell what a spirit can and what it cannot do, allowing them to exist. If we confine the acts of the spirit to a few things, we ask, what performs the rest? Can matter act intelligently without the aid of a spirit? I have often looked at bodies whose spirits had left them, and they were always senseless and motionless. So I conclude all that is done is done by spirits. So that when it is affirmed that a spirit cannot do this or that, it is equivalent to saying it cannot be done at all.

That there is a medium of communication between the embodied and the disembodied spirit I have already shown, by citing examples of facts. From these facts I infer the fulfillment of Moses' desire: "Would to God that the Lord's people were all prophets," and the Lord would pour out his spirit upon them, which the prophet Joel declares he will do. As Jeremiah says, "all thy children shall be taught of the Lord." And again, "while they are yet speaking I will hear."

What are examples of the gift of prophecy, of visions, revelations and communion with angels, but to show us the way to obtain "like precious faith?" and not say as faithless Israel

Sion, and to an innumerable company of angels, and to the spirits of just men made perfect." To appreciate the force of this last clause, reflect upon the appearance of the spirits of Moses and Elias on the mount, for they were not yet resurrected; of the return of one of the old prophets to John, (whether in the body or not we cannot tell,) and of the spirit of Samuel, who came to king Saul to tell him, "to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me."

If the agency by which Samuel was brought "up" was evil, this did not change the character of Samuel. That it was him, is evident. See 1st Samuel xxviii. The instrument in this case would then be similar to that used by God to induce Ahab to go up to Ramoth-gilead that he might fall there, by sending a spirit to lie to all his (Ahab's) prophets. 1 Kings xxii. In addition to this, we are told there are "seven spirits of God," that are sent forth in all the earth, which are called "lamps," producing light, which wicked men and wicked spirits shun most studiously. Thus it is clear that we are surrounded with spiritual identities, both good and evil. That the evil act in unison with wicked men is certain. And that the good in like manner accompany and influence the good man is equally certain.

Here then is the battle ground, midway between the sensual and the spiritual. And to commune with the spiritual we must overcome, in some degree, the sensual. Hence the admonition to fast, as well as pray; to chasten and quicken the organ through which the spirit acts and is acted upon. Thus Daniel, for "three full weeks, ate no pleasant bread," and set his "face unto the Lord God to seek by prayer and supplications with fasting." The result was, Gabriel was sent to give him "skill and understanding." Although as we approach the confines of spirituality all our notions are vague and uncertain, yet we are sure there is but a vail between us.

This is the ordeal through which we must pass—the crisis that is fast approaching—to know "what manner of spirit" is manifested. If we are surrounded with "legions of Devils," we are promised the aid of an innumerable company of "angels and spirits of just men." If there are "three unclean spirits" perambulating the earth to deceive, there are "seven spirits of God" sent forth in all the earth to undeceive. If Satan, a prince and ruler of wicked spirits, is seeking "whom he may devour," there is "Michael, your (our) prince, that standeth for the children of thy people." And though there are more than twelve legions, or more than seventy-two thousand holy angels or spirits, yet there is one pre-eminently so, as the representative of the Father and the Son. And, consequently, is called "the Holy Spirit," contradistinguished from all other spirits, who bears record of the Father and the Son.

The tendency of the age in which we live is to Sadduceeism—to deny the existence of both "angel and spirit." We also often hear persons tell what a spirit can and what it cannot do, allowing them to exist. If we confine the acts of the spirit to a few things, we ask, what performs the rest? Can matter act intelligently without the aid of a spirit? I have often looked at bodies whose spirits had left them, and they were always senseless and motionless. So I conclude all that is done is done by spirits. So that when it is affirmed that a spirit cannot do this or that, it is equivalent to saying it cannot be done at all.

That there is a medium of communication between the embodied and the disembodied spirit I have already shown, by citing examples of facts. From these facts I infer the fulfillment of Moses' desire: "Would to God that the Lord's people were all prophets," and the Lord would pour out his spirit upon them, which the prophet Joel declares he will do. As Jeremiah says, "all thy children shall be taught of the Lord." And again, "while they are yet speaking I will hear."

What are examples of the gift of prophecy, of visions, revelations and communion with angels, but to show us the way to obtain "like precious faith?" and not say as faithless Israel said (and this is written for our admonition, that we should not do as they did) to Moses, "speak thou with us, and we will hear; but let not God speak with us, lest we die." But the people stood afar off, as all people are inclined to do who discard the medium of communication by which they might "feel after him," if peradventure they might find him; for he is not very far from every one of us; "for we are his offspring." And what good reason can there be for a father to hide himself from his own children? Instead of this he has ordained the "way," and provided "a lamp to our feet," and a "light" to the "way," by which to "find him." He has not only provided, but has revealed a medium of communication with himself by the ministry of angels or spirits, by the inspiration of prophets and gifts of the Holy Spirit, by vision, by Urim, and by "the spirits of just men made perfect." Then let us "contend earnestly for the best gifts," rather, I would say, the "discerning of spirits." J. W. BRIGGS.

Voree, April 30th, 1850.

GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.

The manifestations of the Holy Ghost, as recorded in the New Testament, are entirely extinct, so far as the sectarian world are concerned; for we hear it declared from every pulpit, that the day of miracles has ceased, and God no more works by those mysterious ways in our day, and that the manifestations recorded were to establish the divine mission of Jesus Christ and his Messiahship. If this be the case, why did Christ, when commissioning his Apostles, say, "and these signs shall follow them that believe?" If they were only to establish his mission, why did they follow those that believed the preaching of the Apostles?

It is easily proved by scripture that the gifts and signs were not to be confined to the Apostles, nor to that particular dispensation, but to follow all who, in a legal manner, obeyed the gospel introduced by Christ. Although the gift of the Holy Ghost is not at all times to be discovered by the natural eye in all its operations, yet it is, nevertheless, a gift, and for this reason Paul exhorts his Corinthian brethren to "follow after charity and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophecy." 1st Cor. xiv. 1. Also in the xii. 1 he says, "now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant."

It appears from these quotations that some of his Corinthian brethren had not as yet received the Holy Ghost, and were not acquainted with its operations; for he goes on in the 12th chapter to tell of the diversities of gifts, but of the same spirit; and how one man might be moved upon by the spirit to speak in tongues, another to interpret, and yet another to prophecy, yet all by the same spirit. Should it be in this day and age of the world any less a matter of surprise (to those who are looking) to see the miraculous display of the spirit than it was for those of the Corinthians in the days of Paul, who had obeyed the gospel, and were expecting some display of the Holy Ghost, and yet nothing out of the ordinary course of things seemed to present itself? and if we may be allowed to express an opinion, that they were some like those in our day, who, after they have been baptized and confirmed, think that all is done to insure some miraculous display of the Holy Ghost, little thinking that to every one severally as the Lord will is the division of the gifts of the spirit.

We read in the iv. 7 of Eph.: "But unto every one of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ." 8. "When he ascended up on high he gave gifts unto men." The manifestations of the gifts are not always discernible to mankind in general, neither the ministering of angels or the development of the power of God in his power, majesty or glory publicly manifested, except to a people of his choice, and who had been prepared by obeying his commands. Taking a view of the history of those events, we find that when God has revealed himself, or angels have ministered, it has been to individuals, and in private, and that too in their chambers, in the wilderness or fields, and generally those manifestations have been said (and this is written for our admonition, that we should not do as they did) to Moses, "speak thou with us, and we will hear; but let not God speak with us, lest we die." But the people stood afar off, as all people are inclined to do who discard the medium of communication by which they might "feel after him," if peradventure they might find him; for he is not very far from every one of us; "for we are his offspring." And what good reason can there be for a father to hide himself from his own children? Instead of this he has ordained the "way," and provided "a lamp to our feet," and a "light" to the "way," by which to "find him." He has not only provided, but has revealed a medium of communication with himself by the ministry of angels or spirits, by the inspiration of prophets and gifts of the Holy Spirit, by vision, by Urim, and by "the spirits of just men made perfect." Then let us "contend earnestly for the best gifts," rather, I would say, the "discerning of spirits."

J. W. BRIGGS.

Voree, April 30th, 1850.

GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.

The manifestations of the Holy Ghost, as recorded in the New Testament, are entirely extinct, so far as the sectarian world are concerned; for we hear it declared from every pulpit, that the day of miracles has ceased, and God no more works by those mysterious ways in our day, and that the manifestations recorded were to establish the divine mission of Jesus Christ and his Messiahship. If this be the case, why did Christ, when commissioning his Apostles, say, "and these signs shall follow them that believe?" If they were only to establish his mission, why did they follow those that believed the preaching of the Apostles?

It is easily proved by scripture that the gifts and signs were not to be confined to the Apostles, nor to that particular dispensation, but to follow all who, in a legal manner, obeyed the gospel introduced by Christ. Although the gift of the Holy Ghost is not at all times to be discovered by the natural eye in all its operations, yet it is, nevertheless, a gift, and for this reason Paul exhorts his Corinthian brethren to "follow after charity and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophecy." 1st Cor. xiv. 1. Also in the xii. 1 he says, "now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant."

It appears from these quotations that some of his Corinthian brethren had not as yet received the Holy Ghost, and were not acquainted with its operations: for he goes on in the 12th chapter to tell of the diversities of gifts, but of the same spirit; and how one man might be moved upon by the spirit to speak in tongues, another to interpret, and yet another to prophecy, yet all by the same spirit. Should it be in this day and age of the world any less a matter of surprise (to those who are looking) to see the miraculous display of the spirit than it was for those of the Corinthians in the days of Paul, who had obeyed the gospel, and were expecting some display of the Holy Ghost, and yet nothing out of the ordinary course of things seemed to present itself? and if we may be allowed to express an opinion, that they were some like those in our day, who, after they have been baptized and confirmed, think that all is done to insure some miraculous display of the Holy Ghost, little thinking that to every one severally as the Lord will is the division of the gifts of the spirit.

We read in the iv. 7 of Eph.: "But unto every one of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ." 8. "When he ascended up on high he gave gifts unto men." The manifestations of the gifts are not always discernible to mankind in general, neither the ministering of angels or the development of the power of God in his power, majesty or glory publicly manifested, except to a people of his choice, and who had been prepared by obeying his commands. Taking a view of the history of those events, we find that when God has revealed himself, or angels have ministered, it has been to individuals, and in private, and that too in their chambers, in the wilderness or fields, and generally those manifestations have been without noise or tumult.

The angel delivered Peter out of the prison at the dead hour of midnight, stood by a Paul unobserved by the rest of the ship's crew, and declared unto Paul that there should be no loss of life of any of the ship's company, but of the ship. When the Lord appeared to Moses in the burning bush it was to Moses alone, and also when he appeared to Abraham it was at Abraham's tent door. When Elijah was taken in a chariot of fire, it was unobserved by the world; and when he was in the cleft of the rock, there was loud thunder, but the Lord was not in the thunder; there was an earthquake, but the Lord was not in that; and there was a still small voice, which was the voice of the Lord, saying, what doest thou here, Elijah?

It appears by the foregoing that the Lord is not always known by the thunder of his voice, and those that are most anxious to see a display of the power of the Holy Ghost are most generally the least prepared to receive it — Were the Lord to manifest his power as he did to the children of Israel, such characters would say as did the Israelites, "let not the Lord speak any more, lest we his people die."

The over anxiety of some to see more of the gifts of the spirit manifest may be benefited by reading the following directions in the Book of Mormon: to pray over and for your families, your cattle, your herds, your flocks, your corn, and all things you possess; and also be just and virtuous, keeping the commandments which God has given, and in all things striving to keep an eye single to the glory of God, ask the blessings of God upon all your labors and everything that you engage in, that your path may be like that of the just, "which shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day;" be not over anxious for the display of the gifts, but strive with a continual anxiety to keep the commandments and laws of God.

X.

DEFINITIONS.

What is Joy?—The honey of existence; really beneficial and agreeable when partaken of in moderation, but highly injurous when used to excess.

What is Contentment?—The philosophy of life, and the principal ingredient in the cup of happiness; a commodity that is undervalued, in consequence of the very low price it can be obtained for.

What is Happiness?—A butterfly that roves from flower to flower in the vast garden of existence, and which is eagerly pursued by the multitude in the vain hope of obtaining the prize, yet it continually eludes their grasp.

What is Ambition?—A fierce and unconquerable steed, that bears its rider onward in the high road to preferment; but it oftentimes throws him with such a fall that he rarely, if ever, recovers.

What is Crime?—A wretched vagabond, traveling from place to place in a fruitless endeavor to escape from justice, who is constantly engaged in pursuit. A foe to virtue and happiness, though at times the companion of poor innocence, who is made to suffer for the guilty.

What is Justice?—A pair of scales, in which the actions of mankind are often weighed; the true weight being sometimes bought up by power and wealth, whilst others that are incorrect are substituted.

What is Idleness?—A public mint, where various kinds of mischief are coined, and extensively circulated among the most despicable of the human race.

What is Fear?—A frightful and dangerous substance to the really guilty, but a vain and harmless shadow to the conscientiously honest and upright.

What is Fortune?—A capricious dame, who often rejects those who are most anxious to solicit her favors, whilst others more unworthy are the recipients of her bounties without solicitations.

What is Fashion?—A beautiful envelope for mortality, presenting a glittering and polished exterior, the appearance of which is no certain indication of the real value of what is contained therein.

What is Wit?—A sparkling beverage that is highly exhilarating and agreeable, when taken at the expense of others; but when used at our own cost, it becomes bitter and unpleasant.

What is Thought?—A fountain from which flows all good and evil intentions; a mental fluid, electrical in the force and rapidity of its movements, and silently flowing unseen within its own secret avenues; yet it is the controlling power of all animated matter, and the chief mainspring of all our actions.

What is Knowledge?—A key that unravels all mysteries, and which unlocks the entrance and discovers new, unseen, and untrodden paths in the hitherto unexplored fields of science and literature.

GO-BETWEENS.

There is perhaps not a more odious character in the world than that of a go-between—by which we mean that creature who carries to the ears of one neighbor every injurious observation that happens to drop from the mouth of another. Such a person is the slanderer's herald, and is altogether more odious than the slanderer himself. By this vile officiousness he makes that poison effective which else would be inert; for three-fourths of the slanderers in the world would never injure their object, except by the malice of go-betweens, who, under the mask of double friendship, act the part of double traitors.

☛ Lawyers generally know too much of law to have a very clear perception of justice, as divines are often too deeply read in theology, to appreciate the full grandeur and the proper tendencies of religion. Losing the comprehensive in the technical, the principal in its accessories, both are in the predicament of the rustic, who could not see London for the houses.

without noise or tumult.

The angel delivered Peter out of the prison at the dead hour of midnight, stood by a Paul unobserved by the rest of the ship's crew, and declared unto Paul that there should be no loss of life of any of the ship's company, but of the ship. When the Lord appeared to Moses in the burning bush it was to Moses alone, and also when he appeared to Abraham it was at Abraham's tent door. When Elijah was taken in a chariot of fire, it was unobserved by the world; and when he was in the cleft of the rock, there was loud thunder, but the Lord was not in the thunder; there was an earthquake, but the Lord was not in that; and there was a still small voice, which was the voice of the Lord, saying, what doest thou here, Elijah?

It appears by the foregoing that the Lord is not always known by the thunder of his voice, and those that are most anxious to see a display of the power of the Holy Ghost are most generally the least prepared to receive it—Were the Lord to manifest his power as he did to the children of Israel, such characters would say as did the Israelites, "let not the Lord speak any more, lest we his people die."

The over anxiety of some to see more of the gifts of the spirit manifest may be benefitted by reading the following directions in the Book of Mormon: to pray over and for your families, your cattle, your herds, your flocks, your corn, and all things you possess; and also be just and virtuous, keeping the commandments which God has given, and in all things striving to keep an eye single to the glory of God, ask the blessings of God upon all your labors and everything that you engage in, that your path may be like that of the just, "which shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day;" be not over anxious for the display of the gifts, but strive with a continual anxiety to keep the commandments and laws of God.

X.

DEFINITIONS.

What is Joy?—The honey of existence; really beneficial and agreeable when partaken of in moderation, but highly injurous when used to excess.

What is Contentment?—The philosophy of life, and the principal ingredient in the cup of happiness; a commodity that is undervalued, in consequence of the very low price it can be obtained for.

What is Happiness?—A butterfly that roves from flower to flower in the vast garden of existence, and which is eagerly pursued by the multitude in the vain hope of obtaining the prize, yet it continually eludes their grasp.

What is Ambition?—A fierce and unconquerable steed, that bears its rider onward in the high road to preferment; but it oftentimes throws him with such a fall that he rarely, if ever, recovers.

What is Crime?—A wretched vagabond, traveling from place to place in a fruitless endeavor to escape from justice, who is constantly engaged in pursuit. A foe to virtue and happiness, though at times the companion of poor innocence, who is made to suffer for the guilty.

What is Justice?—A pair of scales, in which the actions of mankind are often weighed; the true weight being sometimes bought up by power and wealth, whilst others that are incorrect are substituted.

What is Idleness?—A public mint, where various kinds of mischief are coined, and extensively circulated among the most despicable of the human race.

What is Fear?—A frightful and dangerous substance to the really guilty, but a vain and harmless shadow to the conscientiously honest and upright.

What is Fortune?—A capricious dame, who often rejects those who are most anxious to solicit her favors, whilst others more unworthy are the recipients of her bounties without solicitations.

What is Fashion?—A beautiful envelope for mortality, presenting a glittering and polished exterior, the appearance of which is no certain indication of the real value of what is contained therein.

What is Wit?—A sparkling beverage that is highly exhilarating and agreeable, when taken at the expense of others; but when used at our own cost, it becomes bitter and unpleasant.

What is Thought?—A fountain from which flows all good and evil intentions; a mental fluid, electrical in the force and rapidity of its movements, and silently flowing unseen within its own secret avenues; yet it is the controlling power of all animated matter, and the chief mainspring of all our actions.

What is Knowledge?—A key that unravels all mysteries, and which unlocks the entrance and discovers new, unseen, and untrodden paths in the hitherto unexplored fields of science and literature.

GO-BETWEENS.

There is perhaps not a more odious character in the world than that of a go-between—by which we mean that creature who carries to the ears of one neighbor every injurious observation that happens to drop from the mouth of another. Such a person is the slanderer's herald, and is altogether more odious than the slanderer himself. By this vile officiousness he makes that poison effective which else would be inert; for three-fourths of the slanderers in the world would never injure their object, except by the malice of go-betweens, who, under the mask of double friendship, act the part of double traitors.

☞ Lawyers generally know too much of law to have a very clear perception of justice, as divines are often too deeply read in theology, to appreciate the full grandeur and the proper tendencies of religion. Losing the comprehensive in the technical, the principal in its accessories, both are in the predicament of the rustic, who could not see London for the houses.

SPEAK KINDLY TO THE SORROWING.

Speak kindly to the sorrowing—
Do not deride their wo,
The anguish of another 's heart
It is not thine to know ;
Speak kindly, for it is enough
The breaking heart to bear,
And they who share a happier fate
May well deridings spare.

Be kind : although they may have erred—
Remember thou art frail,
And yet may'st stumble in thy path
Throughout this darksom vale ;
Though now thy hopes are brightly fair,
Serene thy cloudless sky,
Thy fondest hopes may quickly fade,
Thy cherished comforts die.

Speak kindly, gently, to the sad,
A word may soothe their grief,
Affection's tones may bring the soul
Untold and sweet relief;
A word may heal a broken heart,
Or break that heart anew,
Oh ! deal with such as suffer here,
As God hath dealt with you.

Speak kindly, for you cannot know
How dark the waves that roll,
With threatening aspect to affright
The trembling, fearful soul ;
You cannot know the struggle dire,
With which the heart is rung ;
Oh ! sweep not rudely chords that are
By sorrow, all unstrung.

Speak kindly ; though to you may seem
As little 'tis they feel,
You cannot know the secret grief
They struggle to conceal ;
Perchance had you their weary lot,
Their every wo to bear,
You might have sunk beneath the load,
Or yielded to despair.

Speak gently, let not harshness blend
With tones that should be mild :
In grief it adds a bitter sting
To have our grief reviled ;
Oh ! then be gentle, meek and kind,
Jesus was ever so,
And like Him strive to soothe the grief
Of every child of wo.

ALICE.

MARCH OF MORMONISM.

Recent accounts from St. Louis inform us of the arrival there of five hundred English Mormons, who are preparing to journey westward, into the country of this singular people, whose peculiar religion and habits they have embraced. Some persons may wonder that the English supply recruits to the Mormon ranks; but when it is remembered that the northern and central parts of Great Britain, and portions of Wales have contributed largely to swell the numbers of converts to any new religious enthusiasm, and that the Mormon Elders, from this country, are continually visiting England in search of proselytes all surprise will abate.

In fact we shall begin too look about at such a curious process in colonizing, and to ask, where will Mormonism end? What are to be the political results? How far do the tenets and habits of the sect square with the political religion of our constitution? The people are inquisitive already; and it is quitc time that Congress should interpret the whole matter, and give to the Mormons such a government as is consistent with the constitution—and the ultimate welfare of the country. The Mormons are wide-awake and Congress should be wide-awake and stirring in this business. Mormonism is a reality. Give us action.—Wilson & Co.'s Dispatch.

☞ Exactly—Mormonism is a reality, and progressive, but Brighamism is nothing but a humbug; or, in other words, a party of apostates or usurpers from the true order.

TO PARENTS.—Somewhere in Dr. Channing's diary, he warns himself in nearly these words. No passage in his Memoir has impressed us more with a sense of his nice moral discrimination in respect to his own conduct. We commend the expression to parents, teachers, and all who are concerned with the young. Beware of the diffuseness of fault finding.

A little boy slams the door violently. "Don't my boy, do so," his mother says, "it disturbs your little sister." The boy feels that he has done wrong, and determines to obey his mother. But she goes on to say, with increased warmth, "it is now the third time that you have waked her up this evening." This neutralizes the effect of what was said before. "I should think that a boy of your age might know better than to make such a noise." Here the boy begins to grow impatient. "It costs me, and you know it does, a great deal of trouble." He is now a little irritated, and soon, as the torrent of words comes more vehemently, his irritation entirely stifles the first suggestion of conscience, destroys his good resolutions, and drives him almost immediately into some other disagreeable act. Parents, beware of the diffuseness of fault finding. One sentence is almost always better than two, and hardly anything is worse than an harangue.—Christian Register.

GIVE THE DEVIL HIS DUE.—Certainly; but it is better to have no dealings with the Devil, and then there will be nothing due him.

SPEAK KINDLY TO THE SORROWING.

Speak kindly to the sorrowing—
Do not deride their wo,
The anguish of another's heart
It is not thine to know;
Speak kindly, for it is enough
The breaking heart to bear,
And they who share a happier fate
May well deridings spare.

Be kind: although they may have erred—
Remember thou art frail,
And yet may'st stumble in thy path
Throughout this darksom vale;
Though now thy hopes are brightly fair,
Serene thy cloudless sky,
Thy fondest hopes may quickly fade,
Thy cherished comforts die.

Speak kindly, gently, to the sad,
A word may soothe their grief,
Affection's tones may bring the soul
Untold and sweet relief;
A word may heal a broken heart,
Or break that heart anew,
Oh! deal with such as suffer here,
As God hath dealt with you.

Speak kindly, for you cannot know
How dark the waves that roll,
With threatening aspect to affright
The trembling, fearful soul;
You cannot know the struggle dire,
With which the heart is rung;
Oh! sweep not rudely chords that are
By sorrow, all unstrung.

Speak kindly; though to you may seem
As little 'tis they feel,
You cannot know the secret grief
They struggle to conceal;
Perchance had you their weary lot,
Their every wo to bear,
You might have sunk beneath the load,
Or yielded to despair.

Speak gently, let not harshness blend
With tones that should be mild:
In grief it adds a bitter sting
To have our grief reviled;
Oh! then be gentle, meek and kind,
Jesus was ever so,
And like Him strive to soothe the grief
Of every child of wo.

ALICE.

MARCH OF MORMONISM.

Recent accounts from St. Louis inform us of the arrival there of five hundred English Mormons, who are preparing to journey westward, into the country of this singular people, whose peculiar religion and habits they have embraced. Some persons may wonder that the English supply recruits to the Mormon ranks; but when it is remembered that the northern and central parts of Great Britain, and portions of Wales have contributed largely to swell the numbers of converts to any new religious enthusiasm, and that the Mormon Elders, from this country, are continually visiting England in search of proselytes all surprise will abate.

In fact we shall begin too look about at such a curious process in colonizing, and to ask, where will Mormonism end? What are to be the political results? How far do the tenets and habits of the sect square with the political religion of our constitution? The people are inquisitive already; and it is quite time that Congress should interpret the whole matter, and give to the Mormons such a government as is consistent with the constitution—and the ultimate welfare of the country. The Mormons are wide-awake and Congress should be wide-awake and stirring in this business. Mormonism is a reality. Give us action.—Wilson & Co.'s Dispatch.

☞ Exactly—Mormonism is a reality, and progressive, but Brighamism is nothing but a humbug; or, in other words, a party of apostates or usurpers from the true order.

TO PARENTS.—Somewhere in Dr. Channing's diary, he warns himself in nearly these words. No passage in his Memoir has impressed us more with a sense of his nice moral discrimination in respect to his own conduct. We commend the expression to parents, teachers, and all who are concerned with the young. Beware of the diffuseness of fault finding.

A little boy slams the door violently. "Don't my boy, do so." his mother says, "it disturbs your little sister." The boy feels that he has done wrong, and determines to obey his mother. But she goes on to say, with increased warmth, "it is now the third time that you have waked her up this evening." This neutralizes the effect of what was said before. "I should think that a boy of your age might know better than to make such a noise." Here the boy begins to grow impatient. "It costs me, and you know it does, a great deal of trouble." He is now a little irritated, and soon, as the torrent of words comes more vehemently, his irritation entirely stifles the first suggestion of conscience, destroys his good resolutions, and drives him almost immediately into some other disagreeable act. Parents, beware of the diffuseness of fault finding. One sentence is almost always better than two, and hardly anything is worse than an harangue.—Christian Register.

GIVE THE DEVIL HIS DUE.—Certainly; but it is better to have no dealings with the Devil, and then there will be nothing due him.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 9.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, MAY 16, 1850. [WHOLE No. 177.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ The following revelation not having been published since eighteen hundred and forty-six, we insert it for the benefit of our present readers, to which they would do well to give heed:—

The word of the Lord God came unto the prophet James, on the first day of July, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-six, when James Knox Polk was President of the United States, and behold they were at war with the republic of Mexico, and the Kings of Europe looked on with fear and anguish, but they knew not what the Lord would accomplish, neither did any of them heed his word; for in their pride are they exalted, and men have gone after their iniquitous ways.

But verily, verily, saith the Lord, I will send a rebuke and my judgments upon them, and they that have lifted up themselves will I abase, and I will give judgment to my servant, even to my servant James J. Strang, whom I have taken from among the honorable men of the earth, and have built up by my strange counsel. Verily, if he fail not of his meekness and obeys my commandments, and remembers to keep all my precepts, I will lift up his head to redeem the oppressed, and to give comfort to the poor among all people. Upon thrones shall he sit, and the sceptre shall be in his hand, and he shall lift up an ensign to all the earth, and my servants who are faithful to me shall be princes and rulers over many people.

Therefore, my servant James, if thou wilt receive honor and glory, verily, verily, thou shalt lead my people, and my word shalt thou receive from me and teach unto my people. And verily I will not now excuse thee or accept any other service at thy hands, for this is thine office: verily, verily, thou shalt be a Prophet, Seer, Revelator and Translator, and shalt preside over my people, or thou shalt have no priesthood in my church, and shalt receive no honor in my kingdom.

Therefore complain unto me no more, but rebuke the complainers faithfully for my name's sake, and if they will not hearken unto thee, they shall be cast out from among my people. Thy strength shall be in meekness and in my word which I shall speak unto thee, and with words of fire shalt thou consume those whose voices are raised against thee, and their hearts shall fail them at thy rebuke, until they are altogether cast off, and my spirit departs from them.

It pleases me that it hath been in the hearts of my servants to build a house for thee to dwell in, for I have required thee to serve me continually, and not to serve thyself. Take heed therefore, that thou have a room for translations therein, for it is my will that thou translate ancient records, hidden truths unto my people. It is my will that thou do it in thy house, and not in the field as thou hast, nor in the houses of unbelievers, that they may look upon sacred things. Therefore, whoso seeketh my word, let him make speed, and let every good work be accomplished speedily.

And then shall my people build a house unto my name, that I may institute those ordinances which pertain to the dispensation of the fullness of times. For since my people have been sifted, I will try them again whether they will receive the truth, and pervert it not. And I will show unto my servant James all things pertaining to this house, and the priesthood of

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 9.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. MAY 16, 1850. [WHOLE No. 177.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ The following revelation not having been published since eighteen hundred and forty-six, we insert it for the benefit of our present readers, to which they would do well to give heed:—

The word of the Lord God came unto the prophet James, on the first day of July, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-six, when James Knox Polk was President of the United States, and behold they were at war with the republic of Mexico, and the Kings of Europe looked on with fear and anguish, but they knew not what the Lord would accomplish, neither did any of them heed his word; for in their pride are they exalted, and men have gone after their iniquitous ways.

But verily, verily, saith the Lord, I will send a rebuke and my judgments upon them, and they that have lifted up themselves will I abase, and I will give judgment to my servant, even to my servant James J. Strang, whom I have taken from among the honorable men of the earth, and have built up by my strange counsel. Verily, if he fail not of his meekness and obeys my commandments, and remembers to keep all my precepts, I will lift up his head to redeem the oppressed, and to give comfort to the poor among all people. Upon thrones shall he sit, and the sceptre shall be in his hand, and he shall lift up an ensign to all the earth, and my servants who are faithful to me shall be princes and rulers over many people.

Therefore, my servant James, if thou wilt receive honor and glory, verily, verily, thou shalt lead my people, and my word shalt thou receive from me and teach unto my people. And verily I will not now excuse thee or accept any other service at thy hands, for this is thine office: verily, verily, thou shalt be a Prophet, Seer, Revelator and Translator, and shalt preside over my people, or thou shalt have no priesthood in my church, and shalt receive no honor in my kingdom.

Therefore complain unto me no more, but rebuke the complainers faithfully for my name's sake, and if they will not hearken unto thee, they shall be cast out from among my people. Thy strength shall be in meekness and in my word which I shall speak unto thee, and with words of fire shalt thou consume those whose voices are raised against thee, and their hearts shall fail them at thy rebuke, until they are altogether cast off, and my spirit departs from them.

It pleases me that it hath been in the hearts of my servants to build a house for thee to dwell in, for I have required thee to serve me continually, and not to serve thyself. Take heed therefore, that thou have a room for translations therein, for it is my will that thou translate ancient records, hidden truths unto my people. It is my will that thou do it in thy house, and not in the field as thou hast, nor in the houses of unbelievers, that they may look upon sacred things. Therefore, whoso seeketh my word, let him make speed, and let every good work be accomplished speedily.

And then shall my people build a house unto my name, that I may institute those ordinances which pertain to the dispensation of the fullness of times. For since my people have been sifted, I will try them again whether they will receive the truth, and pervert it not. And I will show unto my servant James all things pertaining to this house, and the priesthood of those who shall minister therein. And I will give unto him the preperation for an holy endowment therein, that he may instruct my people in the principles of the mysteries of my kingdom, as they are severally able to learn.

And if my people will build a house unto me according to my commandments, and will not be slothful therein, but will make speed to build, then will I endow them, even so many as are faithful and obey me and hearken to my words and the words of my servants whom I have appointed to be their leaders. But to the disobedient and rebellious will I not give power, and if they receive the word, it shall be dead unto them, and they shall not have power nor understand it. And I will separate between the righteous and the wicked, between the obedient and the rebellious. And I will try my people with a great trial. And because they have been tried in chastisement, I will now even try them in faith, and in obedience to my law. And if they will diligently serve me, and give heed unto my words, that I have spoken and shall speak unto them, by the mouth of my servant James, behold in the house which they shall build unto me, will I reveal unto them things which have been kept in the secrets of Heaven from before the world was, things without which the kingdom of God cannot hold dominion, nor men be redeemed from deceit and violence; and these things are exceeding precious, and to be obtained by patience and devotion to truth.

Therefore, whosoever will not abide the preparation faithfully, shall not be blessed, neither shall ye teach him the mysteries of the kingdom, nor will I give him power: but of all you teach the mysteries, shall you take a great covenant. And he that abideth not in his covenant, shall receive of the wrath of God according to the measure of his covenant and the evil he doeth therein: yea, verily, out of his own mouth shall he be judged, and as he hath spoken, so shall it be done unto him.

Therefore, let all my saints set their hands diligently to build a house unto my name, that I may come and dwell therein, and that I may restore unto them that which they have lost, and may give unto them those things which I gave unto my church in former days, and may reveal unto them things which have never been revealed among men. And if my people will cease all their contentions, and their backbitings, and jealousies, and present themselves holy before me, then will I appoint unto them in the days of their poverty, a place for their baptisms for their dead, which pertains unto my house. But in their controversies and contentions I will not bless them, nor bestow upon them mine authority in the most holy things, because they do not understand my law, nor do they know for whom they shall baptize; and while they contend one with another, they will not receive my word, nor receive wisdom from me; they call evil good, and good evil, and they are not wise. Therefore is the blessing withheld till they humble themselves, and hearken to the voice of truth, which my servant James, who is faithful, speaketh unto them.

And I will show unto my servant James the pattern of the house which ye shall build unto my name, and all things pertaining thereto: and it shall be built on the prairie near White River, to the north-westward of the Hill of Promise, and the city of Voree shall be built around it, both on the plain and the hills. And it shall be a holy city and a strong hold of truth and righteousness unto me, if my servants serve me: and upon the Hill of Promise shall ye build a hall which shall be a strong tower unto me, and the pattern thereof, and all things pertaining thereto, will I show unto my servant James, for it is the beginning of the preparation whereby the poor may be exalted, and the oppressed lifted up, and all my servants made equal in their temporal things; for unless they be one in their temporal things, the fullness of my spirit shall be withheld from them.

Therefore come all ye my servants, and bring your silver, and your gold, and your precious stones, and bring ye timber and stone, and labor with your hands, and with cattle, and build a house unto me, and see that you do all things according to the pattern which I will show my those who shall minister therein. And I will give unto him the preperation for an holy endowment therein, that he may instruct my people in the principles of the mysteries of my kingdom, as they are severally able to learn.

And if my people will build a house unto me according to my commandments, and will not be slothful therein, but will make speed to build, then will I endow them, even so many as are faithful and obey me and hearken to my words and the words of my servants whom I have appointed to be their leaders. But to the disobedient and rebellious will I not give power, and if they receive the word, it shall be dead unto them, and they shall not have power nor understand it. And I will separate between the righteous and the wicked, between the obedient and the rebellious. And I will try my people with a great trial. And because they have been tried in chastisement, I will now even try them in faith, and in obedience to my law. And if they will diligently serve me, and give heed unto my words, that I have spoken and shall speak unto them, by the mouth of my servant James, behold in the house which they shall build unto me, will I reveal unto them things which have been kept in the secrets of Heaven from before the world was, things without which the kingdom of God cannot hold dominion, nor men be redeemed from deceit and violence; and these things are exceeding precious, and to be obtained by patience and devotion to truth.

Therefore, whosoever will not abide the preparation faithfully, shall not be blessed, neither shall ye teach him the mysteries of the kingdom, nor will I give him power: but of all you teach the mysteries, shall you take a great covenant. And he that abideth not in his covenant, shall receive of the wrath of God according to the measure of his covenant and the evil he doeth therein: yea, verily, out of his own mouth shall he be judged, and as he hath spoken, so shall it be done unto him.

Therefore, let all my saints set their hands diligently to build a house unto my name, that I may come and dwell therein, and that I may restore unto them that which they have lost, and may give unto them those things which I gave unto my church in former days, and may reveal unto them things which have never been revealed among men. And if my people will cease all their contentions, and their backbitings, and jealousies, and present themselves holy before me, then will I appoint unto them in the days of their poverty, a place for their baptisms for their dead, which pertains unto my house. But in their controversies and contentions I will not bless them, nor bestow upon them mine authority in the most holy things, because they do not understand my law, nor do they know for whom they shall baptize; and while they contend one with another, they will not receive my word, nor receive wisdom from me; they call evil good, and good evil, and they are not wise. Therefore is the blessing withheld till they humble themselves, and hearken to the voice of truth, which my servant James, who is faithful, speaketh unto them.

And I will show unto my servant James the pattern of the house which ye shall build unto my name, and all things pertaining thereto: and it shall be built on the prairie near White River, to the north-westward of the Hill of Promise, and the city of Voree shall be built around it, both on the plain and the hills. And it shall be a holy city and a strong hold of truth and righteousness unto me, if my servants serve me: and upon the Hill of Promise shall ye build a hall which shall be a strong tower unto me, and the pattern thereof, and all things pertaining thereto, will I show unto my servant James, for it is the beginning of the preparation whereby the poor may be exalted, and the oppressed lifted up, and all my servants made equal in their temporal things; for unless they be one in their temporal things, the fullness of my spirit shall be withheld from them.

Therefore come all ye my servants, and bring your silver, and your gold, and your precious stones, and bring ye timber and stone, and labor with your hands, and with cattle, and build a house unto me, and see that you do all things according to the pattern which I will show my servant James, as he shall deliver it to you; and make you a freewill offering, and build a tower of strength unto me upon the Hill of Promise, for if ye do all these things, dominion shall be given unto you, and Daniel the prophet shall proclaim the kingdom of your God, and shall call forth the saints to possess it.

THE TRUTH OF SACRED HISTORY.

Mr. Layard, the great Orientalist, is now in Assyria, and by his remarkable discoveries is demonstrating the truth of the scriptures, as will be seen by the following from Wilson & Co.'s Weekly Dispatch:—

"A startling discovery, confirmatory of the truth of the book of Jonah, has been made by Mr. Layard. In excavating the city of Nineveh he discovered the name of Jonah inscribed upon the ruins. That prophet, as our readers know, was sent to announce to the people of Ninevah the destruction of the city. His eloquence converted many of them, and "God repented him" of the doom he had pronounced, and spared that city for a time. Jonah then became the prophet of Ninevah, and was reverenced by the inhabitants. As was the Oriental custom, they doubtless inscribed his name in conspicuous places on the walls of the public edifices, and the inscriptions engraved by Assyrian hands a thousand years before the christian era, have been found by Mr. Layard. This is one of the most extraordinary demonstrations of the accuracy of Biblical history we have ever heard of.

"As yet we have only seen the beginning of the end. The city of Ninevah has scarcely yet been entered, and when the excavations shall have been completed, if Mahometan jealousy should ever permit that consummation, we may expect illustrations of the prophecies that will strike the world with awe and wonder.

"The British government have aided the labors of Mr. Layard by placing at his command vessels for the navigation of the Euphrates, conveying to England the magnificent sculptures which he has disentombed, and affording him every facility which money or British authority could secure. We should be glad to see a similar spirit exhibited by the government of this country in reference to American antiquities."

AREA OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE.

Historians state the boundaries of the Roman Empire to have been the Rhine, the Danube, the Caucasian mountains, the river Euphrates, and thence on the northern line of Arabia and the Atlas mountains in Africa, and having the Atlantic on the west. This outline would not exceed 3,000,000 square miles of land. TAYLOR in his history states the number of troops quartered in the Provinces, that is, the standing army, at 170,000 in the time of AUGUSTUS CÆSAR, and the revenue of the empire at 40,000,000 sterling.—SCHMIDTZ's history states the standing army, at the same period, about the birth of CHRIST, at 470,000 men. The extent, power and grandeur of the empire, proverbial for ages, were not equal to some of the divisions of the empire. Take England—the extent of her foreign colonial possessions are stated at 6,000,000 square miles, exclusive of those of India. Upon the dominions of Queen Victoria the sun never sets. It is true the territory of the Roman empire was contiguous, while that of England is isolated and divided. The revenue of England is 50,000,000 sterling. How insignificant would the Roman navy look beside England's fleets. Her successful war a few years since upon the vast and distant Chinese empire eclipses any of the individual, national conquests of Rome.

Look at another of the ten divisions—France. Her standing army in our times has been 500,000, often replenished for the slain in battle. It is estimated that 6,000,000 of Frenchmen perished on the field of battle between the outbreak of the revolution and the fall of Napoleon. The number slain in Europe in the 25 years after 1789 was 20,000,000. Napoleon, in a few short years, subdued as many thrones and kingdoms from the torrid to the frigid zone as Rome had conquered up to the days of the Cæsars. Rome divided is greater than Rome united. After the lapse of 1300 years from the dismemberment, some of the divisions exhibit a greatness and power superior to that of the old stock. Indeed it may be affirmed, that England, in extent of dominion, surpasses the sum total of the area of the four great kingdoms, the Babylonian, the Persian, the Grecian, and undivided Roman. Assuredly, the iron is in the feet and toes of the image. "In the days of these kings"—the sub-kingdoms of the fourth great kingdom—not in the days of the four kingdoms, for they never co-existed—they were a class of kingdoms that succeeded each other in a space of, 1,000 years from and after the days of Nebuchadnezzar to the division of the fourth—but the prophecy contemplates a class of kingdoms co-existing, contemporary—in the days of these kings—the days of England, of France, of the triple crowned king, &c., shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom. The 1335 days of Daniel mark the times of the ten kingdoms as they also measure the life time of the little horn.—Advent Herald.

A. PENFIELD.

He who gives his fellow men no credit for humanity in their benevolent movements, who is ever looking for concealed motives and selfish ends, must not complain if he in return is suspected of selfishness and heartlessness. "From the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh."

☞ A small company of saints (twelve in number) left Washington, D. C., on the 2d inst. for Beaver Island.

servant James, as he shall deliver it to you; and make you a freewill offering, and build a tower of strength unto me upon the Hill of Promise, for if ye do all these things, dominion shall be given unto you, and Daniel the prophet shall proclaim the kingdom of your God, and shall call forth the saints to possess it.

THE TRUTH OF SACRED HISTORY.

Mr. Layard, the great Orientalist, is now in Assyria, and by his remarkable discoveries is demonstrating the truth of the scriptures, as will be seen by the following from Wilson & Co.'s Weekly Dispatch:—

"A startling discovery, confirmatory of the truth of the book of Jonah, has been made by Mr. Layard. In excavating the city of Nineveh he discovered the name of Jonah inscribed upon the ruins. That prophet, as our readers know, was sent to announce to the people of Ninevah the destruction of the city. His eloquence converted many of them, and "God repented him" of the doom he had pronounced, and spared that city for a time. Jonah then became the prophet of Ninevah, and was reverenced by the inhabitants. As was the Oriental custom, they doubtless inscribed his name in conspicuous places on the walls of the public edifices, and the inscriptions engraved by Assyrian hands a thousand years before the christian era, have been found by Mr. Layard. This is one of the most extraordinary demonstrations of the accuracy of Biblical history we have ever heard of.

"As yet we have only seen the beginning of the end. The city of Ninevah has scarcely yet been entered, and when the excavations shall have been completed, if Mahometan jealousy should ever permit that consummation, we may expect illustrations of the prophecies that will strike the world with awe and wonder.

"The British government have aided the labors of Mr. Layard by placing at his command vessels for the navigation of the Euphrates, conveying to England the magnificent sculptures which he has disentombed, and affording him every facility which money or British authority could secure. We should be glad to see a similar spirit exhibited by the government of this country in reference to American antiquities."

AREA OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE.

Historians state the boundaries of the Roman Empire to have been the Rhine, the Danube, the Caucasian mountains, the river Euphrates, and thence on the northern line of Arabia and the Atlas mountains in Africa, and having the Atlantic on the west. This outline would not exceed 3,000,000 square miles of land. TAYLOR in his history states the number of troops quartered in the Provinces, that is, the standing army, at 170,000 in the time of AUGUSTUS CÆSAR, and the revenue of the empire at 40,000,000 sterling.—SCHMIDTZ's history states the standing army, at the same period, about the birth of CHRIST, at 470,000 men. The extent, power and grandeur of the empire, proverbial for ages, were not equal to some of the divisions of the empire. Take England—the extent of her foreign colonial possessions are stated at 6,000,000 square miles, exclusive of those of India. Upon the dominions of Queen Victoria the sun never sets. It is true the territory of the Roman empire was contiguous, while that of England is isolated and divided. The revenue of England is 50,000,000 sterling. How insignificant would the Roman navy look beside England's fleets. Her successful war a few years since upon the vast and distant Chinese empire eclipses any of the individual, national conquests of Rome.

Look at another of the ten divisions—France. Her standing army in our times has been 500,000, often replenished for the slain in battle. It is estimated that 6,000,000 of Frenchmen perished on the field of battle between the outbreak of the revolution and the fall of Napoleon. The number slain in Europe in the 25 years after 1789 was 20,000,000. Napoleon, in a few short years, subdued as many thrones and kingdoms from the torrid to the frigid zone as Rome had conquered up to the days of the Cæsars. Rome divided is greater than Rome united. After the lapse of 1300 years from the dismemberment, some of the divisions exhibit a greatness and power superior to that of the old stock. Indeed it may be affirmed, that England, in extent of dominion, surpasses the sum total of the area of the four great kingdoms, the Babylonian, the Persian, the Grecian, and undivided Roman. Assuredly, the iron is in the feet and toes of the image. "In the days of these kings"—the sub-kingdoms of the fourth great kingdom—not in the days of the four kingdoms, for they never co-existed—they were a class of kingdoms that succeeded each other in a space of, 1,000 years from and after the days of Nebuchadnezzar to the division of the fourth—but the prophecy contemplates a class of kingdoms co-existing, contemporary—in the days of those kings—the days of England, of France, of the triple crowned king, &c., shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom. The 1335 days of Daniel mark the times of the ten kingdoms as they also measure the life time of the little horn.—Advent Herald.

A. PENFIELD.

He who gives his fellow men no credit for humanity in their benevolent movements, who is ever looking for concealed motives and selfish ends, must not complain if he in return is suspected of selfishness and heartlessness. "From the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh."

☞ A small company of saints (twelve in number) left Washington, D. C., on the 2d inst. for Beaver Island.

J. C. BREWSTER AND "JOSEPH SMITH'S SUCCESSOR."

Our readers will recollect that some two months ago we published an extract from the Olive Branch—the organ of Brewsterism—on the subject of Joseph's successor, in which the writer attempted to show that Hyrum was appointed in Joseph's stead, by quoting part of a sentence from the revelation of 1841. We took up the matter at some length, and showed, by quoting the remaining part of the sentence, that he was appointed to the "same priesthood and gifts of the priesthood" that were once placed upon Oliver Cowdery, to "act in concert" with Joseph, and also to "receive counsel" from him. Proved by a revelation given the day the church was organized, that Joseph was called "a Seer, a Translator, a Prophet," to give revelations and commandments to the church; and by the following extract from a revelation given some six months afterwards, that Oliver was not appointed to this gift:—

"Behold I say unto thee, Oliver, that it shall be given unto thee that thou shalt be heard by the church, in all things whatsoever thou shalt teach them by the Comforter, concerning the revelations and commandments which I have given.

"But, behold, verily, verily I say unto thee, no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church, excepting my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses: and thou shalt be obedient unto the things which I shall give unto him, even as Aaron, to declare faithfully the commandments and the revelations, with power and authority unto the church. And if thou art led at any time by the Comforter to speak or teach, or at all times by the way of commandment unto the church, thou mayest do it. But thou shalt not write by way of commandment, but by wisdom: and thou shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church; for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead.

"And now, behold, I say unto you, that you shall go unto the Lamanites and preach my gospel unto them; and inasmuch as they receive thy teachings, thou shalt cause my church to be established among them; and thou shalt have revelations, but write them not by way of commandment. And now, behold, I say unto you, that it is not revealed, and no man knoweth where the city shall be built, but it shall be given hereafter. Behold I say unto you, that it shall be on the borders by the Lamanites." D. & C. sec. li. p. 1, 2, 3.

This made the matter so plain that even Mr. Brewster could see the dilemma he was placed in. But it appears he is not going to give up beat. In the April No. of the Olive Branch he resorts, for refuge, to his favorite mode of taking exceptions to the revelations, when they come in contact with his positions. Of the foregoing extract he says: "This revelation does not appoint Oliver to any gift; it merely commands him not to exercise a gift which it admits that he already possessed, the gift of prophecy and revelation."

The reader can readily see, by referring to the extract, that this is not the case. On the contrary, he is granted a jurisdiction in which to "exercise" these gifts, but is commanded not to usurp authority over him who stood at his head, and at the head of the church, neither to write by way of commandment; being reminded that Joseph had been appointed to receive commandments and revelations for the church, to hold the keys of mysteries and revelations till another should be appointed in his stead. Mr. Brewster tries to maintain his position by quoting from revelations of an earlier date than this, but by some mistake he dates one of them later, and another one year later than its real date. He proceeds as follows:—

"The truth is, Oliver had been appointed by previous revelations to every gift that Joseph ever claimed to possess, and at the time he was appointed to them no restriction whatever was placed upon his exercise of them. If, therefore, it be proved that Hyrum received the same gifts that Oliver had once received, it is only another argument in favor of the position we have taken. To prove that Oliver was appointed to the same gifts that Joseph was, we will quote, first from a revelation given April, 1831, (1829,) sec. viii. par. 5. The words being directly to Oliver: 'Behold, thou

J. C. BREWSTER AND "JOSEPH SMITH'S SUCCESSOR."

Our readers will recollect that some two months ago we published an extract from the Olive Branch—the organ of Brewsterism—on the subject of Joseph's successor, in which the writer attempted to show that Hyrum was appointed in Joseph's stead, by quoting part of a sentence from the revelation of 1841. We took up the matter at some length, and showed, by quoting the remaining part of the sentence, that he was appointed to the "same priesthood and gifts of the priesthood" that were once placed upon Oliver Cowdery, to "act in concert" with Joseph, and also to "receive counsel" from him. Proved by a revelation given the day the church was organized, that Joseph was called "a Seer, a Translator, a Prophet," to give revelations and commandments to the church; and by the following extract from a revelation given some six months afterwards, that Oliver was not appointed to this gift:—

"Behold I say unto thee, Oliver, that it shall be given unto thee that thou shalt be heard by the church, in all things whatsoever thou shalt teach them by the Comforter, concerning the revelations and commandments which I have given.

"But, behold, verily, verily I say unto thee, no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church, excepting my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses: and thou shalt be obedient unto the things which I shall give unto him, even as Aaron, to declare faithfully the commandments and the revelations, with power and authority unto the church. And if thou art led at any time by the Comforter to speak or teach, or at all times by the way of commandment unto the church, thou mayest do it. But thou shalt not write by way of commandment, but by wisdom: and thou shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church; for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead.

"And now, behold, I say unto you, that you shall go unto the Lamanites and preach my gospel unto them; and inasmuch as they receive thy teachings, thou shalt cause my church to be established among them; and thou shalt have revelations, but write them not by way of commandment. And now, behold, I say unto you, that it is not revealed, and no man knoweth where the city shall be built, but it shall be given hereafter. Behold I say unto you, that it shall be on the borders by the Lamanites." D. & C. sec. li. p. 1, 2, 3.

This made the matter so plain that even Mr. Brewster could see the dilemma he was placed in. But it appears he is not going to give up beat. In the April No. of the Olive Branch he resorts, for refuge, to his favorite mode of taking exceptions to the revelations, when they come in contact with his positions. Of the foregoing extract he says: "This revelation does not appoint Oliver to any gift; it merely commands him not to exercise a gift which it admits that he already possessed, the gift of prophecy and revelation."

The reader can readily see, by referring to the extract, that this is not the case. On the contrary, he is granted a jurisdiction in which to "exercise" these gifts, but is commanded not to usurp authority over him who stood at his head, and at the head of the church, neither to write by way of commandment; being reminded that Joseph had been appointed to receive commandments and revelations for the church, to hold the keys of mysteries and revelations till another should be appointed in his stead. Mr. Brewster tries to maintain his position by quoting from revelations of an earlier date than this, but by some mistake he dates one of them later, and another one year later than its real date. He proceeds as follows:—

"The truth is, Oliver had been appointed by previous revelations to every gift that Joseph ever claimed to possess, and at the time he was appointed to them no restriction whatever was placed upon his exercise of them. If, therefore, it be proved that Hyrum received the same gifts that Oliver had once received, it is only another argument in favor of the position we have taken. To prove that Oliver was appointed to the same gifts that Joseph was, we will quote, first from a revelation given April, 1831, (1829,) sec. viii. par. 5. The words being directly to Oliver: 'Behold, thou hast a gift, and blessed art thou because of thy gift. Remember that is sacred and cometh from above, and if thou wilt inquire thou shalt know mysteries which are great and marvelous; therefore thou shalt exercise thy gift, that thou mayest find out mysteries, and that thou mayest bring many to a knowledge of the truth.' This alone is sufficient to prove that Oliver had a gift by which he could learn those mysteries which were great and marvelous, and also that he received a positive command to exercise that gift.

"But we will make another quotation from the same revelation, commencing with the last sentence of the 11th par.: 'And behold I grant unto you a gift, if you desire it of me, to translate even as my servant Joseph. Verily, verily, I say unto you, that there are records which contain much of my gospel, which have been kept back because of the wickedness of the people; and now I command you that if you have good desires, a desire to lay up treasures for yourself in heaven, then shall you assist in bringing to light with your gift those parts of my gospel (scriptures) which have been hidden because of iniquity. And now, behold, I give unto you, and also unto my servant Joseph, the keys of this gift which shall bring to light this ministry; and in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.'—This quotation completely overthrows our opponents argument. It shows that Oliver received the gift to translate the same as Joseph, or the gift by which he could translate. Let us inquire, what is this gift? The Book of Mormon informs us that that record should be translated by the gift of seeing, consequently Joseph was a seer, and is so called in the Book of Mormon. In sec. xxxi. par. 1, of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, it is said to Joseph, 'you have a gift to translate the plates, and this is the first gift that I bestowed upon you, and I have commanded that you should pretend to no other gift until my purpose is fulfilled in this; for I will grant unto you no other gift until it is finished.'

"In the fifth chapter of Mosiah we are told that 'a seer is a revelator and a prophet also; and a gift which is greater can no man have.' And we are also told this gift is the means which God has provided for to bring to light all hidden things, and to 'translate all records that are of ancient date.' This shows us that this first gift which Joseph received made him a prophet, a revelator, a translator, and we have proved that Oliver received the same gift, the same as Joseph received.

"Now let us ask, what other gifts did Joseph ever claim to possess besides these?—What other gift was ever promised to him besides these? Answer. The priesthood or the ministry, which sec. xiii. par. 8 says, was to be brought to light by the gift which was given unto Oliver and Joseph. And we learn from sec. 1. that Oliver and Joseph received the priesthood on the ordination to the ministry together.

"But this is not all, the xxxv. (xxxiv.) sec. is a revelation to Oliver, given April, 1830, (1829.) We advise the reader to examine the whole revelation attentively. The 2d par. is in these words: 'Now, behold, this is the spirit of revelation; behold this is the spirit by which Moses brought the children of Israel through the Red Sea on dry ground; therefore this is thy gift, apply unto it, and blessed art thou; for it shall deliver you out of the hands of your enemies; when if it were not so they would slay you, and bring your soul to destruction.'"

Now what has Mr. Brewster made out? Has he sustained the assertion that he made at the outset, that "Oliver had been appointed by previous revelations to every gift that Joseph ever claimed to possess?" Joseph claimed to be appointed by God to give commandments and revelations for a law unto the church. See D. & C. sec. xlvi. Has it been proved that Oliver was appointed unto this gift? Let us examine. By sec. viii., par. 5, we learn that Oliver had a gift by which he could "know mysteries that are great and marvelous," which he was exhorted to exercise, that he might "bring many to a knowledge of the truth."—This could not have reference to the church, for the scriptures say that she is "the pillar and ground of the truth;" it must then have reference to unbelievers.

By turning to this passage in the book of Doctrine and Covenants we find this view of the matter confirmed. The concluding part of the sentence reads: "Yea, convince them of the error of their ways." Neither is there any mention made of his being appointed to receive hast a gift, and blessed art thou because of thy gift. Remember that is sacred and cometh from above, and if thou wilt inquire thou shalt know mysteries which are great and marvelous; therefore thou shalt exercise thy gift, that thou mayest find out mysteries, and that thou mayest bring many to a knowledge of the truth.' This alone is sufficient to prove that Oliver had a gift by which he could learn those mysteries which were great and marvelous, and also that he received a positive command to exercise that gift.

"But we will make another quotation from the same revelation, commencing with the last sentence of the 11th par.: 'And behold I grant unto you a gift, if you desire it of me, to translate even as my servant Joseph. Verily, verily, I say unto you, that there are records which contain much of my gospel, which have been kept back because of the wickedness of the people; and now I command you that if you have good desires, a desire to lay up treasures for yourself in heaven, then shall you assist in bringing to light with your gift those parts of my gospel (scriptures) which have been hidden because of iniquity. And now, behold, I give unto you, and also unto my servant Joseph, the keys of this gift which shall bring to light this ministry; and in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.'—This quotation completely overthrows our opponents argument. It shows that Oliver received the gift to translate the same as Joseph, or the gift by which he could translate. Let us inquire, what is this gift? The Book of Mormon informs us that that record should be translated by the gift of seeing, consequently Joseph was a seer, and is so called in the Book of Mormon. In sec. xxxi. par. 1, of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, it is said to Joseph, 'you have a gift to translate the plates, and this is the first gift that I bestowed upon you, and I have commanded that you should pretend to no other gift until my purpose is fulfilled in this; for I will grant unto you no other gift until it is finished.'

"In the fifth chapter of Mosiah we are told that 'a seer is a revelator and a prophet also; and a gift which is greater can no man have.' And we are also told this gift is the means which God has provided for to bring to light all hidden things, and to 'translate all records that are of ancient date.' This shows us that this first gift which Joseph received made him a prophet, a revelator, a translator, and we have proved that Oliver received the same gift, the same as Joseph received.

"Now let us ask, what other gifts did Joseph ever claim to possess besides these?—What other gift was ever promised to him besides these? Answer. The priesthood or the ministry, which sec. xiii. par. 8 says, was to be brought to light by the gift which was given unto Oliver and Joseph. And we learn from sec. l. that Oliver and Joseph received the priesthood on the ordination to the ministry together.

"But this is not all, the xxxv. (xxxiv.) sec. is a revelation to Oliver, given April, 1830, (1829.) We advise the reader to examine the whole revelation attentively. The 2d par. is in these words: 'Now, behold, this is the spirit of revelation; behold this is the spirit by which Moses brought the children of Israel through the Red Sea on dry ground; therefore this is thy gift, apply unto it, and blessed art thou; for it shall deliver you out of the hands of your enemies; when if it were not so they would slay you, and bring your soul to destruction.'"

Now what has Mr. Brewster made out? Has he sustained the assertion that he made at the outset, that "Oliver had been appointed by previous revelations to every gift that Joseph ever claimed to possess?" Joseph claimed to be appointed by God to give commandments and revelations for a law unto the church. See D. & C. sec. xlvi. Has it been proved that Oliver was appointed unto this gift? Let us examine. By sec. viii., par. 5, we learn that Oliver had a gift by which he could "know mysteries that are great and marvelous," which he was exhorted to exercise, that he might "bring many to a knowledge of the truth."—This could not have reference to the church, for the scriptures say that she is "the pillar and ground of the truth;" it must then have reference to unbelievers.

By turning to this passage in the book of Doctrine and Covenants we find this view of the matter confirmed. The concluding part of the sentence reads: "Yea, convince them of the error of their ways." Neither is there any mention made of his being appointed to receive commandments and revelations in the next quotation. It simply informs us that God was ready to give to him "a gift to translate even as Joseph;" that if he had good desires, &c., then he should "assist in bringing to light" with his gift parts of the scriptures, which had been kept hidden because of iniquity; and that he had given unto him and Joseph 'the keys of this gift, which should bring to light this ministry;' or, in other words, the parts of the scriptures referred to, which had been kept hidden.

We are aware that Mr. Brewster says, in a subsequent paragraph, that that "this ministry" refers to the priesthood, which they afterwards received. That this is an erroneous application is evident from the fact that they did not "bring to light" the priesthood by "this gift"—the gift of translation. Mr. Brewster may have translated his priesthood from the writings of Esdras, but Joseph and Oliver received theirs by the ministration of angels.—That Oliver was restricted in the exercise of his gift is manifest from the following extract from a revelation given April, 1829, being of the same date as the above:—

"Behold, I say unto you, my son, that because you did not translate according to that which you desired of me, and did commence again to write for my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., even so I would that you should continue until you have finished this record, which I have intrusted unto him: and then, behold, other records have I, that I will give unto you power that you may assist to translate." D. & C. sec. xxxv. p. 1.

We perceive by this the falsity of Mr. Brewster's assertion, that 'at the time Oliver was appointed to gifts claimed by Joseph no restriction whatever was placed upon his exercise of them.' "This record"—the Book of Mormon—was intrusted to Joseph. Oliver was not permitted to assist in translating it. His calling was to write for Joseph; but he had a promise that at some future time he would have power given him to "assist" in translating "other records."

It is a fact that they were both ordained to the priesthood together. But it does not follow, as a matter of course, that they were equal in authority, any more than it followed because they both had the gift to translate that they both had equal privileges. We have just shown that Oliver was restricted in the exercise of this gift, while Joseph was not; yet they were both translators. Upon the same principle they might both have been Apostles, yet not equal in priesthood, nor in the exercise of the Apostleship. By the extract from a revelation in the li. sec., at the commencement of our remarks, given the same year and month as the one which mentions their ordinations, we learn that Joseph had been appointed to a gift or jurisdiction that Oliver had not. Mr. Brewster took exceptions to the former, why not to the latter? The secret is, he thought it favored his position.

We learn by the quotation from the xxxiv. sec. that he was blessed with the spirit of revelation, and that he was commanded to apply unto it; not that he might give revelations and commandments to the church, but that 'he might be delivered out of the hands of his enemies.'

It is contended that because Oliver had the gift which rendered him a prophet, seer and revelator, of which Mosiah says, "a gift which is greater can no man have," that he was appointed "to every gift that Joseph ever claimed to possess." But such a conclusion is certainly preposterous. Mosiah says nothing against a man receiving afterwards an additional gift, or even as great a gift. Mr. Brewster admits that they both received the priesthood afterward.

If they could both receive the priesthood after they were prophets, seers and revelators there is certainly nothing against Joseph's afterward receiving the gift to receive commandments and revelations for the church. That Joseph claimed this gift, is too notorious to be denied. On the day the church was organized he was appointed to it, and the church was commanded to "give heed unto all his words and commandments, which he shall give unto commandments and revelations in the next quotation. It simply informs us that God was ready to give to him "a gift to translate even as Joseph;" that if he had good desires, &c., then he should "assist in bringing to light" with his gift parts of the scriptures, which had been kept hidden because of iniquity; and that he had given unto him and Joseph 'the keys of this gift, which should bring to light this ministry;' or, in other words, the parts of the scriptures referred to, which had been kept hidden.

We are aware that Mr. Brewster says, in a subsequent paragraph, that that "this ministry" refers to the priesthood, which they afterwards received. That this is an erroneous application is evident from the fact that they did not "bring to light" the priesthood by "this gift"—the gift of translation. Mr. Brewster may have translated his priesthood from the writings of Esdras, but Joseph and Oliver received theirs by the ministration of angels.—That Oliver was restricted in the exercise of his gift is manifest from the following extract from a revelation given April, 1829, being of the same date as the above:—

"Behold, I say unto you, my son, that because you did not translate according to that which you desired of me, and did commence again to write for my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., even so I would that you should continue until you have finished this record, which I have intrusted unto him: and then, behold, other records have I, that I will give unto you power that you may assist to translate." D. & C. sec. xxxv. p. 1.

We perceive by this the falsity of Mr. Brewster's assertion, that 'at the time Oliver was appointed to gifts claimed by Joseph no restriction whatever was placed upon his exercise of them.' "This record"—the Book of Mormon—was intrusted to Joseph. Oliver was not permitted to assist in translating it. His calling was to write for Joseph; but he had a promise that at some future time he would have power given him to "assist" in translating "other records."

It is a fact that they were both ordained to the priesthood together. But it does not follow, as a matter of course, that they were equal in authority, any more than it followed because they both had the gift to translate that they both had equal privileges. We have just shown that Oliver was restricted in the exercise of this gift, while Joseph was not; yet they were both translators. Upon the same principle they might both have been Apostles, yet not equal in priesthood, nor in the exercise of the Apostleship. By the extract from a revelation in the li. sec., at the commencement of our remarks, given the same year and month as the one which mentions their ordinations, we learn that Joseph had been appointed to a gift or jurisdiction that Oliver had not. Mr. Brewster took exceptions to the former, why not to the latter? The secret is, he thought it favored his position.

We learn by the quotation from the xxxiv sec. that he was blessed with the spirit of revelation, and that he was commanded to apply unto it; not that he might give revelations and commandments to the church, but that 'he might be delivered out of the hands of his enemies.'

It is contended that because Oliver had the gift which rendered him a prophet, seer and revelator, of which Mosiah says, "a gift which is greater can no man have," that he was appointed "to every gift that Joseph ever claimed to possess." But such a conclusion is certainly preposterous. Mosiah says nothing against a man receiving afterwards an additional gift, or even as great a gift. Mr. Brewster admits that they both received the priesthood afterward.

If they could both receive the priesthood after they were prophets, seers and revelators, there is certainly nothing against Joseph's afterward receiving the gift to receive commandments and revelations for the church. That Joseph claimed this gift, is too notorious to be denied. On the day the church was organized he was appointed to it, and the church was commanded to "give heed unto all his words and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive as if from mine own mouth," saith the Lord.—D. & C. sec. xlvi. p. 2.

Before Joseph was ordained to the priesthood he had no right or authority to initiate any one into the church, although he had previously received the gift which made him a prophet, seer and revelator, much less to give commandments and revelations to the church; consequently he was appointed to this gift by revelation of God on the day the church was organized, as we have just shown. We have examined all the testimonies that have been introduced by Mr. Brewster, and have found nothing from which it could even be inferred that Oliver was appointed to this gift; neither can there be any produced. If he was not appointed to it, Hyrum was not; for he was appointed to the "same priesthood and gifts of the priesthood" that were once placed upon Oliver.

But conceding to Mr. Brewster, what he has not proved, that Oliver was appointed to all the gifts, privileges and authorities that Joseph ever claimed, still it does not follow that Hyrum was appointed in Joseph's stead; for the revelation says expressly, that he was to "act in concert" with Joseph, and "receive counsel" from him. Truth is like pure coin, the more you rub it the brighter it shines; but Brewsterism is like bogus money, the more you examine it the worse it looks.

DOING GOOD.

Every mind has a mission to fulfill, an influence to be felt, either for good or for evil; and none are so lost, so degraded, but that some spark of moral fire is burning within their bosom—and that little spark, though faint and feeble, may kindle a bright and glowing flame. Say not it is too insignificant, too trifling to accomplish any useful end. Whatever is good, is worthy of preservation, is worthy of cultivation. The little germ of Truth you throw by the way side, will not be lost—it shall not perish; no! it will be guarded and nurtured by angels, and shall flourish forever!

We should not fail, then, to speak one kind word at least to cheer the wounded spirit. Think not, when some wanderer crosses your way, that a word of warning will be of no avail; though the erring one may scorn your counsel, that friendly word will come to him again, and lead the spirit that hath gone astray back to the path of virtue. Words of counsel spoken in love, will never be forgotten; faithful memory will treasure them up, and the fitting time will come for them to do their good work.

Think not, then, a look of kindness, an act of love, however trifling may seem the word of friendly admonition, think them not thrown away, whenever the opportunity to speak, to act, is seen: then do your duty, your good deed will be recorded in heaven—and you will find even here on earth, a full and satisfactory reward!

TAKE THE FIRST STEP.

If you are ever to be anything you must make a beginning; and you must make it yourself. The world is getting too practical to help drones, and push them along, when there is a busy hive of workers who, if anything, live too fast. You must lift up your own feet, and if you have a pair of elogs on which clatter about your heels, they will soon be worn off and left behind on the dusty path-way. Mark out the line which you prefer; let truth be the object glass—honesty the surveying chain—and eminence the level with which you lay out your field; and thus prepared, with prudence on one arm, and perseverance on the other, you need fear no obstacle. Do not be afraid to take the first step. Boldness will beget assurance, and the first step will bring you so much nearer the second. But if your first step should break down, try again. It will be surer and safer by the trial. Besides, if you never move, you will never know your own power. A man standing still and declaring his inability to walk, without making the effort, would be a general laughing stock; and so, morally, is the man, in our opinion, who will not test his own moral and intellectual power, and then gravely assure us that he has "no genius," or "no talent," or "no capacity." A man with sewing eyes keeping them shut and complaining that he cannot see! The trumpeter of his own imbecility!

☞ The man of genius thinks for himself; his opinions are sometimes contrary to those commonly received; he therefore shocks the vanity of the greater number. To offend nobody, we should have no ideas but those of the world; so man is then without genius and without enemies.

☞ For some time past we have scarcely received any news whatever from the Elders who are preaching the gospel in various parts of the country, which is our apology for the lack of news of late. Why they do not write we cannot tell, unless they have entirely forgotten us, or are so busily engaged in preaching they cannot get time. Shall we hear from them? We hope so.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

S. A. Rude,	$2,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
T. R. Hicks,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Mary Leatherby,	4,00 to Vol. VI. No. 26

MARRIED,

At Champion, N. Y., on the 25th of April, by Elder F. Squire, Elder HIRAM LINNELL to Miss DELILA SQUIRE, both of Jefferson county.

you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive as if from mine own mouth," saith the Lord.—D. & C. sec. xlvi. p. 2.

Before Joseph was ordained to the priesthood he had no right or authority to initiate any one into the church, although he had previously received the gift which made him a prophet, seer and revelator, much less to give commandments and revelations to the church; consequently he was appointed to this gift by revelation of God on the day the church was organized, as we have just shown. We have examined all the testimonies that have been introduced by Mr. Brewster, and have found nothing from which it could even be inferred that Oliver was appointed to this gift; neither can there be any produced. If he was not appointed to it, Hyrum was not; for he was appointed to the "same priesthood and gifts of the priesthood" that were once placed upon Oliver.

But conceding to Mr. Brewster, what he has not proved, that Oliver was appointed to all the gifts, privileges and authorities that Joseph ever claimed, still it does not follow that Hyrum was appointed in Joseph's stead; for the revelation says expressly, that he was to "act in concert" with Joseph, and "receive counsel" from him. Truth is like pure coin, the more you rub it the brighter it shines; but Brewsterism is like bogus money, the more you examine it the worse it looks.

DOING GOOD.

Every mind has a mission to fulfill, an influence to be felt, either for good or for evil; and none are so lost, so degraded, but that some spark of moral fire is burning within their bosom—and that little spark, though faint and feeble, may kindle a bright and glowing flame. Say not it is too insignificant, too trifling to accomplish any useful end. Whatever is good, is worthy of preservation, is worthy of cultivation. The little germ of Truth you throw by the way side, will not be lost—it shall not perish; no! it will be guarded and nurtured by angels, and shall flourish forever!

We should not fail, then, to speak one kind word at least to cheer the wounded spirit. Think not, when some wanderer crosses your way, that a word of warning will be of no avail; though the erring one may scorn your counsel, that friendly word will come to him again, and lead the spirit that hath gone astray back to the path of virtue. Words of counsel spoken in love, will never be forgotten; faithful memory will treasure them up, and the fitting time will come for them to do their good work.

Think not, then, a look of kindness, an act of love, however trifling may seem the word of friendly admonition, think them not thrown away, whenever the opportunity to speak, to act, is seen; then do your duty, your good deed will be recorded in heaven—and you will find even here on earth, a full and satisfactory reward!

TAKE THE FIRST STEP.

If you are ever to be anything you must make a beginning; and you must make it yourself. The world is getting too practical to help drones, and push them along, when there is a busy hive of workers who, if anything, live too fast. You must lift up your own feet, and if you have a pair of clogs on which clatter about your heels, they will soon be worn off and left behind on the dusty path-way. Mark out the line which you prefer; let truth be the object glass—honesty the surveying chain—and eminence the level with which you lay out your field; and thus prepared, with prudence on one arm, and perseverance on the other, you need fear no obstacle. Do not be afraid to take the first step. Boldness will beget assurance, and the first step will bring you so much nearer the second. But if your first step should break down, try again. It will be surer and safer by the trial. Besides, if you never move, you will never know your own power. A man standing still and declaring his inability to walk, without making the effort, would be a general laughing stock; and so, morally, is the man, in our opinion, who will not test his own moral and intellectual power, and then gravely assure us that he has "no genius," or "no talent," or "no capacity." A man with seeing eyes keeping them shut and complaining that he cannot see! The trumpeter of his own imbecility!

☞ The man of genius thinks for himself; his opinions are sometimes contrary to those commonly received; he therefore shocks the vanity of the greater number. To offend nobody, we should have no ideas but those of the world; no man is then without genius and without enemies.

☞ For some time past we have scarcely received any news whatever from the Elders who are preaching the gospel in various parts of the country, which is our apology for the lack of news of late. Why they do not write we cannot tell, unless they have entirely forgotten us, or are so busily engaged in preaching they cannot get time. Shall we hear from them? We hope so.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

S. A. Rude,	$2,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
T. R. Hicks,	2,00 to Vol. V. No. 26
Mary Leatherby,	4,00 to Vol. VI. No. 26

MARRIED,

At Champion, N. Y., on the 25th of April, by Elder F. Squire, Elder HIRAM LINNELL to Miss DELILA SQUIRE, both of Jefferson county.

NEVER HOLD MALICE.

Oh! never "hold malice;" it poisons our life,
With the gall-drop of hate and the night-shade of strife,
Let us scorn what we must, and despise where we may,
But let anger, like sunlight, go down with the day.

Our spirits in lashing may bear the hot spark,
But no mouldering flame to break out in the dark;
'Tis the narrowest heart that creation can make,
Where our passion folds up like the coil of a snake.

Oh! never "hold malice;" it cannot be good,
For 'tis nobler to strike in the rush of hot blood,
Than to bitterly cherish the name of the foe,
Wait to sharpen the weapon and measure the blow.

The wild dog in hunger—the wolf in its spring—
The shark of the waters—the asp with its sting—
Are less to be feared than the vengeance of man,
When it lieth in secret to wound when it can.

Oh! never "hold malice;" dislike if you will,
Yet remember humanity linketh us still;
We are all of us human, and all of us erring,
And mercy within us should ever be stirring.

Shall we dare to look up to the Father above,
With petitions for pardon or pleading for love;
Shall we dare, while we pant for revenge on another,
To ask from a God, yet deny to a brother?

PROSPERITY AND ADVERSITY.

Let not prosperity elate thine heart above measure; neither depress thy soul unto the grave, because fortune beareth hard against thee.

Her smiles are not stable, therefore build not thy confidence upon them; her frowns endure not for ever, therefore let hope teach thee patience.

To bear adversity well, is difficult; but to be temperate in prosperity, is the height of wisdom.

Good and ill are the tests by which thou art to know thy constancy: nor is there aught else that can tell thee the powers of thine own soul: be therefore upon the watch, when they are upon thee.

Behold prosperity, how sweetly she flattereth thee! how insensibly she robbeth thee of thy strength and thy vigor!

Though thou hast been constant in ill fortune, though thou hast been invincible in distress; yet by her thou art conqured, not knowing that thy strength returneth not again; and yet that thou again mayest need it.

Affliction moveth our enemies to pity; success and happiness, cause even our friends to envy.

In adversity, is the seed of well doing; it is the nurse of heroism and boldness: who that hath enough, will endanger himself to have more? Who that is at ease, will set his life on the hazard?

True virtue will act under all circumstances; but see more of its effects, when accidents concur with it.

In adversity man seeth himself abandoned by others; he findeth that all his hopes are centered within himself; he rouseth his soul, encountereth his difficulties, and they yield before him.

Every man can advise his own soul in distress; but prosperity blindeth the truth.

Better is the sorrow that leadeth to contentment than the joy that rendereth man unable to endure distress, and afterwards plungeth him into it.

Our passions dictate to us in all our extremes. Moderation is the effect of wisdom.

Be upright in thy whole life, be content in all its changes, so shalt thou make thy profit out of all occurrences; so that every thing that happeneth unto thee, be the source of praise.

The wise man makes every thing the means of advantage; and with the same countenance beholdeth he all the faces of fortune: he governeth the good, he conquereth the evil; he is unmoved in all.

Presume not in prosperity, neither despair in adversity: court not dangers, nor meanly fly from before them: dare to despise whatever will not remain with thee.

Let not adversity tear off the wings of hope; neither let prosperity obscure the light of prudence.

He who despaireth of the end, shall never attain unto it; and he who seeth not the pit, shall perish therein.

He who calleth prosperity his god; who hath said unto her with thee will I establish my happiness: lo! he buildeth his foundation on the sand, which the rain and storms wash away.

As the water that passeth from the mountains, kisseth in its way to the ocean, every field that bordereth on the river; as it tarrieth not in any place, even so fortune visiteth the sons of men: her motion is incessant, she will not stay; she is as unstable as the winds: how then wilt thou hold her? When she kisseth thee thou are blessed; but, behold! as thou turnest to thank her, she is going unto another.

☞ The passengers and officers of the Peytona, from New Orleans for Louisville, observed a very singular phenomenon on the 17th ult. As the boat was passing Napoleon, Ark., the atmosphere presented a dirty yellow color, and a shower fell having the appearance of liquid sulphur, together with the smell.

☞ We should all be estimated by the work we actually do, not by what we intend, or project, or may be supposed capable of accomplishing; for "the end of man's life is an Action, not a thought, however noble."

☞ The reading of a good and well conducted newspaper, even for the short space of one quarter of a year, brings more sound instruction, and leaves a deeper impression, than would be acquired, probably, at the best school in twelve months; that is, to those who take a paper, and then read it. Talk to the members of a family who read the papers, and compare their information and intelligence with those who do not. The difference is beyond comparison—and in this respect we now would recommend the Gospel Herald.

☞ Adversity is the true test of friendship.

MARRIED,

In Washington, D. C., on the 20th of March, by Elder D. R. Whipple, Elder J. W. Grierson, to Miss Martha A. T. Seely, both of Washington.

NEVER HOLD MALICE.

Oh! never "hold malice;" it poisons our life,
With the gall-drop of hate and the night-shade of strife,
Let us scorn what we must, and despise where we may,
But let anger, like sunlight, go down with the day.

Our spirits in lashing may bear the hot spark,
But no mouldering flame to break out in the dark;
'Tis the narrowest heart that creation can make,
Where our passion folds up like the coil of a snake.

Oh! never "hold malice;" it cannot be good,
For 'tis nobler to strike in the rush of hot blood,
Than to bitterly cherish the name of the foe,
Wait to sharpen the weapon and measure the blow.

The wild dog in hunger—the wolf in its spring—
The shark of the waters—the asp with its sting—
Are less to be feared than the vengeance of man,
When it lieth in secret to wound when it can.

Oh! never "hold malice;" dislike if you will,
Yet remember humanity linketh us still;
We are all of us human, and all of us erring,
And mercy within us should ever be stirring.

Shall we dare to look up to the Father above,
With petitions for pardon or pleading for love;
Shall we dare, while we pant for revenge on another,
To ask from a God, yet deny to a brother?

PROSPERITY AND ADVERSITY.

Let not prosperity elate thine heart above measure; neither depress thy soul unto the grave, because fortune beareth hard against thee.

Her smiles are not stable, therefore build not thy confidence upon them; her frowns endure not for ever, therefore let hope teach thee patience.

To bear adversity well, is difficult; but to be temperate in prosperity, is the height of wisdom.

Good and ill are the tests by which thou art to know thy constancy: nor is there aught else that can tell thee the powers of thine own soul: be therefore upon the watch, when they are upon thee.

Behold prosperity, how sweetly she flattereth thee! how insensibly she robbeth thee of thy strength and thy vigor!

Though thou hast been constant in ill fortune, though thou hast been invincible in distress; yet by her thou art conqured, not knowing that thy strength returneth not again; and yet that thou again mayest need it.

Affliction moveth our enemies to pity; success and happiness, cause even our friends to envy.

In adversity, is the seed of well doing; it is the nurse of heroism and boldness: who that hath enough, will endanger himself to have more? Who that is at ease, will set his life on the hazard?

True virtue will act under all circumstances; but see more of its effects, when accidents concur with it.

In adversity man seeth himself abandoned by others; he findeth that all his hopes are centered within himself; he rouseth his soul, encountereth his difficulties, and they yield before him.

Every man can advise his own soul in distress; but prosperity blindeth the truth.

Better is the sorrow that leadeth to contentment than the joy that renderetn man unable to endure distress, and afterwards plungeth him into it.

Our passions dictate to us in all our extremes. Moderation is the effect of wisdom.

Be upright in thy whole life, be content in all its changes, so shalt thou make thy profit out of all occurrences; so that every thing that happeneth unto thee, be the source of praise.

The wise man makes every thing the means of advantage; and with the same countenance beholdeth he all the faces of fortune: he governeth the good, he conquereth the evil; he is unmoved in all.

Presume not in prosperity, neither despair in adversity: court not dangers, nor meanly fly from before them: dare to despise whatever will not remain with thee.

Let not adversity tear off the wings of hope; neither let prosperity obscure the light of prudence.

He who despaireth of the end, shall never attain unto it; and he who seeth not the pit, shall perish therein.

He who calleth prosperity his god; who hath said unto her with thee will I establish my happiness: lo! he buildeth his foundation on the sand, which the rain and storms wash away.

As the water that passeth from the mountains, kisseth in its way to the ocean, every field that bordereth on the river; as it tarrieth not in any place, even so fortune visiteth the sons of men: her motion is incessant, she will not stay; she is as unstable as the winds: how then wilt thou hold her? When she kisseth thee thou are blessed; but, behold! as thou turnest to thank her, she is going unto another.

☞ The passengers and officers of the Peytona, from New Orleans for Louisville, observed a very singular phenomenon on the 17th ult. As the boat was passing Napoleon, Ark., the atmosphere presented a dirty yellow color, and a shower fell having the appearance of liquid sulphur, together with the smell.

☞ We should all be estimated by the work we actually do, not by what we intend, or project, or may be supposed capable of accomplishing; for "the end of man's life is an Action, not a thought, however noble."

☞ The reading of a good and well conducted newspaper, even for the short space of one quarter of a year, brings more sound instruction, and leaves a deeper impression, than would be acquired, probably, at the best school in twelve months; that is, to those who take a paper, and then read it. Talk to the members of a family who read the papers, and compare their information and intelligence with those who do not. The difference is beyond comparison--and in this respect we now would recommend the Gospel Herald.

☞ Adversity is the true test of friendship.

MARRIED,

In Washington, D. C., on the 20th of March by Elder D. R. Whipple, Elder J. W. Grierson, to Miss Martha A. T. Seely, both of Washington.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 10.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MAY 23, 1850. [WHOLE No. 178.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

LOOK AT BOTH SIDES OF THE QUESTION.

Almost every thing has two sides. The world has two sides—else how could the Lord turn it upside down? Man, beast, bird, fish, insect, and vegetable have two sides each, and all things throughout the natural and artificial world; and before we can become perfectly acquainted with any of these things, we have to examine both sides thereof, and every side, for most of these things have a multitude of sides. Not so with truth—

> Look at it when and where you will,
> Truth was, and is, and will be still a principle that has but one side to it, and that side is truth.

Falsehood is another principle which has but one side; and examine it in whatever form you please, all its properties are false: its nature is congenial to itself, it cannot be altered—its name and nature is falsehood.

The word of God is truth, as saith the Savior, "Father, sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth;" and yet, when the truth is preached, many are ready to cry out, "look at both sides of the question," just as though truth had as many sides to it as anything which is naturally constituted with sides, or is continually changing or varying its form.

The saints are for truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and wherever a principle of truth can be found, there is a principle which helps to constitute the great sum and substance of the faith of the saints of the last days; no matter what that truth particularly refers to, whether it be God, angels, men, or devils, things seen or unseen, above or below, heaven or hell, celestial, terrestrial, or telestial, believed or disbelieved by men generally; show us a truth, and we will believe it.

This was the reason why the world hated the Lord Jesus, because he was possessed of that charity, that love of truth, which prompted him to believe all things, and rejoice in the truth; and, to be saints, we must be willing to suffer for the truth's sake, as he did, even to be called devils, and accounted as mad by this generation—for the servant is not above his master; and if they hated and called the master of the house Beelzebub, because he told them the truth, how much more they of his household, for believing what he said.

Charity never faileth; neither do we profess to be infallible; therefore, we are ever ready to examine all things brought against us, as well as those which present themselves apparently in our favor; so that by the Holy Ghost, whose office it is to guide all those who possess it into all truth, we may be enabled to discern the right ways of the Lord, even the way of truth, the old paths, that we may stand and walk therein, until we shall be enabled, by the grace of God, to arrive at the celestial city, the new Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven, and there refresh ourselves in the presence of the most high, and of his son Jesus; having been cleansed by the blood of Christ, through sanctification of the spirit, and belief of the truth; and having been baptized with water, with the Holy Ghost, and with fire, that we might be made co-heirs with him to all the glories of his father's kingdom.

With all these glorious prospects before us, we are determined to make sure of the promised inheritance; and although truth has but

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 10.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MAY 23, 1850. [WHOLE No. 178.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

LOOK AT BOTH SIDES OF THE QUESTION.

Almost every thing has two sides. The world has two sides—else how could the Lord turn it upside down? Man, beast, bird, fish, insect, and vegetable have two sides each, and all things throughout the natural and artificial world; and before we can become perfectly acquainted with any of these things, we have to examine both sides thereof, and every side, for most of these things have a multitude of sides. Not so with truth—

> Look at it when and where you will,
> Truth was, and is, and will be still a principle that has but one side to it, and that side is truth.

Falsehood is another principle which has but one side; and examine it in whatever form you please, all its properties are false: its nature is congenial to itself, it cannot be altered—its name and nature is falsehood.

The word of God is truth, as saith the Savior, "Father, sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth;" and yet, when the truth is preached, many are ready to cry out, "look at both sides of the question," just as though truth had as many sides to it as anything which is naturally constituted with sides, or is continually changing or varying its form.

The saints are for truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and wherever a principle of truth can be found, there is a principle which helps to constitute the great sum and substance of the faith of the saints of the last days; no matter what that truth particularly refers to, whether it be God, angels, men, or devils, things seen or unseen, above or below, heaven or hell, celestial, terrestrial, or telestial, believed or disbelieved by men generally; show us a truth, and we will believe it.

This was the reason why the world hated the Lord Jesus, because he was possessed of that charity, that love of truth, which prompted him to believe all things, and rejoice in the truth; and, to be saints, we must be willing to suffer for the truth's sake, as he did, even to be called devils, and accounted as mad by this generation—for the servant is not above his master; and if they hated and called the master of the house Beelzebub, because he told them the truth, how much more they of his household, for believing what he said.

Charity never faileth; neither do we profess to be infallible; therefore, we are ever ready to examine all things brought against us, as well as those which present themselves apparently in our favor; so that by the Holy Ghost, whose office it is to guide all those who possess it into all truth, we may be enabled to discern the right ways of the Lord, even the way of truth, the old paths, that we may stand and walk therein, until we shall be enabled, by the grace of God, to arrive at the celestial city, the new Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven, and there refresh ourselves in the presence of the most high, and of his son Jesus; having been cleansed by the blood of Christ, through sanctification of the spirit, and belief of the truth; and having been baptized with water, with the Holy Ghost, and with fire, that we might be made co-heirs with him to all the glories of his father's kingdom.

With all these glorious prospects before us, we are determined to make sure of the promised inheritance; and although truth has but one side to it, yet there are many in the world who suppose, or pretend to believe, that we have not found that side, and that we are groping in darkness at noon-day, and are following falsehood instead of truth; and would fain convince us of our error by printing or publishing what they call truth, either that they may turn us away from our belief, or prevent those who would join themselves unto the Lord in the new and everlasting covenant.

Concerning this matter we would say to the Elders and all saints everywhere, whenever and wherever you have or may see anything printed in any book, pamphlet, paper, tract, or card concerning us, or the religion we profess, whether it be for or against, in any part of the country, read it carefully, and examine it candidly by the spirit of the Lord, for truth will never lose by investigation; compare it with the word of God, by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, which giveth light, and whatever you find to be true, believe and practice—whatever you find to be false, reject.

Findlay, O., May 5th, 1850.

DEAR BROTHER COOPER:—Through the providence of God I have been preserved through another year. Since I last wrote to you many have gone to try the realities of another world. Although death hath taken thousands, my life has been spared to see fourscore years, and to see the time when the light of the true and everlasting gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ has shed its glorions beams upon our dark and pagan world, and is proclaimed by his servants to the children of men throughout the land. We rejoice to hear through the medium of your paper of the prosperity of Zion in different parts of the world, and that the church is increasing in strength and the love of God.

May the time speedily come when idolatry, superstition and priestcraft be done away, and the true gospel be proclaimed and obeyed by all Adam's apostate race, is the prayer of your brother in Christ. I feel that the time of my departure is at hand, and expect this to be the last time that I shall write to you, but expect to meet you and all the faithful in the paradise of God and be permitted to join in the praises of God and the Lamb forever, where sorrow and trouble can never come. We never have preaching, or see any of the brethren. Here we are, entirely alone; but we receive much encouragement from the reading of your paper. And as the time of my subscription has expired, I send you herewith inclosed the amount for another year.

I am sorry to hear that you are compelled to complain of the backwardness of the brethren in supporting the press, in carrying on the business of circulating the news of salvation. For our part, we should feel condemned if we should neglect this duty. It is fourteen years since we joined the church, and have never neglected the papers when we could take them. As any of the Elders never come this way, many of the blessings and privileges of the church we are deprived of. If it could be that some of the Elders give us a call, it would be a great source of satisfaction and comfort to us to have the sacrament of the Lord's supper administered to us once more before we leave this world, as we have not had that privilege for about twelve years. I remain your brother in Christ, DAVID ROUTZEN.

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD IN THE CITY OF BALTIMORE, ON THE 16TH AND 17TH DAYS OF MARCH, A. D. 1850.

The Conference assembled in Shields' Hall, and was called to order by President G. J. Adams. Services commenced by singing.—Prayer by Pres. G. J. Adams. Bro. Edward Preston was then unanimously chosen Clerk of the Conference.

Pres. Adams arose, stating the object of the Conference, to wit, the transaction of business which could not be done except in Conference assembled, the ordination of such persons as God should call by the spirit of prophecy to be his servants and faithful ministers of his name to the nations and kindreds of the earth. Pres. Adams also stated that another object which one side to it, yet there are many in the world who suppose, or pretend to believe, that we have not found that side, and that we are groping in darkness at noon-day, and are following falsehood instead of truth; and would fain convince us of our error by printing or publishing what they call truth, either that they may turn us away from our belief, or prevent those who would join themselves unto the Lord in the new and everlasting covenant.

Concerning this matter we would say to the Elders and all saints everywhere, whenever and wherever you have or may see anything printed in any book, pamphlet, paper, tract, or card concerning us, or the religion we profess, whether it be for or against, in any part of the country, read it carefully, and examine it candidly by the spirit of the Lord, for truth will never lose by investigation; compare it with the word of God, by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, which giveth light, and whatever you find to be true, believe and practice--whatever you find to be false, reject.

Findlay, O., May 5th, 1850.

DEAR BROTHER COOPER:—Through the providence of God I have been preserved through another year. Since I last wrote to you many have gone to try the realities of another world. Although death hath taken thousands, my life has been spared to see fourscore years, and to see the time when the light of the true and everlasting gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ has shed its glorions beams upon our dark and pagan world, and is proclaimed by his servants to the children of men throughout the land. We rejoice to hear through the medium of your paper of the prosperity of Zion in different parts of the world, and that the church is increasing in strength and the love of God.

May the time speedily come when idolatry, superstition and priestcraft be done away, and the true gospel be proclaimed and obeyed by all Adam's apostate race, is the prayer of your brother in Christ. I feel that the time of my departure is at hand, and expect this to be the last time that I shall write to you, but expect to meet you and all the faithful in the paradise of God and be permitted to join in the praises of God and the Lamb forever, where sorrow and trouble can never come. We never have preaching, or see any of the brethren. Here we are, entirely alone; but we receive much encouragement from the reading of your paper. And as the time of my subscription has expired. I send you herewith inclosed the amount for another year.

I am sorry to hear that you are compelled to complain of the backwardness of the brethren in supporting the press, in carrying on the business of circulating the news of salvation. For our part, we should feel condemned if we should neglect this duty. It is fourteen years since we joined the church, and have never neglected the papers when we could take them. As any of the Elders never come this way, many of the blessings and privileges of the church we are deprived of. If it could be that some of the Elders give us a call, it would be a great source of satisfaction and comfort to us to have the sacrament of the Lord's supper administered to us once more before we leave this world, as we have not had that privilege for about twelve years. I remain your brother in Christ, DAVID ROUTZEN.

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD IN THE CITY OF BALTIMORE, ON THE 16TH AND 17TH DAYS OF MARCH, A. D. 1850.

The Conference assembled in Shields' Hall, and was called to order by President G. J. Adams. Services commenced by singing.—Prayer by Pres. G. J. Adams. Bro. Edward Preston was then unanimously chosen Clerk of the Conference.

Pres. Adams arose, stating the object of the Conference, to wit, the transaction of business which could not be done except in Conference assembled, the ordination of such persons as God should call by the spirit of prophecy to be his servants and faithful ministers of his name to the nations and kindreds of the earth. Pres. Adams also stated that another object which he had in calling this Conference was, that, prior to his final leave of this city, he wished to exhort the saints to faithfulness in the cause of God; and notwithstanding the heavens over them might gather blackness and darkness and storms of persecution assail them on every hand, yet if they would put their trust in the strength of the arm of the Almighty God of Jacob they should not only prevail, but should stand with their feet upon Mount Zion, and see all their enemies overcome and crushed beneath the iron wheel of revolution and war.

The choir then sung a hymn, after which Bro. David R. Whipple arose and addressed the meeting in his usual thrilling and affectionate manner. The Conference then adjourned until 7 1–2 o'clock in the evening. Benediction by Pres. Adams.

The Conference met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened by singing. Prayer by Elder E. Preston. Pres. G. J. Adams arose and addressed the Conference at some length, displaying a depth of thought seldom reached by man, accompanied by a flow of eloquence which inspiration alone could imitate.

The following named persons were then called by revelation of God, and ordained by the laying on of hands, to be Elders in the church of God, to wit: H. D. McCulloch, James Taylor, A. W. Crouks, J. R. Parkinson, G. W. Neill, F. Parsons, and James McGlufflin. Bro. David R. Whipple informed the Conference that he had ordained Bro. Davis of Washington to the office of an Elder, and wished to know if this body would grant his credentials. A unanimous vote then passed in the affirmative. Pres. Adams then arose and addressed the candidates for the ministry, explaining the duties of their high and holy calling, exhorting them to faithfulness in preaching the gospel, quoting his own history as an example of the effect of perseverance and faith in the God of the holy prophets and Apostles. The Conference then adjourned to meet in the Masonic Hall to-morrow at 10 1–2 o'clock, the 17th.—Benediction by Pres. Adams.

March 17th.—Conference met at 9 o'clock at the waters of baptism, and there seven persons entered the water, and did there, by the act of holy baptism, put on Christ, showing to the world that they did regard his holy commandments, and were henceforth determined to walk in newness of life.

At 10 1–2 o'clock Conference met at the Masonic Hall, according to adjournment. After singing, and prayer by Bro. Whipple, and the reading of the 24th chapter of Isaiah, Pres. Adams preached a powerful sermon on the subject of the day of vengeance of our God.—Adjourned to meet at 3 1–2 o'clock. Benediction by G. J. Adams.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment.—Singing. Prayer by Bro. Grierson. Sermon by Pres. Adams on the salvation of the dead. Seven persons were then confirmed members in the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth. Adjourned by benediction till 7 o'clock in the evening.

Evening session opened by singing. Prayer by Elder E. Preston. Preaching by Pres. Adams on the restoration of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets. The Conference then adjourned sine die. Benediction by Pres. Adams.

G. J. ADAMS, Pres.

EDWARD PRESTON, Clerk.

MAXIMS.

Idleness is the parent of want, and of pain; but the labor of virtue bringeth forth pleasure.

The hand of diligence defeateth want; prosperity and success are the industious man's attendants.

The slothful man is a burden to himself, his hours hang heavy on his head; he loitereth about, and knoweth not what he would do.

The oak that now spreadeth its branches toward the heavens, was once but an acorn in the bowels of the earth.

Let him that scoffeth at the lame, take care that he halt not himself. Whosoever speaketh of another's failings with pleasure, shall hear his own with bitterness of heart.

If you wish success in life, make perseverance your bosom friend, experience your wise counselor, caution your elder brother, and hope your guardian genius.

he had in calling this Conference was, that, prior to his final leave of this city, he wished to exhort the saints to faithfulness in the cause of God; and notwithstanding the heavens over them might gather blackness and darkness and storms of persecution assail them on every hand, yet if they would put their trust in the strength of the arm of the Almighty God of Jacob they should not only prevail, but should stand with their feet upon Mount Zion, and see all their enemies overcome and crushed beneath the iron wheel of revolution and war.

The choir then sung a hymn, after which Bro. David R. Whipple arose and addressed the meeting in his usual thrilling and affectionate manner. The Conference then adjourned until 7 1-2 o'clock in the evening. Benediction by Pres. Adams.

The Conference met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened by singing. Prayer by Elder E. Preston. Pres. G. J. Adams arose and addressed the Conference at some length, displaying a depth of thought seldom reached by man, accompanied by a flow of eloquence which inspiration alone could imitate.

The following named persons were then called by revelation of God, and ordained by the laying on of hands, to be Elders in the church of God, to wit: H. D. McCulloch, James Taylor, A. W. Crouks, J. R. Parkinson, G. W. Neill, F. Parsons, and James McGlufflin. Bro. David R. Whipple informed the Conference that he had ordained Bro. Davis of Washington to the office of an Elder, and wished to know if this body would grant his credentials. A unanimous vote then passed in the affirmative. Pres. Adams then arose and addressed the candidates for the ministry, explaining the duties of their high and holy calling, exhorting them to faithfulness in preaching the gospel, quoting his own history as an example of the effect of perseverance and faith in the God of the holy prophets and Apostles. The Conference then adjourned to meet in the Masonic Hall to-morrow at 10 1-2 o'clock, the 17th.—Benediction by Pres. Adams.

March 17th.—Conference met at 9 o'clock at the waters of baptism, and there seven persons entered the water, and did there, by the act of holy baptism, put on Christ, showing to the world that they did regard his holy commandments, and were henceforth determined to walk in newness of life.

At 10 1-2 o'clock Conference met at the Masonic Hall, according to adjournment. After singing, and prayer by Bro. Whipple, and the reading of the 24th chapter of Isaiah, Pres. Adams preached a powerful sermon on the subject of the day of vengeance of our God.—Adjourned to meet at 3 1-2 o'clock. Benediction by G. J. Adams.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment.—Singing. Prayer by Bro. Grierson. Sermon by Pres. Adams on the salvation of the dead. Seven persons were then confirmed members in the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth. Adjourned by benediction till 7 o'clock in the evening.

Evening session opened by singing. Prayer by Elder E. Preston. Preaching by Pres. Adams on the restoration of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets. The Conference then adjourned sine die. Benediction by Pres. Adams.

G. J. ADAMS, Pres.

EDWARD PRESTON, Clerk.

MAXIMS.

Idleness is the parent of want, and of pain; but the labor of virtue bringeth forth pleasure.

The hand of diligence defeateth want; prosperity and success are the industious man's attendants.

The slothful man is a burden to himself, his hours hang heavy on his head; he loitereth about, and knoweth not what he would do.

The oak that now spreadeth its branches toward the heavens, was once but an acorn in the bowels of the earth.

Let him that scoffeth at the lame, take care that he halt not himself. Whosoever speaketh of another's failings with pleasure, shall hear his own with bitterness of heart.

If you wish success in life, make perseverance your bosom friend, experience your wise counselor, caution your elder brother, and hope your guardian genius.

For the Gospel Herald.

DIALOGUE.—No. 1.

Well, the "Gospel Herald!" this is a very dignified name—very nice indeed! I wonder what right Mormons have to assume to be heralds of the gospel? Can they think they are christians, or expect to bear any comparison with our ministers, who are embassadors for Christ? We will be fair with them however, and hear what they have to say in their defence. So, Mr. Herald, what definition do you give to the gospel which you carry?

HERALD. It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

INQUIRER. Why do you herald it forth?

H. Because it hath pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

I. Very well said. Do you differ much from other denominations? and do you believe the Bible?

H. As much as substance does from shadow. And we practice and inculcate the precepts of the Bible, both with respect to its authorities and ordinances.

I. I am glad you believe the Bible, and thank God that our lot has been cast in a land of Bibles and christianity. But, have you not another Bible, called the Mormon Bible?

H. We have a record of a branch of the house of Israel, through the lineage of Joseph, which we call the Book of Mormon; which book contains a record of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as well as the Bible.

I. Do you hold that the Book of Mormon is any better than the Bible, or put it in the place of the Bible?

H. We, in our message, declare it as good as the Bible, and place it on an equal footing with the Bible.

I. By what authority do you do this?

H. As I am the mouth piece of those who send me, I answer, by the authority of our calling. The same God who called us to the ministry, says unto us, preach my gospel as it is contained in the Bible and Book of Mormon.

I. You are not accounted as a christian society by the professors of evangelical religion. How then do you support your authority to be ministers of the gospel of Jesus Christ?

H. It matters less with us what evangelical christians think of us than what God thinks of us. We think as little of their authority to administer in spiritual things as they possibly can of ours. I told you we differed as much from them as substance does from shadow; you will find it so. We claim to act on the authority of the Melchisedec priesthood, the priesthood which Jesus Christ the Son of God held while on earth; and also on its appendage, the priesthood of Aaron, which was an everlasting anointing throughout all his generations. The Melchisedec priesthood holds the precedency over all things in heaven and on earth. We did not call ourselves, neither does our "authority or dignity proceed from ourselves," but we have received a little of this honor or authority from God.

I. Then you believe in the old Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods? Cannot a man be a minister of the gospel without having one of those priesthoods? I suppose you recognize other priests?

H. O yes; we recognize other priests in their own standing. There were the Egyptian priests, the priests of Baal, the priests who worshiped the golden calves, and a host of others. But of gospel ministers it is written, "no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." (Now Aaron was consecrated and set apart to his holy calling by a prophet, even Moses; who, in many respects, was a type of Christ, the great prophet.) "So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest;" but God said unto him, "thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." The Bible recognizes no authority or priesthood except the Melchisedec and Aaronic priests, when they were obedient to the faith. Why should we? Jesus said, "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Then he possessed a fullness of power to be exercised as he should appoint, and

For the Gospel Herald.

DIALOGUE.—No. 1.

Well, the "Gospel Herald!" this is a very dignified name—very nice indeed! I wonder what right Mormons have to assume to be heralds of the gospel? Can they think they are christians, or expect to bear any comparison with our ministers, who are embassadors for Christ? We will be fair with them however, and hear what they have to say in their defence. So, Mr. Herald, what definition do you give to the gospel which you carry?

HERALD. It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

INQUIRER. Why do you herald it forth?

H. Because it hath pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

I. Very well said. Do you differ much from other denominations? and do you believe the Bible?

H. As much as substance does from shadow. And we practice and inculcate the precepts of the Bible, both with respect to its authorities and ordinances.

I. I am glad you believe the Bible, and thank God that our lot has been cast in a land of Bibles and christianity. But, have you not another Bible, called the Mormon Bible?

H. We have a record of a branch of the house of Israel, through the lineage of Joseph, which we call the Book of Mormon; which book contains a record of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as well as the Bible.

I. Do you hold that the Book of Mormon is any better than the Bible, or put it in the place of the Bible?

H. We, in our message, declare it as good as the Bible, and place it on an equal footing with the Bible.

I. By what authority do you do this?

H. As I am the mouth piece of those who send me, I answer, by the authority of our calling. The same God who called us to the ministry, says unto us, preach my gospel as it is contained in the Bible and Book of Mormon.

I. You are not accounted as a christian society by the professors of evangelical religion. How then do you support your authority to be ministers of the gospel of Jesus Christ?

H. It matters less with us what evangelical christians think of us than what God thinks of us. We think as little of their authority to administer in spiritual things as they possibly can of ours. I told you we differed as much from them as substance does from shadow; you will find it so. We claim to act on the authority of the Melchisedec priesthood, the priesthood which Jesus Christ the Son of God held while on earth; and also on its appendage, the priesthood of Aaron, which was an everlasting anointing throughout all his generations. The Melchisedec priesthood holds the precedency over all things in heaven and on earth. We did not call ourselves, neither does our "authority or dignity proceed from ourselves," but we have received a little of this honor or authority from God.

I. Then you believe in the old Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods? Cannot a man be a minister of the gospel without having one of those priesthoods? I suppose you recognize other priests?

H. O yes; we recognize other priests in their own standing. There were the Egyptian priests, the priests of Baal, the priests who worshiped the golden calves, and a host of others. But of gospel ministers it is written, "no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." (Now Aaron was consecrated and set apart to his holy calling by a prophet, even Moses; who, in many respects, was a type of Christ, the great prophet.) "So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest;" but God said unto him, "thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." The Bible recognizes no authority or priesthood except the Melchisedec and Aaronic priests, when they were obedient to the faith. Why should we? Jesus said, "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Then he possessed a fullness of power to be exercised as he should appoint, and said, "as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, receive ye the Holy Ghost: whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained." So said Jesus Christ. "Therefore, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not; but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but, by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them."

I. Then you profess to have power to remit and retain the sins of mankind, the same as the Apostles? Is not this blasphemy to make such pretensions?

H. Yes, we both have and enjoy the prerogatives and privileges of the most holy and high priesthood of the Son of God, and we say it without any irreverence to the name or dignity of God. He who holds this priesthood, walking in obedience to all the ordinances and laws of God's house, whatsoever he binds on earth is bound in heaven, and whatsoever he looses on earth shall be loosed in heaven; or whosesoever sins he remits they are remitted, and whosesoever sins he retains they are retained.

I. Then you do away the efficacy of the blood of Christ, do you not? We read that without the shedding of blood is no remission. Is not this an arrogant act of power?

H. By no means. The law or word of God must be administered among men, to give it any force or validity. When God enjoined the blood of the first testament to be used for the purification of the priestly garments, the book of the law, the altar and vessels of the ministry, &c., though the blood was shed to purify them with, they were not purified until they were sprinkled; for this was also enjoined in the law. When Moses had sprinkled them, being commanded of God, and having authority to do so, they were purified. Would they have been purified had an unauthorized person taken blood and sprinkled them? Certainly not. Also God had a law showing how to build an altar of twelve stones, without any tool being used thereon; then for beasts to be slain and offered by fire upon the altar. Now if a priest of Baal should build an altar of twelve stones, after the manner of the law, and should slay beasts in regular order and lay thereon, (the law being at the same time in full force,) would his offering be acceptable, or there be any validity whatever in the offering? Verily, no; for it was enjoined upon the sons of Lævi and the prophets to offer an acceptable offering. Christ hath truly shed his blood, died and rose again; but, says he, "my blood shall not cleanse them, if they hear me not." He is also "become the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." The blood of Christ does not purify one of the sons of men in and of itself, without the other requisites, viz., hearing, believing and obeying. By being administered to by proper authority, according to Christ's law, we receive remission.

I. You have curious ideas from what I have been taught. I will call again and inquire about the ordinances of your church, and then perhaps I shall learn how you exercise your (to me) strange authority.

S. P.

☞ If men were but governed by an enlightened self-love, they would hardly be as penurious as they often are. "So quickly has the wheel turned round, that many a man has lived to enjoy the benefit of that charity which his own piety projected and consummated." There is, too, a blessing in the very exercise of benevolence that is worth all it costs. The joy of doing good is one of the purest of all our joys. To do good from pure love, is to be like God.

said, "as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, receive ye the Holy Ghost: whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained." So said Jesus Christ. "Therefore, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not; but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but, by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them."

I. Then you profess to have power to remit and retain the sins of mankind, the same as the Apostles? Is not this blasphemy to make such pretensions?

H. Yes, we both have and enjoy the prerogatives and privileges of the most holy and high priesthood of the Son of God, and we say it without any irreverence to the name or dignity of God. He who holds this priesthood, walking in obedience to all the ordinances and laws of God's house, whatsoever he binds on earth is bound in heaven, and whatsoever he looses on earth shall be loosed in heaven; or whosesoever sins he remits they are remitted, and whosesoever sins he retains they are retained.

I. Then you do away the efficacy of the blood of Christ, do you not? We read that without the shedding of blood is no remission. Is not this an arrogant act of power?

H. By no means. The law or word of God must be administered among men, to give it any force or validity. When God enjoined the blood of the first testament to be used for the purification of the priestly garments, the book of the law, the altar and vessels of the ministry, &c., though the blood was shed to purify them with, they were not purified until they were sprinkled; for this was also enjoined in the law. When Moses had sprinkled them, being commanded of God, and having authority to do so, they were purified. Would they have been purified had an unauthorized person taken blood and sprinkled them? Certainly not. Also God had a law showing how to build an altar of twelve stones, without any tool being used thereon; then for beasts to be slain and offered by fire upon the altar. Now if a priest of Baal should build an altar of twelve stones, after the manner of the law, and should slay beasts in regular order and lay thereon, (the law being at the same time in full force,) would his offering be acceptable, or there be any validity whatever in the offering? Verily, no; for it was enjoined upon the sons of Levi and the prophets to offer an acceptable offering. Christ hath truly shed his blood, died and rose again; but, says he, "my blood shall not cleanse them, if they hear me not." He is also "become the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." The blood of Christ does not purify one of the sons of men in and of itself, without the other requisites, viz., hearing, believing and obeying. By being administered to by proper authority, according to Christ's law, we receive remission.

I. You have curious ideas from what I have been taught. I will call again and inquire about the ordinances of your church, and then perhaps I shall learn how you exercise your (to me) strange authority.

S. P.

☞ If men were but governed by an enlightened self-love, they would hardly be as penurious as they often are. "So quickly has the wheel turned round, that many a man has lived to enjoy the benefit of that charity which his own piety projected and consummated." There is, too, a blessing in the very exercise of benevolence that is worth all it costs. The joy of doing good is one of the purest of all our joys. To do good from pure love, is to be like God.

THE TABERNACLE.

The saints at Beaver Island are building a Tabernacle for a place of worship. It is a house of hewn timber, 60 feet by 100. The meeting room is 58 feet 4 inches by 87 feet 10 inches, with galleries 12 feet wide on each side and 24 feet across the end. The vestry is 28 feet 6 inches by 58 feet 4 inches. It also contains other apartments for records, library, &c. The situation is on a bluff some 30 feet high, fronting beautifully on the harbor, and commanding a view of the Lake for 70 miles, and of the numerous Islands, which make its scenery among the finest on the Lakes.

The front will present a range of 60 feet and forty two-feet high, with a high tower for clock, bell, and light house. The basement is already up, and it is contemplated to put a deck floor over it and have it for immediate use. The entire work is rapidly progressing, and the building will be ready for use in a short time. The foundation is made of Norway pine piles, 2 feet in diameter, placed once in 5 feet under the entire building, and all the timber substantially treenailed. This will probably be the most commodious house for religious worship in the United States. The largest room will seat 2,583 persons without the least inconvenience, and the vestry abundantly accommodates 600. This house is already the marked feature of the improvements of the country, and commanding the admiration of the traveling public.

EMIGRATION TO BEAVER.

Inquiries are often made of the extent of emigration to Beaver this season. It is impossible to make any estimate what it may be. Emigrants began to come in the forepart of April, and have been coming in almost daily since. One company had arrived from Washington, and another was on the way; two from Baltimore, several small parties from various places in the east, previous to the 17th inst. Since then the Oneida brought up 30 from Michigan; the Patchin 17 from Buffalo, and another boat 30 from Fairport, Ohio. This is doubtless only a mere beginning. We have reason to believe the flood tide is yet to come in, and that the emigration will increase rapidly for some time to come. Different persons, well informed, vary in their estimates for this season from 800 to 2,000.

Improvements, &c.

A law has been adopted that cattle shall not run at large, but that owners shall each take care of his own. Consequently all may plant without fencing, and they are doing so extensively. Garden and field crops are extensively planted without a rail to protect. As no cattle run at large, they are perfectly safe. Pastures need fencing whether crops are or not. But if the pastures are fenced, nothing else need be.

Houses.

Houses are being built as rapidly as possible. They are usually plainly and substantially built.

Towns.

St. James, at Paradise Bay, the harbor, is the capital or chief place. Three other villages are commenced, and will be respectable for population and beautiful in appearance, as soon as those have built who have their inheritances appointed there. The preparation for building gives a busy life-like air to all the settlement.

Old Custom.

The Israelites of old lived only in villages and cities. So the saints at Beaver. Some of the first settlers scattered about on farms, but now all settle in towns. It is far the most pleasant, and gives social life many new pleasures. To live in a village and yet on a farm with all of rural life and social society, is a great improvement on common customs.

The True Sabbath.

The Sabbath was instituted as a day of rest. God rested on the seventh day, and made it the Sabbath for that reason. Six days of labor and the seventh of rest was the law of the Almighty from the beginning. It has forever been kept in remembrance by the tribe of Judah. Under the Roman power the day of rest was changed to the first instead of the seventh day. The saints have been compelled, partly by law, but more by that public opinion or prejudice, which is above all law, to observe it according-

THE TABERNACLE.

The saints at Beaver Island are building a Tabernacle for a place of worship. It is a house of hewn timber, 60 feet by 100. The meeting room is 58 feet 4 inches by 87 feet 10 inches, with galleries 12 feet wide on each side and 24 feet across the end. The vestry is 28 feet 6 inches by 58 feet 4 inches. It also contains other apartments for records, library, &c. The situation is on a bluff some 30 feet high, fronting beautifully on the harbor, and commanding a view of the Lake for 70 miles, and of the numerous Islands, which make its scenery among the finest on the Lakes.

The front will present a range of 60 feet and forty two-feet high, with a high tower for clock, bell, and light house. The basement is already up, and it is contemplated to put a deck floor over it and have it for immediate use. The entire work is rapidly progressing, and the building will be ready for use in a short time. The foundation is made of Norway pine piles, 2 feet in diameter, placed once in 5 feet under the entire building, and all the timber substantially treenailed. This will probably be the most commodious house for religious worship in the United States. The largest room will seat 2,583 persons without the least inconvenience, and the vestry abundantly accommodates 600. This house is already the marked feature of the improvements of the country, and commanding the admiration of the traveling public.

EMIGRATION TO BEAVER.

Inquiries are often made of the extent of emigration to Beaver this season. It is impossible to make any estimate what it may be. Emigrants began to come in the forepart of April, and have been coming in almost daily since. One company had arrived from Washington, and another was on the way; two from Baltimore, several small parties from various places in the east, previous to the 17th inst. Since then the Oneida brought up 30 from Michigan; the Patchin 17 from Buffalo, and another boat 30 from Fairport, Ohio. This is doubtless only a mere beginning. We have reason to believe the flood tide is yet to come in, and that the emigration will increase rapidly for some time to come. Different persons, well informed, vary in their estimates for this season from 800 to 2,000.

Improvements, &c.

A law has been adopted that cattle shall not run at large, but that owners shall each take care of his own. Consequently all may plant without fencing, and they are doing so extensively. Garden and field crops are extensively planted without a rail to protect. As no cattle run at large, they are perfectly safe. Pastures need fencing whether crops are or not. But if the pastures are fenced, nothing else need be.

Houses.

Houses are being built as rapidly as possible. They are usually plainly and substantially built.

Towns.

St. James, at Paradise Bay, the harbor, is the capital or chief place. Three other villages are commenced, and will be respectable for population and beautiful in appearance, as soon as those have built who have their inheritances appointed there. The preparation for building gives a busy life-like air to all the settlement.

Old Custom.

The Israelites of old lived only in villages and cities. So the saints at Beaver. Some of the first settlers scattered about on farms, but now all settle in towns. It is far the most pleasant, and gives social life many new pleasures. To live in a village and yet on a farm with all of rural life and social society, is a great improvement on common customs.

The True Sabbath.

The Sabbath was instituted as a day of rest. God rested on the seventh day, and made it the Sabbath for that reason. Six days of labor and the seventh of rest was the law of the Almighty from the beginning. It has forever been kept in remembrance by the tribe of Judah. Under the Roman power the day of rest was changed to the first instead of the seventh day. The saints have been compelled, partly by law, but more by that public opinion or prejudice, which is above all law, to observe it accordingly. God gave them a dispensation to observe the first day, which they have done while under the Gentile power.

But the law still remains in the thunders of Sinai, "six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work; for in six days the Lord made the heaven and earth, and rested on the seventh day."

And the testimony of Christ remains unimpeached, "think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." See Exodus xx. 8, 9, 10, 11. Deut. v. 12, 13, 14. Matt. v. 17, 18, 19.

When the saints are redeemed from Gentile bondage, what shall excuse them from keeping God's everlasting law given in the thunders of Sinai, before the law of curse was added? This was the perfect law, by which Israel were to be made a nation of KINGS and PRIESTS to all the nations of the earth. The saints at Beaver keep this law. They sanctify the SEVENTH DAY and KEEP IT HOLY, and there is none to make them afraid.

FASHIONABLE CHURCH.

A fashionable church in a large city is a rare place to study human nature in. It is a temple of vanity, a shrine where hypocrisy kneels, with an impious pretence. The sleek parson in the pulpit, fat and well content with his five thousand dollars a year and free rent in the costly parsonage; dropping twice a week the polished sentences of religious instruction from his lips—literally "drawing it mild," lest he should alarm his fashionable hearers—and the congregation lounging in velvet-lined pews—which no vulgar seeker after true religion can enter—with the sexton sitting in the porch, with a face like a bull dog, and a voice like a bull dog's growl, telling the stranger who applies for a seat that there are no free seats—this is a fashionable church in New York—and its supporters pretend to be the followers of that meek and lowly one, who wandered a vagabond and an outcast in Judea, with no place for his aching head to rest upon, only eighteen hundred years ago. And these vanity fair shops have the audacity to surmount the splendid pile with the cross, the emblem of humility, of suffering, of the widest and broadest philanthropy, which this world has ever seen. The cross on the top of a fashionable church, where only wealth and pretension and pride and heartlessness worship, is blasphemy. It is crucifying the Savior afresh, and putting him to open shame.

CORRECTION OF CHILDREN.

Whenever a mother is obliged to exercise her authority, she should be careful to be very calm; her countenance ought to express "more of sorrow than of anger;" and if she feel rightly, it will wear that aspect. How should one who cannot control herself hope to control her child? How can she expect more from an infant than she herself practices? They are trying moments, for it is painful to see an innocent face overclouded with anger, or expressive of any evil passion; but we must remember that these germs of evil we lament are a part of the inheritance we have ourselves bequeathed them; that they are indeed inwoven in their very nature; that it is only by unwearied patience that we can hope to train them to virtue; and we shall feel sympathy and compassion, rather than anger, and seek earnestly to subdue in our own hearts every sinful emotion and desire, and thus "to overcome evil with good;" for by such means we shall best promote our children's happiness, both here and hereafter.

PRIDE OF MAN'S HEART.

The heart of man is strangely proud. If men commend us, we think we have reason to distinguish ourselves from others, since the voice of discerning men hath already made the separation. If men do not commend us, we think they are stupid, and understand us not; or envious, and hold their tongues in spite. If we be praised by many, then fame is the voice of God. If we be praised but by few, then we cry—these are wise, and one wise man is worth the whole herd of the people. But if we be praised by none at all, we resolve to be even with all the world, and speak well of nobody, and think well only of ourselves.

INDUSTRY.

If industry is no more than habit, it is at least an excellent one. If you ask me which is the real hereditary sin of human nature, do you imagine I shall answer pride, or luxury, or ambition, or egotism? No: I shall say indolence. Who conquers indolence will conquer all the rest. Indeed, all good principles must stagnate without mental activity.

☞ Man's knowledge is but as the rivulet, his ignorance as the sea.

ly. God gave them a dispensation to observe the first day, which they have done while under the Gentile power.

But the law still remains in the thunders of Sinai, "six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work; for in six days the Lord made the heaven and earth, and rested on the seventh day."

And the testimony of Christ remains unimpeached, "think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." See Exodus xx. 8, 9, 10, 11. Deut. v. 12, 13, 14. Matt. v. 17, 18, 19.

When the saints are redeemed from Gentile bondage, what shall excuse them from keeping God's everlasting law given in the thunders of Sinai, before the law of curse was added? This was the perfect law, by which Israel were to be made a nation of KINGS and PRIESTS to all the nations of the earth. The saints at Beaver keep this law. They sanctify the SEVENTH DAY and KEEP IT HOLY, and there is none to make them afraid.

FASHIONABLE CHURCH.

A fashionable church in a large city is a rare place to study human nature in. It is a temple of vanity, a shrine where hypocrisy kneels, with an impious pretence. The sleek parson in the pulpit, fat and well content with his five thousand dollars a year and free rent, in the costly parsonage; dropping twice a week the polished sentences of religious instruction from his lips--literally "drawing it mild," lest he should alarm his fashionable hearers--and the congregation lounging in velvet-lined pews --which no vulgar seeker after true religion can enter—with the sexton sitting in the porch, with a face like a bull dog, and a voice like a bull dog's growl, telling the stranger who applies for a seat that there are no free seats—this is a fashionable church in New York—and its supporters pretend to be the followers of that meek and lowly one, who wandered a vagabond and an outcast in Judea, with no place for his aching head to rest upon, only eighteen hundred years ago. And these vanity fair shops have the audacity to surmount the splendid pile with the cross, the emblem of humility, of suffering, of the widest and broadest philanthropy, which this world has ever seen. The cross on the top of a fashionable church, where only wealth and pretension and pride and heartlessness worship, is blasphemy. It is crucifying the Savior afresh, and putting him to open shame.

CORRECTION OF CHILDREN.

Whenever a mother is obliged to exercise her authority, she should be careful to be very calm; her countenance ought to express "more of sorrow than of anger;" and if she feel rightly, it will wear that aspect. How should one who cannot control herself hope to control her child? How can she expect more from an infant than she herself practices? They are trying moments, for it is painful to see an innocent face overclouded with anger, or expressive of any evil passion; but we must remember that these germs of evil we lament are a part of the inheritance we have ourselves bequeathed them; that they are indeed inwoven in their very nature: that it is only by unwearied patience that we can hope to train them to virtue; and we shall feel sympathy and compassion, rather than anger, and seek earnestly to subdue in our own hearts every sinful emotion and desire, and thus "to overcome evil with good;" for by such means we shall best promote our children's happiness, both here and hereafter.

PRIDE OF MAN'S HEART.

The heart of man is strangely proud. If men commend us, we think we have reason to distinguish ourselves from others, since the voice of discerning men hath already made the separation. If men do not commend us, we think they are stupid, and understand us not; or envious, and hold their tongues in spite. If we be praised by many, then fame is the voice of God. If we be praised but by few, then we cry—these are wise, and one wise man is worth the whole herd of the people. But if we be praised by none at all, we resolve to be even with all the world, and speak well of nobody, and think well only of ourselves.

INDUSTRY.

If industry is no more than habit, it is at least an excellent one. If you ask me which is the real hereditary sin of human nature, do you imagine I shall answer pride, or luxury, or ambition, or egotism? No: I shall say indolence. Who conquers indolence will conquer all the rest. Indeed, all good principles must stagnate without mental activity.

☞ Man's knowledge is but as the rivulet, his ignorance as the sea.

"DIFFICULTY, STRUGGLE, PROGRESS."

"People can do anything that they will."—Miss Bremer.

Rouse thee brother! life's before thee,—
Life, the boon that God hath given;
Up! though clouds now gather o'er thee
See through them an opening heaven.
Wake! for life is what we make it,
And the hour now hastening by
If we but in earnest take it,
Bears us upward to the sky.

Evils gather thick about thee,
Obstacles are all around:—
With the truth within, without thee
Nought impossible is found.
Hast thou on life's journey started?
Fear not though fierce storms assail:
To the true and honest hearted
"There is no such word as fail."

Thou may'st struggle, struggle ever,
Error meet and cope with wrong:
And the call of truth may sever
Ties which now are firm and strong;
But the voice of Christ hath spoken—
"Love none other more than me;"
Though all earthly ties are broken,
He thy rod and staff will be.

Onward! see, the prospect brightens
As you press along the path,
Hope the weight of care now lightens,—
Brightest hope the trusting hath.
Onward then, and leave behind you
Every doubt and every fear;
Let the "dead past" but remind you
Of your duty now and here.

Live and work then, O my brother!
Let your heart be firm and true;
Onward! for perchance another
Now is looking unto you.
Labor then, no more delaying;
Watch and struggle, work and pray;
Onward! still the call obeying!
Onward, upward in thy way!

W.

HOW TO LIVE WITH FRIENDS.

If you would be loved as a companion, avoid unnecessary criticism upon those with whom you live. The number of people who have taken out judges' patents for themselves is very large in any society. Now, it would be hard for a man to live with another who was always criticising his actions, even if it were kindly and just criticism. It would be like living between the glasses of a microscope. But these self-elected judges, like their prototypes, are very apt to have the persons they judge brought before them in the guise of culprits.

One of the most provoking forms of the criticism above alluded to, is that which may be called criticism over the shoulder. "Had I been consulted," "had you listened to me," "but you always will," and such scraps of sentences, may remind many of us of dissertations which we have suffered and inflicted, and of which we cannot call to mind any soothing effect. Another rule is not to let familiarity swallow up all courtesy. Many of us have a habit of saying to those with whom we live such things as we say about strangers behind their backs. There is no place, however, where real politeness is of more value than where we mostly think it would be superfluous. You may say more truth, or, rather, speak out more plainly, to your associates, but not less courteously, than you do to strangers.

Again: we must not expect more from the society of our friends and companions than it can give; and, especially, must not expect contrary things.

Intimate friends and relations should be careful, when they go out into the world together, or admit others to their own circles, that they do not make a bad use of the knowledge which they have gained of each other by their intimacy. Nothiug is more common than this, and did it not mostly proceed from mere carelessness, it would be superlatively ungenerous. You seldom need wait for the written life of a man to hear about his weakness, or what are supposed to be such, if you know his intimate friends, or meet him in company with them.

Lastly, in conciliating those we live with, it is most surely done, not by consulting their interests, nor by giving way to their opinions, so much as by not offending their tastes. "The most refined part of us lies in this region of taste, which is, perhaps, a result of our whole nature, and, at any rate, is the region of our most subtle sympathies and antipathies."

It may be said, that if the great principles of Christianity were attended to, all such rules, suggestions, and observations as the above, would be needless. True enough! Great principles are at the bottom of all things; but to apply them to daily life, many little rules, precautions, and insights are needed. Such things hold a middle place between real life and principles, as form does between matter and spirit—moulding the one, and expressing the other.

CONFERENCE.

There will be a Conference at Voree the first and second days of June next.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.
Gilbert Watson, Sec.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

There will be a general assembly of the saints at the Tabernacle, St. James, Beaver Island, from the first to the sixth day of July, inclusive.

It is especially neccessary that all the Apostles and the High Priests and Elders generally attend on this occasion..

JAMES J. STRANG,
GEO. J. ADAMS,
WILLIAM MARKS, } Presidents.

Gilbert Watson,
H. G. Hall, } Recorders.

☞ Pres. Strang arrived at Voree Saturday evening last, from a happy and successful mission of eight months.

"DIFFICULTY, STRUGGLE, PROGRESS."

"People can do anything that they will."—Miss Bremer.

Rouse thee brother! life's before thee,—
Life, the boon that God hath given;
Up! though clouds now gather o'er thee
See through them an opening heaven.
Wake! for life is what we make it,
And the hour now hastening by
If we but in earnest take it,
Bears us upward to the sky.

Evils gather thick about thee,
Obstacles are all around:—
With the truth within, without thee
Nought impossible is found.
Hast thou on life's journey started?
Fear not though fierce storms assail:
To the true and honest hearted
"There is no such word as fail."

Thou may'st struggle, struggle ever,
Error meet and cope with wrong:
And the call of truth may sever
Ties which now are firm and strong;
But the voice of Christ hath spoken—
"Love none other more than me;"
Though all earthly ties are broken,
He thy rod and staff will be.

Onward! see, the prospect brightens
As you press along the path,
Hope the weight of care now lightens,—
Brightest hope the trusting hath.
Onward then, and leave behind you
Every doubt and every fear;
Let the "dead past" but remind you
Of your duty now and here.

Live and work then, O my brother!
Let your heart be firm and true;
Onward! for perchance another
Now is looking unto you.
Labor then, no more delaying;
Watch and struggle, work and pray;
Onward! still the call obeying!
Onward, upward in thy way!

W.

HOW TO LIVE WITH FRIENDS.

If you would be loved as a companion, avoid unnecessary criticism upon those with whom you live. The number of people who have taken out judges' patents for themselves is very large in any society. Now, it would be hard for a man to live with another who was always criticising his actions, even if it were kindly and just criticism. It would be like living between the glasses of a microscope. But these self-elected judges, like their prototypes, are very apt to have the persons they judge brought before them in the guise of culprits.

One of the most provoking forms of the criticism above alluded to, is that which may be called criticism over the shoulder. "Had I been consulted," "had you listened to me," "but you always will," and such scraps of sentences, may remind many of us of dissertations which we have suffered and inflicted, and of which we cannot call to mind any soothing effect. Another rule is not to let familiarity swallow up all courtesy. Many of us have a habit of saying to those with whom we live such things as we say about strangers behind their backs. There is no place, however, where real politeness is of more value than where we mostly think it would be superfluous. You may say more truth, or, rather, speak out more plainly, to your associates; but not less courteously, than you do to strangers.

Again: we must not expect more from the society of our friends and companions than it can give; and, especially, must not expect contrary things.

Intimate friends and relations should be careful, when they go out into the world together, or admit others to their own circles, that they do not make a bad use of the knowledge which they have gained of each other by their intimacy. Nothing is more common than this, and did it not mostly proceed from mere carelessness, it would be superlatively ungenerous. You seldom need wait for the written life of a man to hear about his weakness, or what are supposed to be such, if you know his intimate friends, or meet him in company with them.

Lastly, in conciliating those we live with, it is most surely done, not by consulting their interests, nor by giving way to their opinions, so much as by not offending their tastes. "The most refined part of us lies in this region of taste, which is, perhaps, a result of our whole nature, and, at any rate, is the region of our most subtle sympathies and antipathies."

It may be said, that if the great principles of Christianity were attended to, all such rules, suggestions, and observations as the above, would be needless. True enough! Great principles are at the bottom of all things; but to apply them to daily life, many little rules, precautions, and insights are needed. Such things hold a middle place between real life and principles, as form does between matter and spirit—moulding the one, and expressing the other.

CONFERENCE.

There will be a Conference at Voree the first and second days of June next.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.
Gilbert Watson, Sec.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

There will be a general assembly of the saints at the Tabernacle, St. James, Beaver Island, from the first to the sixth day of July, inclusive.

It is especially neccessary that all the Apostles and the High Priests and Elders generally attend on this occasion..

JAMES J. STRANG,
GEO. J. ADAMS,
WILLIAM MARKS, } Presidents.

Gilbert Watson,
H. G. Hall, } Recorders.

☞ Pres. Strang arrived at Voree Saturday evening last, from a happy and successful mission of eight months.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 11.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. MAY 30, 1850. [WHOLE No. 179.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

LO HERE! LO THERE!

We are often inquired of if so and so does not set up to be the successor of Joseph, or the leader of the church. For the satisfaction of all, we propose to give what information we are possessed of in the premises, in a short article.

WM. SMITH

Claims to be the successor of Joseph, his brother, by lineal descent. How he stands in place of his brother by lineage WE do not undertake to explain. Sometimes his proceedings are mixed up with the pretension that Joseph, the son of Joseph, is to be prophet when he is of lawful age. What is lawful age for a prophet we think has not been determined since the days of the judges of Israel. At that time a child BEING CALLED OF GOD, ANSWERED THE PURPOSE very soon after he was weaned. 1 Sam. i. ii. iii. But whether Wm. is prophet pro tem till a boy five and a half feet high gets large enough, or in perpetuity, we are unable to say.

Isaac Sheen publishes a paper in behalf of Wm., which has advanced to about nine numbers. We believe their church numbers from eight to twelve members, in all the world, (not including those of his partner L. Wight.) Besides these there are, we doubt not, some two thousand persons who hang on to some hope that William will, in some way, do something for the dispensation, and are counted as his followers. We are informed that he occasionally says hard things of us in his papers, and that he conducts his paper as though it was the organ of a numerous church, from which both the true church and the Brighamites were insignificant schisms.—One would think his ten or twelve followers were as many thousand, if any one thought of crediting anything on his assertion.

LYMAN WIGHT,

One of the Apostles sent out by Joseph a little before his death on some mission to Texas, is now on the Piedernales, at the head of a small community numbering, we presume, from one to two hundred; but of this our information is quite vague. As near as we can learn their life is pastoral, and their goods held in common. Wm. Smith has appointed Lyman to be one of his COUNSELORS, and has given a commandment for his followers to go on and join.—Lyman, in return, has written some bombastic letters to Wm., in which he magnifies his (Wm.'s) priesthood so far beyond anything ever before named that we are only surprised that even Wm. Smith does not know he is only hoaxing him. Lyman's individual pretensions are only to a mission from Joseph, and he sits laughing in his sleeve at William's continual mutation of his own pretensions and commandments. It appears however that Lyman looks for the final raising up of Joseph, the son of Joseph, according to prophecy, and promises to follow in his leading whenever his star rises.

SAMUEL C. BROWN

Went to Hyrum Smith to be appointed on a mission, and he sent him to work in the quarry at Nauvoo three months getting out stone for the Temple. Afterwards he asked for another mission, and as he seemed to think himself uncommonly well qualified to teach, Hyrum appointed him (in mere irony) to preach to the Twelve, the High Priests, and the authorities of Nauvoo. He attempted to perform his mission immediately, but the saints hardened their hearts and would not hear him. Bishop Miller even whipped him out of his garden with a bean pole.

Since their death he has discovered that Hyrum Smith was the duly appointed successor of Joseph by the revelation of June 19th, 1841, in pursuance of the law of succession in the D. & C., and that he is Hyrum's successor by virtue of his appointment to teach the authorities. The seat of his future empire is not determined, but he issues a paper occasionally from the press of Philadelphia and Baltimore.

JAMES COLLIN BREWSTER

Was a seer of the peep-stone stamp previous to the first apostacy in Kirtland, and first obtained notoriety as the revelator or seer of that faction. That apostacy, once was numerous enough to vote down the church, and turn them out of the Temple half the time. This faction died a natural death in a few weeks, and with it the fame of its seer.

Some years since one or two tracts appeared purporting to be translations from Esdras made by him, and one devoted to the proof that some of the Smiths were money diggers; neither of which we believe produced any impression at the time, except on a very few persons. Some two years since Hazen Aldrich, an inoffensive and kindly disposed man, commenced publishing a paper in support of some theory or other, we know not what, which recognizes Brewster as a prophet and head of the church; but, as we understand it, without the slightest authority.

They have also organized a church consisting of a very uncertain number of members, ranging anywhere from two dozen to two thousand, according to the various standards by which different members determine who are and who are not members. At the present time they are preparing to go to the valley of the Colorado in California, but whether any of them will ever reach there is very doubtful.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 11.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MAY 30, 1850. [WHOLE No. 179.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

LO HERE! LO THERE!

We are often inquired of if so and so does not set up to be the successor of Joseph, or the leader of the church. For the satisfaction of all, we propose to give what information we are possessed of in the premises, in a short article.

WM. SMITH

Claims to be the successor of Joseph, his brother, by lineal descent. How he stands in place of his brother by lineage WE do not undertake to explain. Sometimes his proceedings are mixed up with the pretension that Joseph, the son of Joseph, is to be prophet when he is of lawful age. What is lawful age for a prophet we think has not been determined since the days of the judges of Israel. At that time a child BEING CALLED OF GOD, ANSWERED THE PURPOSE very soon after he was weaned. 1 Sam. i. ii. iii. But whether Wm. is prophet pro tem till a boy five and a half feet high gets large enough, or in perpetuity, we are unable to say.

Isaac Sheen publishes a paper in behalf of Wm., which has advanced to about nine numbers. We believe their church numbers from eight to twelve members, in all the world, (not including those of his partner L. Wight.) Besides these there are, we doubt not, some two thousand persons who hang on to some hope that William will, in some way, do something for the dispensation, and are counted as his followers. We are informed that he occasionally says hard things of us in his papers, and that he conducts his paper as though it was the organ of a numerous church, from which both the true church and the Brighamites were insignificant schisms.—One would think his ten or twelve followers were as many thousand, if any one thought of crediting anything on his assertion.

LYMAN WIGHT,

One of the Apostles sent out by Joseph a little before his death on some mission to Texas, is now on the Piedernales, at the head of a small community numbering, we presume, from one to two hundred; but of this our information is quite vague. As near as we can learn their life is pastoral, and their goods held in common. Wm. Smith has appointed Lyman to be one of HIS COUNSELORS, and has given a commandment for his followers to go on and join.—Lyman, in return, has written some bombastic letters to Wm., in which he magnifies his (Wm.'s) priesthood so far beyond anything ever before named that we are only surprised that even Wm. Smith does not know he is only hoaxing him. Lyman's individual pretensions are only to a mission from Joseph, and he sits laughing in his sleeve at William's continual mutation of his own pretensions and commandments. It appears however that Lyman looks for the final raising up of Joseph, the son of Joseph, according to prophecy, and promises to follow in his leading whenever his star rises.

SAMUEL C. BROWN

Went to Hyrum Smith to be appointed on a mission, and he sent him to work in the quarry at Nauvoo three months getting out stone for the Temple. Afterwards he asked for another mission, and as he seemed to think himself uncommonly well qualified to teach, Hyrum appointed him (in mere irony) to preach to the Twelve, the High Priests, and the authorities of Nauvoo. He attempted to perform his mission immediately, but the saints hardened their hearts and would not hear him. Bishop Miller even whipped him out of his garden with a bean pole.

Since their death he has discovered that Hyrum Smith was the duly appointed successor of Joseph by the revelation of June 19th, 1841, in pursuance of the law of succession in the D. & C., and that he is Hyrum's successor by virtue of his appointment to teach the authorities. The seat of his future empire is not determined, but he issues a paper occasionally from the press of Philadelphia and Baltimore.

JAMES COLLIN BREWSTER

Was a seer of the peep-stone stamp previous to the first apostacy in Kirtland, and first obtained notoriety as the revelator or seer of that faction. That apostacy, once was numerous enough to vote down the church, and turn them out of the Temple half the time. This faction died a natural death in a few weeks, and with it the fame of its seer.

Some years since one or two tracts appeared purporting to be translations from Esdras made by him, and one devoted to the proof that some of the Smiths were money diggers; neither of which we believe produced any impression at the time, except on a very few persons. Some two years since Hazen Aldrich, an inoffensive and kindly disposed man, commenced publishing a paper in support of some theory or other, we know not what, which recognizes Brewster as a prophet and head of the church; but, as we understand it, without the slightest authority.

They have also organized a church consisting of a very uncertain number of members, ranging anywhere from two dozen to two thousand, according to the various standards by which different members determine who are and who are not members. At the present time they are preparing to go to the valley of the Colorado in California, but whether any of them will ever reach there is very doubtful.

Until last fall Brewsterism made no excitement; but at that time it took the same kind of start in this region as Wm. Smithism and McLellenism had some time before, and at this place was for a few weeks the rage with apostates of every stamp. At one time there was a prospect that with John E. Page as a leader, it would number nearly as many converts as McLellinism had before it. Some shadow has crossed the dream of its greatness, and we cannot learn that the disciples keep up their meetings. Several were bound for California, but their faith has failed. Not one will go. Still there are probably as many in the north-western states hanging on to the skirts of Brewsterism as there were a year since in the eastern hanging on to Wm. Smithism.

We have never learned by what right Brewster claims the priesthood, nor what body of the people he regards as the church. No one faith is necessary to be a Brewsterite, so far as we can learn, unless it is this: that the Book of Mormon is a standard to Jew and Gentile. Two may be as far from each other in faith as the Romanist is from the Campbellite, yet if they acknowledge the Book of Mormon (as each severally understands it) to be a standard, they are acceptable members. Of course this cannot last long. As soon as this scattered confusion comes in contact, it will explode. And as Brewsterism admits of no power on earth to determine any new question of doctrine, every one will keep his own opinion until some new wind of doctrine changes him. It is safe to say there is not one person on the earth who believes in Brewster as a prophet.—For there is not one who will receive a commandment from him as from the mouth of God; not one who will obey his mandate when contrary to his preconceived individual opinion.

Jacob Syfritt

Received priesthood, visions and revelations in connection with Wm. Smith, on his visit to the eastern cities, in the winter of 1848–9, and after William fell into transgression on that campaign, succeeded to his mantle as righteous surviver, and having obtained royal robes, a gilded paper crown, and other fitting regalia, has commenced the publication of a paper at Philadelphia, and opened a hall for preaching the word. Having remained at home, where prophets are without honor, he has made little progress. We have not the slightest doubt however that he can, with a little effort, get as many followers as either of the preceding. His pretensions are quite as rational.

Increase Van Dusen

Professed to be a follower of prophet Strang, but there being the most imminent danger that either the prophet or some of his counselors would commit some heinous sin, he and all that followed him were rejected of God; that is, by Van Dusen. He soon commenced the publication of a series of revelations, and preaching from house to house. His progress was uncommonly rapid, and for a short time bade fair to outstrip that of any other schism.—Brewsterism was nothing to it, and the palmiest days of McLellinism could not match it. But, alas! publication and preaching both failed, and prophet Van Dusen is engaged in hawking about the streets of New York a pretended expose of the Nauvoo endowment.

Wm. E. McLellin,

Having been an Apostle in the church, and in some way connected with every faction that had sprung out of it down till 1846, in the latter part of that year made the astounding discovery that THE CHURCH had apostatized twelve years before, and been made up of abominable iniquity ever since. He however had retained his priesthood uncontaminated during all that period. He therefore proceeded to organize the "church of Christ" anew, and having discovered the important fact that David Whitmer had been a prophet twelve years and better without being aware of it, undertook the task of convincing him of that truth, and calling him into the field. In this he failed entirely. He succeeded nevertheless in building up the most successful and dangerous schism that has ever occurred, except that of the Brighamite camp.

The main feature of McLellinism was, that any one in the priesthood, if he committed any sin, no matter how trivial, lost his priesthood by the act, without any adjudication whatever, and all his administrations were utterly void. Consequently, that if an Elder at any time between receiving his priesthood and administering baptism had committed any secret sin his baptisms were utterly invalid, and the subjects thereof not members of the church, nor within the pale of salvation. This sentiment is also common to Brewsterism. Indeed we believe nearly all the Brewsterites were once McLellinites, and hold now to much the same doctrine. McLellin did publish an occasional tract, nominally periodical, and called the Ensign of Liberty, but is as dead as the several similar ones will soon be.

Charles B. Thompson

Styles himself Baneemy, servant to Baurak Ale; says the church is rejected, and never to be re-established. But he requires all the saints to organize in SCHOOLS, and receive instruction from him till some future time, when he is going up with an army to redeem Zion. He also occasionally gets out a publication. He has not yet had much success in getting followers. We advise him to come to Voree and preach to the faint hearted Brewsterites and other apostates. He may be assured of a rich harvest.

Elijah Schwackhammer

Heard the gospel preached in New York by Bro. Adams, and offered to be baptized face downwards. George however did not think that would produce the likeness of a proper resurrection, and declined. By some means he got baptized, and S. Rigdon ordained him an Apostle of his pretended kingdom. By some transformation, which we are too blind to trace out, this priesthood has made him the great expected one of the nations. He has commenced the publication of a paper in Philadelphia, and preaches from house to house, as well as in a hall. His paper exhibits the usual talent of the better class of schismatics, and excites the usual interest wherever known. It wants only some men of energy to make it blaze out quite as well as any of the rest of the same sort. Elijah has had the gift of speaking in what he calls the tongues on insects, but has lost it.

Sidney Rigdon

Was one of the First Presidency at the time of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum. As such he had a right to preside, and had no successor to Joseph appeared the church were required to receive instruction from him as the highest priesthood present for the time being. This authority he did claim, though it seems he attempted to add something to it, on the assumption that no successor could be expected for the present. The majority of the saints at Nauvoo, under the leading of Brigham Young, rejected him on the 8th of August, 1844. He struggled on till April following, when he laid down his pretensions as counselor in the First Presidency and established a new church, respectable in number, character and talent, and wanting nothing but the authority of God to give it prosperity.

Rigdonism had the seat of its operations at Pittsburgh, Pa. through 1845, and in 1846 was transferred to Greencastle, where the little that remained to it dragged out a brief and miserable existence, and expired. Many good men did once truly believe in Rigdon, and received his commandments as from the Lord's own mouth. But since 1847 not one such can be found on earth. Nevertheless there are many, very many, who look for a horn of power yet to spring up from Rigdon, whose coming shall be the expecta-

Until last fall Brewsterism made no excitement; but at that time it took the same kind of start in this region as Wm. Smithism and McLellenism had some time before, and at this place was for a few weeks the rage with apostates of every stamp. At one time there was a prospect that with John E. Page as a leader, it would number nearly as many converts as McLellinism had before it. Some shadow has crossed the dream of its greatness, and we cannot learn that the disciples keep up their meetings. Several were bound for California, but their faith has failed. Not one will go. Still there are probably as many in the north-western states hanging on to the skirts of Brewsterism as there were a year since in the eastern hanging on to Wm. Smithism.

We have never learned by what right Brewster claims the priesthood, nor what body of the people he regards as the church. No one faith is necessary to be a Brewsterite, so far as we can learn, unless it is this: that the Book of Mormon is a standard to Jew and Gentile. Two may be as far from each other in faith as the Romanist is from the Campbellite, yet if they acknowledge the Book of Mormon (as each severally understands it) to be a standard, they are acceptable members. Of course this cannot last long. As soon as this scattered confusion comes in contact, it will explode. And as Brewsterism admits of no power on earth to determine any new question of doctrine, every one will keep his own opinion until some new wind of doctrine changes him. It is safe to say there is not one person on the earth who believes in Brewster as a prophet.—For there is not one who will receive a commandment from him as from the mouth of God; not one who will obey his mandate when contrary to his preconceived individual opinion.

Jacob Syfritt

Received priesthood, visions and revelations in connection with Wm. Smith, on his visit to the eastern cities, in the winter of 1848–9, and after William fell into transgression on that campaign, succeeded to his mantle as righteous surviver, and having obtained royal robes, a gilded paper crown, and other fitting regalia, has commenced the publication of a paper at Philadelphia, and opened a hall for preaching the word. Having remained at home, where prophets are without honor, he has made little progress. We have not the slightest doubt however that he can, with a little effort, get as many followers as either of the preceding. His pretensions are quite as rational.

Increase Van Dusen

Professed to be a follower of prophet Strang, but there being the most imminent danger that either the prophet or some of his counselors would commit some heinous sin, he and all that followed him were rejected of God; that is, by Van Dusen. He soon commenced the publication of a series of revelations, and preaching from house to house. His progress was uncommonly rapid, and for a short time bade fair to outstrip that of any other schism.—Brewsterism was nothing to it, and the palmiest days of McLellinism could not match it. But, alas! publication and preaching both failed, and prophet Van Dusen is engaged in hawking about the streets of New York a pretended expose of the Nauvoo endowment.

Wm. E. McLellin,

Having been an Apostle in the church, and in some way connected with every faction that had sprung out of it down till 1846, in the latter part of that year made the astounding discovery that the church had apostatized twelve years before, and been made up of abominable iniquity ever since. He however had retained his priesthood uncontaminated during all that period. He therefore proceeded to organize the "church of Christ" anew, and having discovered the important fact that David Whitmer had been a prophet twelve years and better without being aware of it, undertook the task of convincing him of that truth, and calling him into the field. In this he failed entirely. He succeeded nevertheless in building up the most successful and dangerous schism that has ever occurred, except that of the Brighamite camp.

The main feature of McLellinism was, that any one in the priesthood, if he committed any sin, no matter how trivial, lost his priesthood by the act, without any adjudication whatever, and all his administrations were utterly void. Consequently, that if an Elder at any time between receiving his priesthood and administering baptism had committed any secret sin his baptisms were utterly invalid, and the subjects thereof not members of the church, nor within the pale of salvation. This sentiment is also common to Brewsterism. Indeed we believe nearly all the Brewsterites were once McLellinites, and hold now to much the same doctrine. McLellin did publish an occasional tract, nominally periodical, and called the Ensign of Liberty, but is as dead as the several similar ones will soon be.

Charles B. Thompson

Styles himself Baneemy, servant to Baurak Ale; says the church is rejected, and never to be re-established. But he requires all the saints to organize in schools, and receive instruction from him till some future time, when he is going up with an army to redeem Zion. He also occasionally gets out a publication. He has not yet had much success in getting followers. We advise him to come to Voree and preach to the faint hearted Brewsterites and other apostates. He may be assured of a rich harvest.

Elijah Schwackhammer

Heard the gospel preached in New York by Bro. Adams, and offered to be baptized face downwards. George however did not think that would produce the likeness of a proper resurrection, and declined. By some means he got baptized, and S. Rigdon ordained him an Apostle of his pretended kingdom. By some transformation, which we are too blind to trace out, this priesthood has made him the great expected one of the nations. He has commenced the publication of a paper in Philadelphia, and preaches from house to house, as well as in a hall. His paper exhibits the usual talent of the better class of schismatics, and excites the usual interest wherever known. It wants only some men of energy to make it blaze out quite as well as any of the rest of the same sort. Elijah has had the gift of speaking in what he calls the tongues on insects, but has lost it.

Sidney Rigdon

Was one of the First Presidency at the time of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum. As such he had a right to preside, and had no successor to Joseph appeared the church were required to receive instruction from him as the highest priesthood present for the time being. This authority he did claim, though it seems he attempted to add something to it, on the assumption that no successor could be expected for the present. The majority of the saints at Nauvoo, under the leading of Brigham Young, rejected him on the 8th of August, 1844. He struggled on till April following, when he laid down his pretensions as counselor in the First Presidency and established a new church, respectable in number, character and talent, and wanting nothing but the authority of God to give it prosperity.

Rigdonism had the seat of its operations at Pittsburgh, Pa. through 1845, and in 1846 was transferred to Greencastle, where the little that remained to it dragged out a brief and miserable existence, and expired. Many good men did once truly believe in Rigdon, and received his commandments as from the Lord's own mouth. But since 1847 not one such can be found on earth. Nevertheless there are many, very many, who look for a horn of power yet to spring up from Rigdon, whose coming shall be the expectation of the nations. Counting these as Rigdonites, they are the most numerous schism existing, except the Brighamites.

JOSEPH ROBINSON

Was a regular member of a branch of the church in Franklin, Ill., who practiced talking in tongues on all his ordinary business, and even in driving his teams. Some two or three years since he came to Voree and commenced dictating the affairs of the church by the pretended interpretation of his pretended tongues, and being stoutly rebuked by the prophet commenced prophecying and building up a church. B. C. Ellsworth and J. W. Crane became the main pillars of his church, and ordained him to the prophetic office. They however soon fell off, and the spirit of his work died out. The blaze however was quite as glorious while it lasted as that of any of its predecessors or successors; and though seemingly quite dead, could easily be blown to a flame again.

GLADDEN BISHOP

Was one of the early members of the church, and one of the first Seventy. He assumes that Joseph had only the Aaronic priesthood, but that he has the Melchisedec, received by ordination under the hand of Jesus Christ; that he is David, the king that shall reign over the united nation of Israel restored, and the Lord of the whole earth. He has at different times made promising commencements in various places, and at one had for hearers, deeply interested, nearly all the apostates, and some of the faithful in Voree. Gaining two of the former and one of the latter, he placed them so high in his councils that there was no room to glorify any one else sufficiently. They all fell off, and his fire died out. He has issued several publications at different times, but no periodical.

THE FORGOTTEN.

Besides the foregoing J. M. Hinkle, Wm. Law, Oatman, Frasier, Olney, and various others, whose names are quite forgotten, have at different times started up as leaders of the church and successors of the prophet, but have already shared that forgetfulness which is the fate of the rest.

As regards all these, named and nameless, they never were of the slightest consequence, and except as giving character to the times, not worthy of being mentioned. None of them except Rigdonism ever had any of the elements of a permanent organization. And that lost every hope of success the moment the Cumberland valley was pitched on as a place of gathering. They all, without exception, are built up on negatives and on the alledged failings of others. Their only strength is the excitement which can be got up by Mormon exposes. The only schism which ever sprung out of the church of the least consequence is that of the

BRIGHAMITES.

The controversy for years past has, now does, and in the future will lie between them and the true church. They, in the very outset, carried with them the body of the church, not only in Nauvoo, but to a great extent in other places; and at the present time, though much reduced, are formidable, both by numbers, position and influence. The 8th of August, 1844, they commenced their schism, and obtained a complete triumph over Sidney Rigdon by a strong vote (with not an opposing hand) that they would no longer have a prophet, Receiving at this time a call from prophet Strang to assist him in setting the affairs of the church in order in accordance with the last revelation given by Joseph and the commandments of God to him, flushed with their triumph over their present opponent, and undoubtedly burning with disappointment that the power of the Presidency was going to one to them almost a stranger, and over whom they would be likely to exercise little influence, Taylor, Richards and such others of the Twelve as they saw fit to admit to their counsels, undertook the desperate scheme of destroying the evidence of Mr. Strang's appointment to the prophetic office, and to change the constitution of the church so as to devolve its superior authority on the twelve Apostles, and abolish the quorum of the First Presidency. They destroyed the sealed package committed to their charge, which they had often and publicly declared contained the appointment of Joseph's successor; and on the 15th of August, 1844, issued their proclamation, saying, "let no man for a moment think his place will be filled by another;" and that the twelve Apostles held the "power to dictate all the affairs of the church in all the world." Possessing the funds of the church, the records and the Temple, everywhere powerful by their universal acquaintance with men and things, and the eminence of their standing and services, they succeeded in silencing opposition and estalishing themselves as the acknowledged leaders of the great majority of the church, and holding absolute control of Nauvoo.

Their first move was in its nature eminently popular. They made a desperate effort to finish the Temple; called in all the emigration they possibly could, sustaining the sinking value of real estate to the encouragement of the avaricious, at the same time that they raised the delusive hope of an holy endowment to the faithful. These delusions gave them apparent prosperity for a year. But in the summer of 1845 hostilities were commenced against them around Nauvoo with great vigor. Conscious that with the most untiring efforts they had no more than barely held on to their first grasp, and that the property held by their partisans there was rapidly wasting for want of profitable employment and remunerating labor, and at the same time their influence on the wane, they saw clearly that their only hope was in a removal to another location giving them abundance of cheap or free lands, and a separation from their enemies.

There is no doubt they could have resisted the aggressions of their enemies with success had they wished and had the courage to do so. But setting up the plea of absolute necessity as the rule of all in and about Nauvoo, they for themselves and their brethren entered into a treaty for their entire removal from the nine counties associated against them. This treaty was unofficially and in an informal manner sanctioned by the governor of the State, and though not placed on the records nor published among the laws was as much enforced by the authority of the State as any other law whatever. By this means all powers, whether for or against them, were united in the one object, that of removing them to the western wilds in a body. The pressure of outward circumstances prevented any of the internal dissensions that otherwise would have grown up, and compelled many to go with them in fact who were not with them in faith.

Their endowment in the winter of 1845–6 called in vast multitudes, who, after arriving, could not so well return, and many of them, whatever they might think of the ceremonies, could not well avoid going with the mass. Dissatisfaction existed everywhere, but they were conscious of having suffered the extreme of outrage from the States and people of the nation. A burning desire to be out of its power was in almost every heart. No other way seemed to open but to go west with Brigham. To all the fearful the promise was held out in dark insinuations that Joseph, the son of the prophet, would accompany them, and stand up instead of his father. The marvel loving were even told that Joseph himself was resurrected, and would meet them a little way off.

In Feb., 1846, they commenced their exodus from Nauvoo for California, where they could be beyond the power of that government which was too persecuting for the saints to remain within its dominion. The winter had been light, and at the time of their starting seemed to have broke. The cry of Voree and a prophet had been raised in their midst, and it was impossible to silence it.—

(Concluded on page 87.)

tion of the nations. Counting these as Rigdonites, they are the most numerous schism existing, except the Brighamites.

JOSEPH ROBINSON

Was a regular member of a branch of the church in Franklin, Ill., who practiced talking in tongues on all his ordinary business, and even in driving his teams. Some two or three years since he came to Voree and commenced dictating the affairs of the church by the pretended interpretation of his pretended tongues, and being stoutly rebuked by the prophet commenced prophecying and building up a church. B. C. Ellsworth and J. W. Crane became the main pillars of his church, and ordained him to the prophetic office. They however soon fell off, and the spirit of his work died out. The blaze however was quite as glorious while it lasted as that of any of its predecessors or successors; and though seemingly quite dead, could easily be blown to a flame again.

GLADDEN BISHOP

Was one of the early members of the church, and one of the first Seventy. He assumes that Joseph had only the Aaronic priesthood, but that he has the Melchisedec, received by ordination under the hand of Jesus Christ; that he is David, the king that shall reign over the united nation of Israel restored, and the Lord of the whole earth. He has at different times made promising commencements in various places, and at one had for hearers, deeply interested, nearly all the apostates, and some of the faithful in Voree. Gaining two of the former and one of the latter, he placed them so high in his councils that there was no room to glorify any one else sufficiently. They all fell off, and his fire died out. He has issued several publications at different times, but no periodical.

THE FORGOTTEN.

Besides the foregoing J. M. Hinkle, Wm. Law, Oatman, Frasier, Olney, and various others, whose names are quite forgotten, have at different times started up as leaders of the church and successors of the prophet, but have already shared that forgetfulness which is the fate of the rest.

As regards all these, named and nameless, they never were of the slightest consequence, and except as giving character to the times, not worthy of being mentioned. None of them except Rigdonism ever had any of the elements of a permanent organization. And that lost every hope of success the moment the Cumberland valley was pitched on as a place of gathering. They all, without exception, are built up on negatives and on the alledged failings of others. Their only strength is the excitement which can be got up by Mormon exposes. The only schism which ever sprung out of the church of the least consequence is that of the

BRIGHAMITES.

The controversy for years past has, now does, and in the future will lie between them and the true church. They, in the very outset, carried with them the body of the church, not only in Nauvoo, but to a great extent in other places; and at the present time, though much reduced, are formidable, both by numbers, position and influence. The 8th of August, 1844, they commenced their schism, and obtained a complete triumph over Sidney Rigdon by a strong vote (with not an opposing hand) that they would no longer have a prophet, Receiving at this time a call from prophet Strang to assist him in setting the affairs of the church in order in accordance with the last revelation given by Joseph and the commandments of God to him, flushed with their triumph over their present opponent, and undoubtedly burning with disappointment that the power of the Presidency was going to one to them almost a stranger, and over whom they would be likely to exercise little influence, Taylor, Richards and such others of the Twelve as they saw fit to admit to their counsels, undertook the desperate scheme of destroying the evidence of Mr. Strang's appointment to the prophetic office, and to change the constitution of the church so as to devolve its superior authority on the twelve Apostles, and abolish the quorum of the First Presidency. They destroyed the sealed package committed to their charge, which they had often and publicly declared contained the appointment of Joseph's successor; and on the 15th of August, 1844, issued their proclamation, saying, "let no man for a moment think his place will be filled by another:" and that the twelve Apostles held the "power to dictate all the affairs of the church in all the world." Possessing the funds of the church, the records and the Temple, everywhere powerful by their universal acquaintance with men and things, and the eminence of their standing and services, they succeeded in silencing opposition and estalishing themselves as the acknowledged leaders of the great majority of the church, and holding absolute control of Nauvoo.

Their first move was in its nature eminently popular. They made a desperate effort to finish the Temple; called in all the emigration they possibly could, sustaining the sinking value of real estate to the encouragement of the avaricious, at the same time that they raised the delusive hope of an holy endowment to the faithful. These delusions gave them apparent prosperity for a year. But in the summer of 1845 hostilities were commenced against them around Nauvoo with great vigor. Conscious that with the most untiring efforts they had no more than barely held on to their first grasp, and that the property held by their partisans there was rapidly wasting for want of profitable employment and remunerating labor, and at the same time their influence on the wane, they saw clearly that their only hope was in a removal to another location giving them abundance of cheap or free lands, and a separation from their enemies.

There is no doubt they could have resisted the aggressions of their enemies with success had they wished and had the courage to do so. But setting up the plea of absolute necessity as the rule of all in and about Nauvoo, they for themselves and their brethren entered into a treaty for their entire removal from the nine counties associated against them. This treaty was unofficially and in an informal manner sanctioned by the governor of the State, and though not placed on the records nor published among the laws was as much enforced by the authority of the State as any other law whatever. By this means all powers, whether for or against them, were united in the one object, that of removing them to the western wilds in a body. The pressure of outward circumstances prevented any of the internal dissensions that otherwise would have grown up, and compelled many to go with them in fact who were not with them in faith.

Their endowment in the winter of 1845–6 called in vast multitudes, who, after arriving, could not so well return, and many of them, whatever they might think of the ceremonies, could not well avoid going with the mass. Dissatisfaction existed everywhere, but they were conscious of having suffered the extreme of outrage from the States and people of the nation. A burning desire to be out of its power was in almost every heart. No other way seemed to open but to go west with Brigham. To all the fearful the promise was held out in dark insinuations that Joseph, the son of the prophet, would accompany them, and stand up instead of his father. The marvel loving were even told that Joseph himself was resurrected, and would meet them a little way off.

In Feb., 1846, they commenced their exodus from Nauvoo for California, where they could be beyond the power of that government which was too persecuting for the saints to remain within its dominion. The winter had been light, and at the time of their starting seemed to have broke. The cry of Voree and a prophet had been raised in their midst, and it was impossible to silence it.—

(Concluded on page 87.)

For the Gospel Herald.

DIALOGUE.—No. 2.

How long, O, how long, will this generation shut their eyes from the light of the gospel of Christ? They also shut their ears from hearing, and very few will humble themselves before God and earnestly seek to understand his ways. Though "we know we are of the truth, and the whole world lieth in wickedness," yet it is hard to make others understand it. For "every man will walk in his own way, and after the image of his own god."—"He that is of God heareth God's words."—"Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm, or shall hearken unto the precepts of men, save their precepts shall be given by the power of the Holy Ghost."

INQUIRER. How shall we know their precepts are by the Holy Ghost, when men come professing to preach the gospel?

HERALD. Try their precepts by the written word of God, which is the sword of the spirit. God has inspired men in other days, and they have preached the gospel, being filled with the Holy Ghost. If he has any ministering servants now among men, they will preach the same things by the same spirit; for "the word of the Lord endureth forever, and this is his word which by the gospel is preached unto you."

I. Do the Mormons believe in a new birth, and in experimental religion?

H. Yes, they believe that all mankind who are sinners have need to be born again, that they may see the kingdom of God; and as "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," they believe in walking in his laws, and experiencing his blessings from day to day.

I. As there are different opinions about the new birth, I would ask what you think constitutes a new birth?

H. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever," must certainly constitute a new birth. When men are prepared for a new birth by God's sending his servants to preach, that the people may hear the word of God, they hear, believe and repent, ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well, then they must be born of the water and of the spirit, that they may enter into the kingdom of God.

I. What do you understand by a man's being born of water?

H. He must be immersed (baptized) in the water, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost for the remission of sins, and be brought forth of it, (raised up,) and all "through faith and the operation of the spirit of God."

I. I understand that the baptism with water unto repentance for the remission of sins was John's baptism, and that John's baptism was a kind of lap between dispensations; you certainly do not pretend that John's baptism was a gospel or christian baptism?

H. Christ was baptized by John, and we certainly must allow the captain of our salvation a christian baptism. The shepherd entered by the door, and to him the porter (John) opened. John's mission and the testimony concerning him must decide the point as to his captain's being a christian baptism. Christ says, Matt. xi. 13: "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John." Luke xvi. 16. "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." Mark says, chapt. i. 1, 2, 3, 4: "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets, behold I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare the way before thee. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."

From these texts we learn that John was made an instrument of in the hand of God to open the dispensation of the gospel to the generation in which he lived. John preached the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. His preaching may be called a preparatory gospel, to prepare the way of the Lord, and to prepare men for the baptism, gift or reception of the

For the Gospel Herald.

DIALOGUE.—No. 2.

How long, O, how long, will this generation shut their eyes from the light of the gospel of Christ? They also shut their ears from hearing, and very few will humble themselves before God and earnestly seek to understand his ways. Though "we know we are of the truth, and the whole world lieth in wickedness," yet it is hard to make others understand it. For "every man will walk in his own way, and after the image of his own god."—"He that is of God heareth God's words."—"Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm, or shall hearken unto the precepts of men, save their precepts shall be given by the power of the Holy Ghost."

INQUIRER. How shall we know their precepts are by the Holy Ghost, when men come professing to preach the gospel?

HERALD. Try their precepts by the written word of God, which is the sword of the spirit. God has inspired men in other days, and they have preached the gospel, being filled with the Holy Ghost. If he has any ministering servants now among men, they will preach the same things by the same spirit; for "the word of the Lord endureth forever, and this is his word which by the gospel is preached unto you."

I. Do the Mormons believe in a new birth, and in experimental religion?

H. Yes, they believe that all mankind who are sinners have need to be born again, that they may see the kingdom of God; and as "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," they believe in walking in his laws, and experiencing his blessings from day to day.

I. As there are different opinions about the new birth, I would ask what you think constitutes a new birth?

H. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever," must certainly constitute a new birth. When men are prepared for a new birth by God's sending his servants to preach, that the people may hear the word of God, they hear, believe and repent, ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well, then they must be born of the water and of the spirit, that they may enter into the kingdom of God.

I. What do you understand by a man's being born of water?

H. He must be immersed (baptized) in the water, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost for the remission of sins, and be brought forth of it, (raised up,) and all "through faith and the operation of the spirit of God."

I. I understand that the baptism with water unto repentance for the remission of sins was John's baptism, and that John's baptism was a kind of lap between dispensations; you certainly do not pretend that John's baptism was a gospel or christian baptism?

H. Christ was baptized by John, and we certainly must allow the captain of our salvation a christian baptism. The shepherd entered by the door, and to him the porter (John) opened. John's mission and the testimony concerning him must decide the point as to his captain's being a christian baptism. Christ says, Matt. xi. 13: "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John." Luke xvi. 16. "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." Mark says, chapt. i. 1, 2, 3, 4: "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets, behold I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare the way before thee. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."

From these texts we learn that John was made an instrument of in the hand of God to open the dispensation of the gospel to the generation in which he lived. John preached the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. His preaching may be called a preparatory gospel, to prepare the way of the Lord, and to prepare men for the baptism, gift or reception of the Holy Ghost. The principles which he taught were all perpetuated in the gospel, consequently he ushered in the gospel dispensation, also the knowledge of the way of salvation by the remission of sin was brought in by him, according to the prediction of Zacharias. Luke i. 76, 77. "And thou, child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord, to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people, by the remission of their sins." Now this knowledge of the way of salvation by the remission of sins is just what we want deeply impressed upon our minds. Jesus, our forerunner and great captain, consecrated this way, and made it honorable; and says, my sheep hear my voice, and they follow me.

I. I see what you aim at—to perpetuate water baptism by immersion, and carry out your peculiar doctrines.

H. We do not aim to have any doctrines of our own, but are content to take things as we find them. You profess to believe the Bible to be sacred, holy, a standard of truth, and able to make you wise unto salvation; but unless you believe and obey that form of doctrine delivered you by prophets and apostles as recorded therein, you can never be profited by it. We baptize with water because it is a command of God to baptize those who believe, and we baptize by immersion because no other mode of baptism by water was ever authorized or consecrated of God for the benefit of man in the great plan of salvation.

I. Then you would unchristianize the greater portion of the world. The scriptures say that Christ was baptized, but do not tell us whether he was immersed, poured or sprinkled. For my part I was sprinkled, and that answers my conscience; for we read that baptism is the answer of a good conscience towards God. I do not consider it any ways essential to salvation.

H. The greater portion of the world then unchristianize themselves, because they are just of your faith. They put their good conscience in the place of God's laws. They are more tenacious of the things they have imbibed from teaching than they are of life itself.—If they have imbibed false notions from false teaching, then their conscience is defiled, and prompts them to act accordingly. No man ever had a conscience of baptism in any form who had never been taught. Baptism is one of the commands of God; "his commandment is life everlasting." How the idea ever got into the world that men could be saved without obeying the commands of God, we must leave to others to determine. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." We have no disputations among us about this ordinance, and invariably follow this law of God. "Baptism is to be administered in the following manner to all those who repent: The person who is called of God, and has authority from Jesus Christ to baptize, shall go down into the water with the person who has presented him or herself for baptism, and shall say, calling him or her by name: Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, amen. Then shall he immerse him or her in the water, and come forth again out of the water."

I. I feel interested to know all you do believe on every point of doctrine, and shall look in again. S. P.

☞ The following came to us in an unknown hand. We give it without alteration, addition or diminution of word or letter, and we have been assured by one well acquainted, that few within 100 miles of Mackinac will fail to recognize the authorship. Something in it seems prophetic. It would not be amiss to designate the seer, Pagan prophet:—

A CHAPTER IN THE BIBLE OF PROGRESS—AND NOT WRITTEN IN THE BOOK OF MORMON.

"Now a thing was secretly brought unto me, and mine ear received a little thereof, in thoughts from the visions of the night, when deep sleep falleth on men." Job iv. 12, 13.

1. Now it came to pass in the seventy and fourth year of the independence of the Jonathanites, in the fourth month, and in the twentieth and third day of the month, that I, the Holy Ghost. The principles which he taught were all perpetuated in the gospel, consequently he ushered in the gospel dispensation, also the knowledge of the way of salvation by the remission of sin was brought in by him, according to the prediction of Zacharias. Luke i. 76, 77. "And thou, child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord, to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people, by the remission of their sins." Now this knowledge of the way of salvation by the remission of sins is just what we want deeply impressed upon our minds. Jesus, our forerunner and great captain, consecrated this way, and made it honorable; and says, my sheep hear my voice, and they follow me.

I. I see what you aim at—to perpetuate water baptism by immersion, and carry out your peculiar doctrines.

H. We do not aim to have any doctrines of our own, but are content to take things as we find them. You profess to believe the Bible to be sacred, holy, a standard of truth, and able to make you wise unto salvation; but unless you believe and obey that form of doctrine delivered you by prophets and apostles as recorded therein, you can never be profited by it. We baptize with water because it is a command of God to baptize those who believe, and we baptize by immersion because no other mode of baptism by water was ever authorized or consecrated of God for the benefit of man in the great plan of salvation.

I. Then you would unchristianize the greater portion of the world. The scriptures say that Christ was baptized, but do not tell us whether he was immersed, poured or sprinkled. For my part I was sprinkled, and that answers my conscience; for we read that baptism is the answer of a good conscience towards God. I do not consider it any ways essential to salvation.

H. The greater portion of the world then unchristianize themselves, because they are just of your faith. They put their good conscience in the place of God's laws. They are more tenacious of the things they have imbibed from teaching than they are of life itself.—If they have imbibed false notions from false teaching, then their conscience is defiled, and prompts them to act accordingly. No man ever had a conscience of baptism in any form who had never been taught. Baptism is one of the commands of God; "his commandment is life everlasting." How the idea ever got into the world that men could be saved without obeying the commands of God, we must leave to others to determine. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." We have no disputations among us about this ordinance, and invariably follow this law of God. "Baptism is to be administered in the following manner to all those who repent: The person who is called of God, and has authority from Jesus Christ to baptize, shall go down into the water with the person who has presented him or herself for baptism, and shall say, calling him or her by name: Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, amen. Then shall he immerse him or her in the water, and come forth again out of the water."

I. I feel interested to know all you do believe on every point of doctrine, and shall look in again.

S. P.

☞ The following came to us in an unknown hand. We give it without alteration, addition or diminution of word or letter, and we have been assured by one well acquainted, that few within 100 miles of Mackinac will fail to recognize the authorship. Something in it seems prophetic. It would not be amiss to designate the seer, Pagan prophet:—

A CHAPTER IN THE BIBLE OF PROGRESS—AND NOT WRITTEN IN THE BOOK OF MORMON.

"Now a thing was secretly brought unto me, and mine ear received a little thereof, in thoughts from the visions of the night, when deep sleep falleth on men." Job iv. 12, 13.

1. Now it came to pass in the seventy and fourth year of the independence of the Jonathanites, in the fourth month, and in the twentieth and third day of the month, that I, the seer, was asleep in the rock called Mackinac.

2. And, behold, the heavens were opened, and a shining one appeared, having the form of a man, and his countenance was comely, like the vineyards of En-gedi.

3. And the vision spoke and said, behold, now, the land which lieth before thee and the inhabitants thereof; and I will show thee what is determined of them.

4. And I looked and behold, and lo! there was an island of beauty set like unto an emerald of price in the midst of a crystal sea.

5. And from the soil thereof sprang trees of various kinds; and in the waters thereof swam multitudes of fish, and a lake that was called Peaceful lay in the midst thereof.

6 And I said unto the shining one, what land is this? and who are the inhabitants thereof?

7. And the shining one made answer and said, the land is called Mormonia, and it hath been given to the Mormons as an asylum for the oppressed.

8. Then said I again unto him, who are these of whom my Lord speaketh, and who are those who would do evil unto them?

9. Then became the face of the shining one purple as the clusters of the vine, and his counenance waxed wroth, and he smote the sword upon his thigh.

10. And he said unto me, these are the remnant of those who have escaped. Their fields were cut down, their cattle destroyed; and their little ones and women driven forth upon the earth.

11. Then looked they for succor to their sacred flag, and sought refuge beneath its folds.

12. But the stars thereof beamed with no hope for their calamities, and the stripes thereof were laid heavily upon them.

13. Their Temple was laid to the dust: their prophet slain, and their goods given into the hands of the spoiler.

14. Then they escaped and fled, and war was in their hearts, and the memory of their bitter wrongs.

15. And they said, yet again will we build us a city, and trust in an avenging God.

16. And, behold, if the Philistines shall again come upon us, we will remember the justice of the most high, and will slaughter the children of oppression, even with the edge of the sword; and will avenge our wrongs even with the weapons of the flesh.

17. And when we have rid us of our adversaries, then peradventure we will be at peace; and will remember the forgiveness of Jehovah, and plant corn upon the ground which hath drunk their blood, and we will give thereof to their little ones that they may eat and live. Thus will we attempt mercy and justice.

18. Then I said, good my Lord, who therefore are these who abide at the haven; whose mouths are full of blasphemies, and who reel and rage with the fury of strong drink?

19. And the shining one answered me and said, lo! these are of the seed of the oppressor; their hearts are hardened to outrage, and their lips cunning to utter lies.

20. These are they whose tongues are daggers, but whose hands tremble to touch the sword.

21. Therefore shall they perish and be cut off, and their memory shall be a stink in the nostrils of the Lord.

22. For they roar like unto the bulls of Bashan, but are as sheep before the might of Jehovah.

23. Yea let them die and be damned, and rot in the rotteness of their lies.

24. For they are an abomination and an ulcer and a plague: therefore let them eat the portion of devils, and drink of the waters of damnation.

25. And the shining one that was with me changed his face, and my spirit grew big within me, and I saw a vision even as the vision of a seer.

26. And the form of that vision which I beheld in spirit was in this wise.

CHAPTER II.

1. Then I felt and lo! it seemed unto me that another angel stood before me.

2. And his countenance was lofty as the cedars of Lebanon, yea calm and mild as the sunset of a summer eve.

3. And he touched me with a wand and my vision was enlarged. And I saw and behold an island wheron dwelt the remnant of the oppressed.

4. And habitations arose on every side, and Temples to the most high God; and field waved in golden abundance, and became white unto the harvest.

5. And the murmer of much business was there, and the noise of mills and lowings of oxen laden with the fruitage of the fields.

seen, was asleep in the rock called Mackinac.

2. And, behold, the heavens were opened, and a shining one appeared, having the form of a man, and his countenance was comely, like the vineyards of En-gedi.

3. And the vision spoke and said, behold, now, the land which lieth before thee and the inhabitants thereof; and I will show thee what is determined of them.

4. And I looked and behold, and lo! there was an island of beauty set like unto an emerald of price in the midst of a crystal sea.

5. And from the soil thereof sprang trees of various kinds: and in the waters thereof swam multitudes of fish, and a lake that was called Peaceful lay in the midst thereof.

6. And I said unto the shining one, what land is this? and who are the inhabitants thereof?

7. And the shining one made answer and said, the land is called Mormonia, and it hath been given to the Mormons as an asylum for the oppressed.

8. Then said I again unto him, who are these of whom my Lord speaketh, and who are those who would do evil unto them?

9. Then became the face of the shining one purple as the clusters of the vine, and his countenance waxed wroth, and he smote the sword upon his thigh.

10. And he said unto me, these are the remnant of those who have escaped. Their fields were cut down, their cattle destroyed; and their little ones and women driven forth upon the earth.

11. Then looked they for succor to their sacred flag, and sought refuge beneath its folds.

12. But the stars thereof beamed with no hope for their calamities, and the stripes thereof were laid heavily upon them.

13. Their Temple was laid to the dust: their prophet slain, and their goods given into the hands of the spoiler.

14. Then they escaped and fled, and war was in their hearts, and the memory of their bitter wrongs.

15. And they said, yet again will we build us a city, and trust in an avenging God.

16. And, behold, if the Philistines shall again come upon us, we will remember the justice of the most high, and will slaughter the children of oppression, even with the edge of the sword: and will avenge our wrongs even with the weapons of the flesh.

17. And when we have rid us of our adversaries, then peradventure we will be at peace: and will remember the forgiveness of Jehovah, and plant corn upon the ground which hath drunk their blood, and we will give thereof to their little ones that they may eat and live. Thus will we attempt mercy and justice.

18. Then I said, good my Lord, who therefore are these who abide at the haven; whose mouths are full of blasphemies, and who reel and rage with the fury of strong drink?

19. And the shining one answered me and said, lo! these are of the seed of the oppressor: their hearts are hardened to outrage, and their lips cunning to utter lies.

20. These are they whose tongues are daggers, but whose hands tremble to touch the sword.

21. Therefore shall they perish and be cut off, and their memory shall be a stink in the nostrils of the Lord.

22. For they roar like unto the bulls of Bashan, but are as sheep before the might of Jehovah.

23. Yea let them die and be damned, and rot in the rotteness of their lies.

24. For they are an abomination and an ulcer and a plague: therefore let them eat the portion of devils, and drink of the waters of damnation.

25. And the shining one that was with me changed his face, and my spirit grew big within me, and I saw a vision even as the vision of a seer.

26. And the form of that vision which I beheld in spirit was in this wise.

CHAPTER II.

1. Then I felt and lo! it seemed unto me that another angel stood before me.

2. And his countenance was lofty as the cedars of Lebanon, yea calm and mild as the sunset of a summer eve.

3. And he touched me with a wand and my vision was enlarged. And I saw and behold an island wheron dwelt the remnant of the oppressed.

4. And habitations arose on every side, and Temples to the most high God; and field waved in golden abundance, and became white unto the harvest.

5. And the murmer of much business was there, and the noise of mills and lowings of oxen laden with the fruitage of the fields.

6. Peace dwelt there and plenty, and the child answered to its mother's smile.

7. And the husdandman leaned upon his spade, and his heart grew warm at the bounty of the Lord.

8. And me thought, in the far distance, upon a verge of sand, stood a ragged crew, care-worn, spiritless and seared with vice.

9. And their voice arose to heaven as the voice of a wailing mind: and lamentation was mingled with cursings, and falsehood were borne on the breath of sighs.

10. And I exclaimed this is Progress! this the voice of Fate.

11. For the tree that taketh root shall grow and become great, and the rootless sea-weed shall be torn of the winds.

12. Then a voice said in mine ear, yea whispered to my soul, He that soweth shall reap, and he that planteth shall enjoy the fruits thereof. For there is an end of outrage and wrong, and the trial of our faith worketh patience.

13. The shining one whom thou first sawest was revelation; he it is who pictures to the hope the visions of that which is to be.

14. And the angel thou sawest next, even him of the serene and thoughtful countenance, is the angel of Reason; and both are the servants of that great destiny which men call Progress.

15. That which Revelation pictured to thee, even that did Reason also teach to thy soul. Their path is different, their end the same.

16. Therefore, O, man! believe thou thus that God is just; that progress is sure as eternity: that revelation may foreshadow what is to come, and reason confirm the speculations of faith.

17. Then I awoke and lo! Mormonia faded away into the likeness of a Pear, and the Gentiles sunk besotted upon point brutality.

W. N. McL.

(Continued from page 83.)

They felt their power waning rapidly, and made a sudden call for all to make haste and get out, prophecying no more cold. A very large company crossed the Mississippi, where in a short time they found themselves exposed to all the rigor of severe winter, dwelling in tents and covered wagons. Others however continued to follow, and in the course of the spring and early summer several thousand advanced as far as the Potawatamie and Imaha counties on both sides of the Missouri. Orson Hyde and Almon Babbitt remained behind, the former in charge of their spiritual and the latter of the temporal interests of Nauvoo. These men conceived the project of remaining there, and in conjunction with various new settlers making a stand. But the war was renewed, and they were compelled to leave. Gradually many concentrated around Council Bluffs, and the balance scattered through the country.

In The spring of 1847 they sent out an expedition to the Salt Valley, and fixed on it as the place of settlement. But before determining on this move they had enlisted five hundred men to assist the United States in conquering California. These troops were to be disbanded in that country, and with a small company that went around with Brannan, would have made a good stand had there not been a general influx of emigrants from various places. The selection of the Salt Lake region was an unfortunate one at least. But in addition it broke up all the arrangements for concentration in California. And the almost immediate discovery of the California gold placers has ruined the hope of their gathering. The difficulties of reaching that region are very great. The country is unproductive, and its productions except for home consumption, valueless. After reaching there the tempting gold region is two thirds won. It is hard to keep the gathered together.

Their anxiety to get out of the U. S. is sadly belied by their assisting in the conquest of Californa, and more recently their late attempt to get admitted into the union, and get a Territorial government. The recent election of Brigham to be their first President is an abandonment of all their former pretensions that Joseph's place was not to be filled, and that THE TWELVE had the power of dictating all the affairs of the church in all the world.

Orson Hyde remains now at Kanesville, (Council Bluffs,) and does not seem well affected towards the rest of the leaders. His position gives him dangerous power over the rest of them. The utter defeat of all their hopes of a government under the authority of Congress disheartens many, and their attempt to obtain such government convinces all that they have not a dispensation of the kingdom.

Their numbers have been constantly diminishing. At the Salt Valley they have about 2,000, and about Kanesville for fifty miles perhaps 3,000 more. In England their followers are numerous.—But the English saints are generally distrustful of them, and their little remaining confidence is rapidly on the wane. And so doubtful is their faith, and so great the difficulties of reaching their destination, that the Presidency in England have advised them not to start for this country at all, except under leaders appointed by them, and to avoid all the old routes, lest they should fall out by the way and be lost.

Unless some new leader springs up with a master spirit to lead them with better success, they must fail entirely. Even the permanence of their settlement at the Salt Lake is a matter of uncertainty. But should any one arise among them capable of guiding their enterprize, he would find among them the elements of a great people, and might work out some of the scourges they have so often predicted on their persecutors.

☞ Since the first side of this paper was printed we have received information from Isaac Sheen that Wm. Smith has been at his old tricks again, and that he (Sheen) has renounced him.—Among other things a confidential letter of Smith to Sheen acknowledging his failings, and giving very unsatisfactory evidence of his repentance, appears in the Cincinnati papers. To us the publication appears superfluous. We know of but one man who talks so much of his own virtue and other men's vices as Wm. Smith. And when his confidential communications get before the public there will be such another blow up in Brewsterism. It is debauchees and strumpets who are badly troubled about their neighbors' conduct and their own characters.

DIED,

At Wells' Island, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 11th of April, Mrs., MARY, consort of Bro. Studson Kendall. Funeral sermon by Bro. Z. H. Gurley, from Rev. xiv. 13.

6. Peace dwelt there and plenty, and the child answered to its mother's smile.

7. And the husdandman leaned upon his spade, and his heart grew warm at the bounty of the Lord.

8. And me thought, in the far distance, upon a verge of sand, stood a ragged crew, care-worn, spiritless and seared with vice.

9. And their voice arose to heaven as the voice of a wailing mind: and lamentation was mingled with cursings, and falsehood were borne on the breath of sighs.

10. And I exclaimed this is Progress! this the voice of Fate.

11. For the tree that taketh root shall grow and become great, and the rootless sea-weed shall be torn of the winds.

12. Then a voice said in mine ear, yea whispered to my soul, He that soweth shall reap, and he that planteth shall enjoy the fruits thereof. For there is an end of outrage and wrong, and the trial of our faith worketh patience.

13. The shining one whom thou first sawest was revelation; he it is who pictures to the hope the visions of that which is to be.

14. And the angel thou sawest next, even him of the serene and thoughtful countenance, is the angel of Reason; and both are the servants of that great destiny which men call Progress.

15. That which Revelation pictured to thee, even that did Reason also teach to thy soul. Their path is different, their end the same.

16. Therefore, O, man! believe thou thus that God is just; that progress is sure as eternity: that revelation may foreshadow what is to come, and reason confirm the speculations of faith.

17. Then I awoke and lo! Mormonia faded away into the likeness of a Pear, and the Gentiles sunk besotted upon point brutality.

W. N. McL.

(Continued from page 83.)

They felt their power waning rapidly, and made a sudden call for all to make haste and get out, prophecying no more cold. A very large company crossed the Mississippi, where in a short time they found themselves exposed to all the rigor of severe winter, dwelling in tents and covered wagons. Others however continued to follow, and in the course of the spring and early summer several thousand advanced as far as the Potawatamie and Imaha counties on both sides of the Missouri. Orson Hyde and Almon Babbitt remained behind, the former in charge of their spiritual and the latter of the temporal interests of Nauvoo. These men conceived the project of remaining there, and in conjunction with various new settlers making a stand. But the war was renewed, and they were compelled to leave. Gradually many concentrated around Council Bluffs, and the balance scattered through the country.

In The spring of 1847 they sent out an expedition to the Salt Valley, and fixed on it as the place of settlement. But before determining on this move they had enlisted five hundred men to assist the United States in conquering California. These troops were to be disbanded in that country, and with a small company that went around with Brannan, would have made a good stand had there not been a general influx of emigrants from various places. The selection of the Salt Lake region was an unfortunate one at least. But in addition it broke up all the arrangements for concentration in California. And the almost immediate discovery of the California gold placers has ruined the hope of their gathering. The difficulties of reaching that region are very great. The country is unproductive, and its productions except for home consumption, valueless. After reaching there the tempting gold region is two thirds won. It is hard to keep the gathered together.

Their anxiety to get out of the U. S. is sadly belied by their assisting in the conquest of California, and more recently their late attempt to get admitted into the union, and get a Territorial government. The recent election of Brigham to be their first President is an abandonment of all their former pretensions that Joseph's place was not to be filled, and that THE TWELVE had the power of dictating all the affairs of the church in all the world.

Orson Hyde remains now at Kanesville, (Council Bluffs,) and does not seem well affected towards the rest of the leaders. His position gives him dangerous power over the rest of them. The utter defeat of all their hopes of a government under the authority of Congress disheartens many, and their attempt to obtain such government convinces all that they have not a dispensation of the kingdom.

Their numbers have been constantly diminishing. At the Salt Valley they have about 2,000, and about Kanesville for fifty miles perhaps 3,000 more. In England their followers are numerous.—But the English saints are generally distrustful of them, and their little remaining confidence is rapidly on the wane. And so doubtful is their faith, and so great the difficulties of reaching their destination, that the Presidency in England have advised them not to start for this country at all, except under leaders appointed by them, and to avoid all the old routes, lest they should fall out by the way and be lost.

Unless some new leader springs up with a master spirit to lead them with better success, they must fail entirely. Even the permanence of their settlement at the Salt Lake is a matter of uncertainty. But should any one arise among them capable of guiding their enterprize, he would find among them the elements of a great people, and might work out some of the scourges they have so often predicted on their persecutors.

☞ Since the first side of this paper was printed we have received information from Isaac Sheen that Wm. Smith has been at his old tricks again, and that he (Sheen) has renounced him.—Among other things a confidential letter of Smith to Sheen acknowledging his failings, and giving very unsatisfactory evidence of his repentance, appears in the Cincinnati papers. To us the publication appears superfluous. We know of but one man who talks so much of his own virtue and other men's vices as Wm. Smith. And when his confidential communications get before the public there will be such another blow up in Brewsterism. It is debauchees and strumpets who are badly troubled about their neighbors' conduct and their own characters.

DIED,

At Wells' Island, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 11th of April, Mrs., MARY, consort of Bro. Studson Kendall. Funeral sermon by Bro. Z. H. Gurley, from Rev. xiv. 13.

A HOME FOR ALL.

If unto industry and worth,
But poverty pertains by right,
If to the drones belong the Earth,
Why not also the Air and Light?
To carry out the rule of wrong,
The Sun, and Moon, and Stars as well
Unto the privileged belong,
River and sea, to hold or sell!

Not one, but all God's gifts, should be Held by the favored of our kind—
A glorious monopoly,
Of Light and Earth and Wave and Wind!
Why should the landless wretch exist,
If heaven this goodly earth designed
But for the blest monopolist?—
Why has he taste, and sight, and mind?

If destined but to till the soil
He has no right to call his own—
If as a hireling he must toil,
Or tenant of a haughty drone,
Why was he formed a man—erect!
Made in the image of his God!
Furnished with glorious intellect!
And soul that loathes the yoke and rod.

A drudge upon the common loam,
In all except the name, a slave!
No sacred spot to call his home!—
Save in that narrow slip, the grave.
Just God! and must it always be?
Must millions of our race remain,
Victims of vile monopoly—
The dupes and tools of Mammon's train.

CONVERSATION.

It is rarely that profound thinkers are great talkers. They are often dull and apparently stupid in company, for, having to dive to the bottom of their souls for their treasures of thought, they cannot keep pace with those rapid speakers whose thoughts lay upon the surface. It is true, now and then we meet with conversational bores among men of name and note in literature, science and so forth; but the number is small. If such persons ever thus become the bane and pest of social intercourse, it is usually because they fancy they must make a point of sustaining, among their friends, the reputation they have acquired in their professions. They are terrible apprehensive that they may fall short of their estimates; if they do not sustain themselves up to the very utmost of their height; and because they chance to be owners of a six-foot reputation, think they must do it jnstice by a corresponding display of volubility and magniloquence. But such wiseacres should reccollect that as another has said, men who meet in conversation meet in a market place, and not in a theatre; they meet, not to gape and gaze at a single strutting actor, but to exchange ideas and sentiments freely, as each may have to offer; and, therefore, the "great folks" are bound always, when they enter into society, to leave their reputation in the passage with their hat and gloves.

RETURN OF THE POPE.

The Pope has at length returned to Rome. At his entrance, there was no pomp or public display, beyond the necessary guard and staff. His reception from the people is said to have been very enthusiastic.

Immediately after the Pope's entry, his holiness was to issue five decrees: 1, for the abolition of paper money; 2, for the organization of the tribunals; 3, respecting the communal and provincial councils; 4, respecting the council of state; and 5th, an amnesty, by which a free pardon was to be granted to all persons guilty of political offences with the exception of forty, who were to be specially named.

CONFERENCE.

There will be a Conference at Voree the first and second days of June next.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.
GILBERT WATSON, Sec.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

There will be a general assembly of the saints at the Tabernacle, St. James, Beaver Island, from the first to the sixth day of July, inclusive.

It is especially necessary that all the Apostles and the High Priests and Elders generally attend on this occasion.

JAMES J, STRANG,
GEO. J. ADAMS,
WILLIAM MARKS, } Presidents.

GILBERT WATSON,
H. G. HALL, } Recorders.

A HOME FOR ALL.

If unto industry and worth,
  But poverty pertains by right,
If to the drones belong the Earth,
  Why not also the Air and Light?
To carry out the rule of wrong,
  The Sun, and Moon, and Stars as well
Unto the privileged belong,
  River and sea, to hold or sell!

Not one, but all God's gifts, should be Held by the favored of our kind—
A glorious monopoly,
  Of Light and Earth and Wave and Wind!
Why should the landless wretch exist,
  If heaven this goodly earth designed
But for the blest monopolist?—
  Why has he taste, and sight, and mind?

If destined but to till the soil
  He has no right to call his own—
If as a hireling he must toil,
  Or tenant of a haughty drone,
Why was he formed a man—erect!
  Made in the image of his God!
Furnished with glorious intellect!
  And soul that loathes the yoke and rod.

A drudge upon the common loam,
  In all except the name, a slave!
No sacred spot to call his home!—
  Save in that narrow slip, the grave.
Just God! and must it always be?
  Must millions of our race remain,
Victims of vile monopoly—
  The dupes and tools of Mammon's train.

CONVERSATION.

It is rarely that profound thinkers are great talkers. They are often dull and apparently stupid in company, for, having to dive to the bottom of their souls for their treasures of thought, they cannot keep pace with those rapid speakers whose thoughts lay upon the surface. It is true, now and then we meet with conversational bores among men of name and note in literature, science and so forth; but the number is small. If such persons ever thus become the bane and pest of social intercourse, it is usually because they fancy they must make a point of sustaining, among their friends, the reputation they have acquired in their professions. They are terrible apprehensive that they may fall short of their estimates, if they do not sustain themselves up to the very utmost of their height; and because they chance to be owners of a six-foot reputation, think they must do it jnstice by a corresponding display of volubility and magniloquence. But such wiseacres should reccollect that as another has said, men who meet in conversation meet in a market place, and not in a theatre; they meet, not to gape and gaze at a single strutting actor, but to exchange ideas and sentiments freely, as each may have to offer; and, therefore, the "great folks" are bound always, when they enter into society, to leave their reputation in the passage with their hat and gloves.

RETURN OF THE POPE.

The Pope has at length returned to Rome. At his entrance, there was no pomp or public display, beyond the necessary guard and staff. His reception from the people is said to have been very enthusiastic.

Immediately after the Pope's entry, his holiness was to issue five decrees: 1, for the abolition of paper money; 2, for the organization of the tribunals; 3, respecting the communal and provincial councils; 4, respecting the council of state; and 5th, an amnesty, by which a free pardon was to be granted to all persons guilty of political offences with the exception of forty, who were to be specially named.

CONFERENCE.

There will be a Conference at Voree the first and second days of June next.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.
GILBERT WATSON, Sec.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

There will be a general assembly of the saints at the Tabernacle, St. James, Beaver Island, from the first to the sixth day of July, inclusive.

It is especially necessary that all the Apostles and the High Priests and Elders generally attend on this occasion.

JAMES J, STRANG,
GEO. J. ADAMS,
WILLIAM MARKS, } Presidents.

GILBERT WATSON,
H. G. HALL, } Recorders.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 12.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JUNE 6, 1850. [WHOLE No. 180.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD IN VOREE ON THE 1ST AND 2ND DAYS OF JUNE, 1850.

JUNE 1ST—FORENOON SESSION.—Services commenced at 10 o'clock, A. M., by reading the 78th Psalm by Pres. Strang. Singing. Prayer by Pres. Strang.

Pres. Strang preached from these words: "But without faith it is impossible to please God." He read the whole chapter, and remarked that he had often heard people wish that they might hear the voice of God, receive the ministration of angels; in short to have such testimonies as these ancient worthies. Then he asked if they could endure such trials, that they might receive such blessings as Abraham, who was commanded to offer up his son. Who like those ancient worthies, is willing to stand faithful to the testimony of Jesus in the face of the edicts of worldly princes and potentates, and fear not the sword, nor the gibbet? He noticed the faith of the harlot Rahab, who had not seen an angel, neither heard the voice of God, but received the testimony of the spies whom Moses the prophet of God sent to spy out the land.

Her faith is recorded in the archives of heaven, and is had in remembrance, while the nobles of her country and her people are destroyed by the sword and doomed to the blackness of darkness forever. Moreover, the faith of these ancients was unshaken in the mandate of Jehovah. Abraham sought no excuse for not obeying the commandment in offering his son. Had he been like some in our day he would have replied that it was contrary to the command given to Noah, that "whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." He might have presented another excuse, viz., the promises God made to him through his son. But he had unshaken faith in the word of God, and obeyed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.

Who has faith like this? Who is willing to obey the mandate of God unwaveringly, and not to doubtful disputations, from the servants of God in these days? But it is objected that if we had such righteous prophets as the ancients, we could obey them. What is a righteous man? It is the man who maintains the law of God, despite every thing else. Let us look at some of the old prophets; said he was willing to be weighed in the balance with them, but not with sectarian priests. Moses slew a man, disregarding the oppressing hand of the Egyptian, and for this act, the martyr Stephen says God made him "a ruler and a deliverer by the hand of the angel that appeared to him in the bush." Then there is the prophet Samuel, who commanded Saul to destroy the Amlekites, both man and beast. Saul was a merciful man, like some we have in these days, and thought it not best to slay them, and saved the king and the best of the cattle, and hypocritically excused the matter by saying that he saved them for a sacrifice unto the Lord. What did Samuel do when he learned that fact? He said obedience is better than sacrifice, and took Agag and hewed him in pieces.

He also spoke of Christ, who made a scourge of small cords, and drove out of the temple those who sold oxen and sheep, and the money changers, and overthrew their tables; and of Moroni, who raised large armies and went

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. V. No. 12.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JUNE 6, 1850. [WHOLE No. 180.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to FRANCIS COOPER, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD IN VOREE ON THE 1st AND 2nd DAYS OF JUNE, 1850.

JUNE 1ST--FORENOON SESSION.—-Services commenced at 10 o'clock, A. M., by reading the 78th Psalm by Pres. Strang. Singing. Prayer by Pres. Strang.

Pres. Strang preached from these words: "But without faith it is impossible to please God." He read the whole chapter, and remarked that he had often heard people wish that they might hear the voice of God, receive the ministration of angels; in short to have such testimonies as these ancient worthies. Then he asked if they could endure such trials, that they might receive such blessings as Abraham, who was commanded to offer up his son. Who like those ancient worthies, is willing to stand faithful to the testimony of Jesus in the face of the edicts of worldly princes and potentates, and fear not the sword, nor the gibbet? He noticed the faith of the harlot Rahab, who had not seen an angel, neither heard the voice of God, but received the testimony of the spies whom Moses the prophet of God sent to spy out the land.

Her faith is recorded in the archives of heaven, and is had in remembrance, while the nobles of her country and her people are destroyed by the sword and doomed to the blackness of darkness forever. Moreover, the faith of these ancients was unshaken in the mandate of Jehovah. Abraham sought no excuse for not obeying the commandment in offering his son. Had he been like some in our day he would have replied that it was contrary to the command given to Noah, that "whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." He might have presented another excuse, viz., the promises God made to him through his son. But he had unshaken faith in the word of God, and obeyed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.

Who has faith like this? Who is willing to obey the mandate of God unwaveringly, and not to doubtful disputations, from the servants of God in these days? But it is objected that if we had such righteous prophets as the ancients, we could obey them. What is a righteous man? It is the man who maintains the law of God, despite every thing else. Let us look at some of the old prophets; said he was willing to be weighed in the balance with them, but not with sectarian priests. Moses slew a man, disregarding the oppressing hand of the Egyptian, and for this act, the martyr Stephen says God made him "a ruler and a deliverer by the hand of the angel that appeared to him in the bush." Then there is the prophet Samuel, who commanded Saul to destroy the Amlekites, both man and beast. Saul was a merciful man, like some we have in these days, and thought it not best to slay them, and saved the king and the best of the cattle, and hypocritically excused the matter by saying that he saved them for a sacrifice unto the Lord. What did Samuel do when he learned that fact? He said obedience is better than sacrifice, and took Agag and hewed him in pieces.

He also spoke of Christ, who made a scourge of small cords, and drove out of the temple those who sold oxen and sheep, and the money changers, and overthrew their tables; and of Moroni, who raised large armies and went forth with them to destroy their enemies. He said that if such things were done by prophets now, this would be looked upon as very wicked; that he had never done such things, but would give them no bail what he should do before he finished his ministry, only that he should endeavor to obey God in all things.

After answering several pseudo objections, he concluded by exhorting the saints in a soul stirring manner to have faith in the word and work of God, that they might have a place in the kingdom of God with those ancient worthies who have come and washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Singing. Adjourned till 3, o'clock P. M. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

AFTERNOON SESSION.——Opened by singing. Prayer by Zenas H. Gurley, one of the Seventies. Singing.

Phineas Wright, one of the Twelve, remark- that he rejoiced that after a mission of nearly eight months to the Canadas, he again had the unspeakable privilege of meeting with his brethren, the saints. He gave an interesting and instructive exhortation to the Conference to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. Read the parable of the vine in the xv. chapter of St. John, and spoke of the fact that although Christ taught the world in parables, yet to his disciples it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. That in view of this it behooved us to become as little children, ready to obey God in all things, and willing to suffer trials and tribulations in the defence of the gospel and kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He concluded by giving a cheering account of his late mission to the Canadas, in company with Bros. Savage and Gurley. He said that there was about seventy added to the church through their labors during the past winter; that many others who were luke warm in the cause were stirred up to diligence, and that God blessed them in their ministry, in confirming the word by signs following.

Bro. Gurley remarked that the privilege he now enjoyed had often been the subject of conversation when far away, proclaiming the gospel of the Son of God. He rejoiced that he had an opportunity once more of assembling with the saints, and speaking with them of the latter day work. Spoke of the faith of Abraham in obeying the word of God in going out in search of a country, not knowing whither he went; of his being one of the noble spirits, whose right it was to rule and execute judgment and justice in the earth, yet he had not "so much as to set his foot on." He then spoke at some length on the strange work of the last days, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and the calling of the prophet Joseph, the restoration of the holy priesthood by the ministration of angels, the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and gifts of the spirit, concluding by giving a short but interesting sketch of his late mission, and his testimony of the truth of this last dispensation.

Pres. Strang remarked that he had a matter to lay before the conference, viz., "A Testimony to the Nation," that he had written in the form of a memorial to the President and Representatives of the United States, which he now would read for their consideration, and bring it up for final action to-morrow. (The reader will find it on the fourth page.) After the reading of the "testimony" Conference adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock A. M. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

JUNE 2ND—FORENOON SESSION.——Opened by Singing. Pres. Strang read the i. & ii. chapters of 2nd Thess. Prayer by Pres. Strang. Singing.

Pres. Strang preached on the subject of the second coming of Christ, from the text, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2nd Thess. i. 7, 8. He noticed the manner of his coming, viz, "in flaming fire," and the work he was to do, viz., "to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." He said that some contended that Christ came at the destruction of Jerusalem, but such could not be the case; for although forth with them to destroy their enemies. He said that if such things were done by prophets now, this would be looked upon as very wicked; that he had never done such things, but would give them no bail what he should do before he finished his ministry, only that he should endeavor to obey God in all things.

After answering several pseudo objections, he concluded by exhorting the saints in a soul stirring manner to have faith in the word and work of God, that they might have a place in the kingdom of God with those ancient worthies who have come and washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Singing. Adjourned till 3, o'clock P. M. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Afternoon Session.——Opened by singing. Prayer by Zenas H. Gurley, one of the Seventies. Singing.

Phineas Wright, one of the Twelve, remark- that he rejoiced that after a mission of nearly eight months to the Canadas, he again had the unspeakable privilege of meeting with his brethren, the saints. He gave an interesting and instructive exhortation to the Conference to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. Read the parable of the vine in the xv. chapter of St. John, and spoke of the fact that although Christ taught the world in parables, yet to his disciples it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. That in view of this it behooved us to become as little children, ready to obey God in all things, and willing to suffer trials and tribulations in the defence of the gospel and kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He concluded by giving a cheering account of his late mission to the Canadas, in company with Bros. Savage and Gurley. He said that there was about seventy added to the church through their labors during the past winter; that many others who were luke warm in the cause were stirred up to diligence, and that God blessed them in their ministry, in confirming the word by signs following.

Bro. Gurley remarked that the privilege he now enjoyed had often been the subject of conversation when far away, proclaiming the gospel of the Son of God. He rejoiced that he had an opportunity once more of assembling with the saints, and speaking with them of the latter day work. Spoke of the faith of Abraham in obeying the word of God in going out in search of a country, not knowing whither he went; of his being one of the noble spirits, whose right it was to rule and execute judgment and justice in the earth, yet he had not "so much as to set his foot on." He then spoke at some length on the strange work of the last days, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and the calling of the prophet Joseph, the restoration of the holy priesthood by the ministration of angels, the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and gifts of the spirit, concluding by giving a short but interesting sketch of his late mission, and his testimony of the truth of this last dispensation.

Pres. Strang remarked that he had a matter to lay before the conference, viz., "A Testimony to the Nation," that he had written in the form of a memorial to the President and Representatives of the United States, which he now would read for their consideration, and bring it up for final action to-morrow. (The reader will find it on the fourth page.) After the reading of the "testimony" Conference adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock A. M. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

June 2nd—Forenoon Session.——Opened by Singing. Pres. Strang read the i. & ii. chapters of 2nd Thess. Prayer by Pres. Strang. Singing.

Pres. Strang preached on the subject of the second coming of Christ, from the text, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2nd Thess. i. 7, 8. He noticed the manner of his coming, viz, "in flaming fire," and the work he was to do, viz., "to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." He said that some contended that Christ came at the destruction of Jerusalem, but such could not be the case; for although the Roman army knew not God, and obeyed not the gospel, yet there was no vengeance taken on them. They were the victors, not the victims. Moreover the words of the text were spoken after the destruction of Jerusalem, and not before, and therefore could not have their fulfillment in that event. He alluded to the popular idea that the coming of Christ was simply improvements in the arts and sciences, or a kind of ethereal or spiritual influence, which can scarcely be expressed, and too absurd to require a refutation.

He then spoke of the Millerite doctrines concerning the coming and kingdom of our Lord, which, though there is a kind of majesty in them that demands a candid consideration, are, nevertheless, irreconcilable with the scriptures. They hold to the idea that the kingdom of God will not be established till Christ comes and destroys the wicked; that then he will establish his kingdom upon all the earth at once; whereas, the scriptures speak of it as a progressive work, small at the beginning. Christ likens the kingdom of heaven to a mustard seed, which is the smallest of all seeds, "but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof;" and also to a little leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

Daniel also understood this. In the vii. chapt. of the book of Daniel we are informed that dominion will be given to the saints, which is in fact the establishing of the kingdom, and the fourth beast be slain, (the Roman empire, or the nations that grew out of it,) and his body given to the burning flame before the coming of the son of man to receive the kingdom.

Pres. Strang then proved incontrovertibly from the scriptures that Christ would come to Zion to communicate instruction to his saints, and to Jerusalem to deliver his people Israel from the hands of their enemies, and fight for them as he fought in the day of battle, before he comes to take up his abode on the earth.

Adjourned till 2 o'clock, P. M. Benediction by Phineas Wright.

AFTERNOON SESSION.—Opened by singing.—Prayer by Samuel P. Bacon, H. P. Singing.

Phineas Wright remarked that while on his mission he ordained Bro. Silsbey a High Priest, and gave him jurisdiction to preside and regulate the affairs of the church in Jefferson and St Lawrence counties, N. Y., and he wanted to know whether or not the Conference would sustain him in so doing.

On motion, the proceedings of Bro. Wright in regard to Bro. Silsbey were unanimously approved of.

Bro. Wright said that when he was on his way home in company with Bro. Savage, Gurley and others, he had occasion to call at Oswego, and found a great opening for the preaching of the word at that place. He therefore moved that Hiram P. Brown, one of the Presidents of the Seventies, be sent to labor in that place and the surrounding country through the summer; which was seconded and sustained unanimously.

Bro. Z. H. Gurley was in like manner sent to the north-eastern parts of Wisconsin, on the presentation of Pres. Strang.

The Conference now proceeded to the consideration of the "Testimony to the Nation," which was read yesterday.

After very affecting details of the sufferings and persecutions of the saints in Missouri and Illinois by Bro.'s Gurley, Savage, Prindle and Foster, from personal acquaintance, and the concurring testimony of others, it was unanimously

Resolved, That we add our "testimony" to that of our fellow servants of the First Presidency to the nation.

Adjourned sine die. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Sec.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS, CORRESPONDENTS AND EXCHANGES.

The next issue but one, and possibly the next issue of the Herald will be from Beaver Island, Lake Mich. Exchanges and correspondents will address us accordingly. A suspension of the publication for a very short time will be the consequence. The arrangements for the publication at Beaver are in a forward state, much of the material having been received last summer. The Herald will there be greatly enlarged, and will become a weekly of peculiar interest and value, from the unique location and strange surrounding circumstances. We solicit an increased patronage.

the Roman army knew not God, and obeyed not the gospel, yet there was no vengeance taken on them. They were the victors, not the victims. Moreover the words of the text were spoken after the destruction of Jerusalem, and not before, and therefore could not have their fulfillment in that event. He alluded to the popular idea that the coming of Christ was simply improvements in the arts and sciences, or a kind of ethereal or spiritual influence, which can scarcely be expressed, and too absurd to require a refutation.

He then spoke of the Millerite doctrines concerning the coming and kingdom of our Lord, which, though there is a kind of majesty in them that demands a candid consideration, are, nevertheless, irreconcilable with the scriptures. They hold to the idea that the kingdom of God will not be established till Christ comes and destroys the wicked; that then he will establish his kingdom upon all the earth at once; whereas, the scriptures speak of it as a progressive work, small at the beginning. Christ likens the kingdom of heaven to a mustard seed, which is the smallest of all seeds, "but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof;" and also to a little leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

Daniel also understood this. In the vii. chapt. of the book of Daniel we are informed that dominion will be given to the saints, which is in fact the establishing of the kingdom, and the fourth beast be slain, (the Roman empire, or the nations that grew out of it,) and his body given to the burning flame before the coming of the son of man to receive the kingdom.

Pres. Strang then proved incontrovertibly from the scriptures that Christ would come to Zion to communicate instruction to his saints, and to Jerusalem to deliver his people Israel from the hands of their enemies, and fight for them as he fought in the day of battle, before he comes to take up his abode on the earth.

Adjourned till 2 o'clock, P. M. Benediction by Phineas Wright.

AFTERNOON SESSION.—Opened by singing.—Prayer by Samuel P. Bacon, H. P. Singing.

Phineas Wright remarked that while on his mission he ordained Bro. Silsbey a High Priest, and gave him jurisdiction to preside and regulate the affairs of the church in Jefferson and St Lawrence counties, N. Y., and he wanted to know whether or not the Conference would sustain him in so doing.

On motion, the proceedings of Bro. Wright in regard to Bro. Silsbey were unanimously approved of.

Bro. Wright said that when he was on his way home in company with Bro. Savage, Gurley and others, he had occasion to call at Oswego, and found a great opening for the preaching of the word at that place. He therefore moved that Hiram P. Brown, one of the Presidents of the Seventies, be sent to labor in that place and the surrounding country through the summer; which was seconded and sustained unanimously.

Bro. Z. H. Gurley was in like manner sent to the north-eastern parts of Wisconsin, on the presentation of Pres. Strang.

The Conference now proceeded to the consideration of the "Testimony to the Nation," which was read yesterday.

After very affecting details of the sufferings and persecutions of the saints in Missouri and Illinois by Bro.'s Gurley, Savage, Prindle and Foster, from personal acquaintance, and the concurring testimony of others, it was unanimously

Resolved, That we add our "testimony" to that of our fellow servants of the First Presidency to the nation.

Adjourned sine die. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Sec.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS, CORRESPONDENTS AND EXCHANGES.

The next issue but one, and possibly the next issue of the Herald will be from Beaver Island, Lake Mich. Exchanges and correspondents will address us accordingly. A suspension of the publication for a very short time will be the consequence. The arrangements for the publication at Beaver are in a forward state, much of the material having been received last summer. The Herald will there be greatly enlarged, and will become a weekly of peculiar interest and value, from the unique location and strange surrounding circumstances. We solicit an increased patronage.

A TESTIMONY TO THE NATION.

TO THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, AND TO ALL THE PEOPLE OF THE NATION—WE, JAMES J. STRANG, GEORGE J. ADAMS, AND WILLIAM MARKS, PRESIDENTS OF THE CHURCH OF THE SAINTS, APOSTLES OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, AND WITNESSES OF HIS NAME UNTO ALL NATIONS, SEND GREETING:—

It is twenty years this day since our brethren, the prophets and saints of God, organized the only church existing, solely by commandment and revelation of God, now on the earth. A few months subsequent to that organization a few of our brethren went up into the western part of Missouri, one of the States of this union, and commenced a settlement there.

Agreeable to a commandment which God gave them, they purchased large quantities of lands of the government of the United States, and paid the full price therefor to the officers of the United States, the ministers of your predecessors in office. Upon these lands our brethren, the saints, made extensive settlements, continually showing themselves the most industrious, peaceable and law-abiding citizens of that section of the country. At the time of which we speak no one among them was accused of any violation of the law, or of a want of attachment to the constitution and government of the United States, or of the State of Missouri.

Notwithstanding these facts, and the legal rights of our brethren, a numerous meeting of citizens of Missouri was held at Independence, in Missouri, which decreed the expulsion of the saints from that part of the State. This meeting issued a manifesto to the public, giving to the world the reasons for banishing from their neighborhood a numerous class of citizens; the entire church of the Latter Day Saints. In giving these reasons they stated that our religious sentiments and domestic habits were incongruous with theirs, and that it was necessary for their happiness that our brethren should leave; and as the grievances of which they complained were not recognized by the laws, and the saints had not violatad any existing law whereby they were subject to regular prosecution in the courts, therefore they would take redress into their own hands, and compel us to leave the country, peaceably if they could, forcibly if they must. This decree was carried out by the expulsion of the saints from Jackson Co., Missouri.

They then settled in various counties on the north side of the Missouri river, but continual collisions took place, till finally they were banished from the State by authority of a mandate issued by Lillburn W. Boggs, acting Governor, distinctly commanding that the saints (in derision called Mormons) be banished from the State, or extirmated. We are perfectly aware that this mandate of the acting Governor was unauthorized by the law, and in violation of the constitution of the State of Missouri. But the Legislature of that State, in failing to impeach the Governor, and by appropriating the money to pay the expense of EXECUTING HIS ORDER, has affirmed and adopted the act as the crime of the State. In accomplishing this expulsion ten thousand persons, men, women and children, were plundered of their possessions, EXILED FROM THEIR HOMES, and DRIVEN IN DESTITUTION, HUNGER AND WANT, in mid winter, to a distant land, passing much of the way in the midst of HOSTILE FOES, who not only refused them shelter and food, but kept them in continual danger.

Many were separated from their families and incarcerated in prison, whence, after long detention, they escaped only by paying large sums of money to prison keepers, judges and lawyers, as the price of their enlargement. Besides a feeble few, who, after learning that their persecutors were without compassion, were slain while defending their wives, their children and their firesides; eighteen persons, unarmed, and engaged in the worship of God, were murdered unresisting, and in cold blood, in the early part of these persecutions; one of them a mere child, who died mixing together the words of his prayer to God, and his supplication for mercy from his murderers; another, an old man, bowed down with suffering and sorrow, scarred with the wounds he had received fifty-seven years before in defence of American liberty and American independence; all yielding up their lives for the name of Jesus, and the witness of the gospel. Others, at different times, shared the same fate; how many, we know not.

Subsequently the saints settled in great numbers in the State of Illinois, and built up, be-

A TESTIMONY TO THE NATION.

TO THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, AND TO ALL THE PEOPLE OF THE NATION—WE, JAMES J. STRANG, GEORGE J. ADAMS, AND WILLIAM MARKS, PRESIDENTS OF THE CHURCH OF THE SAINTS, APOSTLES OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, AND WITNESSES OF HIS NAME UNTO ALL NATIONS, SEND GREETING:—

It is twenty years this day since our brethren, the prophets and saints of God, organized the only church existing, solely by commandment and revelation of God, now on the earth. A few months subsequent to that organization a few of our brethren went up into the western part of Missouri, one of the States of this union, and commenced a settlement there.

Agreeable to a commandment which God gave them, they purchased large quantities of lands of the government of the United States, and paid the full price therefor to the officers of the United States, the ministers of your predecessors in office. Upon these lands our brethren, the saints, made extensive settlements, continually showing themselves the most industrious, peaceable and law-abiding citizens of that section of the country. At the time of which we speak no one among them was accused of any violation of the law, or of a want of attachment to the constitution and government of the United States, or of the State of Missouri.

Notwithstanding these facts, and the legal rights of our brethren, a numerous meeting of citizens of Missouri was held at Independence, in Missouri, which decreed the expulsion of the saints from that part of the State. This meeting issued a manifesto to the public, giving to the world the reasons for banishing from their neighborhood a numerous class of citizens; the entire church of the Latter Day Saints. In giving these reasons they stated that our religious sentiments and domestic habits were incongruous with theirs, and that it was necessary for their happiness that our brethren should leave; and as the grievances of which they complained were not recognized by the laws, and the saints had not violatad any existing law whereby they were subject to regular prosecution in the courts, therefore they would take redress into their own hands, and compel us to leave the country, peaceably if they could, forcibly if they must. This decree was carried out by the expulsion of the saints from Jackson Co., Missouri.

They then settled in various counties on the north side of the Missouri river, but continual collisions took place, till finally they were banished from the State by authority of a mandate issued by Lillburn W. Boggs, acting Governor, distinctly commanding that the saints (in derision called Mormons) be banished from the State, or extirmated. We are perfectly aware that this mandate of the acting Governor was unauthorized by the law, and in violation of the constitution of the State of Missouri. But the Legislature of that State, in failing to impeach the Governor, and by appropriating the money to pay the expense of EXECUTING HIS ORDER, has affirmed and adopted the act as the crime of the State. In accomplishing this expulsion ten thousand persons, men, women and children, were plundered of their possessions, EXILED FROM THEIR HOMES, and DRIVEN IN DESTITUTION, HUNGER AND WANT, in mid winter, to a distant land, passing much of the way in the midst of HOSTILE FOES, who not only refused them shelter and food, but kept them in continual danger.

Many were separated from their families and incarcerated in prison, whence, after long detention, they escaped only by paying large sums of money to prison keepers, judges and lawyers, as the price of their enlargement. Besides a feeble few, who, after learning that their persecutors were without compassion, were slain while defending their wives, their children and their firesides; eighteen persons, unarmed, and engaged in the worship of God, were murdered unresisting, and in cold blood, in the early part of these persecutions; one of them a mere child, who died mixing together the words of his prayer to God, and his supplication for mercy from his murderers; another, an old man, bowed down with suffering and sorrow, scarred with the wounds he had received fifty-seven years before in defence of American liberty and American independence; all yielding up their lives for the name of Jesus, and the witness of the gospel. Others, at different times, shared the same fate; how many, we know not.

Subsequently the saints settled in great numbers in the State of Illinois, and built up, besides many villages, the city of Nauvoo, at one time the most populous city in that State. At their first settlement they were kindly received; but after building up flourishing towns, becoming numerous as a religious people, and strong in their political influence, religious prejudice, political interests and commercial rivalry combined together to destroy them.

On this occasion our persecutors sought to justify their violence by accusing the saints of enormous crimes, and the most astounding corruptions. That these accusations were utterly unfounded is clearly shown by the fact that with courts, jurors and prosecuting officers constantly and assiduously selected from among our persecutors, few of the saints were ever prosecuted on criminal charges, and very few indeed ever convicted.

Nevertheless this persecution was carried on until our fellow servants, the prophets, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, were martyred; the houses of hundreds of the saints burned down before their eyes; the entire community amounting to 25,000 banished from that section of the State, and four millions of dollars worth of property sacrificed.

For all these wrongs the laws and institutions of the country offer us no redress. It is vain to answer that such acts are contrary to law, and that the courts are open to us. There is a law in the land stronger than statutes—more potent than the usages of courts. The will of the masses, however vicious and partial, no matter by what influences produced, has been able to TRAMPLE ON ALL PRECEDENT, and ride down all law. It has done more. It has produced legislation according to its wishes, in violation of all constitutional securities; and not merely contrary to precedent, but destructive of natural right.

This unrecognized law, found only in the will of the masses, has been enforced in destroying houses, offices and valuable papers of some of the most distinguished citizens of the country, public buildings of various kinds, printing presses and rail roads owned by wealthy companies, churches and convents of the most ancient and numerous religious denomination in the country, and to overthrow contracts which had stood the vicissitudes of two hundred years, the ordeal of civil war and national revolution, though defended by the sanctity of constitutional and statute law; usages older than the language we speak; the power of a great State; the wealth that seven generations of thrift had accumulated; and backed by an aristocracy made honorable by deeds of benevolence, justice, patriotism and valor as boundless as the sources of its greatness.

If these cannot resist the power of this new element of national and state government mob law, how shall we? We are aware that our name is cast out as evil, as a kind of apology for the uncounted injuries which have been heaped upon us. But you will not forget that in early times among all the most polished nations the name christian was looked on as a name for fanaticism and debauchery; that the learned Greeks and victorious Romans held them cannibals, and that, even now, in half the civilized and christian nations democracy is considered synonymous with anarchy and lawlessness—how justly, you can judge.

And if the sanctity of the ancient christian faith, and the greatness of your nation have not protected them from these aspersions, what shall protect us from equal wrongs? We protest against this nearly universal practice of assuming that we are guilty of great crimes, as an excuse for denying us the regular protection of the government in our legal rights. But when we examine the evidence of the truth of these assumptions, they are most conclusively falsified.

Joseph, the martyred prophet, whose blood stains on the jail at Carthage are as indelible as those of Jesus on the cross, has been arrested thirty-nine times on criminal charges. Thirty-nine times he has been tried in the courts of his enemies; many times at the bar of men who advocated his murder. And thirty-eight times, in such courts, at the bar of such men, has he been acquitted.

The only offence of which he was ever convicted is that of unlawful banking—an offence committed with impunity by other men in nearly every State in the union. Nor did he escape conviction by the testimony of his brethren. Such men would stop their ears against it. If this is not a sufficient vindication of him as a law-abiding man, no array of facts could be.

That the charge on which he was finally arrested and imprisoned was merely trumped up for the purpose of seizing upon him and detaining him till a convenient time for his destruc-

sides many villages, the city of Nauvoo, at one time the most populous city in that State. At their first settlement they were kindly received; but after building up flourishing towns, becoming numerous as a religious people, and strong in their political influence, religious prejudice, political interests and commercial rivalry combined together to destroy them.

On this occasion our persecutors sought to justify their violence by accusing the saints of enormous crimes, and the most astounding corruptions. That these accusations were utterly unfounded is clearly shown by the fact that with courts, jurors and prosecuting officers constantly and assiduously selected from among our persecutors, few of the saints were ever prosecuted on criminal charges, and very few indeed ever convicted.

Nevertheless this persecution was carried on until our fellow servants, the prophets, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, were martyred; the houses of hundreds of the saints burned down before their eyes; the entire community amounting to 25,000 banished from that section of the State, and four millions of dollars worth of property sacrificed.

For all these wrongs the laws and institutions of the country offer us no redress. It is vain to answer that such acts are contrary to law, and that the courts are open to us. There is a law in the land stronger than statutes—more potent than the usages of courts. The will of the masses, however vicious and partial, no matter by what influences produced, has been able to TRAMPLE ON ALL PRECEDENT, and ride down all law. It has done more. It has produced legislation according to its wishes, in violation of all constitutional securities; and not merely contrary to precedent, but destructive of natural right.

This unrecognized law, found only in the will of the masses, has been enforced in destroying houses, offices and valuable papers of some of the most distinguished citizens of the country, public buildings of various kinds, printing presses and rail roads owned by wealthy companies, churches and convents of the most ancient and numerous religious denomination in the country, and to overthrow contracts which had stood the vicissitudes of two hundred years, the ordeal of civil war and national revolution, though defended by the sanctity of constitutional and statute law; usages older than the language we speak; the power of a great State; the wealth that seven generations of thrift had accumulated; and backed by an aristocracy made honorable by deeds of benevolence, justice, patriotism and valor as boundless as the sources of its greatness.

If these cannot resist the power of this new element of national and state government mob law, how shall we? We are aware that our name is cast out as evil, as a kind of apology for the uncounted injuries which have been heaped upon us. But you will not forget that in early times among all the most polished nations the name christian was looked on as a name for fanaticism and debauchery; that the learned Greeks and victorious Romans held them cannibals, and that, even now, in half the civilized and christian nations democracy is considered synonymous with anarchy and lawlessness—how justly, you can judge.

And if the sanctity of the ancient christian faith, and the greatness of your nation have not protected them from these aspersions, what shall protect us from equal wrongs? We protest against this nearly universal practice of assuming that we are guilty of great crimes, as an excuse for denying us the regular protection of the government in our legal rights. But when we examine the evidence of the truth of these assumptions, they are most conclusively falsified.

Joseph, the martyred prophet, whose blood stains on the jail at Carthage are as indelible as those of Jesus on the cross, has been arrested thirty-nine times on criminal charges. Thirty-nine times he has been tried in the courts of his enemies; many times at the bar of men who advocated his murder. And thirty-eight times, in such courts, at the bar of such men, has he been acquitted.

The only offence of which he was ever convicted is that of unlawful banking—an offence committed with impunity by other men in nearly every State in the union. Nor did he escape conviction by the testimony of his brethren. Such men would stop their ears against it. If this is not a sufficient vindication of him as a law-abiding man, no array of facts could be.

That the charge on which he was finally arrested and imprisoned was merely trumped up for the purpose of seizing upon him and detaining him till a convenient time for his destruction, is as clearly proved as any fact whatever in the history of the country.

And when we add that his murderers were indited, arraigned and acquitted at the instance of their own friends, without any attempt to introduce the necessary evidence against them, and merely for the purpose of interposing a legal bar to their punishment, in some more healthy period of the public mind, we think it will not require argument to convince all mankind that the State of Illiinos has adopted that murder as its own.

There is now in the States of Missouri and Illinois four millions of dollars worth of houses and lands purchased with the money and produced with the skill and industry of our brethren the saints, which they are not permitted to occupy.

To you, as the highest authority known to the land, we appeal for redress. We have not forgotten that there are other tribunals in which causes partially similar in kind, immeasurably less in aggravation, are sometimes examined, perhaps occasionally righted. But these tribunals are closed against us, by the power of that law, already referred to, which is above statute, precedent and right.

Courts, State Legislatures, and State executives are deaf to us. When we speak, they cannot hear. When we ask justice, their faces are turned from us. True, when they do speak, their voice is for us. But it comes after the deed is done, or it is so faintly heard that the lawless do not think it earnest. The forms of law hold us as victims, and the power that is above law overwhelms us. Thus have two of our prophets died in the hands of public officers, and under the destroying protection of a State Governor, personally superintending the proceedings, and no one act of public indignation has rebuked the deed. By every form of judicial proceeding known to the laws of the land, the perpetrators have been legally shielded from the punishment which the law itself denounces against such crimes.

If you tell us (as some of your predecessors told these martyred prophets while they were yet alive) that "you have no power to redress our wrongs," then there is presented to the world the melancholy spectacle of the greatest republic on earth, a christian nation, acknowledging itself powerless to judge; unable to protect the right; a nation on whose righteousness half the earth rest the hopes of man, confessing that there is a power above the law, riding down the constitution, which stalks abroad to plunder and banish the citizens, and none to rebuke; murders the unoffending innocent, and none to say, "why do ye so?" which sanctifies its deeds of violence, even in the eyes of religious men, by blackening the fame of the glorious dead, with the name of crimes which in their life time it dared not attempt to prove, even in its own tribunals.

The fact that our brethren are the owners of large tracts of land, purchased of the United States, and secured to us by the name and seal of the President, which they have never sold, and which they are not permitted to occupy, by the powers actually existing, and that our brethren have been banished and murdered, and their persecutors are unrebuked, and positively and legally screened from punishment, is as indelibly stamped on the history of the country as the declaration of independence, or the victory of Buena Vista.

All the inferior powers have been appealed to in vain. Unless you redress these wrongs, must they rest on the nation forever, and bring down the wrath of God on those who have done, and those who have permitted them? If you fear not God, how will you answer to mankind and to posterity, for such a desecration of republicanism, in a christian country?

For these wrongs we do not ask a grant of lands, nor a State or Territorial government — We acknowledge that we have had enough of these. We shall never sell the lands of our brethren and ourselves, the inheritance of the martyred and of their children, for new grants of which we are equally liable to be deprived by some new act of violence.

tion, is as clearly proved as any fact whatever in the history of the country.

And when we add that his murderers were indited, arraigned and acquitted at the instance of their own friends, without any attempt to introduce the necessary evidence against them, and merely for the purpose of interposing a legal bar to their punishment, in some more healthy period of the public mind, we think it will not require argument to convince all mankind that the State of Illiinos has adopted that murder as its own.

There is now in the States of Missouri and Illinois four millions of dollars worth of houses and lands purchased with the money and produced with the skill and industry of our brethren the saints, which they are not permitted to occupy.

To you, as the highest authority known to the land, we appeal for redress. We have not forgotten that there are other tribunals in which causes partially similar in kind, immeasurably less in aggravation, are sometimes examined, perhaps occasionally righted. But these tribunals are closed against us, by the power of that law, already referred to, which is above statute, precedent and right.

Courts, State Legislatures, and State executives are deaf to us. When we speak, they cannot hear. When we ask justice, their faces are turned from us. True, when they do speak, their voice is for us. But it comes after the deed is done, or it is so faintly heard that the lawless do not think it earnest. The forms of law hold us as victims, and the power that is above law overwhelms us. Thus have two of our prophets died in the hands of public officers, and under the destroying protection of a State Governor, personally superintending the proceedings, and no one act of public indignation has rebuked the deed. By every form of judicial proceeding known to the laws of the land, the perpetrators have been legally shielded from the punishment which the law itself denounces against such crimes.

If you tell us (as some of your predecessors told these martyred prophets while they were yet alive) that "you have no power to redress our wrongs," then there is presented to the world the melancholy spectacle of the greatest republic on earth, a christian nation, acknowledging itself powerless to judge; unable to protect the right; a nation on whose righteousness half the earth rest the hopes of man, confessing that there is a power above the law, riding down the constitution, which stalks abroad to plunder and banish the citizens, and none to rebuke; murders the unoffending innocent, and none to say, "why do ye so?" which sanctifies its deeds of violence, even in the eyes of religious men, by blackening the fame of the glorious dead, with the name of crimes which in their life time it dared not attempt to prove, even in its own tribunals.

The fact that our brethren are the owners of large tracts of land, purchased of the United States, and secured to us by the name and seal of the President, which they have never sold, and which they are not permitted to occupy, by the powers actually existing, and that our brethren have been banished and murdered, and their persecutors are unrebuked, and positively and legally screened from punishment, is as indelibly stamped on the history of the country as the declaration of independence, or the victory of Buena Vista.

All the inferior powers have been appealed to in vain. Unless you redress these wrongs, must they rest on the nation forever, and bring down the wrath of God on those who have done, and those who have permitted them? If you fear not God, how will you answer to mankind and to posterity, for such a desecration of republicanism, in a christian country?

For these wrongs we do not ask a grant of lands, nor a State or Territorial government — We acknowledge that we have had enough of these. We shall never sell the lands of our brethren and ourselves, the inheritance of the martyred and of their children, for new grants of which we are equally liable to be deprived by some new act of violence.

We do not ask compensation in money or land for the blood of the dead, or the persecutions of the living. The lands we have been robbed of, we shall continue to claim for the banished, and for the widows and orphans that murders have made, till the day when the judgment of God shall be revealed on the nation, and his wrath no longer slumbers; and they shall go up and possess it, though the nation ceases.

But these things admonish us that we are not to expect peace or protection in the midst of the people who have done us this iniquity. Both by the commandment of God and from the necessity of our situation, we are seeking a home in a land where religious sects and political parties are far removed from us, a land uninhabited.

We have not been suffered to live with other men. Shall we not be permitted to live alone? God made the earth for all men. Of the vast all he has given us a few little islands. They are the work of his hands; not man's. Why should man sell God's work?

We, therefore, the servants of the living God, the fellow servants of the martyred saints, ask you, the President and Congress of the United States, to pass a law giving the consent of the nation that the saints may settle upon and forever occupy all the uninhabited lands of the islands in lake Michigan, and to cease to sell the same to other persons. And of the people of the United States we ask that as they have not allowed our brethren to remain in peace with them, they will suffer us to remain there separate from them.

We further ask that you, by some public act, condemn in behalf of the nation the martyrdom of the saints and their exile from some of the States. Unless you do this, will posterity and God hold the nation guiltless of the blood of saints and prophets? What evidence has ever yet been given that the nation sanctions not the deed? How has she washed her hands of this blood?

We further ask that you take such measures, whether constitutional or by a peaceable change of the forms of government, as shall secure redress for these wrongs, and the punishment of the aggressors. Less than this there can be no excuse for doing. The government which cannot or will not prevent such crimes, does not deserve to continue; and it would be distrusting the justice of the Most High to believe he would not destroy it.

As you do good or evil, God reward you.

Written at Buffalo, the 6th day of April, 1850.

JAMES J. STRANG,
GEO. J. ADAMS,
WILLIAM MARKS.

OUR IDENTITY IN THE FUTURE WORLD.

Many have supposed that in the future world we shall not know that we have ever existed here—that we have ever had anything to do with the sins and vanities of earth, or that we have ever had friends, or loved and been loved in return. All identity, and all knowledge of previous conscious existence to be lost and unpossessed. But this is annihilation. It is utterly and forever erasing all that pertains to our being. If when called from this world away we are to lose all knowledge that we have ever lived, and walked, and beheld, snd smiled, and wept, and held converse together in the flesh; then our whole existence is virtually, and to all intents and purposes blotted out forever. It is as though we never had existed—or having lived, were destined to lay down this thrilling, animated being, and become a senseless clod, lifeless and inanimate forevermore.

There is not a more gloomy and comfortless idea than that at death, we lose our identity, and all knowledge of our previous earthly existence; and consequently that there will be no recognition, no reunion of friends in the world to come. We desire to look upon the faces of the departed again; and we love to cherish their images in our mind, and to think that when we too have passed away, we shall see them as they were here, in all save the vanities to which we are made subject. Now, to say this shall never be, is to roll in clouds and darkness upon the soul. It were a mockery of consolation to tell the mother who is weeping at the side of her dead child, that the change which will finally come over them both, shall totally and forever obliterate all marks by which mother and child might be known to each other. You might as well tell her that death is the total and endless extinction of the spark of being, and that all that remains for us beyond this life is darkness and the worm!

It is one of the blessed features of the doctrine of the resurrection, that it teaches that death does not destroy all by which we are known here—that we are not to enter upon the eternal world unknowing and unknown: but retaining our knowledge of this present life, and all those lineaments by which we may be recognized, and by which we may recognize others in return. It thus comes to us with that in which the heart may find comfort when sorrowing over its sundered ties, and which hath a power to reconcile us to the departure of our friends.—Clericus.

We do not ask compensation in money or land for the blood of the dead, or the persecutions of the living. The lands we have been robbed of, we shall continue to claim for the banished, and for the widows and orphans that murders have made, till the day when the judgment of God shall be revealed on the nation, and his wrath no longer slumbers; and they shall go up and possess it, though the nation ceases.

But these things admonish us that we are not to expect peace or protection in the midst of the people who have done us this iniquity. Both by the commandment of God and from the necessity of our situation, we are seeking a home in a land where religious sects and political parties are far removed from us, a land uninhabited.

We have not been suffered to live with other men. Shall we not be permitted to live alone? God made the earth for all men. Of the vast all he has given us a few little islands. They are the work of his hands; not man's. Why should man sell God's work?

We, therefore, the servants of the living God, the fellow servants of the martyred saints, ask you, the President and Congress of the United States, to pass a law giving the consent of the nation that the saints may settle upon and forever occupy all the uninhabited lands of the islands in lake Michigan, and to cease to sell the same to other persons. And of the people of the United States we ask that as they have not allowed our brethren to remain in peace with them, they will suffer us to remain there separate from them.

We further ask that you, by some public act, condemn in behalf of the nation the martyrdom of the saints and their exile from some of the States. Unless you do this, will posterity and God hold the nation guiltless of the blood of saints and prophets? What evidence has ever yet been given that the nation sanctions not the deed? How has she washed her hands of this blood?

We further ask that you take such measures, whether constitutional or by a peaceable change of the forms of government, as shall secure redress for these wrongs, and the punishment of the aggressors. Less than this there can be no excuse for doing. The government which cannot or will not prevent such crimes, does not deserve to continue; and it would be distrusting the justice of the Most High to believe he would not destroy it.

As you do good or evil, God reward you.

Written at Buffalo, the 6th day of April, 1850.

JAMES J. STRANG.
GEO. J. ADAMS,
WILLIAM MARKS.

OUR IDENTITY IN THE FUTURE WORLD.

Many have supposed that in the future world we shall not know that we have ever existed here—that we have ever had anything to do with the sins and vanities of earth, or that we have ever had friends, or loved and been loved in return. All identity, and all knowledge of previous conscious existence to be lost and unpossessed. But this is annihilation. It is utterly and forever erasing all that pertains to our being. If when called from this world away we are to lose all knowledge that we have ever lived, and walked, and beheld, and smiled, and wept, and held converse together in the flesh; then our whole existence is virtually, and to all intents and purposes blotted out forever. It is as though we never had existed—or having lived, were destined to lay down this thrilling, animated being, and become a senseless clod, lifeless and inanimate forevermore.

There is not a more gloomy and comfortless idea than that at death, we lose our identity, and all knowledge of our previous earthly existence; and consequently that there will be no recognition, no reunion of friends in the world to come. We desire to look upon the faces of the departed again; and we love to cherish their images in our mind, and to think that when we too have passed away, we shall see them as they were here, in all save the vanities to which we are made subject. Now, to say this shall never be, is to roll in clouds and darkness upon the soul. It were a mockery of consolation to tell the mother who is weeping at the side of her dead child, that the change which will finally come over them both, shall totally and forever obliterate all marks by which mother and child might be known to each other. You might as well tell her that death is the total and endless extinction of the spark of being, and that all that remains for us beyond this life is darkness and the worm!

It is one of the blessed features of the doctrine of the resurrection, that it teaches that death does not destroy all by which we are known here—that we are not to enter upon the eternal world unknowing and unknown: but retaining our knowledge of this present life, and all those lineaments by which we may be recognized, and by which we may recognize others in return. It thus comes to us with that in which the heart may find comfort when sorrowing over its sundered ties, and which hath a power to reconcile us to the departure of our friends.—Clericus.

DISADVANTAGES OF CIVILIZATION.

The civilized man has built a coach, but has lost the use of his feet. He is supported by crutches, but loses so much support of muscle. He has got a fine Geneva watch, but has lost the skill to tell the hour by the sun. A Greenwich nautical almanac he has, and so being sure of the information when he wants it, the man in the street does not know a star in the sky. The solstice he does not observe; the equinox he knows as little; and the bright calendar of the year is without a dial in his mind. His note books impair his memory; his libraries overload his wit; the insurance office increases the number of accidents; and it may be a question whether we have not lost by refinement some energy; by a Christianity entrenched in establishments and forms, some vigor of wild virtue. For every stoic was a stoic; but in Christendom where is the Christian?

☞ The Portland Transcript discourses wisely, thus:—"Brothers, we must die," were the only words allowed to be uttered by the brethren of La Trappe, and their whole lives were spent acting upon this sentence. "Brothers, we must live," should be the motto of the true man of to-day—live to do good, to accomplish the mission for which we were sent here, to develop our own powers, and contribute our mite towards the improvement of our race. Death is not the end of life, although it be the latter end. For life is not a race course, and death the gaol to which we must ever press forward, but rather garden which it is ours to cultivate and adorn, and leave for our successors in better condition than we found it, while death is but a gateway, which, when our labors are done, and well done, will open for us fairer land and a great reward.

CHALDEAN ANTIQUITIES.

Letters have just been received from Bagdad, stating that Mr. Loftus, the geologist attached to the commission which is now employed in the demarcation of the Turco-Persian frontier, had succeeded, on his passage from Bagdad to Bussorah, in visiting all the most remarkable ancient sites in Lower Chaldea. The ruins now called Werka, which represent the Ur of the Chaldees, whence took place the Exodus of Abraham, were carefully examined by Mr. Loftus, and were found to be of great extent and of extraordinary interest. Werka is still traditionally known in the country as the birthplace of Abraham, and its identity with Ur of the Chaldees, is established beyond the reach of cavil. The ruins have been observed at a distance by other travelers, but are usually inaccessible, owing to the inundation of the surrounding country, and the dangerous neighborhood of the Khezail Arabs. Mr. Loftus, indeed, is the first European who ever succeeded in actually visiting this primeval seat of the Jewish race. At the ruins called Hammam, near the Hye Canal, Mr. Loftus, also obtained a statute of black basalt, bearing two cuneiform inscriptions; and at Umgheir, beyond the Euphrates, he found another statute, representing one of the Chaldean gods, but it was too much mutilated to be worth moving. The commission to which Mr. Loftus belongs, in skirting Susiana, will traverse a country studded with Chaldean ruins; and discoveries, therefore, may be expected to be made which will be of the utmost importance in aiding the efforts of Major Rawlinson and others to unfold the early history of the east, through the interpretation of the inscriptions of Ninevah and Babylon.

POLITE UNTRUTHS.

When you have put yourself a little out of the way to accommodate a friend, in replying to his expressions of regret at giving you trouble, it is not necessary to say,

"Oh, it is not the slightest trouble at all—it was perfectly convenient." It is quite as polite to answer, "I am most happy to have been able to render you any assistance," as you ought to be if you felt right upon such matters.

A little tact and discretion, united with that kindly feeling to all around you, which constitutes the basis of sound morality, as well as true politeness, will always enable you to avoid giving any offence, without compromising your conscience.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

David Routzen,	2,00 to Vol.	V. No. 13.
Zimri Butterfield,	2,00 to Vol.	V. No. 43.
Isaac Haven,	1,00 to Vol.	IV. No. 26.
Sutleff Maudsley,	2,00 to Vol.	IV. No. 16.
Nancy Lisk,	1,00 to Vol.	V. No. 34.
John Minard,	2,00 to Vol.	IV. No. 52.
Henry Moon,	1,60 to Vol.	V. No. 11.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

There will be a general assembly of the saints at the Tabernacle, St. James, Beaver Island, from the first to the sixth day of July, inclusive.

It is especially necessary that all the Apostles and the High Priests and Elders generally attend on this occasion.

JAMES J. STRANG,
GEO. J. ADAMS,
WILLIAM MARKS, } Presidents.

GILBERT WATSON,
H. G. HALL, } Recorders.

DISADVANTAGES OF CIVILIZATION.

The civilized man has built a coach, but has lost the use of his feet. He is supported by crutches, but loses so much support of muscle. He has got a fine Geneva watch, but has lost the skill to tell the hour by the sun. A Greenwich nautical almanac he has, and so being sure of the information when he wants it, the man in the street does not know a star in the sky. The solstice he does not observe; the equinox he knows as little; and the bright calendar of the year is without a dial in his mind. His note books impair his memory; his libraries overload his wit; the insurance office increases the number of accidents; and it may be a question whether we have not lost by refinement some energy; by a Christianity entrenched in establishments and forms, some vigor of wild virtue. For every stoic was a stoic; but in Christendom where is the Christian?

☞ The Portland Transcript discourses wisely, thus:—"Brothers, we must die," were the only words allowed to be uttered by the brethren of La Trappe, and their whole lives were spent acting upon this sentence. "Brothers, we must live," should be the motto of the true man of to-day—live to do good, to accomplish the mission for which we were sent here, to develop our own powers, and contribute our mite towards the improvement of our race. Death is not the end of life, although it be the latter end. For life is not a race course, and death the gaol to which we must ever press forward, but rather garden which it is ours to cultivate and adorn, and leave for our successors in better condition than we found it, while death is but a gateway, which, when our labors are done, and well done, will open for us fairer land and a great reward.

CHALDEAN ANTIQUITIES.

Letters have just been received from Bagdad, stating that Mr. Loftus, the geologist attached to the commission which is now employed in the demarcation of the Turco-Persian frontier, had succeeded, on his passage from Bagdad to Bussorah, in visiting all the most remarkable ancient sites in Lower Chaldea. The ruins now called Werka, which represent the Ur of the Chaldees, whence took place the Exodus of Abraham, were carefully examined by Mr. Loftus, and were found to be of great extent and of extraordinary interest. Werka is still traditionally known in the country as the birthplace of Abraham, and its identity with Ur of the Chaldees is established beyond the reach of cavil. The ruins have been observed at a distance by other travelers, but are usually inaccessible owing to the inundation of the surrounding country, and the dangerous neighborhood of the Khezail Arabs. Mr. Loftus, indeed, is the first European who ever succeeded in actually visiting this primeval seat of the Jewish race. At the ruins called Hammam, near the Hye Canal, Mr. Loftus, also obtained a statute of black basalt bearing two cuneiform inscriptions; and at Umgheir, beyond the Euphrates, he found another statute, representing one of the Chaldean gods, but it was too much mutilated to be worth moving. The commission to which Mr. Loftus belongs, in skirting Susiana will traverse a country studded with Chaldean ruins; and discoveries, therefore, may be expected to be made which will be of the utmost importance in aiding the efforts of Major Rawlinson and others to unfold the early history of the east, through the interpretation of the inscriptions of Ninevah and Babylon.

POLITE UNTRUTHS.

When you have put yourself a little out of the way to accommodate a friend, in replying to his expressions of regret at giving you trouble, it is not necessary to say,

"Oh, it is not the slightest trouble at all—it was perfectly convenient." It is quite as polite to answer, "I am most happy to have been able to render you any assistance," as you ought to be if you felt right upon such matters.

A little tact and discretion, united with that kindly feeling to all around you, which constitutes the basis of sound morality, as well as true politeness, will always enable you to avoid giving any offence, without compromising your conscience.

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD.

David Routzen,	2,00	to Vol.	V.	No. 13.
Zimri Butterfield,	2,00	to Vol.	V.	No. 43.
Isaac Haven,	1,00	to Vol.	IV.	No. 26.
Sutleff Maudsley,	2,00	to Vol.	IV.	No. 16.
Nancy Lisk,	1,00	to Vol.	V.	No. 34.
John Minard,	2,00	to Vol.	IV.	No. 52.
Henry Moon,	1,60	to Vol.	V.	No. 11.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

There will be a general assembly of the saints at the Tabernacle, St. James, Beaver Island, from the first to the sixth day of July, inclusive.

It is especially necessary that all the Apostles and the High Priests and Elders generally attend on this occasion.

JAMES J, STRANG,
GEO. J. ADAMS,
WILLIAM MARKS, } Presidents.

GILBERT WATSON,
H. G. HALL, } Recorders.